Rev. St. c. 83, § 94, provides that when a writ fails of sufficient service, etc., or is abated, or the action is otherwise defeated for any matter of form, the plaintiff may commence a new action within six months after the abatement or determination of the original suit. As originally enacted as section 11, c. 62, Laws 1821, it provided that any action which should be actually declared on, and in which the writ purchased therefor should fail of a sufficient service, etc., or when such writ should be abated, or the action avoided by demurrer or otherwise, for informality of proceedings, the plaintiff might commence another action upon the same demand and thereby save the limitation thereof. Section 8 of that chapter provided that any action of the case or debt, etc., which should be actually declared upon in a proper writ, returnable according to law within six years after the cause accrued, should be deemed and taken to be duly commenced within the meaning of that act. Held, that chapter 83, § 94, does not apply to a case where an action was dismissed because the writ was made returnable at a term other than the first term after its issuance, contrary to law, since the word "action," as used in section 11, had the same meaning as in section 8, where it was defined as one declared upon in a proper writ returnable according to law, which meaning has not been changed by any subsequent provision; and while the words "proper writ" did not mean one that could not be abated or defeated for any matter of form, but merely meant one adapted to the cause of action, the words "returnable according to law" were definite and explicit and not subject to judicial construction, and hence the word "writ," as used in section 94, means a writ returnable according to law. Densmore v. Hall, 84 Atl. 983, 984, 100 Me. 438.

RETURNS

See Smelter Returns.

The "return" by the judges of election is the evidence of the result of the election. Graham v. Peters, 93 N. E. 315, 316, 248 Ill. 50.

The word "returns" does not necessarily import a statement under oath. Section 6 of the oleomargarine act (Act May 2, 1902, c. 784, § 2, Stat. 197), in requiring wholesale dealers to keep such books and render such returns as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may by regulation require under prescribed penalties for its violation, has no relation to the tax to be assessed on such dealer, and the regulations made thereunder and in force prior to their revision in 1907, in requiring an oath to the returns, do not have the force of law in such sense that a false oath to a return subjects the maker to prosecution for perjury, under Rev. St. § 5392. United States v. Lamson, 165 Fed. 80, 82.

REUNION

When used without qualification, the word "reunion" ordinarily implies the resumption of a former relation. Clark v. Brown (Tex.) 108 S. W. 421, 439.

The Cumberland Presbyterian Church and the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America never having been united as churches, but, the Cumberland organization having been created by members of the other church who had departed from it, the use of the word "reunion," in the question submitted to the presbyteries as to whether they approved of the "reunion" and union of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America and the Cumberland Church on a specified basis, did not change the legal effect of the proposition, which was in effect a union of two independent churches. Ramsey v. Hicks, 87 N. E. 1091, 1099, 44 Ind. App. 490.

REUS

The "reus or defendant" is a constituent part of every court, and is the one who is called upon to make satisfaction for the injury complained of by the plaintiff. Accouss v. G. A. Stowers Furniture Co. (Tex.) 83 S. W. 1104, 1105.

REVENUE

See Board of Revenue; Estimated Revenue.

An affidavit in sequestration proceedings, stating that plaintiff fears that defendant will make use of his possession to convert to his own use the fruits "or" revenues produced by the property, was not rendered indefinite or uncertain by the use of the word "or"; the words "fruits and revenues," as used in the sequestration statute, being synonymous. Hurlbut v. Gainor, 103 S. W. 409-411, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 588.

As public revenue

The city could not use such additional space to transmit electricity to use in pumping water for private use without compensation, the water rates paid being "revenue" under the ordinance; nor could it use that space to transmit electricity for power for private use, or to drive pumps or light the water.

bureau station, without compensation. Catact Power & Conduit Co. v. City of Buffalo, 115 N. Y. Supp. 1045, 1047, 131 App. Div. 485.

The title, "An act to provide a system of 'revenue,'" is broad enough to include provisions for special assessments. City of Omaha v. Hodgskins, 97 N. W. 346, 347, 70 Neb. 229.

The word "revenue," in Sess. Laws 1902, c. 3, relating to public revenue, is sufficiently broad to include all provisions having that general object in view, not only provisions for securing revenue as the result of a direct tax upon property, but revenue derived from the imposition of licenses, duties, excises, and a tax on occupations or on successions. In re Magnes' Estate, 77 Pac. 853, 856, 32 Colo. 527.

The word "revenue," as used in Const. art. 6, § 2, giving the Supreme Court original jurisdiction of cases relating to the revenue, civil cases in which the state shall be a party, quo warranto, and habeas corpus, has no reference to the revenues of municipal corporations, but to those only which are required for the purposes of general state administration. Aachen & Munich Fire Ins. Co. v. City of Omaha, 100 N. W. 137, 72 Neb. 112.

As used in Webster's lexical definition of the term "revenue" as being the "income of a nation, derived from its taxes, duties, or 'other sources,' for the payment of the national expenses," the phrase "other sources" would include the proceeds of the public lands, those arising from the sale of public securities, the receipts of the Patent Office in excess of its expenditures, and those of the Post Office Department when there should be such excess as there was for a time in the early history of the government. Indeed, the phrase would apply in all cases of such excesses. In some of them the result might fluctuate; there being excess at one time and deficiency at another. People's United States Bank v. Goodwin, 162 Fed. 937, 941.

REVENUE LAW

As penal law, see Penal Law.

The term "revenue law" means a "law providing in terms for revenue." F. J. Emerich Co. v. Sloane, 95 N. Y. Supp. 39, 41, 108 App. Div. 330 (quoting and adopting the definition in United States v. Hill, 8 Sup. Ct. 308, 123 U. S. 681, 686, 31 L. Ed. 275).

"Revenue laws" are those laws only whose principal object is the raising of revenue, and not those under which revenue may incidentally arise. Anderson v. Ritterbusch, 98 Pac. 1002, 1006, 22 Okl. 761 (quoting and adopting definition in The Nashville, 17 Fed. Cas. 1176).

A "revenue law" is "any law which provides for the assessment and collection of a tax to defray the expenses of the government." People's United States Bank v. Good- win, 162 Fed. 937, 941 (quoting and adopting the definition in Peyton v. Bliss, Woolw. 170, 19 Fed. Cas. 407).

"The true meaning of 'revenue laws' is such laws as are made for the direct and avowed purpose of creating and securing revenues or public funds for the services of the government." H. A. Thierman Co. v. Commonwealth, 97 S. W. 366, 368, 123 Ky. 740 (quoting United States v. Mayo, 26 Fed. Cas. 1231).

The provisions in the St. Louis city charter for the assessment of benefits to land for public improvements are not "revenue laws of this state," so as to give appellate jurisdiction to the Supreme Court, though the revenue officers of the city act under the charter for the state and the city. State ex rel. Missouri Glass Co. v. Reynolds, 148 S. W. 623, 625, 243 Mo. 715.

The acts of Congress relating to the embezzlement of money or property, such as fees by clerks of the federal courts, are not a "revenue law." United States v. Mason, 31 Sup. Ct. 28, 33, 218 U. S. 517, 54 L. Ed. 1133.

Postal law

It is said in Black's Dillon on Removal of Causes, § 41, that "the post office laws of the United States are 'revenue laws,' within the meaning of this statute." In Warner v. Fowler, 4 Blatchf. 311, 29 Fed. Cas. 255, a suit against a postmaster for an alleged wrongful refusal to deliver a letter to the plaintiff was held removable under this statute; the court deciding that the post office laws of the United States are "revenue laws," within its meaning. In Ward v. Congress Const. Co., 99 Fed. 598, 39 C. C. A. 669, it was held that a corporation, in the performance of a contract made with the Secretary of the Treasury for the building of an addition to a post office authorized by an act of Congress, is a person acting by authority of a revenue officer of the United States, given under color of his office; and a suit in the state court against the corporation to enjoin the building of such addition is removable into the Circuit Court of the United States, under Rev. St. § 643. The court said: "The provision of section 643 for the removal of causes has been liberally construed, as, for manifest reasons, it should be"—and Warner v. Fowler, supra, is quoted and approved. In United States v. James, 13 Blatchf. 207, 26 Fed. Cas. 577, it was held that: "While the post office laws are revenue laws, within the meaning of the statute cited, they are not laws for raising revenue, within the provision of the Constitution." Bryant Bros. Co. v. Robinson, 140 Fed. 321, 324, 79 C. C. A. 259.

Reclamation act

Reclamation Act June 17, 1902, c. 1093, § 32 Stat. 388, providing for the construction of irrigation works on the public land by the United States, the cost to be repaid to it by purchasers of the lands irrigated, is not a "revenue law of the United States" within the meaning of Rev. St. § 643, authorizing the removal of any suit brought in a state court against any officer appointed under or acting by authority of any revenue law of the United States, and such section does not apply to a suit against the officer in charge of a reclamation project because of acts done under color of his office. City of Stanfield v. Umatilla River Water Users' Ass'n, 192 Fed. 596, 597.

Reclamation Act June 17, 1902, c. 1093, 32 Stat. 388, by which the government advances the cost of reclamation works, and collects from purchasers of the lands benefited only sufficient to reimburse it for the expenditure, is not a "revenue law" within the meaning of Rev. St. § 643, which provides for the removal of suits brought in state courts "against any officer appointed under or acting by authority of any revenue law of the United States" on account of any act done under color of his office, and a suit against the officer in charge of reclamation work to determine water rights in a stream is not removable by him thereunder. Nor is there any reason of public policy why such suit should be transferred to the federal courts, as by the terms of the act the rights of the government as an appropriator of water are governed by the laws of the state and are no greater than those of any other user. Twin Falls Canal Co. v. Foote, 192 Fed. 583-585.

REVENUE OFFICER

To render an action against an officer of the United States removable from a state to a federal court by certiorari, under Rev. St. § 643, providing for such removal of suits "against any officer appointed under or acting by authority of any revenue law of the United States * * * or against any person acting under or by authority of any such law," etc., the acts which constitute the cause of action must have some rational connection with official duties under a "revenue law," and in some way affect the revenue of the government, and such fact must appear on the face of the complaint in the action or the petition for the writ. An action for libel against the Assistant Attorney General for the Post Office Department and an inspector of such department, based on the promulgation by them of a fraud order against the plaintiff, does not meet such requirements, and is not removable under said section. People's United States Bank v. Goodwin, 162 Fed. 937, 942.

REVERSE

The term "repeal" with reference to statutes means the abrogation of a previously existing law by a subsequent statute, which either declares that the former shall be revoked, or which contains provisions so irreconcilable with those of the earlier law that only one of the two can remain in force; the former being an express repeal. The term "repeal" is synonymous with "annul," "cancel," "reverse," and "abolish," so that a statute or ordinance is repealed when it is destroyed, abolished, abrogated, canceled, annulled, recalled, or rescinded by a later one. City of St. Louis v. Kellman, 139 S. W. 443, 445, 235 Mo. 687.

REVERSE OR AFFIRM WHOLLY OR PARTLY

Power to "reverse or affirm, wholly or partly," implies that part may be affirmed and part reversed, because the part not reversed must be affirmed. Thus, if in an action of ejectment for separate parcels of land, each depending upon an independent chain of title, there is a verdict for the plaintiff as to one and for the defendant as to the other, and each party appeals from the separate adjudication against himself, we see no reason why it is not within the power of the court to affirm as to one and reverse as to the other. So, when a special verdict by a jury, or separate findings by the court or referee, settle the facts as to independent causes of action, and distinct adjudications follow in the same judgment, a retrial of all the issues is not required on account of an error affecting one adjudication only. City of Buffalo v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 68 N. E. 587, 588, 176 N. Y. 308.

REVERSAL

Code Civ. Proc. § 508, providing that if a judgment, for the satisfaction of which lands are sold, shall be thereafter reversed, such reversal shall not defeat or affect the title of the purchaser, contemplates, by the word "reversal," a reversal in any proceeding in any court having authority to set aside the judgment. Kazebeer v. Nunemaker, 118 N. W. 646, 648, 82 Neb. 732.

Rev. St. 1899, § 639, provides that plaintiff may dismiss or take a nonsuit at any time before the suit is submitted to the jury or to the court, and not afterward. Acts 1905, p. 138, enacted in lieu of Rev. St. 1899, § 2868, provide that every action instituted under the preceding sections of the chapter shall be commenced within one year after the cause of action accrues, provided that if any action shall have been commenced within the prescribed time, and plaintiff suffer a nonsuit, or, after verdict for him, the judgment be arrested or reversed on appeal or error, plaintiff may commence a new action, from time to time, within one year after such nonsuit suffered or judgment arrested or reversed. Rev. St. 1899, § 866, authorizes the appellate courts to examine the record and award a new trial, reverse or affirm the judgment, or give such judgment as the trial court should have given. Held, that where the Supreme Court has rendered a judgment merely reversing the judgment for plaintiff on the law and the facts, plaintiff cannot within a year bring another action on the same cause of action; such judgment not being equivalent to a nonsuit, the "reversal" mentioned in the statute meaning a reversal in which the merits were not passed on. Strottman v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 128 S. W. 187, 193, 228 Mo. 154, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 377.

REVERSAL IN PART

Where a judgment for plaintiff was affirmed by the Supreme Court on the condition that he remit a certain item of damage, to show which evidence was admitted when the pleadings did not authorize its recovery, the judgment otherwise being reversed for new trial, the Supreme Court's judgment was an "affirmance in part and a reversal in part," within Comp. St. 1910, § 5126, authorizing an apportionment of the costs in such case between the parties in such manner as the court deems equitable. Henderson v. Coleman, 115 Pac. 439, 442, 455, 19 Wyo. 183.

REVERSED AND SETTLED

A trustee, holding title to land for complainant's testatrix, instituted ejectment against a loan company which had a mortgage on the land, and recovered judgment, from which the company took an appeal. While this appeal was pending, an agent of the company made complainant and his testatrix a loan, and took a mortgage on certain other property to secure its payment according to a contract whereby the mortgagors agreed to quitclaim, at the mortgagee's request, their interest in the land in controversy to the loan company. This quitclaim conveyance, which was duly executed as stipulated, was to satisfy the loan if the mortgagor's judgment in the ejectment suit was affirmed on appeal, but the loan was to become due and payable if the judgment was "reversed and settled" in favor of the company. Held, the words "reversed on appeal and settled" implied that the judgment was not only to be reversed but something was to be settled by the reversal, and that was the title to the lands in question. Bradshaw v. Gunter, 33 South. 549, 551, 135 Ala. 240.

REVERSED FOR PROCEEDINGS CONSISTENT WITH OPINION

Where a judgment was "reversed for proceedings consistent with the opinion" of the Court of Appeals, the mandate did not authorize the trial court to summarily enter judgment in favor of defendants, but required submission of the issues to a jury after a trial had in conformity with the opinion of the Court of Appeals, with the duty to give a peremptory instruction in case the evidence introduced on the retrial was in substance the same as that offered on the preceding trial. Quisenberry v. Chenault (Ky.) 97 S. W. 803.

REVERSION

A "reversion" is a future interest remaining in the person creating estates in favor of others, after such estates are taken out, and to which the grantor or his heirs will be again entitled upon the termination of such other estates. Brown v. Brown, 93 N. E. 357, 359, 247 Ill. 528.

"A 'reversion' is a vested interest or estate, inasmuch as the person entitled to it has a fixed right of future enjoyment." State ex rel. Tozer v. Probate Court of Washington County, 113 N. W. 888, 893, 102 Minn. 268 (citing 2 Washburn, Real Prop. [5th Ed.] 801; Gray, Perpetuities [2d Ed.] 113, 113a).

A "reversion" is the residue of an estate left in the grantor and his heirs to commence in possession after the determination of some particular estate granted out by him. Mosca Town Co. v. Wellington, 89 Pac. 783, 785, 39 Colo. 326, 121 Am. St. Rep. 175.

"An estate in 'reversion' is the residue of an estate left in the grantor, to commence in possession after the determination of some particular estate granted out by him." "A 'reversion' is the returning of land to the grantor or his heirs after the grant is over." Frank Fehr Brewing Co. v. Johnston (Ky.) 97 S. W. 1107, 1109 (quoting Bl. Comm. p. 175, and Sir Edward Coke, as quoted approvingly in Alexander v. De Kermel, 81 Ky. 345).

REVERT

The Standard Dictionary defines "revert" to mean "to return, come or fall back." Armstrong v. Barber, 88 N. E. 246, 250, 239 Ill. 389.

An agreement between two sisters, who jointly owned a mortgage, that, in consideration of the one boarding the other, the property of the latter should "revert" to the former on her death does not show a completed assignment thereof; "at best, giving to the word 'revert' a nonnatural meaning, the agreement in question could not be more than an undertaking to make a will in C.'s favor." Thompson v. West, 40 Atl. 197, 199, 56 N. J. Eq. 660.

Where one who held the legal title to a farm, with a resulting trust to his daughter, with whose money it had been purchased, at her request conveyed the same to a third person, on condition that the grantee should provide a good and sufficient home and living for the daughter "during her natural life," but, if the daughter should see fit to marry, then the farm conveyed should "revert back" to the daughter, her heirs, etc., after marriage, provided she or they should reimburse the grantee for all the expenses of living up to the time of marriage, and for all the improvements made on the land, the words "revert back" were intended to operate as a conveyance over to the daughter, by which, in addition to the equitable title which she had in the beginning, she would, on the contemplated contingency, be invested with the legal title to the land, and the daughter, having married and reimbursed the grantee, according to the conditions of the deed became immediately invested with the legal title. Battey v. Hopkins, 6 R. I. 443, 446.

In an act granting public lands to a railroad company, "the declaration that the lands 'shall revert to the United States' is practically equivalent to a declaration that the act granting such lands shall cease to be operative if the company fail to complete its road within a specified time." Spokane & B. C. R. Co. v. Washington & G. N. R. Co., 95 Pac. 64, 66, 49 Wash. 280 (quoting Bybee v. Oregon & C. R. Co., 11 Sup. Ct. 641, 643, 139 U. S. 663, 675, 35 L. Ed. 305).

As go or pass to "Revert," as used in a will providing that on a certain contingency property should revert to testator's son or his issue, meant to go or pass to. Goerlitz v. Malawista, 8 N. Y. Supp. 832, 833, 56 Hun. 120.

A mother, who had inherited from her husband an undivided one-third of a farm in fee simple, contracted with her children and grandchildren, who had inherited an undivided two-thirds of the farm, the children to give the mother their interest during her life, or as long as she remained a widow, she to have the profits for her support and the improvement of the farm, and to pay all demands that might come against the estate, taxes, etc., and at her death or remarriage the farm, together with its appurtenances, was to "revert" to the legal heirs equally. Held, that inasmuch as the two-thirds interest of the children and grandchildren was theirs in fee simple, subject to the mother's life interest under the contract, the word "revert," if used solely in connection with that portion, would be unnecessary, and the parties' intention was that the farm as a whole should revert to the legal heirs equally, the word "revert" being used in the sense of "go" or "pass," and hence the mother's one-third interest could not after her death be sold to pay debts of her estate. Warrum v. White, 86 N. E. 959, 960, 171 Ind. 574.

As terminating estate

Under a conveyance of standing timber, the timber, whether cut or uncut, remaining on the land after three years to revert to the grantor, logs remaining on the land after that time became the property of the grantor, though the conditions of the agreement had been otherwise performed; the word "revert" implying a retransfer of title, and the limitation of time for removal of the timber not merely affording an action for damages for an entry after the stipulated time to remove the logs. Dye v. East Shore Woodware Co., 134 N. W. 986, 987, 169 Mich. 78.

The word "revert," as used in a will providing that, if "any of my children die without issue of their body, his or her portion shall 'revert' to my estate for the benefit of the living heirs," means to come back or return, and that, if any of the children die without issue of their bodies, his or her portion should return to the estate for the benefit of the living heirs. Cochran v. Lee's Adm'r (Ky.) 84 S. W. 337, 338.

Testator by will "set apart for my son the Store Houses & Lots Now Occupied by him and all accts against him from me Squared This all in case of his death to revert to his children—Also all real estate to him and Elbert Share & Share alike in case of my death to them or their Children Only." Ky. St. § 4841, provides that, if a devisee dies before the testator leaving issue who survive the testator, such issue shall take the estate devised as the devisee would have done if he had survived the testator, unless a different disposition is made by the will. Held, that the word "revert" meant that, if C. was not living when the testator died, his children would take the property that would have gone under the will to their father, if living, and that C. took the fee, subject to be defeated by his death before that of the testator. Blackwell v. Blackwell, 143 S. W. 1010, 1011, 147 Ky. 264.

A will bequeathed to testator's wife all his household property, and devised to her the homestead for life, "at her death to revert to my estate," gave her one-third of the rents during life from land devised to testator's son, and also devised certain land to another son, and the succeeding paragraph required the "residue" of the estate to be divided, one-half to testator's wife, one-eighth to each son, etc. Held, that the will did not give a contingent remainder in the homestead to those persons who were testator's heirs at the widow's death, but the remainder interest therein fell into the "residue" of the estate, so that the widow, upon partition during her life, would be entitled to a one-half interest therein; the words "revert to my estate" ordinarily meaning "the return to the aggregate of all the property which I may leave at my death," and the word "estate" not being equivalent to the word "heirs." Downing v. Grigsby, 96 N. E. 513, 514, 251 Ill. 568.

As review on appeal

Sess. Acts Mo. 1901, p. 162, § 23, providing that any action or neglect of a political convention or committee, or election officer or board, with regard to the right of any person to participate in a primary election, convention, etc., shall be reviewable by the appropriate remedy of mandamus or certiorari, and that the courts shall have summary jurisdiction, upon complaint of any citizen, to "review" such action or neglect, does not authorize the courts to entertain a primary election contest. The word "review," when applied to the review by an appellate court of the action of a court of original jurisdiction, has reference to cases which are before the appellate court either on appeal, writ of error, or certiorari. But this term is inappropriate to proceedings of the election commissioners, to review whose acts no appeal or writ of error lies, and to whom the writ of certiorari is inappropriate. State ex rel. Bentley v. Reynolds, 89 S. W. 877, 880, 190 Mo. 578.

REVISE

Power given to code commissioners to "revise, simplify, arrange, and consolidate" public statutes of the state did not invest them of themselves with power to enact any new statutory law, or to revive any statute or statutes not in force at the time of the revision. Mathis v. State, 12 South. 681, 683, 31 Fla. 291.

The act to provide for the revision and consolidation of the statute laws of the United States, approved June 27, 1866 (14 Stat. 74), authorizes the appointment of three persons as commissioners to revise, simplify, arrange, and consolidate all statutes of the United States, general and permanent in their nature, in force at the time the commissioners may make the final report of their doings. The report was made and acted on, and was entitled "An act to revise and consolidate the laws of the United States," etc. This act was approved, and the result was a book, which Congress declared "shall be designated and cited as the Revised Statutes of the United States." It is held that the enactment of the Revised Statutes by act of Congress was not the enactment of a body of laws as original legislation, but was simply the enactment of a more convenient expression of the law as it existed on December 1, 1873. It did not enact or re-enact anything as law which was not the law on that date. United States v. Moore, 26 Fed. Cas. 1306, 1307.

"Not only is it true that article 4, § 46, of the Constitution of 1875, does not prohibit the Legislature from doing more than is therein required to be done in regard to getting out a new Code, yet the word 'revision,' therein used, suggests that such changes as are admissible are within the purview of the section. Definition 3, in Webster's International Dictionary, of the word 'revise' is 'to review, alter, or amend; as to revise statutes.'" State v. Towery, 39 South. 309, 143 Ala. 48.

Const. § 202, provides that any amendment to the Constitution may be proposed in either house of the legislative assembly, and, if agreed to by the majority of each of the houses, it may be referred to the next legislative assembly, when, if agreed to in the same manner, it shall be submitted to the people. Sections 215 and 216 locate the public institutions of the state, including two state normal schools, with a proviso that no other institution similar in character to those located shall be established without a revision of the Constitution. Held, that sections 215 and 216 may be amended to provide for the location of additional institutions by the method provided in section 202; the terms "revise" and "amend" being used synonymously in the Constitution. State ex rel. v. Taylor, 133 N. W. 1046, 1048, 22 N. D. 362.

REVISION

"'Revision' of statutes implies a re-examination of them. The word is applied to a restatement of the law in a corrected or improved form. The restatement may be with or without material change. A revision is extended to take the place of the law as previously formulated. By adopting it the Legislature say the same thing in effect as when a particular section is amended by the words 'so as to read as follows.' The revision is a substitute. It displaces and repeals the former law as it stood relating to the subjects within its purview. * * * The purport of the numerous cases cited is that where a statute is revised, or a series of acts on the same subject are revised and consolidated into one, all parts and provisions of the former act or acts that are omitted from the revised act are repealed." Pratt Institute v. City of New York, 75 N. E. 1119, 1121, 183 N. Y. 151, 5 Ann. Cas. 198 (quoting and adopting definition in Suth. on St. Const. [Lewis' Ed.] § 269, 270).

A "revision" of statutes is intended to take the place of the law as previously formulated. The revision is a substitute. It displaces and replaces the former law as it stood relating to the subject within its purview. Jeffries v. Board of Trustees of Columbia Graded Common School, 122 S. W. 813, 816, 135 Ky. 488.

A "revision" of a decree involves a re-examination of the evidence upon which it was made; and evidence used on the original trial, or which might have been presented by the exercise of due diligence, is not for that cause to be rejected. Whether justice requires a modification of a decree must be determined from all the facts in the case. Wallace v. Wallace, 67 Atl. 580, 581, 74 N. H. 256, 18 Ann. Cas. 293 (citing Ela v. Ela, 63 N. H. 116, 121, 122).

REVIVE

Judgments

"Revive," as applied to a dormant judgment, means to restore or bring the judgment to life. Thornhill v. Hargreaves, 107 N. W. 847, 849, 76 Neb. 582. See, also, Leman v. Cunningham, 85 Pac. 212, 214, 12 Idaho, 135.

While a "revivor proceeding" is not in one sense the commencement of a new action, it is the commencement of new and different proceedings under the provisions of the statute for the revivor of a dormant judgment. St. Paul Harvester Co. v. Mahs, 117 N. W. 702, 703, 82 Neb. 336.

Will

A revocatory clause in a will destroys at once an earlier will; and such earlier will is not "revived," on the destruction of the later will, by the testator's oral declarations of an intention to revive it, but his intention must be in writing formally sufficient to satisfy the statute. Danley v. Jefferson, 114 N. W. 470, 472, 150 Mich. 590, 121 Am. St. Rep. 640.

REVIVOR

See Judgment of Revivor.

REVOCABLE

See Irrevocable.

REVOKE—REVOCATION

See Implied Revocation.

Revocation of license as suit, see Suit for Penalty or Forfeiture.

As regulate

To say that the words "regulate" and "restrain" do not in any sense mean "revoke" is distinctly erroneous. Under Milwaukee City Charter, as amended (Laws 1874, pp. 327, 330, c. 184, subc. 4, § 3, subsecs. 9, 40), empowering the common council to regulate and restrain the sale of milk, to tax, license, regulate, and restrain vendors of milk, and to fix and regulate the amount of license, etc., the council had power to revoke milk licenses and to vest such power in the health commissioner, with the right to exercise the same summarily and even without notice. State ex rel. Nowotny v. City of Milwaukee, 121 N. W. 658, 659, 140 Wis. 38, 133 Am. St. Rep. 1060 (overruling construction in State ex rel. Sepic v. City of Milwaukee, 109 N. W. 421, 129 Wis. 562).

As repeal

Words "repeal" and "revoke" are synonymous. Wilson v. People, 85 Pac. 187, 189, 36 Colo. 418.

Revocation of letters of administration

Rev. St. 1909, § 9, provides that the probate court, or the judge or clerk thereof in vacation, "subject to the confirmation or rejection of the court," shall grant letters of administration. Rev. St. § 289, subd. 9, gives a right of appeal from all orders revoking letters of administration, and subdivision 15 provides that the right of appeal therein provided shall extend to any heir, creditor, or other person having an interest in the estate under administration. Held, that an administrator appointed in vacation had no statutory right of appeal from an order of the probate court thereafter made in term, rejecting his vacation appointment; there being no "revocation" of any letters of administration within subdivision 9, and the vacation appointment not having vested the temporary administrator with any interest authorizing an appeal under subdivision 15. Marshall v. Shoemaker's Estate, 144 S. W. 1120, 1122, 164 Mo. App. 429.

Revocation of will

There are two kinds of "revocations": One by the act of the party, and the other by operation of law. In re Teopfer's Estate, 78 Pac. 53, 55, 12 N. M. 372, 67 L. R. A. 315.

It is not strictly accurate to use the word "revocation" in stating that the conveyance of the subject of a devise is a "revocation" of the will, but the devise fails because, when the will becomes effective, there is no property within its terms belonging to the testator. In re Miller's Will, 105 N. W. 105, 106, 128 Iowa, 612.

Where a clause of a will gave testator's entire estate to his wife, C., for life, or so long as she remained his widow, and the next clause provided that upon her decease or remarriage the property should go to his sons, but before his death the testator learned that his supposed wife had a husband living, and he erased her name wherever it appeared in the will, the obliteration "revoked" the gift to C., even if the incidental effect was to increase the residue given to the sons. Collard v. Collard (N. J.) 67 Atl. 190.

Same—Ademption distinguished

A particular bequest, although unrevoked, may become practically inoperative, if the testator, in his lifetime, gives to his legatee the specific thing which the will directs to be given after his death, or if the testator so deals with property which is specifically bequeathed to a legatee that, upon his death, the execution of his intention, in respect to this legatee, is impossible. In such case he is said to adeem his bequest, and the practical result necessarily involved in his act is spoken of as an ademption of the legacy. Where the law recognizes a power of implied "revocation" by acts of the testator similar to those which must result in ademption, there may, in some cases, be no distinction between ademption and revocation; but in Connecticut, where such implied revocation is forbidden by statute, the clauses of a will containing a bequest are not revoked by acts which may operate as an ademption, but remain as the legal declaration of the testators' intention to be carried out unless the execution after his death is impossible; and so a present gift, or part only of a testamentary bequest, or a sale or conveyance to a third party of a part only of property specifically bequeathed does not prevent the execution of the testator's intention as to the remainder, and the ademption is not total but pro tanto. Jacobs v. Button, 65 Atl. 150, 152, 79 Conn. 360.

REVOLVER

See, also, Pistol.

The furnishing of a Stevens 32-caliber rifle by a father to his minor son was not an offense, within Rev. St. 1898, § 4397, prohibiting any person from giving any "pistol or revolver" to a minor. Taylor v. Sell, 97 N. W. 498, 120 Wis. 32.

REWARD

A "reward" is a recompense or premium offered by the government or an individual in return for special or extraordinary services to be performed, and may be made orally or in writing, either to a particular person or class, or to any and all persons complying with its terms. Zwolanck v. Baker Mfg. Co., 137 N. W. 769, 772, 150 Wis. 517, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1214.

As proposition for contract

The "offer of a reward" and the acceptance of the offer by the performance of the service involved in the offer constitutes a contract which is not different from other contracts in respect to the rules of construction. In such contracts regard should not be had to the mere letter to the exclusion of the spirit. As said in Haskell v. Davidson, 40 Atl. 330, 91 Me. 488, 42 L. R. A. 155, 64 Am. St. Rep. 254: "An offer of a reward is a proposal. The party making it may insert his own terms, and no person can become entitled to the reward without a performance of all the terms contained in the proposal. But such performance need not be a literal compliance with the terms of the offer. It is sufficient if the party claiming the reward has substantially performed the service required by the proposal. An offer of a reward for the 'arrest and conviction' of an offender cannot be taken literally. The person who by reason of the offer is induced to make an investigation and finally obtains possession of sufficient facts to authorize the arrest of an offender, and his subsequent conviction for the crime referred to in the offer, certainly cannot himself convict the offender. The service contemplated by a person making such an offer, and which the proposal should be construed as meaning, must be the obtaining and giving to some proper person interested, sufficient information in relation to the perpetrator of the crime, and his whereabouts, as to authorize and secure the arrest of the offender, and subsequently to procure his conviction by a court of competent jurisdiction." McClaghry v. King, 147 Fed. 463, 469, 79 C. C. A. 91, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 216, 8 Ann. Cas. 856 (distinguishing Shuey v. United States, 92 U. S. 73, 23 L. Ed. 697).

RHEUMATISM

"Rheumatism" is defined by the Century Dictionary as: "The disease specifically known as acute articular rheumatism. The term including also subacute and chronic forms apparently of the same causation." Acute articular rheumatism is defined as: "An acute febrile disease, with pains and inflammation of the joints as the prominent symptoms." Plaintiff was insured by a policy of accident insurance issued by defendant, in which the latter, upon the conditions named in the policy, promised to pay insured "an illness indemnity of $30 per month, or at that rate for any proportionate part of a month for the time, after the first week, the insured is necessarily and continuously confined by a legally qualified physician, by reason of acute illness that is contracted and begins after this policy has been in full force and effect, without delinquency, for thirty consecutive days immediately preceding the commencement of such illness." The policy also contained this clause: "Or in case of illness resulting from tuberculosis, rheumatism, paralysis, lumbago or lame back, sciatica, varicose veins, venereal diseases, dementia or insanity; then in all such cases referred to in this paragraph, the limit of the company's liability shall be one-tenth of the amount which would otherwise be payable under this policy, anything to the contrary herein notwithstanding." During the period covered by the policy, the plaintiff was sick with rheumatic fever, and was entitled, under the contract of insurance, to recover the sum of $40, unless that amount should be reduced to one-tenth thereof by reason of the provision in the policy last quoted. Held, that the disease was one form of rheumatism, and must be considered to have been included within the meaning of the word "rheumatism," as it was used in the policy. Holmes v. Continental Casualty Co., 65 Atl. 385, 102 Me. 287.

RHINOSCOPE

The "rhinoscope" is a scientific instrument for the exploration of the nasal cavities. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Palmore, 75 Pac. 509, 510, 68 Kan. 545, 64 L. R. A. 90.

RIBS

Where, on the trial of an action for the breach of a written agreement for the sale and delivery of a given number of pounds of "ribs," of the value at the agreed price, of more than $50, the evidence showed that the term "ribs" is ambiguous, even to dealers in the general class of goods to which the alleged contract referred, there being several distinct kinds of "ribs" known to the trade, and that the plaintiff understood, from a parol agreement with the defendant, that the "ribs" referred to in the writing were of a particular kind and of a given average weight, the writing did not sufficiently identify its subject-matter nor contain the entire agreement, as required by the statute of frauds, and therefore the plaintiff could not recover. Borum v. Swift & Co., 53 S. E. 608, 609, 125 Ga. 198.

RICH

See Very Rich.

A married person leaving an estate valued at less than $500 cannot be said to have died "rich," within the meaning of Merrick's Rev. Civ. Code, art. 2382. Crockett v. Madison, 43 South. 388, 389, 118 La. 728.

"Rich" as applied to land is defined as fertile, fruitful, producing or yielding abundantly; of great price or money value; abounding in desirable or effective qualities or elements; of superior quality; opposed to poor—and representations that the soil of land is rich, fertile, and very productive is a statement of a fact, unless qualified in some manner that would indicate that only an opinion or estimate was intended. Boltz v. O'Conner, 90 N. E. 496, 498, 45 Ind. App. 178.

RIDE

See Continuous Ride.

The words "ride or drive," within a statute prohibiting one to "ride or drive" faster than a common pace, are not confined to animals or limited in any manner; anything capable of being ridden or driven coming within the statute. They apply to horses, bicycles, motorcycles, or automobiles, when ridden or driven. A statute providing a fine where one shall "ride or drive faster than a common pace" in cities, etc., covers the field of an ordinance declaring the penalty against one who shall drive an automobile on the public streets of a town at a greater speed than 15 miles per hour. State v. Thurston, 66 Atl. 580, 581, 28 R. I. 265.

RIDE ON PLATFORM

That a passenger, in leaving a car, had stepped with one foot on the platform while the other remained in the doorway when he was injured, did not present a cause of action for injury while "riding on the platform," within Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 5316, relieving the carrier from liability for injury to a passenger on the platform in violation of the printed regulations of the company posted in a conspicuous place inside the car. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Cotton, 91 N. E. 253, 255, 45 Ind. App. 580.

RIDER

See Separate Rider.

A "rider" is a foreign provision attached to a bill. To prevent such provisions from being enacted under the cloak of meritorious legislation, the Constitution requires that a bill shall embrace but one subject-matter, and declares that any matter foreign to the title of the bill shall be void; but this constitutional provision does not require that the title to an act shall be an index to all of its provisions, and, so long as the provisions are cognate, attinent, and germane to the subject-matter of the title, no violence is done to the Constitution. Ex parte Hallawell, 99 Pac. 490, 491, 155 Cal. 112.

The term "rider" is applied to an additional paper attached to and forming a part of an insurance policy. Knowlton v. Patrons' Androscoggin Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 62 Atl. 289, 290, 100 Me. 481, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 517.

RIDING AT OWN RISK

The term "riding at his own risk," in a rule of a carrier that persons riding on the platforms do so at their own risk, means nothing less than at the risk of dangers resulting from the negligence of the carrier or its servants, and one boarding a crowded car with knowledge of the rule assumes the risk of injury resulting from his attempting to again board the car after leaving it to enable others to alight, though the carrier's servants were negligent in starting the car. Tompkins v. Boston Elevated Ry. Co., 87 N. E. 488, 489, 201 Mass. 114, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1063, 131 Am. St. Rep. 392.

RIDICULE

As defined by the Century, Webster's, and Worcester's Dictionaries, the word "ridicule" conveys the idea of contempt and disparagement. Cohen v. New York Times Co., 133 N. Y. Supp. 206, 210, 153 App. Div. 242.

RIFLE

As pistol, see Pistol.

As toy firearm, see Toys.

RIGGING

The foreman in charge of the construction of a building directed employes who had just raised a column from the first floor to the second to bring to the first floor all the rigging, consisting of ropes and blocks and chains. The rigging hung above a rope supporting a scaffold in use. The employes not only removed the rigging, but untied the rope, causing the scaffold to fall, injuring an employe working thereon. Held, that the foreman was not guilty of actionable negligence in giving the order, since the word "rigging," when applied to the handling of heavy loads of timber, metal, or stone, means the tackle, lines, and fastenings with which the work is accomplished, and the order did not refer to the rope supporting the scaffold. McCullin v. James Black Masonry & Construction Co. (Mo.) 151 S. W. 973.

RIGHT—RIGHTS

See By Right; Civil Right; Claim of Right; Color of Right; Common Right; Constitutional Right; Determined Rights; Distinguish Between Right and Wrong; Exclusive Right; Exercised the Right; Holder in His Own Right; Homestead Right; Inherent Right; Legal Right; Life Right; Marital Rights; Material Right; Mining Right; Mutuality of Legal Right; Natural Rights; Patent Right; Political Right; Preferential Right; Primary Right; Prior Right; Property Rights; Prospective Right; Riparian Right; Same Right; Substantial Right; Terms and Conditions, Rights and Privileges; Valuable Right; Vested Right; Water Right.

A "right" is defined to be that interest which a person actually has in any subject of property entitling him to hold or convey it at pleasure. Haskins v. Ryan, 64 Atl. 436, 438, 71 N. J. Eq. 575.

The word "right" denotes, among other things, "property," "interest," "power," "prerogative," "immunity," and "privilege"; and in law is most frequently applied to property in its restricted sense. As an enforceable legal right it means that which one has a legal right to do. Shaw v. Proffitt, 109 Pac. 584, 57 Or. 192, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 63 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6220).

A "right" has been defined to be a well-founded claim which means nothing more or less than a claim recognized or secured by law. Rights which pertain to persons, other than such as are termed "natural rights," are essentially the creation of municipal law, written or unwritten, and it must necessarily be held that a "right," in the legal sense, exists, when, in consequence of given facts, the law declares that one person is entitled to enforce against another a claim, or to resist the enforcement of a claim urged by another. Facts may exist out of which, in the course of time or under given circumstances, a right would become fixed or vested by operation of existing law; but until the state of facts, which the law declares shall give a right, comes into existence there cannot be in law a right. Mellinger v. City of Houston, 3 S. W. 249, 251, 68 Tex. 36.

The general purpose of the several statutes relating to married women indicates the intention of the Legislature to furnish to a married woman, in her own name, all the remedies which are essential to the enjoyment and use of her property, and such as are applicable to the enforcement of all such contracts as she is authorized to make in relation to her property. The statute providing for her appropriate remedies to enforce and protect her "rights" is not to be construed as only intending to furnish separate remedies for the enforcement and protection of her separate "rights" in the property itself. The word "rights," as used in the statute, seems to include more than the mere right of property. It embraces such rights as spring out of its lawful management or as are incident to its ownership and the power of disposition. Springer v. Berry, 47 Me. 330, 337.

As correlative with duty

"Right" and obligation are correlative terms. McDonald v. Bayard Sav. Bank, 98 N. W. 1025, 1026, 123 Iowa, 413.

As enforceable legal right

A "right" is a claim or title to an interest in anything whatsoever that is enforceable by law. Thus a contract for the sale of patent rights, providing that the assignor guaranteed peaceable possession of the rights to said patent and invention in a certain county, and all expenses which may be incurred for suits for infringement or for ousting present contractors within said territory, does not stipulate for peaceable possession of the territory named, but for peaceable possession of the "rights" to said patent, which means the rights which the assignor had; and hence the assignee could sue for infringement, or oust other contractors and recover his expenses therefor, but could not recover for profits made in the county through infringements by others than the assignor. Bailey v. Miller, 91 N. E. 24, 25, 45 Ind. App. 475.

Where, in an action on a benefit certificate, plaintiff alleged full performance on the part of insured, a stipulation that each party reserved any "right" to show waiver did not authorize the admission of evidence to show a waiver of full performance by insured. Victors v. National Provident Union, 99 N. Y. Supp. 299, 300, 113 App. Div. 715.

Ownership synonymous

"Right," as defined in law, is an enforceable claim or title to any subject-matter whatever. Webster defines it as a legal claim, ownership, property. As used in a stipulation for the commencement of a suit to test plaintiff's right to certain money, it was synonymous with "ownership." Hathorn v. Robinson, 56 Atl. 1057, 1059, 98 Me. 334.

As power

The word "rights," as used in Borough Act, § 96 (P. L. 1897, p. 329), providing that boroughs shall retain and enjoy all the rights and property heretofore possessed by them, refers to rights in the nature of property rights, and contemplates the retention of property rights, and not powers, such as a power to license inns and taverns, and which, not having been given by the act, must be deemed to have been withheld, though formerly enjoyed by certain special charter boroughs, in view of the provision of the same section that boroughs should have all the powers conferred by the act, thus excluding by implication powers not conferred. Smith v. Borough of Hightstown, 57 Atl. 901, 903, 71 N. J. Law, 276. See, also, Id., 60 Atl. 393, 394, 71 N. J. Law, 536.

The distinction between "power" and "right," whatever may be its value in ethics, in law is very shadowy and unsubstantial. He who has legal power to do anything has the legal right. State v. Koch, 85 Pac. 272, 274, 33 Mont. 490, 8 Ann. Cas. 804 (citing Kane v. Commonwealth, 89 Pa. 522, 33 Am. Rep. 787).

"The grant of a 'right' is by reasonable construction a grant of power to do all the acts reasonably necessary to its enjoyment." Memphis State Line R. Co. v. Forest Hill Cemetery Co., 94 S. W. 69, 72, 116 Tenn. 400 (quoting and adopting the definition in Inhabitants of Springfield v. Connecticut River R. Co. [Mass.] 4 Cush. 72).

Rev. St. 1899, § 6399, provides that on the extension of the territorial limits of a city to include any portion of another city, the corporate existence of the incorporated city should ipso facto cease, and all property and "rights" of every kind, belonging to and vested in such incorporated city, shall by operation of law vest in the city making the extension, which shall at once become liable for all debts and liabilities of the incorporated city. Held, that the word "right," as used in such section, was not limited to property rights, but included powers, privileges, etc., so that where the city of Westport, prior to its absorption in Kansas City, executed a special tax bill to complainant, which was void, owing to the mistake of the officer of that city, Kansas City, after the absorption, had power to issue to complainant a valid tax bill in lieu thereof. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. v. Field, 111 S. W. 907, 908, 134 Mo. App. 663.

Status synonymous

strued as meaning "relationship," and hence the word "status" does not necessarily imply the existence of the right of inheritance. Calhoun v. Bryant, 133 N. W. 266, 271, 28 S. D. 266.

Fishery

The most favored nation clause of the Chinese treaties, providing that citizens of foreign nations shall have the same privileges and "rights," and shall not be charged any higher imposts or duties than those paid by native citizens, does not include the right to take fish from the tide waters of a state. Leong Mow v. Board of Com'rs for Protection of Birds, Game, and Fish, 185 Fed. 223.

RIGHT ACCRUED

See Accrued Right.

RIGHT ACQUIRED BY MARRIAGE

A right to sue for alienation of affection is a "right acquired by the marriage," within Code, § 3181, which provides that a divorce decree shall forfeit such rights of the guilty party. Hamilton v. McNeill, 129 N. W. 480, 481, 150 Iowa, 470, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 604.

RIGHT AND BENEFIT

Testator gave his brother the remainder of testator's share of his father's estate, to have full use and control of it for life, and provided that, if his brother's wife should survive him, she should have rights and benefits as long as she remained single. Held, that the gift to the brother's wife of "rights and benefits" meant not only the income, but also the corpus of the estate. A gift of "rights and benefits" so long as the legatee should remain single, with a limitation over upon her remarriage, is an absolute interest, subject to be defeated only by remarriage. Jennings v. Reed, 72 Atl. 939, 940, 75 N. J. Eq. 530.

RIGHT AND FRANCHISE

In Rev. Codes, § 1615, providing that a proposal to construct irrigation works shall state the price at which perpetual water rights will be sold to the settlers, such rights to embrace a proportionate interest in the canal or other waterworks together with the rights and franchises attached thereto, the term "rights and franchises" means water rights as well as all other rights, including dams, canals, ditches, laterals, etc. State v. Twin Falls Canal Co., 121 Pac. 1039, 1043, 21 Idaho, 410.

RIGHT AND PROPER

The difference in language between Comp. St. 1910, § 5016, providing that upon a finding for a plaintiff in replevin who has possession of the property the jury may assess damages for the "illegal detention," and section 5017, providing that where property is taken by a writ of replevin and delivered to the plaintiff, or retained by the sheriff, the jury, on a finding for defendant, may assess such damages as are "right and proper," cannot be held to exclude a defendant from a recovery of damages for illegal detention. The principle upon which compensatory damages are assessed is that compensation for injury shall be commensurate with loss, so that under section 5017, which provides that a defendant in replevin upon a finding in his favor may have such an assessment of damages as is "right and proper," a successful defendant is authorized to recover damages for the wrongful detention where the circumstances are such that he would not otherwise be fully compensated. Hunt v. Thompson, 120 Pac. 181, 183, 184, 19 Wyo. 523.

RIGHT AND WRONG TEST

The distinction between the doctrine of "irresistible impulse" and the "right and wrong test" is that in the latter case the person committing the act is unable, by reason of mental infirmity, to comprehend that the act is wrong, while the doctrine of "irresistible impulse" applies where the person knows that the act is wrong, but is driven by an irresistible impulse to commit it. State v. Riddle, 150 S. W. 1044, 1045, 245 Mo. 451, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 150.

RIGHT ARISING OUT OF AN OBLIGATION

The interest of a lessee in a lease binding the lessor to reimburse him at the end of the term for the then reasonable value of improvements placed on the premises by the lessee, as called for by the lease, is a mere "right arising out of an obligation," within Civ. Code, § 1458, or a chose in action, or a right to recover money by a judicial proceeding, within section 953, and is transferable by assignment during the term under section 954. Belden v. Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank of Healdsburg, 118 Pac. 449, 451, 16 Cal. App. 452.

RIGHT, DEBT, OR DUTY

In the phrase "right, debt, or duty," as used in the statute relating to fraudulent conveyances, the word "right" is synonymous with "debt" or "duty." Brooks v. Clayes, 10 Vt. 37, 51.

The expression "right, debt, or duty," as used in the statute in defining "party aggrieved," refers to such rights as are of the nature of debts, such as exist ex contractu. Beach v. Boynton, 26 Vt. 725, 733.

A plaintiff obtained judgment and issued execution against G., who thereupon applied to the town for support and let the overseer of the poor take his property as indemnity for his support. Held, that G. was under no "right, debt, or duty," within the meaning of Gen. St. c. 113, § 32, at the time judgment was rendered. Fairbanks v. Benjamin, 50 Vt. 99, 103.

RIGHT HEIR

Testator devised his property in trust, income to his grandson during his life, and then to his wife if she survived, and on the death of the survivor the estate was to be distributed to the "right heirs" of the grandson, according to the statute of descent. The grandson survived with issue, married again and had issue, and on his death the second wife claimed her share. Held, that "right heirs" would be construed to mean nothing more than statutory heirs, and hence the wife, being a statutory heir by virtue of Rev. Laws, c. 140, § 3, cl. 3, was entitled to her share. Peabody v. Cook, 87 N. E. 466, 467, 201 Mass. 218, 16 Ann. Cas. 296.

Rev. Laws, c. 154, § 7, provides that an adopted child shall take the same share of the property which the adopting parent could dispose of by will as the child would have taken if born to such parent in lawful wedlock, and he shall stand in regard to the legal descendants, but to no other of the kindred of such adopted parent, in the same position as if born to him; and section 8 declares that the word "child," or its equivalent, in a devise or bequest, shall include a child adopted by the grantor or testator, unless the contrary plainly appears by the terms of the instrument; but, if the grantor or testator is not himself the adopting parent, the adopted child shall not have, under such instrument, the rights of a child born in wedlock to the adopted parent, unless it was the testator's intention to include such adopted child. Held, that an adopted daughter of a deceased brother of the testator was not entitled to take under a will devising a remainder of certain trust property to testator's "right heirs." Brown v. Wright, 80 N. E. 612, 614, 194 Mass. 540.

RIGHT IN ACTION

The words "rights in action," as used in the statute defining embezzlement, are not the exact equivalent of choses or things in action. The word "rights," used in this connection, is a broader term. The Legislature seems to have contemplated that an agent might use a mere claim or demand in such a way as to deprive the owner of the thing claimed and to appropriate it to his (the agent's) own use, and to do this with intent to defraud without the assent of the owner is made embezzlement by the statute. Higbee v. State, 104 N. W. 748, 749, 74 Neb. 331.

The terms "right of action" and "cause of action" are equivalents. Walters v. City of Ottawa, 88 N. E. 651, 653, 240 Ill. 259.

RIGHT OF ALIENATION

See Power of Alienation.

RIGHT OF ANOTHER

Rev. Codes 1905, § 2086, provides that each person shall destroy mustard growing upon lands which he owns or occupies at such time and in such manner as shall effectually prevent its bearing seed. Section 2087 provides that it shall be the duty of the board of county commissioners at its regular meeting in April of each year to determine the time and manner of destroying such weed and to cause its determination to be published as provided in the act. Held, that at least until after the county commissioners have prescribed the time and manner of destruction no such duty devolves upon any person to destroy the weed upon the land he owns or occupies, as will make him liable in damages under section 6681, declaring that one must so use his own rights as not to infringe upon the rights of another; the phrase "rights of another" meaning legal rights and not embracing all rights determined by moral and ethical standards. Langer v. Goode, 181 N. W. 258, 259, 21 N. D. 462, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 429.

RIGHT OF DOWER

See Inchoate Right of Dower.

RIGHT OF EMINENT DOMAIN

See Eminent Domain.

RIGHT OF ENTRY

As chose in action, see Chose in Action.
As estate, see Estate.

RIGHT OF ENTRY FOR BREACH OF CONDITION SUBSEQUENT

A "determinable fee" is an estate limited to a person and his heirs with a qualification annexed to it by which it is provided that it must determine whenever that qualification is at an end, and so long as the estate in fee remains the proprietor has the rights and privileges of a tenant in fee simple, and no right of reversion or possession remains in the grantor, and the only distinction between a "right of entry for breach of condition subsequent" and a "possibility of reverter" on a determinable fee is that in the former the estate in fee does not terminate until entry by the person having the right, while in the latter the estate reverts at once on the occurrence of the event by which it is limited. Lyford v. City of Laconia, 72 Atl. 1085, 1089, 75 N. H. 220, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1062, 189 Am. St. Rep. 680.

RIGHT OF FISHERY

The "public right of fishery," as known to the common law, was the common right to take fish from the waters over which the King held dominion. Hartman v. Tresise, 84 Pac. 685, 689, 36 Colo. 146, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 872 (dissenting opinion).

RIGHT OF INTERVENTION

As remedy at law, see Remedy.

RIGHT OF NAVIGATION

The public "right of navigation" includes the government's right to facilitate and improve navigation by the erection of beacons, the removal of obstructions, the cutting and deepening of channels, etc., which right is vested in the national government by the commerce clause of the federal Constitution. Lewis Blue Point Oyster Cultivation Co. v. Briggs, 114 N. Y. Supp. 313, 315, 129 App. Div. 574 (citing Gilman v. Philadelphia, 70 U. S. [3 Wall.] 725, 18 L. Ed. 96; Pennsylvania v. Wheeling & B. Bridge Co., 59 U. S. [18 How.] 421, 15 L. Ed. 435; South Carolina v. Georgia, 93 U. S. 4, 23 L. Ed. 782; Shively v. Bowlby, 14 Sup. Ct. 548, 152 U. S. 1, 38 L. Ed. 331; Gibson v. United States, 17 Sup. Ct. 578, 166 U. S. 269, 41 L. Ed. 996).

The constitutional "right to be let alone" refers only to the right to be free from bodily injury, or from a reasonable fear of bodily injury, at the hands of a fellow being, and does not include a right to be free from public comment. Henry v. Cherry & Webb, 73 Atl. 97, 100, 30 R. I. 13, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 991, 136 Am. St. Rep. 928, 18 Ann. Cas. 1006.

The "right of privacy," though an intangible right, is a legal right for an invasion of which the law gives relief in equity by injunction, and such right extends to the unauthorized use by one person of the picture of another. Munden v. Harris, 184 S. W. 1076, 1080, 153 Mo. App. 652.

The "right of privacy" is embraced within the absolute rights of personal security and personal liberty. Pavesich v. New England Life Ins. Co., 50 S. E. 68, 70, 122 Ga. 190, 69 L. R. A. 101, 106 Am. St. Rep. 104, 2 Ann. Cas. 561.

An injunction will lie to restrain the unauthorized use of one's name by another as a part of its corporate title, or, in connection with its business or advertisements, his picture and his pretended certificate that a medicinal preparation, which such other is engaged in manufacturing, is compounded according to the formula devised by him, though he is not a business competitor. There must be a limit to the so-called "right of privacy," and a man in public life may not claim the same immunity from publicity that a private citizen may. Edison v. Edison Polyform Mfg. Co., 67 Atl. 392, 394, 73 N. J. Eq. 136 (citing Corliss v. Walker Co., 64 Fed. 280, 31 L. R. A. 283).

RIGHT OF PROPERTY

"A vested right may be considered as the power to do certain acts or to possess certain things lawfully. In its latter aspect it is substantially a 'right of property,' and as such is protected by those provisions in the Constitution which apply to such rights, but a 'right of property' is a perfect and exclusive right and a right, therefore, to recover the amount of a judgment cannot be called a perfect or a vested right." Lohrstorfer v. Lohrstorfer, 104 N. W. 142, 146, 140 Mich. 551, 70 L. R. A. 621.

The "right of property" guaranteed by the Constitution is the right to acquire, possess, and enjoy property in any way consistent with the equal rights of others and the just exactions and demands of the state. Ives v. South Buffalo Ry. Co., 94 N. E. 431, 439, 201 N. Y. 271, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 162 Ann. Cas. 1912B, 156.

A ticket of admission to a public place of amusement, when sold, is made, by Act 1893 (St. 1893, p. 220, c. 185), at least an irrevocable license to the purchaser to occupy a place therein during the performance and such a ticket, therefore represents a right, positive or conditional, as the case may be, according to the terms of the original contract of sale, and this right is clearly a "right of property," and the ticket which represents that right is also necessarily a species of property. So Act March 18, 1905 (St. 1905, p. 140, c. 140), prohibiting any person from selling tickets to theaters or other public places of amusement higher than the price originally charged by the management of such amusement places, is void as infringing on a right of property guaranteed by the Constitution. Ex parte Quarg, 84 Pac. 766, 767, 149 Cal. 79, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 183, 117 Am. St. Rep. 115, 9 Ann. Cas. 747.

The "right of property" consists in the free use, enjoyment, and disposal of one's acquisitions, without any control or diminution, save only by the laws of the land. Block v. Schwartz, 76 Pac. 22, 25, 27 Utah, 387, 65 L. R. A. 308, 101 Am. St. Rep. 971, 1 Ann. Cas. 550 (citing 1 Black. Comm. 138).

RIGHT OF REDEMPTION

The "equity of redemption" is the mortgagor's interest before foreclosure; while his "right of redemption" is a mere personal privilege given by statute to the mortgagor after a sale under the mortgage. A sale by a mortgagor of his equity of redemption, made after a mortgage sale, is not an assignment of the "right of redemption" given by Code 1907, § 5746, and his grantee is not entitled to redeem. Lewis v. McBride (Ala.) 57 South. 705, 706.

"The term 'right to redeem' is appropriate to express the right, interest, or estate of a mortgagor and not a vendee. When we speak of the interest of one in or right to real estate as an 'equity of redemption,' which is synonymous with 'right to redeem,' we understand that reference is made to the status of a mortgagor, not a vendee." A consent judgment, declaring that defendant, "has an equity to redeem" land on the payment to plaintiff of a specified sum, and, in case of the failure to pay the same within the time limited, "defendant shall stand debarred absolutely" of all equity in the premises, establishes the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee between the parties. Bunn v. Braswell, 51 S. E. 927, 929, 139 N. C. 135.

RIGHT OF WAY

See Existing Right of Way.

See, also, Way of Necessity.

A "right of way" is a right to a way over lands of another. Seery v. City of Waterbury, 74 Atl. 908, 909, 82 Conn. 567, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 681, 18 Ann. Cas. 73.

A "right of way" is the right of a person to travel over a particular tract of land without any interference. Kalinowski v. Jacobowski, 100 Pac. 852, 854, 52 Wash. 359.

A "right of way" may be defined generally to be a right to pass over the land of another. It may be a private way or a public way, and it may belong to one or several persons or to the entire community. Poole v. Greer (Del.) 65 Atl. 767, 6 Pennewill, 220.

The grant of a "right of way" per se, and nothing else, may be a right of footway, or it may be a general right of way; that is a right of way not only for people on foot but for people on horseback, or people in carts, carriages, and other vehicles. Which it is is a question of construction of the grant, which construction will depend on the circumstances surrounding the execution of the instrument. Speer v. Erie R. Co., 65 Atl. 1024, 1025, 72 N. J. Eq. 411.

The term "right of way" ordinarily means a strip occupied by a railroad company for its tracks, and lands directly connected therewith, though it may not be of the same width, or used in the same manner, at all points. Rio Grande Western Ry. Co. v. Salt Lake Inv. Co., 101 Pac. 586, 589, 35 Utah, 523.

Where an accident policy provided that it should not cover injuries sustained while insured was on any railroad bridge or "right of way," except at established crossings of such roads with public highways, the term "right of way" should be construed as meaning the way or track on which trains travel, and not the entire width of the railroad company's ground. Starr v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 83 Pac. 113, 115, 41 Wash. 199, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 630.

The term "right of way" has a twofold signification. It sometimes is used to describe a right belonging to a party, a right of passage over any tract; and it is also used to describe that strip of land which railroad companies take upon which to construct their roadbed. In a contract between railroad companies, providing that one party shall permit other railroads to use its right of way, the term is used in the latter sense. Central Trust Co. v. Wabash, St. L. & P. Ry., 29 Fed. 546, 555. See, also, Id., 144 Fed. 476, 480.

The term "right of way," as used in a statute providing that a railroad company shall be responsible to any person for damages to property by fire communicated by its locomotives or originating within its right of way, has no reference to the title of the railroad company, whether having a mere easement or a greater estate, but is intended to designate the locality within which the railroad would be liable under the statute. Brown v. Carolina Midland Ry. Co., 46 S. E. 283, 286, 67 S. C. 481, 100 Am. St. Rep. 756.

The "right of way" of a railroad is the strip of land which the railroad company appropriates for its use, and upon which it builds its roadbeds, and not the intangible right to use. Figg v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 75 S. W. 269, 270, 116 Ky. 135.

The term "right of way" is used even by the learned indiscriminately to describe, not only the easement which railroads may obtain by condemnation, but as well to describe the strip of land which a railroad occupies for the use of its tracks, no matter by what title it may hold the same. Possibly the greater number of people, when they speak of the right of way of a railroad company, have in their minds the ownership of such land. These "rights of way" are held by the railroad by various titles. Prior to 1868 condemnation proceedings vested in them the fee-simple title. In other cases rights were acquired by deed or lease, but perhaps in the larger number of cases the mere easement, technically known as a right of way, was acquired by condemnation proceedings. Subsequent to that date it is clear that the term, as generally used, has no exact and well-defined signification. Kansas City, M. & O. Ry. Co. v. Littler, 79 Pac. 114, 115, 70 Kan. 556.

A "right of way," as used in a city ordinance granting to an elevated railroad company a right to occupy the streets of a city, means the way occupied and used for the track and the operation of trains, and its width must be determined by necessity, and is no greater than the space needed for the safe and convenient operation of trains over this track. Peabody Coal Co. v. Northwestern Elevated R. Co., 82 N. E. 573, 576, 230 Ill. 214.

Acts 1895, p. 243, c. 123, § 1, provides that waterworks companies may condemn lands for the source of supplies, pumping stations, settling basins, filtering basins or tanks, storage reservoirs, supply mains, delivery reservoirs, tank or stand pipes, and delivery mains, and the necessary lines of pipe connecting them. Acts 1905, p. 398, c. 129, § 256, provides that any corporation engaged in the business of providing any city or town and its inhabitants with water, as provided for in the previous two sections, may condemn such real estate and rights of way as may be necessary for its business. Section 254, p. 396, authorizes a city or town to contract with any person or corporation to furnish it and its inhabitants with water, etc. Held, that the phrase "real estate and rights of way" means such only as may be reasonably necessary to such companies for construction and maintenance of its works, laying and maintenance of pipe lines, mains, and conduits, and for the erection and maintenance of poles, wires, and other proper structures and appliances, and not such ways of railway communication as might become expedient and desirable because of an unfavorable location of the power plant, voluntarily chosen, and hence a right of way for a stub switch connecting its plant with a railroad could not be condemned by such a company. Kinney v. Citizens' Water & Light Co., 90 N. E. 129, 173 Ind. 252, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 195.

City street

Land used by a street railroad company for a right of way is railroad track, assessable only by the state board of equalization, even though the company has merely an easement in the right of way and the title is owned by another; so that the company's track in a public street was a part of its "right of way." People v. Terre Haute & W. Ry. Co., 100 N. E. 173, 256 Ill. 501; Connecticut Valley St. Ry. Co. v. City of Northampton, 99 N. E. 516, 521, 213 Mass. 54.

Convenient land

Constructive notice that a railroad owns a "right of way" in certain premises means the free use of so much ground upon both sides of the tracks as is required for the convenient and customary use and maintenance of the railroad. Day v. Atlantic & G. W. R. Co., 41 Ohio St. 392, 398.

As interest in land

As interest in land, see Interest (In property).

As land itself

"A 'right of way,' although commonly designated as an easement, is an interest in land of a special and exclusive nature and of a high character. In speaking of its character, the Supreme Court of the United States said: 'A railroad right of way is a very substantial thing. It is more than a mere right of passage or an easement. We discussed its character in New Mexico v. United States Trust Co., 19 Sup. Ct. 128, 133, 172 U. S. 171, 183, 43 L. Ed. 407. We there said that, if a railroad's right of way was an easement, it was "one having the attributes of the fee—perpetuity and exclusive use and possession; also the remedies of the fee, and, like it, corporeal, not incorporeal, property."'Abercromble v. Simmons, 81 Pac. 208, 211, 71 Kan. 538, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 806, 114 Am. St. Rep. 509, 6 Ann. Cas. 239.

A "right of way," within Civ. Code, § 802, designating rights of way as among the land burdens which may be granted or held, although not attached to land, is real property and distinctly and necessarily local in character and situated in and upon land. Stockton Gas & Electric Co. v. San Joaquin County, 83 Pac. 54, 58, 148 Cal. 313, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 174, 7 Ann. Cas. 511.

A deed purporting to convey "the right of way" over the land in question, for the purpose of constructing and maintaining any levees that may be built thereon, gives only one right of way across the land, so that, when the right of way has been selected and a levy constructed thereon, the grantee is not entitled to construct another levee across the land on a different line under such deed. Board of Directors of St. Francis Levee Dist. v. Bowen, 95 S. W. 993, 80 Ark. 80.

As mere easement

A "right of way" is an "easement." S. E. & H. L. Shepherd Co. v. Shibbles, 61 Atl. 700, 702, 100 Me. 314.

A "right of way" is an easement of perpetual use, a charge or burden upon the land of one for the benefit of another. Shaw v. Proffitt, 109 Pac. 584, 587, 57 Or. 192, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 63.

A "right of way" for an irrigation ditch is an "easement." Blake v. Boye, 88 Pac. 470, 472, 38 Colo. 55, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 418.

A "right of way" is an easement and can only be acquired by grant, either from the owner or from the state, through the exercise of the right of eminent domain, or by prescription. Clark v. Wabash R. Co., 109 N. W. 309, 310, 132 Iowa, 11.

A "right of way" simply means the right to pass over the lands of another, and is an easement conferring a privilege on the grantor's estate, but which does not give the grantee a right to enjoy the estate itself by exclusive occupation. People ex rel. Bryan v. State Board of Tax Com'rs, 124 N. Y. Supp. 711, 713, 67 Misc. Rep. 508.

The words "right of way" may mean the ordinary easements railroads have to use land over which to run their trains or the mere intangible right to cross another's land, and, though the use of that term in a conveyance to a railroad company will not, if the other parts of the conveyance indicate an intention to convey a greater estate prevent a greater estate from being conveyed, yet, where the purpose of the deed is obviously to convey a mere right of way, the addition to the deed of the words "together with the right to take all stone, timber and minerals" does not increase the extent of the grant, but the deed must be construed as granting a mere easement, being limited by the term "right of way," and not giving the railroad company the right to bore for oil or prospect for other minerals in the right of way. Gladys City Oil, Gas & Mfg. Co. v. Right of Way Oil Co. (Tex.) 137 S. W. 171, 178 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6230).

"A 'railroad right of way' is a very substantial thing; it is more than a mere right of passage; it is more than an easement." In New Mexico v. United States Trust Co., 19 Sup. Ct. 128, 172 U. S. 171, 43 L. Ed. 407, it was said that, if a "railroad's right of way" was an easement, it was "one having the attributes of the fee, perpetuity, and exclusive use and possession, also the remedies of the fee, and like it corporeal, and not incorporeal, property." Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Pennsylvania Ry. Co., 25 Sup. Ct. 133, 141, 195 U. S. 540, 49 L. Ed. 312, 1 Ann. Cas. 517.

A "right of way" acquired by a railroad company by condemnation proceedings gives no right to the soil, but merely a full right of passage. The grantee of such a right of way is not the owner or occupant of the estate over which it is granted. The right of way is simply an easement. Kansas & C. P. Ry. Co. v. Burns, 79 Pac. 238, 239, 70 Kan. 627 (citing Cook County v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 35 Ill. 400).

A "right of way" includes the easement of a reclamation district for the construction of a levee, under Pol. Code, §§ 3454, 3471, authorizing the trustees of a reclamation district to acquire, by condemnation, a "right of way" for the construction of works, including drains, canals, etc., and within Code Civ. Proc. § 1240, enumerating the private property which may be taken under the right of eminent domain, and providing that "rights of way" shall be deemed private property for the purposes mentioned. Reclamation Dist. No. 551 v. Superior Court of Sacramento County, 90 Pac. 545, 546, 151 Cal. 263.

One deriving title under a deed executed by an association conveying land subject to the reservation of a reasonable right of way across said lot, and also reserves to said association all springs or other streams of water arising on said lot, etc., does not obtain the right to dig trenches and lay pipe lines for the conduct of water developed on his land on the land of another claiming under a similar deed from the same grantor, since the phrase "right of way" contemplates only a right of ingress and egress to and from the land conveyed, and since the grantee has no title to the water on his land, that being reserved to the association alone, so that he could not need a right of way across the land of the other grantee for the purpose of carrying such water. San Rafael Ranch Co. v. Ralph Rogers Co., 96 Pac. 1092, 1093, 154 Cal. 76.

A deed, granting "the right of passway for a hauling road of sufficient width running" along a creek to a gap and "extending on the top of said gap enough to guarantee" to the grantee, "his heirs and vendees, land enough for a good hauling road around the top" of a cliff to a fixed point, granted a right of passway and no title to the soil or trees. Samples v. Smythe (Ky.) 105 S. W. 415, 416.

As premises

See Premises.

As property

See Private Property; Property.

As railroad track

See Railroad Track.

As way through public land

A grant of a "right of way" to a railroad is a grant of a limited or qualified fee, which, so long as the qualification annexed is not at an end, confers upon the railroad company the exclusive right of possession, so that a settlement upon such "right of way" is not a settlement upon public land. The estate granted is more than a mere easement. It amounts to a base qualified or limited fee, and, so long as the company maintains its line of road, it has the right to exclusive possession. Oregon Short Line R. Co. v. Stalker, 94 Pac. 56, 64, 14 Idaho, 362.

As right of passage

A "right of way" is the mere privilege of passing over the land of another in some particular line, with the implied right to make such changes in the surface of the land as are necessary to make it available for travel in a convenient manner. Ballard v. Titus, 110 Pac. 118, 121, 157 Cal. 673.

The very term "right of way," as designating the property of a railroad, is illustrative of the character of the right it has. It has the first right of passage. It has primarily the right to use the land for its necessary railroad purposes, and the right of the owner of the land to use crossings is secondary and subordinate to the railroad's reasonable, necessary use thereof for railroad purposes. Townsend v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 106 N. Y. Supp. 381, 383, 56 Misc. Rep. 253.

The term "right of way" should not be confined to the land over which the main track of a railroad should be constructed. The land upon which a side track, a switch, or a turnout is built, and in actual use by the company in the business for which it was organized, for all practical purposes is as much held a right of way as the land upon which the main track is constructed. In the operation of a railroad, it is necessary that trains should pass each other, and hence the necessity of turnouts, switches, and side tracks. In the loading of cars, transfer of cars, the making up of trains, and innumerable other instances that might be named in the prosecution of its business as a common carrier, side tracks, switches, and turnouts are as indispensable to a proper transaction of its business as the main track itself. Land held and in actual use by a railroad company for side tracks, switches, and turnouts must be regarded, within the meaning of the revenue law, as a part of the right of way of the company. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. People ex rel. Dennison, 98 Ill. 350, 356. See, also, Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Patterson (Tenn.) 122 S. W. 467, 476 (citing Chicago & A. R. Co. v. People ex rel. Dennison, 98 Ill. 356); Chicago & M. Electric R. Co. v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 71 N. E. 1017, 1020, 211 Ill. 352.

The term "right of way," when used to describe the real estate of a railroad company, ordinarily signifies the entire strip of land which the corporation has found it necessary or convenient to acquire the right to use for railway purposes, and it is not limited to the specific part thereof secured or used for its main track or other particular improvements. St. Louis, K. C. & C. R. Co. v. Wabash R. Co., 152 Fed. 849, 852, 81 C. A. 643 (citing Joy v. St. Louis, 11 Sup. Ct. 243, 138 U. S. 1, 44-46, 11 Sup. Ct. 243, 34 L. Ed. 843; New Mexico v. United States Trust Co., 19 Sup. Ct. 128, 172 U. S. 171, 43 L. Ed. 413; Id., 19 Sup. Ct. 784, 174 U. S. 545, 43 L. Ed. 1079; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. People ex rel. Dennison, 98 Ill. 350, 356, 357; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Middlecoff, 37 N. E. 660, 663, 150 Ill. 27; Pfaff v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co., 9 N. E. 93, 95, 108 Ind. 144, 148); St. Louis, K. C. & C. R. Co. v. Wabash R. Co., 80 Sup. Ct. 510, 513, 217 U. S. 247, 54 L. Ed. 752.

The term "right of way," in a statute, provided that no way shall be laid out through or across any right of way of any railroad used for station purposes, unless after notice, etc., was simply used by the Legislature to embrace all the property of the railroad constituting station grounds affected by the location of the way. Appeal of Atlantic & St. L. R. Co., 62 Atl. 141, 143, 100 Me. 430.

A railroad company's statutory duty to fence its "right of way" does not extend to station grounds, though no depot building or agent is maintained at the place, if it receives and discharges passengers and freight there; the amount of road which may be left unfenced depending upon reasonable necessity for the accommodation of the public and the safety of employes. Hay v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 142 S. W. 468, 470, 161 Mo. App. 1.

Railroad yard

By the expression "right of way," when used in a deed by the owner of premises to a railroad company, it may be understood that an easement is granted to the railway company to construct its road over the grantor's premises, and to operate the same in the usual and ordinary way, but beyond this the court cannot determine the extent of the use to which the land may be put by the grantee. It is the limit or extent of the use that makes the grant doubtful, where the only words that imply a use is the expression "right of way purposes"; and, in determining the effect of grants of this character, the rule, that you may look to the surrounding circumstances, in order to ascertain the intention of the parties, is particularly applicable. A landowner granted to a railroad company a strip of land 50 feet wide, to be used as a "right of way," which expression is used in Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, arts. 4445, and 4483, in contradistinction to depots, shops, etc., and in the sense of the land required for the roadbed. Held, that the grant authorized the use of the land as a track only, and did not entitle the railroad company to use it for a switchyard. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Anderson, 81 S. W. 781, 782, 786, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 121.

Roadway synonymous

The term "right of way," as used in statutes relating to the taxation of railroad companies, is synonymous with the term "roadway," as used in Const. art. 13, § 10, relating to the taxation of railroad companies. San Francisco & S. J. V. Ry. Co. v. City of Stockton, 84 Pac. 771, 773, 149 Cal. 83.

Railroad property within a city, consisting of parcels contiguous to the 30-foot continuous right of way and within a part of the 8-rod right of way permitted to railroads by Civ. Code, § 465, subd. 4, and used for freight and passenger depots, for local business, and for spur tracks necessary for the depots, and for a fruit packing house with a spur track for convenient use, and for a park and for tracks used for the storage of tools, is not a part of the right of way within Const. art. 13, § 10, providing that the franchise roadway, roadbed, and rails of railroads operated in more than one county shall be assessed by the State Board of Equalization, and is properly assessed by the city assessor; the word "roadway" being synonymous with the phrase "right of way," which includes the continuous strip of land permitted by law on which to construct the roadbed and lay the tracks. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Los Angeles County, 111 Pac. 250, 251, 158 Cal. 437.

RIGHT OF WAY BY CUSTOM

"A 'right of way by custom' in favor of the inhabitants of a particular locality might be set up by the common law of England. It could be proved by immemorial usage. From such proof a presumption was deemed to arise that the usage was founded on a legal right. This right was not assumed to arise from a grant by an owner of land of an easement in it. * * * A 'right of way by custom' appertains to a certain district of territory, but not to any particular tenement forming part of that territory." "Nor is it confined to owners of land within that territory. It belongs to the inhabitants of that territory, whether landowners or not. To a fluctuating body of that kind, no estate in lands can be granted. If, therefore, an easement be claimed to exist in their favor, a title cannot be made out by prescription, on the theory of a lost grant. It must have come, if at all, from some public act of a governmental nature. The theory of English law was that, if there had been a usage from time immemorial (that is, so far as could be ascertained, from the coronation of Richard I), affecting the use of real estate by those not able to show any paper title to warrant it, it might fairly be presumed that it arose under an act of Parliament or other public act of governing power, the best evidence of which had perished. A charter from some feudal lord or ecclesiastical corporation might be such an act. Of such charters there were no public records. That the accidental destruction of the parchment on which one was written should annul the privileges which it gave would be plainly unjust." The laws of Connecticut do not recognize personal rights of way or other easements resting on local custom. Graham v. Walker, 61 Atl. 98, 99, 78 Conn. 130, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 983, 112 Am. St. Rep. 93, 3 Ann. Cas. 641.

Under Revisal 1905, §§ 1571-1577, authorizing corporations maintaining lines for electric power to acquire by condemnation such rights, privileges, and easements as may be reasonably necessary to the enterprise, and section 2575 et seq. providing that such corporations may enter on such contiguous lands along their route as may be necessary to protect their property, etc., a corporation, maintaining a line in the center of a right of way 100 feet wide to convey electric power, may acquire by condemnation the right to cut trees on contiguous territory constituting a source of danger to its line; the term "rights and privileges" being broad enough to include such right. Yadkin River Power Co. v. Wissler, 76 S. E. 267, 270, 160 N. C.

The words "rights and privileges," in Act Ill. Feb. 6, 1865, authorizing the construction and maintenance of street railways in Chicago on such streets as the common council has authorized or shall authorize, the "rights and privileges," immunities, and exemptions to be such as the common council has prescribed or may by contract prescribe, etc., refer to such "rights and privileges" as are derived from the contracts with the city. Blair v. Chicago, 26 Sup. Ct. 427, 442, 201 U. S. 400, 50 L. Ed. 801.

"Rights, privileges, and immunities" secured by Const. U. S. art. 4, § 2, and Id. Amend. 14, to the inhabitants of the several states, do not include any rights in the property of the several states held in trust for their own inhabitants. State v. Ashman, 135 S. W. 325, 326, 123 Tenn. 654.

The words "rights, privileges, and immunities," when used in a statute relating to exemption from taxation for certain periods of the property, etc., of railroad corporations are full and ample for the purpose of granting such exemption. Grand Canyon R. Co. v. Treat, 95 Pac. 187, 190, 12 Ariz. 69 (citing Phoenix F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Tennessee, Use of Memphis, 16 Sup. Ct. 471, 161 U. S. 174, 40 L. Ed. 600).

RIGHT, TITLE, AND INTEREST

All right, title, and interest, see All.

The words "right, title, and interest," as used in deeds, have acquired a definite meaning, not importing ownership, but conveying whatever title the grantor has, and that alone. Baker v. Davie, 97 N. E. 1094, 1097, 211 Mass. 429, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 944.

The words "right, title, and interest" of any defendant therein," in Gen. Laws 1896, c. 253, § 10, providing how an officer commanded by an original writ or writ of mesne process to attach real estate, or the "right, title, and interest" of any defendant therein, shall make the attachment, include equitable as well as legal interests, and extend the common law of the state by making that attachable on original writ or writ of mesne process which was already subject to levy on execution. Tucker v. Denico, 61 Atl. 642, 645, 27 R. I. 239.

The phrase "the right, title, use, interest, and occupation," as used in the statute providing that lessees of school lands shall be vested with "the right, title, use, interest, and occupation of" the lands, must be construed as used in connection with the character of the estate which is authorized to be conveyed, which is a leasehold estate, and it conveys only such right, title, use, interest, and occupation as go with a leasehold estate. Moss Point Lumber Co. v. Board of Sup'rs of Harrison County, 42 South. 290, 300, 89 Miss. 448.

RIGHT TO BEAR ARMS

RIGHT TO BE HEARD BY COUNSEL

The constitutional "right of accused to be heard by himself and counsel" means that he shall have the right to be fully and fairly heard. Hence it is reversible error to arbitrarily limit the time for argument to one hour on a side, against defendant's objection as being too short, where, under the circumstances of the case, such limitation is too restrictive to permit a full and fair discussion of the case before the jury. State v. Rogoway, 81 Pac. 234, 235, 45 Or. 601, 2 App. Cas. 431 (citing Wingo v. State, 62 Miss. 311; Yeldell v. State, 100 Ala. 26, 14 South. 570, 46 Am. St. Rep. 20).

A statute providing that, when any person indicted for an offense is acquitted by reason of insanity, the jury shall so state in the verdict, and, if the discharge of the insane person is deemed dangerous to the community, he may be committed to prison, does not violate the constitutional provision guaranteeing the "right of counsel." In re Brown, 81 Pac. 552, 554, 39 Wash. 160, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 540, 109 Am. St. Rep. 868, 4 Ann. Cas. 488.

RIGHT TO CONTRACT

The "right to contract" involves the right to sue for breach of contract, and, when the law creates a new right to contract, the mere creation of such right includes an appropriate remedy by suit for its violation. Mathewson v. Mathewson, 63 Atl. 285, 286, 79 Conn. 23, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 611, 6 Ann. Cas. 1027.

Acts 29th Leg. c. 29, § 1, provides that all persons claiming rights to purchase or lease any public free school lands which have been sold or leased to any other person shall sue therefor within one year after the act takes effect, or after the award of such sale or lease, if made after the taking effect of the act, and not thereafter. Held that, where a purchaser's right to purchase school land is forfeited by the Commissioner, his right to reinstatement, if any, is a claim of right to purchase, to which the statute applies; and, unless suit to enforce such right is instituted within a year after the award, it is barred. *Nations v. RIGHT TO RECOVER MONEY

The interest of a lessee in a lease binding the lessor to reimburse him at the end of the term for the then reasonable value of improvements placed on the premises by the lessee, as called for by the lease, is a mere right arising out of an obligation, within Civ. Code, § 1458, or a chose in action, or a right to recover money by a judicial proceeding, within section 953, and is transferable by assignment during the term under section 954. Belden v. Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank of Healdsburg, 118 Pac. 449, 451, 16 Cal. App. 452.

RIGHT TO REDEEM

RIGHTFUL

Rev. St. U. S. § 1851, provides that the legislative power of every territory shall extend to all "rightful subjects of legislation" not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States. This power is as broad as that exercised by the Legislatures of the states; the Constitutions and laws of the United States serving as the sole limitation thereon, a limitation comparable to that imposed by state Constitutions upon state Legislatures. Those are "rightful subjects of legislation" which, subject to that limitation, would be rightful subjects for state legislation. Leatherwood v. Hill, 89 Pac. 521, 522, 10 Ariz. 243 (quoting Bennett v. Nichols, 80 Pac. 392, 9 Ariz. 138).

RIGHTS OR PRIVILEGES

The right or privilege to vote at an election for a member of the House of Representatives of the United States is "a right or privilege" secured by the Constitution of the United States, and such right is therefore within the meaning of section 5508 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. Felix v. United States, 186 Fed. 685, 689, 108 C. C. A. 503.

RIM

The contract of plaintiff to bore and complete a well for oil to the depth of 2,000 feet for 50 cents per lineal foot, the casing to be furnished by defendant, plaintiff, if it became necessary to draw the casing from the well, to be paid 5 cents a foot for such work, includes in the price of 50 cents a foot, the work of "rimming" or enlarging the bore of the well necessary for putting in the casing. Hanna v. Smith, 139 N. W. 256, 259, 173 Mich. 483.

RIM BENDER

An employé in a wheel factory, whose duty consists in putting timber of proper sizes into a form, which timber, after it is steamed, is drawn by means of a pulley into the required shape for a felloe and fastened by means of an iron bar, so that it must remain in that shape until it is dried out, and then, when taken from the form, it retains the half-moon shape of a felloe, is known to the trade as a "rim bender." Cotton v. Owensboro Wheel Co. (Ky.) 97 S. W. 763.

RIOT

"Riot" is essentially an offense against the public peace and good order, and looks to this rather than an infraction of the personal rights of any particular individual as such. To transmute acts intrinsically lawful into a riot, the acts must be attended with both violence and tumult, both being essential to cause the reaction necessary to change the quality of a lawful act, and neither noise nor violence alone attending the performance of such an act can make a riot. Where the indictment in a prosecution for riot, in addition to charging that accused committed unlawful acts of violence, alleged that they being assembled and gathered together, and acting with a common intent, unlawfully, violently, and tumultuously did make a great noise, riot, tumult, and disturbance to the great terror of certain persons, it was not error to charge in explanation of the nature of the offense that the act need not necessarily be an unlawful act in a violent, tumultuous manner, but that, if accused in connection with others and acting with a common intent did an unlawful act or any other act in a violent and tumultuous manner, he could be convicted. Taylor v. State, 68 S. E. 945, 946, 8 Ga. App. 241.

Where three men assembled in front of a citizen's house at night cursing and threatening him in loud voices, repeatedly fired a gun, whereby the citizen and his family were greatly frightened, all of the participants were guilty of "riot." Lewis v. State, 58 S. E. 1070, 2 Ga. App. 659.

Three persons for whose arrest warrants had been issued by a federal court took refuge in a hotel and resisted arrest, and exchanged shots with the marshal's posse, and, after the women and children had left the hotel, the marshal burned it and arrested one of the three. U. S. Comp. St. 1901, § 788, provides that marshals and their deputies shall have in each state the same powers in executing the laws of the United States as sheriffs and their deputies in such state; Ky. St. § 4583 (Russell's St. § 256), provides that in executing any criminal process requiring an actual arrest the sheriff or other officer may break open the door of the dwelling or other house of the defendant, or of any other person, if necessary; and Cr. Code Prac. § 40, provides that to make an arrest an officer may break open the door of the house in which defendant may be. Held that, while the three men resisting the arrest constituted a "riot" under the common-law definition that a riot is a tumultuous disturbance of the peace by three persons or more assembling together, of their own authority, with an intent actually to assist each other against any who may oppose them in the execution of some enterprise of a private nature, and afterwards actually executing the same in a violent manner, to the terror of the people, the marshal's posse, though it burned the hotel, did not constitute a riot, and that while the riot was the occasion of the hotel's loss by fire the direct cause of the loss was the marshal's unauthorized act, and that hence the insurer was not released from liability by the excepted risks of "riot" and "order of any civil authority." American Central Ins. Co. v. Stearns Lumber Co., 140 S. W. 148, 149, 145 Ky. 255, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 566, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 628.

Mob synonyms

The act of persons commonly called "night riders" in burning a building constituted a "riot," and the persons engaged therein constituted a "mob," and the two terms being synonymous, within the definition of the word as given in Bouvier's Law Dictionary, an insurer of the building was not liable, where the policy contained a stipulation that it should not be liable in case of a destruction of the building as the result of a "riot." Lockett-Wake Tobacco Co. v. Globe & Rutgers Fire Ins. Co., 171 Fed. 147, 148.

Trespass or larceny distinguished

Pen. Code, § 449, defines "riot" as follows: "Whenever three or more persons, having assembled for any purpose, disturb the public peace, by using force or violence to any other person, or to property, or threaten or attempt to commit such disturbance, or to do an unlawful act by the use of force or violence, accompanied with the power of immediate execution of such threat or attempt, they are guilty of riot." According to the common-law definition given by Hawkins in his Pleas of the Crown, a "riot" is "a tumultuous disturbance of the peace by three persons or more assembling of their own authority with an intent mutually to assist one another against any one who shall oppose them in the execution of some enterprise of a private nature, and afterwards actually executing the same in a violent and turbulent manner, to the terror of the people, whether the act intended were of itself lawful or unlawful." Greenleaf adopts a definition evidently based upon that given by Hawkins, and to the effect that, to constitute a "riot," "it is necessary that there be three or more persons tumultuously assembled of their own authority with intent mutually to assist one another against all who shall oppose them in the doing either of an unlawful act of a private nature or of a lawful act in a violent and tumultuous manner." Hence, where a crowd of young men and boys, varying in number from 8 to 30, practically demolished an unoccupied building, and on the approach of police officers the crowd immediately dispersed, and at the same time, in another portion of the police precinct, boys and men were stealing wood for bonfires, such acts constituted a trespass or larceny rather than a "riot," within the meaning of the statute making cities liable for property destroyed or injured by a riot. Adamson v. City of New York, 80 N. E. 937, 188 N. Y. 255, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 925, 117 Am. St. Rep. 863, 11 Ann. Cas. 183.

Act by two persons

To constitute the offense of "riot" under Pen. Code 1895, § 354, there must be two or more persons acting jointly in execution of a common intent in the commission of an unlawful act of violence or of some other act in a violent manner. Croy v. State, 61 S. E. 847, 4 Ga. App. 457; Lewis v. State, 63 S. E. 570, 571, 5 Ga. App. 496.

To constitute the offense of "riot," there must be not only a common intent on the part of two or more persons to do an unlawful act of violence, or some other act in a violent and tumultuous manner, but also concert of action in furtherance of such common intent. Stanfield v. State, 57 S. E. 953, 1 Ga. App. 532 (citing Prince v. State, 30 Ga. 27; Coney v. State, 39 S. E. 425, 113 Ga. 1060).

To constitute a "riot" there must be a common intent on the part of two or more persons to do an unlawful act, and also concert of action in furtherance of such intent; but it is not necessary that there must have been a previous plot on the part of the rioters to constitute such offense. Jemley v. State, 49 S. E. 292, 121 Ga. 346. See, also, Hunter v. State, 55 S. E. 1044, 127 Ga. 43.

Any unlawful act by three or more

According to the common-law definition, a "riot" is a tumultuous disturbance of the peace by three persons or more assembling together of their own authority with an intent mutually to assist each other against any who shall oppose them in the execution of some enterprise of a private nature, and afterwards actually executing it in a violent and turbulent manner, to the terror of the people, whether the act intended were of itself lawful or unlawful; and hence where a body of 100 or more men, armed and disguised, unlawfully confederated and banded together for the purpose of destroying property of the insured, and in pursuance of the unlawful conspiracy burned it, and at the same time intimidated and terrorized the inhabitants and civil authorities, the fire which burned the property was caused by a "riot" as used in the policy. Spring Garden Ins. Co. v. Imperial Tobacco Co., 116 S. W. 234, 236, 132 Ky. 7, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 277, 136 Am. St. Rep. 164.

Gen. St. 1901, § 2269, providing that if three or more persons shall assemble together with intent to do any unlawful act with force and violence against the person or property of another, or to do any unlawful act against the peace, in effect defines "riot." City of Cherryvale v. Hawman, 101 Pac. 994, 995, 80 Kan. 170, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 645, 133 Am. St. Rep. 195, 18 Ann. Cas. 149 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6240).

Under Comp. Laws 1909, § 2497, providing that any use of force or any threats to use force, if accompanied by immediate power of execution, by three or more persons acting together and without authority of law, is "riot," a riot cannot be committed by one person alone, or by two persons acting together, but there must be three or more persons acting together, and without authority of law. Proctor v. State, 115 Pac. 630, 632, 5 Okl. Cr. 553. The statutory elements of the crime of riot are the use of force or violence, or threats to use force or violence, accompanied by immediate power of execution. Unless these elements exist, there can be no riot. Cochran v. State, 111 Pac. 974, 975, 4 Okl. Cr. 379.

Where three or more persons, without authority of law, combine and by threats or force, with immediate power of execution, seek to accomplish any unlawful purpose, they are guilty of riot. Crawford v. Ferguson, 115 Pac. 278, 279, 5 Okl. Cr. 377, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 519.

"Riot" is a compound offense, to constitute which there must be a joint action of three or more persons. But all who aid, encourage, or promote it by words, signs, or other acts are principals and jointly guilty of the offense, and it is not necessary that a party should commit some personal violence or do some other physical act, but any act of assistance or encouragement is sufficient to make him a principal. If he guides, directs, incites, or encourages others to commit acts of violence, while the 'riot' is in progress, he is as guilty as the instrumentalities he puts in motion." Under B. & C. Comp. § 1913, defining "riot" as the use of any force or violence or any threat to use force or violence, if accompanied by immediate power of execution, by three or more persons acting together and without authority of law, it is not necessary that three persons should do the same identical act, but it is sufficient to constitute the offense if three persons had a common purpose to do the act complained of or were engaged in aiding or assisting one another in accomplishing such common purpose with the use of force and violence or threats without authority of law, though the individual act of each was separate from that of the others. State v. Mizis, 85 Pac. 611, 617, 48 Or. 165. See, also, State v. Seeley, 94 Pac. 37, 38, 51 Or. 131 (quoting B. & C. Comp.

Or. § 1913); State v. Stephanus, 99 Pac. 428, 430, 53 Or. 135, 17 Ann. Cas. 1146.

RIPARIAN

The term "riparian" is defined as pertaining to or situated on the bank of a river. Mobile Dry-Docks Co. v. City of Mobile, 40 South. 205, 207, 208, 209, 146 Ala. 198, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 822, 9 Ann. Cas. 1229.

Land, to be "riparian," must have the stream flowing over it or along its borders. Crawford Co. v. Hathaway, 93 N. W. 781, 790, 67 Neb. 325, 60 L. R. A. 889, 108 Am. St. Rep. 647 (citing Lux v. Haggin, 10 Pac. 674, 69 Cal. 255).

"Riparian property" is property which has a water frontage. Shepard's Point Land Co. v. Atlantic Hotel, 44 S. E. 39, 45, 132 N. C. 517, 61 L. R. A. 937.

Lands which do not in any way border upon the water of a stream are not riparian to it. The word "riparian," from which the term "riparian" is derived, means, literally, a river bank, and therefore, in the broadest sense, all lands touching the stream are riparian, in the sense that they relate to the bank. But of necessity there must be some limitation. The extent back from the stream must be determined. The holdings of an owner, before they can be said to be riparian to a stream, must be not only within the limits of the original survey or grant by the government, but must also be within the watershed of such stream, and actually touch its waters. Clements v. Watkins Land Co., 82 S. W. 665, 668, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 339.

The fact that land forms part of the wide bottom extending between higher lands on each side of a stream, and is underlaid by an underground flow, which is a part of the surface stream, does not make it part of the bed of the stream, nor prevent it being "riparian," where it has been successfully cultivated and irrigated for many years. Anaheim Union Water Co. v. Fuller, 88 Pac. 978, 979, 150 Cal. 327, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1062.

Where a lease described a privilege granted as certain "riparian or other rights, to wit, the exclusive privilege of taking by dredging or otherwise all sand and gravel that the lessee may desire to take along the entire shores or water fronts," the lessee's rights were limited to excavation of sand and gravel between high and low water marks and did not authorize the removal of fast land from any part of the farm bordering on the stream. Potomac Dredging Co. of Baltimore City v. Smoot, 69 Atl. 507, 509, 108 Md. 54.

Land beyond watershed

Land not within the watershed of a stream is not riparian thereto, and is not entitled to the use or benefit of the water from the stream, although it may be part of an entire tract which does extend to the river. Anaheim Union Water Co. v. Fuller, 88 Pac. 978, 980, 150 Cal. 327, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1062.

RIPARIAN PROPRIETOR OR OWNER

A riparian owner is an owner of land bounded by a water course or lake or through which a stream flows. A license from a riparian owner to convey water from the stream by pipes for supplying licensee's residence on nonriparian land does not constitute licensee a riparian owner, entitled to all rights as such. Stoner v. Patten, 63 S. E. 897, 898, 132 Ga. 178.

A "riparian proprietor" is one who owns land bounded by or fronting on navigable waters, and among the rights he is entitled to as such are access to the part of the water in front of his lot, the right to make a landing, wharf, or pier for his own use or the use of the public subject to the general rules imposed by the Legislature for the rights of the public. Mobile Dry-Docks Co. v. City of Mobile, 40 South. 205, 207, 208, 209, 146 Ala. 198, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 822, 9 Ann. Cas. 1229.

The term "riparian proprietors" means owners of property along the stream which require the use of the waters thereof. Neely v. Detroit Sugar Co., 101 N. W. 664, 667, 138 Mich. 469.

The expression "riparian owner," in its ordinary and popular signification, carries with it the title to the center of the nonnavigable stream upon which his land abuts. In re Wilder, 85 N. Y. Supp. 741, 743, 90 App. Div. 262.

Title by adverse possession for over 30 years up to the edge of a river and to the river bank creates the occupant a "riparian owner," entitled as such to protect his rights against the acts of upper riparian owners. A municipal corporation, to whom land above high-water mark of a river had been conveyed for use as a park, received from the owners of the bed of the stream below high-water mark a conveyance of "such use as is customary and legal for riparian owners," and to that end the right of access and crossing as to "any intervening lands between high-water mark and the water" of the river, and also the right to ornament such intervening land, but provided that the grantee should not divert the water of the stream or interfere with the use of such water by the grantor in its maintenance of a dam at a lower point on the stream. Held, that the deed did not, as far as upper riparian owners were concerned, convey a mere easement; but it granted a right of exclusive possession and occupation, and constituted the grantee a "riparian owner," entitled as such to prevent an unlawful diversion of the water of the stream by such upper riparian owners.

City of Paterson v. East Jersey Water Co., 70 Atl. 472, 479, 74 N. J. Eq. 49.

RIPARIAN RIGHT

As property, see Property.

A "riparian right" is defined as the right of the owner of lands upon navigable water to maintain his adjacency to it and to profit by this advantage and to preserve and improve the connection of his property with the water. Riparian rights in the nature of an easement have their origin in and are dependent upon the ownership of the upland contiguous to and attinent on the water and attach to and are appurtenant to the upland, and not to the shore and soil under the water. A "shore" is defined to be the land on the margin of the sea or a lake or river; that space of land which is alternately covered and left dry by the rising and falling of the tide; the space between high and low water marks. The "shore" and the soil under the water and "riparian rights" are entirely distinct and separate subjects, and neither includes the other. A statute entitled "An act granting to the city of Mobile the riparian rights to the river front" and giving the city of Mobile the "shore and soil" under the Mobile river within the city limits, is violative of the Constitution declaring that each law shall embrace but one subject which shall be described in the title. Mobile Dry-Docks Co. v. City of Mobile, 40 South. 205, 207, 208, 209, 146 Ala. 198, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 822, 9 Ann. Cas. 1229.

"Riparian rights," strictly and technically so called, are rights not originating in grants but arise by operation of law, and are called "natural rights," because they arise by reason of the ownership of lands upon or along streams of water, which are furnished by nature, and the lands to which these natural rights are attached are called in law "riparian lands." Riparian lands, in the language of the cases and treatises, include by nature as well the lands over as those along which the stream flows, and riparian rights are incident to lands on the bank, as well as those forming the bed of the stream. Riparian rights, as natural rights, and being incidents annexed solely by operation of law to the lands under and along the stream, differ in respect to the effect of contracts upon them, from those ordinary easements in lands whose only source is a grant (actual or presumed), and, by reason of this difference of the origin and character of the right, are not subject to that general rule relating to easements by force of which unity of ownership of the dominant and servient lands extinguishes the easement. City of Paterson v. East Jersey Water Co., 70 Atl. 472, 479, 74 N. J. Eq. 49.

A "riparian right" is parcel of the land to which it attaches. It is local in its nature, and enables the owner to enjoin any injurious interference with the stream, but only when such interference affects the river where it passes his land. San Joaquin & Kings River Canal & Irrigation Co. v. Stevenson, 128 Pac. 924, 932, 164 Cal. 221.

"The right of a riparian proprietor' in or to the waters of a stream flowing through or along his land is not the right of ownership in or to those waters, but is a usufructuary right; a right, amongst others, to make a reasonable use of a reasonable quantity for irrigation, returning the surplus to the natural channel, that it may flow on in the accustomed mode to lands below. * * * His rights are not easements nor appurtenances to his holding. They are not the rights acquired by appropriation or by prescriptive use. They are attached to the soil, and pass with it." Anderson v. Bassman, 140 Fed. 14, 22 (quoting and adopting the definition in Hargrave v. Cook, 108 Cal. 72, 77, 41 Pac. 18, 19, 30 L. R. A. 390).

"Riparian rights" are a mere incident to ownership in the soil, and while they may relate back by fiction of law to the date of settlement or filing, by virtue of the patent subsequently issued, yet they do not vest until patent issues; for up to that time the title to the land, with all its incidents, is vested in the United States, utterly beyond the power or control of the state Legislatures, and the party thereafter acquiring title from the government acquires the land with all its incidents. Kendall v. Joyce, 93 Pac. 1091, 1093, 48 Wash. 489.

"'Riparian rights' arise out of the ownership of land through or by which a stream of water flows, which rights cannot extend beyond the original survey as granted by the government." Watkins Land Co. v. Clements, 86 S. W. 733, 735, 98 Tex. 578, 70 L. R. A. 964, 107 Am. St. Rep. 653 (citing 2 Farnham, Waters & Water Rights, p. 1572, § 463a; Lux v. Haggin, 10 Pac. 674, 69 Cal. 255; Boehmer v. Big Rock Irr. Dist., 48 Pac. 908, 117 Cal. 27).

"Riparian rights" exist in any body of water, whether flowing or not. The rights of a riparian proprietor, so far as they relate to any natural stream, exist jure nature, because his land has, by nature, the advantage of being washed by streams. The principle upon which these rights are founded is equally applicable to all bodies of water, whether large or small, tidal or nontidal. The character of the water is immaterial, and the rights attach to lakes and ponds where there is no current, as well as to streams. Turner v. James Canal Co., 90 Pac. 520, 522, 523, 155 Cal. 82, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 401, 132 Am. St. Rep. 59, 17 Ann. Cas. 823 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Farnham, Waters, § 63, p. 280).

A riparian right to the use of the flow of the stream passing through or by his land is a right inseparably annexed to the soil, not as an easement or appurtenance, but as a part and parcel of the land; such right being a property right, and entitled to protection as such, the same as private property rights generally. Ordinarily, a riparian proprietor's right to the use of water of a stream is limited to its use for domestic purposes, and, if applied to the irrigation of riparian lands, a reasonable use for such purpose in view of an equal right to use belonging to all other riparian proprietors. The right of a riparian proprietor as such to use water for irrigation purposes is limited to riparian lands. The right cannot be extended to lands contiguous to the riparian land, nor can water be diverted to nonriparian lands which might be used on riparian lands, but is not. Crawford Co. v. Hathaway, 93 N. W. 781, 790, 67 Neb. 325, 60 L. R. A. 889, 108 Am. St. Rep. 647.

RIP'IN R'G'T

An owner of lands adjoining a lake conveyed to plaintiff the portion of the land that was covered by water; the deeds reciting that it was the intention of the grantor to convey all his rights to the water and the soil under water in a lake belonging and appurtenant to the described premises. After the conveyance the lots were assessed by number, with the addition "excp't rip'in r'g't." The part conveyed to plaintiff was assessed as unplatted lands. The abbreviation "rip'in r'g't," in the assessment, clearly meant the riparian rights of the parties. Newaygo Portland Cement Co. v. Sheridan Tp. 100 N. W. 747, 748, 137 Mich. 475.

RIPE FOR JUDGMENT

Generally speaking, the term "ripe for judgment" means that, according to the last entry made in a proceeding, the case seems to have been brought to a final determination and everything has been done that ought to be done before the entry of final adjudication upon the rights of the parties. Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 11, 30 Stat. 549, enacts that a suit on a claim from which a discharge would be a release, and which is pending against a person at the time of the filing of a petition against him, shall be stayed until after the adjudication or the dismissal of the petition. Defendant was defaulted, and all papers necessary to make up the judgment were filed in the case, when defendant moved for a continuance on the ground of his bankruptcy. Held, that it was error to enter judgment before the motion had been passed on. American Wood Working Machinery Co. v. Forbush, 79 N. E. 770, 771, 193 Mass. 455.

Where a motion to take off a default, and an appeal from an order disallowing the motion, intervenes between the default and the time when the judgment would have been entered, had the clerk entered it, it may well be said that a case is not "ripe for judgment"; but, where nothing intervenes between the default and the judgment, it seems impossible to hold that the case is not "ripe for judgment" because prior to the default a motion is made to continue the case. At common law judgment followed a default as a matter of course. Since terms have been abolished the practice is regulated by statute and the rules of the courts. In a case governed by a statute allowing a judgment on a default, if the words "ripe for judgment" are to be understood as in the general rule, the case is "ripe for judgment" when defendant is defaulted, and the damages have been assessed, though there are motions on the files of the court which are undisposed of. So under St. 1893, c. 396, § 19, relating to district and police courts providing that, if any person duly served with process issued by said courts fails to appear and answer, his default shall be recorded, and the charge against him in the declaration taken to be true, and that the court shall enter judgment for such sum as, on inquiry, it finds plaintiff is entitled to recover, with costs, a police court has power to order a default, and enter judgment thereon, where the case has been set for a hearing, and notice given to defendant, though a suggestion of insolvency, with a motion for a continuance to await the result of the insolvency proceedings, is pending. Dalton-Ingersoll Co. v. Fiske, 55 N. E. 468, 470, 471, 175 Mass. 15.

RIPE FRUIT

See Green or Ripe Fruit.

RIPRAP

"Riprap," according to the Encyclopedia Americana, "is a common name applied to broken stone used for beds, walls and foundations in building and construction." United States v. Greene, 146 Fed. 801, 862.

RIPSAW

A "ripsaw" machine consists of a table, in the center of which, running in a slit, is a circular saw used for cutting lumber. Merritt v. Victoria Lumber Co., 35 South. 497, 498, 111 La. 159.

RISER

Uprising wires leading to and through the roof in power houses, are commonly called "risers." Woelfen v. Lewiston-Clarkston Co., 95 Pac. 493, 495, 49 Wash. 405.

RISK

See Assumption of Risk; Extraordinary Risk; Imputed Appreciation of Risk; Incurring Risk; Necessary Risk; Obvious Risks; Open Visible Risk; Ordinary Risk; Owner's Risk; Riding at Own Risk; Shifting Risk; Speculative Risk; Usual Risk.

4 Wds. & P. 2D Ser.—26

Any change increasing the risk, see Any. Consent to risk, see Consent. Subject to same risk, see Subject To.

The "risk" constituting one of the ingredients of a contract of insurance means the perils or contingencies against which the assured is protected. Physicians' Defense Co. v. Cooper, 199 Fed. 576, 579, 118 C. C. A. 50, 47 L. R. A. (N. S.) 290.

Under Acts 31st Leg. 1st Called Sess. c. 36, § 8, as amended by Acts 31st Leg. 2d Called Sess. c. 22, § 1, providing that all benefit certificates issued by fraternal associations shall be noncontestable on account of any statement or representation made unless material to the risk assumed, the term "risk assumed" must be taken to mean the hazard of the contract determined by the perils menacing the life of the insured, and hence a false representation that defendant had never had a certain practically incurable disease was material to the risk and would avoid the policy which provided that a false answer to such question avoided the policy, even though the applicant died of a wholly different disease. United Benev. Ass'n v. Baker (Tex.) 141 S. W. 541, 543.

Negligence

The risk from such proximity of a railroad's coal bin to the track, as not to leave space between it and the side of the tender of an engine for a brakeman, known to the company, as shown by one of its rules, is not an ordinary risk, which would be assumed by the brakeman, but one arising from the negligence of the company, within Acts 29th Leg. c. 163, providing that, in an action against a railroad for injury to an employé caused by its negligence, the defense of assumption of risk grounded on knowledge of the danger shall not avail where the employer knew of the defect. Chicago, R. I. & G. Ry. Co. v. De Bord (Tex.) 146 S. W. 667, 669.

Where, in an action for injuries to an employé, the use of the terms "risk" and "acceptance of risk" is involved, the true question is whether, in incurring the particular danger, plaintiff accepted the risk in the sense that, by continuing at his work, he agreed to relieve defendant from the possible results; and hence plaintiff not only must be shown to have known the risk, but by implication from his conduct must be found to have voluntarily assumed it. Jellow v. Fore River Shipbuilding Co., 87 N. E. 906, 907, 908, 201 Mass. 464.

RISK OF COLLISION

The term "risk of collision," as used in the Inland Rules (Act June 7, 1897, c. 5, 30 Stat. 96), has a different meaning from the term "immediate danger," as in article 27, and means "chance," "peril," "hazard," or "danger of collision"; and there is risk of collision whenever it is not clearly safe to go on. The Philadelphia, 199 Fed. 299, 302.

There is no "risk of collision" within the meaning of the rule requiring a vessel to slacken speed or stop, or reverse, if necessary, when approaching another, so long as two vessels by complying with their passing agreement can certainly pass in safety, and each vessel may be navigated upon this supposition until the intervention of something, which should operate as notice to an officer of skill and prudence of the presence of danger. Lake Erie Transp. Co. v. Gilchrist Transp. Co., 142 Fed. 89, 94, 73 C. C. A. 313.

RISK PECULIAR TO OPERATION OF RAILROAD

See Operate.

RISKS INCIDENT TO BUSINESS

By the use of the expression a "risk ordinarily incident to the employment" is meant a risk of injury that does not arise or grow out of an act of negligence on the part of the defendant or its servants, and a risk created by an act of negligence on the part of a railroad company or its employés is not a "risk ordinarily incident to the employment." Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Mills, 108 S. W. 480, 481, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 349 (quoting and adopting Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Kelly, 80 S. W. 79, 98 Tex. 123).

In a servant's action for injuries an instruction that plaintiff assumed as matter of law all risks of injury ordinarily incident to the employment; that, if his injury resulted from risks ordinarily incident to the work, the verdict should be for defendant; that by the expression "risk ordinarily incident to the work" is meant a risk of injury that does not grow out of an act of negligence on the part of defendant or his other employés, etc.—correctly stated the law. Freeman v. Fuller (Tex.) 127 S. W. 1194, 1197.

"Risks which are incident to the business" must not be confounded with such as are denominated 'obvious.' The former sort comprises those which accompany or arise from the natural or usual method of conducting the particular business, and has more special relation to perils which attend the business generally, while the latter include such as are manifest to the sense of observation, open and readily discernible, whether they arise from the nature of the business, the particular manner in which it is conducted, or the use of defective and unsafe appliances." New Omaha Thomson-Houston Electric Light Co. v. Rombold, 106 N. W. 213, 216, 73 Neb. 259 (quoting with approval from Stager v. Troy Laundry Co., 63 Pac. 645, 38 Or. 480, 53 L. R. A. 459-461).

RIVER

See Fresh-Water Rivers; Mississippi River; North River.
Navigable River, see Navigable.
See, also, Stream.

"A 'river' is a running stream of water, pent in on either side by banks, shores, or walls. * * * A fresh water river, like a tidal river, is composed of the alveus, or bed, and the water; but it has banks, instead of shores. The banks are the elevations of land which confine the waters in their natural channel, when they rise the highest and do not overflow the banks; and in that condition of the water the banks and the soil which is permanently submerged form the bed of the river." State v. Faudre, 46 S. E. 269, 270, 54 W. Va. 122, 63 L. R. A. 877, 102 Am. St. Rep. 927, 1 Ann. Cas. 104 (quoting Gould, Waters).

A "river" consists of water, a bed, and banks. Dodge County v. Saunders County, 97 N. W. 617, 619, 70 Neb. 442 (quoting definition in Howard v. Ingersoll, 54 U. S. [13 How.] 392, 14 L. Ed. 189).

The term "river" includes the bed of the stream up to its state of ordinary high water. Minor's Heirs v. City of New Orleans, 38 South. 999, 1003, 115 La. 301.

As thread of river

Generally, designation of a "river" as a boundary of a state means its middle, in the absence of further description. De Loney v. State, 115 S. W. 138, 140, 88 Ark. 311.

RIVER BED

See Highest Above Bed of River.

The shores of a navigable river are the lands between high and low water marks, and the "bed of the river" includes the shores. State v. Gerbing, 47 South. 353, 356, 56 Fla. 603, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 337.

The "bed of the river" is that part between the banks worn by the regular flow of the water, and the expression "six feet in highest above the bed of the river," in a grant of a right to flow land by a dam of that height, means six feet above the highest point of the river bed. Haigh v. Lenfesty, 87 N. E. 962, 964, 239 Ill. 227.

"The bed of the river" is that portion of its soil which is alternately covered and left bare as there may be an increase or diminution in the supply of water, and which is adequate to contain it at its average and mean stage during the entire year without reference to the extraordinary freshets of the winter or spring or the extreme droughts of the summer or autumn." City of Peoria v. Central Nat. Bank, 79 N. E. 296, 299, 224 Ill. 43, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 687 (quoting and adopting definition in Alabama v. Georgia, 64 U. S. [23 How.] 505, 515, 16 L. Ed. 556).

The margin of the bed of a river which lies between high and low water mark is called the "beach" or "shore," which is actually a part of the bed of the river, and, when the river is at its full flow, whether caused by the tide or by the natural increase of waters by rains, floods, and the like, filling its natural bed to its highest reach of flow, it marks its high-water, while its lessened range of flow by summer heats shows its low-water, mark. Sun Dial Ranch v. May Land Co., 119 Pac. 758, 762, 61 Or. 205.

"A 'river' is a running stream of water, pent in on either side by banks, shores or walls." "A fresh water river, like a tidal river, is composed of the alveus, or bed, and the water; but it has banks, instead of shores. The banks are the elevations of land which confine the waters in their natural channel, when they rise the highest and do not overflow the banks, and in that condition of the water the banks and the soil which is permanently submerged, form the bed of the river." State v. Faudre, 46 S. E. 269, 270, 54 W. Va. 122, 63 L. R. A. 877, 102 Am. St. Rep. 927, 1 Ann. Cas. 104 (quoting Gould on Waters).

ROAD

See Common Road; Country Road; Established Road or Way; First Class Road; Hard Road; Law of the Road; Legal County Road; Military Road; Necessary Road; New Road; Post Roads and Routes; Private Road; Public Road; State Road; Summer Road; Three-Notched Road; Toll Road; Town Road; Township Road; Traveled Public Road.

Cost of road, see Cost.

Expenses of road, see Expenses.

Other roads, see Other.

Said road, see Said.

See, also, Avenue; Highway.

"Roads and highways" are words embracing all kinds of public ways, such as county and township roads, streets, alleys, township and plank roads, turnpike or gravel roads, tramways, ferries, canals, navigable rivers, and also railroads. Strange v. Board of Com'rs of Grant County, 91 N. E. 242, 247, 173 Ind. 640.

The word "road" in its popular sense includes overland ways of every character, but has no fixed meaning in the law; the scope to be given it depending on the context in which it appears. Griffin v. Sandborn, 56 S. E. 71, 127 Ga. 17 (citing Southern Ry. Co. v. Combs, 53 S. E. 508, 124 Ga. 1006).

A "road" intended for use in connection with a limekiln, and used mostly by those having business there, is, nevertheless, a road within Civ. Code, § 486, requiring signals where a railroad crosses any street, road, or highway. Vance v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 98 Pac. 41, 42, 9 Cal. App. 20.

The statute providing that telegraph wires shall be placed at a height of 25 feet above road crossings used the word "road" in its generic sense and did not limit it to public highways. Weaver v. Dawson County Mut.

Under Rev. St. 1887, § 851, as amended by Sess. Laws 1893, p. 12, defining roads to be roads laid out and recorded by order of the county commissioners and roads used for five years, provided the latter shall have been worked and kept up at public expense or located and recorded by order of the county commissioners, roads used for five years that have been worked and kept up at public expense are public roads, whether recorded or not. Meservey v. Gulliford, 93 Pac. 780, 782, 14 Idaho, 133.

The terms "public highway" and "public road" are not synonymous. (a) The word "road" refers to the piece or strip of land taken. "Way," in legal parlance, merely denotes an easement, and that the land has been subjected to servitude. (b) "Highway" is also a generic term, which includes other uses besides the right of ordinary locomotion over land which has been subjected to public use. Johnson v. State, 58 S. E. 265, 267, 1 Ga. App. 195.

The words "roads, streets, and alleys," as used in Carter's Ann. Civ. Code Alaska, c. 22, § 204, subd. 3, which confers the right of eminent domain for improving streams, and for "roads, streets, and alleys," and all other public uses which may be authorized by Congress, or any other legislative authority of the district, are used independently as within the public uses defined by the statute, and relate to properties clearly made the subjects of condemnation without further legislation of Congress; the words "which may be authorized by Congress or other legislative authority of the district" qualifying only the words "and all other public uses" and not relating to "roads, streets and alleys" or to enumerated public uses, so that a city had power to condemn possessory rights in tide lands for the widening of a street. Ashby v. City of Juneau, 174 Fed. 737, 738, 98 C. C. A. 476.

Bridle road

Va. Code 1904, p. 2061, § 3878, relating to offenses concerning highways, etc., provides: "In this chapter the word 'road' shall be construed to mean any turnpike, state road, or county road." Section 944a (2), p. 440, Va. Code 1904, authorizing the board of supervisors of any county to appoint viewers to examine and report on the expediency of establishing any new road, etc., provides that every road shall be 30 feet wide and that the grade of no road hereafter located shall exceed four degrees at any one point, unless the said board order a different width or grade. Held, that the authority conferred by the latter section to order a different width in establishing new roads is for the purpose of enabling the tribunal charged with that duty to meet the exigencies of exceptional cases, and must be exercised subject to the implied limitation that the character of the way as a "road" shall be maintained, and hence the county court had no jurisdiction to establish a bridle way "for horseback travel." Terry v. McClung, 52 S. E. 355, 356, 104 Va. 599.

Highway synonymous

Many courts have treated the terms "roads" and "highways" and related descriptive words as synonymous in interpreting statutes. Board of Revenue of Jefferson County v. State ex rel. City of Birmingham, 54 South. 757, 759, 172 Ala. 138 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, pp. 6250-6254, 6684 et seq.); State ex rel. City of Tuscaloosa v. Court of County Com'rs of Tuscaloosa County, 54 South. 763, 173 Ala. 724; City of Newton v. Board of Sup'rs of Jasper County, 112 N. W. 167, 168, 135 Iowa, 27, 124 Am. St. Rep. 256.

The term "road" is frequently used as synonymous with highway, but it does not appear to have any fixed legal meaning. Southern Ry. Co. v. Combs, 53 S. E. 508, 124 Ga. 1004.

The term "public highway," as used in Acts 1905, p. 114, forbidding appearance on the public highway in an intoxicated condition, is not synonymous with "public road." Johnson v. State, 58 S. E. 265, 267, 1 Ga. App. 195.

As improved portion

The word "road" in Act Nov. 22, 1905 (Laws 1905, p. 414) § 7, providing that where any "road" has been constructed under the act providing for the improvement of roads at the expense of the property benefited thereby, and another "road" shall be thereafter constructed within four miles thereof, the amount to be assessed against all lands included within the overlapping two-mile lines of each road shall be equitably determined by the county court, on the report of the viewers and appraisers, means the portion improved, and the improvement of any other portion of the same road is another road, and lands within the overlap are protected from unequal burdens. St. Benedict's Abbey v. Marion County, 93 Pac. 231, 234, 50 Or. 411.

As mine

B. & C. Comp. § 5668, as amended by Laws 1907, p. 294, provides that, when two or more mines are claimed by the same person or persons and worked through a common shaft or tunnel or at one mill, or other reduction works, then all the mines, and all roads, tramways, trails, flumes, ditches, or pipe lines, buildings, structures, or superstructures used or owned in connection therewith, shall be deemed one mine. Held, that the words "roads, tramways, trails, flumes, ditches or pipe lines," include such appurtenances when not situated upon the mine, and that the term "upon any millsite or mill used, owned, or operated in connection with such mine," in such section, prior to its amendment, had reference to the millsite or mill not situated on the mine; the section as amended necessarily including the millsite or mills connected with the mine, without being specifically mentioned, so that a miner's lien notice need not state nor the proofs show that the labor for which the lien is claimed has been done on the mill or building on the mine to subject them to the lien. Washburn v. Inter-Mountain Mining Co., 109 Pac. 382, 385, 56 Or. 578, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 357.

Private crossing

Code, § 2072, provides that a locomotive whistle shall be sounded at least 60 rods before any road crossing is reached; and Code, § 48, cl. 5, provides that the term "road" means any public highway, unless otherwise specified. Held, that section 2072 was limited to public highways, and did not require signals at private crossings. Nichols v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 100 N. W. 1115, 1116, 125 Iowa, 236.

As public place

See Public Place.

Railroad

Gen. St. 1865, c. 69, § 17, authorizing bridge corporations to exercise the right of eminent domain, was amended by Laws 1871-72, p. 15, by inserting after the words "necessary to appropriate any lands of private persons or corporations," in the former act, the words "for approaches, road, foot, or wagon ways of said bridge company." Held, that the word "road," in such amendment, when applied to a structure designed for the passage of railroad trains, should be construed to mean "railroad," and authorized a railroad bridge company to condemn land for its approaches and necessary tracks to its bridge. Southern Illinois & M. Bridge Co. v. Stone, 73 S. W. 453, 458, 174 Mo. 1, 63 La. R. A. 301.

Streets and alleys

The term "street" or "avenue" commonly applies to a public highway in a village, town, or city, and the term "road" to suburban highways; but there may be roads in a city or town and streets or avenues in the country. Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 3803 (Pierce's Code, § 7854), providing that any "county road" or part thereof, which remains unopened for public use for a space of five years after the order is made or authority granted for opening the same, shall be vacated and the authority for building it barred by the lapse of time, is applicable to streets dedicated through platted land outside the limits of any incorporated city or town. Murphy v. King County, 88 Pac. 1115, 1116, 45 Wash. 587.

Code, § 422, subd. 16, empowers the board of supervisors to discontinue any state or territorial highway, and subdivision 17 empowers them to establish or discontinue any county highway through or within the county. Section 751 empowers cities and towns to establish or vacate streets and alleys. Section 48, subd. 5, provides that the words "highway" and "road" include public bridges, and may be held equivalent to the words "county road," "county way," "common road," and "state road." Section 1507 provides that all public streets of villages are a part of the road. Held that, where a plat was made of land dividing it into lots, streets, and alleys prior to the incorporation of a town embracing the land platted, the streets and alleys became county roads subject to the jurisdiction of the board of supervisors, and though after the incorporation of the town the control may have passed to the city council, yet the incorporation of the town having been vacated, the control of the streets and alleys reverted to the board of supervisors. Chrisman v. Brandes, 112 N. W. 833, 835, 137 Iowa, 433; Gilbert v. Brandes, 112 N. W. 833, 137 Iowa, 433.

Under Laws 1887, p. 587, c. 72, relating to bridges on public roads over streams, the word "roads" should be taken in the sense in which it is commonly used and understood, namely, as including only rural highways, and not that portion of a highway lying within the limits of a city or village. Central City v. Marquis, 106 N. W. 221, 223, 75 Neb. 233.

A statute giving a telegraph company the right to erect and maintain its poles and wires along public "roads and highways" included by the quoted phrase the streets and alleys of cities. Duluth Terminal Ry. Co. v. City of Duluth, 130 N. W. 18, 21, 113 Minn. 459.

In view of the use of the word "road" throughout the Code of 1897, where the word "highway" previously appeared in the statute, and of Code, § 48, par. 5, providing that the words "highway" and "road" may be held equivalent to "county highway," "county road," "common road," "state road," the word "roads," as used in Code section 2158, authorizing the construction of telephone lines along the public roads of the state and the erection of the necessary fixtures therefor, is equivalent to the word "highways," as used in a similar provision of Code 1873, § 1324, as amended by Acts 19th Gen. Assem. c. 104, and includes the streets and alleys of a city or town. East Boyer Telephone Co. v. Incorporated Town of Vall (Iowa) 129 N. W. 298, 299.

ROAD AND BRIDGE TAX

See, also, Road Tax.

"Road and bridge taxes," within Hurd's Rev. St. 1911, c. 120, § 343b, providing that, if the aggregate of taxes certified to be extended against any property in any taxing district or municipality exceed 3 per cent. of the assessed valuation thereof, the county clerk shall reduce the rate per cent. of tax levy of such taxing district or municipality in a certain way (not considering certain taxes, including "road and bridge taxes," in determining whether there is an excess of taxes, or in making the reduction), refer only to such taxes as are authorized by the statute to be levied under the express designation of "road and bridge taxes," and do not include an item of a county appropriation for road and bridge purposes included in a "county tax," or an item of a city's appropriation for streets, alleys, and sidewalks included in the "city tax"; all items of appropriation by a city or county, with certain exceptions not including said items, being, under the last proviso of the paragraph, affected proportionately, in the absence of election to the contrary. People v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 100 N. E. 212, 213, 214, 256 Ill. 332.

ROAD CROSSING

All road crossings, see All.

Any road crossing, see Any.

ROAD DISTRICT

As corporation, see Corporation.

A "road district" is not a quasi corporation. Custer County Bank v. Custer County, 100 N. W. 424, 426, 18 S. D. 274.

ROAD ENGINE

See Traction or Road Engine.

Engines which regularly run between different points on a railroad line are known as "road engines," in contradistinction to "yard engines," which perform services only in the yards. Central of Ga. Ry. Co. v. Goodson, 45 S. E. 680, 681, 118 Ga. 833.

ROAD OVERSEER

As state officer, see State Officer.

ROAD PRECINCT

Since the term "road precinct," as employed in Code 1896, form 75, giving a form charging an overseer of a road precinct with failure to perform his duties, and in Code 1896, §§ 2454, 2461, 2462, 2470, relating to the apportionment of road precincts, the appointment of overseers, and their duties, etc., designates any road apportioned to an overseer, so that a road overseer of a particular road is properly called overseer of a "road precinct," an indictment in the Code form, alleging that defendant, an overseer of a road precinct, failed to discharge his duties, is sufficient under the express provisions of sections 4923, 5395, and is technically accurate in designating the officer as an overseer of a road precinct. Ward v. State (Ala.) 39 South. 923, 924.

ROAD SUPERVISOR

As county officer, see County Officer.

ROAD TAX

Assessment of road labor, see Tax—Taxation.

See, also, Road and Bridge Tax.

The hard or rock road taxes authorized by the statute, providing that such taxes may not be levied without a vote of the people, on petition, declaring that the taxes shall be extended in a separate column on the tax books, requiring the treasurer to give a separate bond to account for such taxes before the same can be paid over to him, and directing that the taxes shall only be applied to the construction of the roads designated by the vote, are "road taxes," within the amended revenue law of 1909 (Laws 1909, p. 323, § 2), requiring the county clerk to reduce the rate per cent. of a tax levy, exclusive of state, village, levee, school building, high school building, and road and bridge taxes, so that hard or rock road taxes are properly excluded in determining the correctness of a county clerk's reduction of the taxes of a town. People v. Cairo, V. & C. Ry. Co., 93 N. E. 405, 406, 247 Ill. 360.

ROADBED

As real estate, see Real Estate.

The roadbed of a railroad is "the bed or foundation on which the superstructure of a railroad rests." Attorney General ex rel. Brotherton v. Common Council of City of Detroit, 111 N. W. 860-878, 148 Mich. 71 (citing Webst. Dict.); In re New York Bay R. Co., 67 Atl. 1049, 1051, 75 N. J. Law, 389 (quoting and adopting definition in Re United New Jersey R. & Canal Co., 67 Atl. 1075, 75 N. J. Law, 385).

The term "roadbed," as used in Const. art. 13, § 10, relating to the taxation of railroad companies, includes only the bed or foundation on which the superstructure of the railroad rests. San Francisco & S. J. V. Ry. Co. v. City of Stockton, 84 Pac. 771, 774, 149 Cal. 83.

A petition in an action against a carrier which alleges negligence of servants in charge of the "railroad, train, and roadbed" alleges that the track was defective, though the word "roadbed" does not include track and ties, since the word "railroad" is broad enough to include the roadbed and the superstructure including cross-ties, rails, and fastenings. Skiles v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 108 S. W. 1082, 1084, 130 Mo. App. 162.

An accident insurance policy, which excluded liability for injuries received "while walking or being upon any bridge or roadbed of any railway," must have intended to except, from the risks insured against, that of being struck by moving cars or engines, so that any part of the right of way which may be swept by the moving rolling-stock is contemplated, and no recovery could be had for an insured struck while walking outside the ends of the ties. Osgood v. United States Health & Accident Ins. Co., 84 Atl. 50, 51, 76 N. H. 475, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 425.

Double railroad tracks 10 feet apart were used for the running of trains in opposite directions, and when trains passed each other the space between them was 4 feet. A person walking between the tracks got out of the way of an approaching train, and was struck by an engine running on the other track. Held, that the injuries were received while he was on the "roadbed" of a railroad within an accident policy limiting the liability of the insurer for injuries received while the insured was on the roadbed of a railroad. McClure v. Great Western Acc. Ass'n, 110 N. W. 466, 133 Iowa, 224, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 970, 119 Am. St. Rep. 598, 12 Ann. Cas. 41.

In a statute relating to taxation, providing that the roadbed, rolling stock, franchises, choses in action, and personal property of a railroad having no actual situs shall be known as its distributable property, and shall be valued separately from other property, the term "roadbed" includes all side tracks, and switch tracks, wherever situated, and with the rolling stock, franchises, etc., must be assessed separately as distributable property. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Patterson, 122 S. W. 467, 474, 122 Tenn. 1.

As way for travel

Where an owner of an automobile, on meeting a team, was compelled to steer into the grass below the level of the roadbed, and while endeavoring to return the machine was overturned, the accident was not suffered in the "roadbed," within a policy excluding insurer from liability for damages caused by striking any portion of the roadbed; the word "roadbed," in common roads, meaning the whole material laid in place and ready for travel, or the material part of the road. Hardenburgh v. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp., 138 N. Y. Supp. 662, 663, 78 Misc. Rep. 105.

ROADBED AND TRACK

The term "roadbed and track," as used in a statute establishing a drainage and levy district in portions of certain counties lying east of a certain railway, including the track and roadbed of said railway, includes the right of way. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. v. Grayson, 78 S. W. 777, 778, 72 Ark. 119.

ROADWAY

See Central Line of Roadway; Modern Asphalt Roadway.

The term "roadway," as used in Const. art. 13, § 16, relating to the taxation of railroads, includes simply the continuous strip of land within which the railroad is constructed. It is synonymous with "right of way" and includes whatever space of ground the company is allowed by law in which to construct its roadbed and lay its track. The term "roadway" in this provision means the continuous strip of land upon which the railroad is constructed, and Civ. Code, § 465, subd. 4, authorizing railroad corporations to lay out their roads not exceeding nine rods wide and to construct and maintain the same with such appendages and adjuncts as may be necessary, does not broaden the meaning of the term. San Francisco & S. J. V. Ry. Co. v. City of Stockton, 84 Pac. 771, 774, 149 Cal. 83.

Railroad property within a city, consisting of parcels contiguous to the 30-foot continuous right of way and within a part of the 9-rod right of way permitted to railroads by Civ. Code, § 465, subd. 4, and used for freight and passenger depots, for local business, and for spur tracks necessary for the depots, and for a fruit packing house with a spur track for convenient use, and for a park and for tracks used for the storage of tools, is not a part of the right of way within Const. art. 13, § 10, providing that the franchise roadway, roadbed, and rails of railroads operated in more than one county shall be assessed by the State Board of Equalization, and is properly assessed by the city assessor; the word "roadway" being synonymous with the phrase "right of way," which includes the continuous strip of land permitted by law on which to construct the roadbed and lay the tracks. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Los Angeles County, 111 Pac. 250, 251, 158 Cal. 437.

The phrase "railroad track" is quite commonly used to denote the right of way of a railroad, and often means the same as "roadway" as used in P. S. 4327, relating to adverse possession of lands of a railroad company within its roadway. Bacon v. Boston & M. R. Co., 76 Atl. 128, 132, 83 Vt. 421.

The term "roadway," within V. S. 3745 (P. S. 4327), providing that no person shall acquire title to lands belonging to a railroad corporation, where such lands lie within the limits of the roadway of such corporation, includes such lands taken by the corporation, contiguous to the center of its road, as shown by the record in the town clerk's office, as the corporation could lawfully take for the purposes of its roadway by condemnation proceedings. Drouin v. Boston & M. R. Co., 52 Atl. 957, 959, 74 Vt. 343.

A "roadway," within Const. § 179, providing for taxation of the franchises, roadway, etc., of all railroads, includes not only the strip of ground on which the main line is constructed, but all grounds necessary for the construction of side tracks, turn-outs, connecting tracks, station houses, freight-houses, and other accommodations reasonably necessary to accomplish the object of their incorporation. Minneapolis, St. P. &

S. S. M. Ry. Co. v. Oppegard, 118 N. W. 830, 831, 18 N. D. 1.

An ordinance was entitled "An ordinance concerning the use of streets and alleys and the space under sidewalks by private persons." Section 1 prohibited such use without a permit, to be issued only as therein provided, and not transferable without the written consent of the commissioner of public works. Section 2 declared that no permit should be issued for the use of any space under the surface of "the roadway of any street or other public ground." Held, that since the word "roadway" as used in such provision was not the space between two curbs, sidewalks, or parkways, but was properly defined as the portion of the street used for horses and vehicles, which may be co-extensive with the limits of the street, the prohibition in section 2 applied to alleys, so that the commissioner of public works could not issue a permit for the use of space underneath the roadway of a public alley. J. Burton Co. v. City of Chicago, 86 N. E. 93, 95, 238 Ill. 383, 15 Ann. Cas. 965.

The words "roadway of any street," in Laws 1901, pp. 63, 64, c. 49, § 5859, declaring that when the council shall deem it necessary to pave or otherwise improve the roadway of any street, etc., indicate the legislative intention to discriminate between that part of the street used as a highway for general travel and that part used exclusively as a sidewalk for pedestrians. Scss. Acts 1901, c. 49, § 5858, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2062), relating to street improvements in certain cities, provides that the resolution declaring the paving and macadamizing necessary shall also declare that the street, etc., shall be brought to the established grade, and the cost thereof included in the special assessment for paying for each paving or macadamizing, and section 5859 (page 2064) declares that when the council shall deem it necessary to pave, macadamize, gutter, curb, grade, or "otherwise improve" the "roadway of any street," etc., or any part thereof within the limits of the city for which a special tax is to be levied, the council shall by resolution declare such work or improvement necessary and shall publish the resolution, etc. Held, that such sections did not require a resolution of necessity prior to the construction of sidewalks along a portion of a street. City of Joplin v. Freeman, 103 S. W. 130, 131, 125 Mo. App. 717.

ROAST

ROASTER

See Ore Roaster.

ROASTING ORE

The process known as "roasting ore" is done crudely in the open air by burning wood and ore mingled in a pile. It is a preliminary step to smelting. The use of timber taken from unsurveyed mineral land in "roasting ore" at a mine, whether "roasting ore" be considered a part of "mining" or "smelting," is authorized by the permission given by Act June 3, 1878, c. 150, § 1, 20 Stat. 88, to fell and remove such timber for "building, agricultural, mining, or other domestic purposes." United States v. United Verde Copper Co., 25 Sup. Ct. 222, 223, 196 U. S. 207, 49 L. Ed. 449.

ROB

In the statute relating to assault with intent to rob, and an indictment following its language, the term "rob," is used in its common-law sense. Tyson v. United States, 122 Pac. 733, 7 Okl. Cr. 433.

In coal mining

The word "robbed," when used in connection with coal mining, means to weaken the supporting pillars of coal so that the miners may save extra labor in cutting air passages. Lloyd v. Catlin Coal Co., 71 N. E. 335, 338, 210 Ill. 460.

The term "robbed," as used in coal mining operations, constitutes removing all stumps, pillars, and walls and all the coal remaining in place in entries, cross-entries, rooms, and other mining openings which had previously been made in removing the coal therefrom. Sagamore Coal Co. v. Clark (Ky.) 109 S. W. 349, 350.

The occupation of "robbing a mine" is that of taking out the pillars of ore or coal which have been left standing to support the roof while the mass is being taken out. Cumberland Coal & Coke Co. v. Gray, 152 Fed. 939, 940, 82 O. C. A. 87.

ROBBER

A mere depredator is not a "robber," within a bill of lading exempting a carrier from liability for injury to the shipment caused by robbery. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Dunlap, 41 South. 826, 148 Ala. 23.

ROBBERY

See Assault With Intent to Rob.

See, also, Force; Force and Violence; From the Person; Hold Up; Putting in Fear.

Common-law definition

"Robbery" is the felonious taking of personal property from the possession of another." People v. Cleary, 81 Pac. 753, 754, 1 Cal. App. 50.

At common law, "robbery" is the taking of a thing of value from the person or presence of another against his will, by force, or by putting him in fear. Steward v. People, 79 N. E. 636, 639, 224 Ill. 434 (citing Burke v. People, 35 N. E. 376, 148 Ill. 70; Hall v. People, 49 N. E. 495, 171 Ill. 540; Schroeder v. People, 63 N. E. 678, 196 Ill. 211).

"Robbery" at common law, as defined by text-writers, is the felonious and forcible taking from the person of another goods or money to any value, by violence or putting in fear. State v. McAllister, 63 S. E. 758, 760, 65 W. Va. 97, 131 Am. St. Rep. 955.

"Robbery" is the felonious taking or carrying away of the personal property of another, from his person or in his presence, by violence or by putting him in fear. Weidner v. Standard L. & Acc. Ins. Co., 110 N. W. 246, 248, 130 Wis. 10.

"Robbery" is the felonious taking of personal property in the possession of another from his person, or immediate presence, and against his will, accomplished by means of force, or fear. Ramirez v. Territory, 80 Pac. 391, 9 Ariz. 177.

"Robbery" is defined by the statute to be the felonious and forcible taking from the person of another any article of value, by violence or by putting him in fear, and the statute thereby restates the offense at common law defined by Blackstone (2 Cooley, Bl. Comm. [4th Ed.] bk. 4, p. 242) to be the felonious and forcible taking from the person of another of goods or money to any value, by violence or by putting him in fear. McGinnis v. State, 91 Pac. 936, 937, 16 Wyo. 72.

Statutory definition

Pen. Code, § 224, defines "robbery" in part as the unlawful taking of personal property from the person of another against his will by means of force or violence. People v. Monroe, 104 N. Y. Supp. 675, 676, 119 App. Div. 704.

"Robbery," as defined by Code, § 4753, consists in stealing and taking from another, with force or violence or by putting him in fear, property which is the subject of larceny. State v. Atkins, 97 N. W. 996, 122 Iowa, 161.

Code 1892, § 1284, provides that every person who shall feloniously take the personal property of another in his presence or from his person or against his will by violence to his person or by putting such person in fear of some immediate injury to his person, shall be guilty of "robbery." Smith v. State, 35 South. 178, 179, 82 Miss. 793.

"Robbery" is defined by Pen. Code, § 319, to be the "felonious taking of personal property in the possession of another from his person or immediate presence and against his will, accomplished by means of force or fear. Ex parte Smith, 78 Pac. 1035, 4 Ariz. 95.

As defined by Pen. Code, § 211, "robbery" is the felonious taking of personal property in the possession of another from his person or immediate presence and against his will, accomplished by means of force or fear. People v. Modina, 79 Pac. 842, 146 Cal. 142; In re Myrtle, 84 Pac. 335, 337, 2 Cal. App. 383

(quoting Pen. Code, § 211); State v. La Chall, 77 Pac. 3, 4, 28 Utah, 80 (quoting the definition in People v. Chuay Ying Git, 34 Pac. 1080, 100 Cal. 437; citing Pen. Code, § 211).

Rev. St. 1898, § 4175, defines "robbery" as the felonious taking of personal property in the possession of another from his person or immediate presence, and against his will accomplished by force or fear. An indictment for robbery failing to charge that the property taken from the prosecutor was taken by means of force or fear is insufficient. State v. Davis, 76 Pac. 705, 706, 28 Utah, 10.

The crime of "robbery" which is made punishable by from three to five years in the penitentiary is defined by Cr. Code, § 13, in these words: "If any person shall forcibly, and by violence or by putting in fear, take from the person of another any money or personal property, of any value whatever, with the intent to rob or steal." Held, that the statute contemplated various degrees of guilt in the crime, calling for punishment varying in time, and gave the court a large discretion in fixing the punishment, which was to be exercised according to the aggravation of the crime committed, and it was not contemplated that the extreme penalty allowed by the statute should be imposed for the first offense when any mitigating circumstances were shown. Buckley v. State, 112 N. W. 283, 284, 79 Neb. 86.

"Robbery" is called in the books a compound larceny, and is constituted by the unlawful and felonious taking and asportation of the personal property of another by violence, or by putting him in fear. In order to constitute the offense, it is necessary that the animus furandi or felonious intent should exist. The statutory offense prescribed in Ky. St. 1903, § 1256, imposing a fine on any person unlawfully, but not with felonious intention, carrying away property not his own, is not a degree of the common-law offense of robbery, and an accused in a prosecution for robbery could not be found guilty of such statutory offense, if the proof failed to show him guilty of robbery or any degree thereof, such as larceny. Triplett v. Commonwealth, 91 S. W. 281, 282, 122 Ky. 35.

An indictment for "robbery," under Code 1906, § 1361, which provides that one guilty of the felonious taking of the personal property of another, "by violence to his person or by putting such person in fear of some immediate injury to his person, shall be guilty of robbery," charged that defendant feloniously put in bodily fear and danger of his life a person named and took personal property of such person, is fatally defective for omission to allege immediate danger to the person alleged to have been robbed. Webb v. State, 55 South. 356, 99 Miss. 545.

Pen. Code, § 228, subd. 2, provides that an unlawful taking, if accomplished by force or fear, is robbery in the first degree, when committed by a person aided by an accomplice actually present. Held, that an indictment alleging that L. and R., at a specified date, time, and place, "each * * * being aided by an accomplice actually present," did unlawfully, etc., take certain personal property of K., against his will and by force and violence done to him by the said L. and R. by means of choking or otherwise assaulting K., sufficiently charged "robbery" by the assistance of an accomplice actually present, the clause quoted being treated as surplusage; and hence the court did not err in permitting the state to file an amendment alleging, after the quoted clause, that L. was aided by R. as an accomplice, and that R. was aided by L. as an accomplice. People v. Roof, 122 N. Y. Supp. 677, 678, 138 App. Div. 683.

Pen. Code, § 950, requires an information to contain "a statement of the acts constituting the offense, in ordinary and concise language, and in such manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended"; and section 952, subd. 8, provides that "the particular circumstances of the offense charged, when they are necessary to constitute a complete offense" must be stated. Section 211 defines robbery as "the felonious taking of personal property in the possession of another, from his person or immediate presence, and against his will, accomplished by means of force or fear." Section 240 defines an assault as "an unlawful attempt, coupled with a present ability, to commit a violent injury on the person of another." Held, that an information under section 220, providing that "every person who assaults another with intent to commit * * * robbery * * * is punishable," etc., need not allege how or by what means the assault was made, nor set forth the means used to constitute force or excite fear, nor that the prosecuting witness was in possession of personal property, and that an information was sufficient which charged that the assault was made with force and violence, and that the intent was to feloniously, and by force, violence, and intimidation, steal, take, and carry away the property of the prosecuting witness, and against his will. People v. Holden, 109 Pac. 495, 496, 13 Cal. App. 354.

Force or fear

To be robbery, the one robbed must be deprived of his property by force or fear. Brown v. Commonwealth, 117 S. W. 281, 283, 135 Ky. 635, 135 Am. St. Rep. 471, 21 Ann. Cas. 672.

To constitute robbery, there must be actual violence, or such a demonstration or threats as will create reasonable apprehension of bodily injury if the victim resists. State v. Donohue (N. J.) 59 Atl. 12.

"Robbery" may and often is accomplished by the concurrence of force and fear. When it is accomplished by force, fear is the usual concomitant. If one were not apprehensive of the force, he would not have the fear. State v. Howard, 77 Pac. 50, 52, 30 Mont. 518.

The gist of the offense of "robbery" is the force or intimidation and the taking from the person against his will of a thing of value and belonging to him, and the nature and value of the property taken is immaterial. People v. Nolan, 95 N. E. 140, 250 Ill. 351, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 301, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 401.

It is unnecessary to prove both violence and intimidation; and, if the fact be attended with the circumstance of terror, such threatening word or gesture as in common experience is likely to create apprehension of danger, and induce a man to part with his property for the safety of his person, it is robbery, and it is unnecessary to prove actual fear, as that will be presumed. State v. Luhan, 102 Pac. 260, 262, 31 Nev. 278.

To constitute robbery, the taking need not be "without the consent of the owner and fraudulently done"; a taking by putting in fear of life or bodily injury being sufficient. Brown v. State, 136 S. W. 265, 266, 61 Tex. Cr. R. 334.

Where an article is so attached to the person or clothes as to create resistance, however slight, or where there is a struggle to keep it, the taking is robbery. People v. Campbell, 84 N. E. 1035, 1036, 234 Ill. 391, 123 Am. St. Rep. 107, 14 Ann. Cas. 186.

The Pen. Code Ga. definition of "robbery" is merely declaratory of the common law. The "force," in such definition, is the same as the "violence" of the common-law definition; and the "intimidation" in such definition is synonymous with the "putting in fear" in the common law. Johnson v. State, 57 S. E. 1056, 1 Ga. App. 729.

To constitute the crime of "robbery" there must be violence or intimidation of such a character as that the injured party is put in fear of such a nature as in reason and common experience is likely to induce a person to part with his property against his will, and temporarily suspend the power of exercising his will. Steward v. People, 79 N. E. 636, 639, 224 Ill. 434.

Under a statute defining "robbery" to be the felonious taking of personalty by means of force, etc., the use of only such force as is necessary to take money without the resistance of the victim is insufficient to constitute robbery. State v. Paisley, 92 Pac. 566, 568, 36 Mont. 237.

Under Pen. Code, § 211, providing that "robbery" is the felonious taking of personal property in the possession of another from his person or immediate presence and against his will, accompanied by force or fear, an information charging that the property was taken from prosecutor's presence, but failing to charge that it was taken from prosecutor's possession, was fatally defective. People v. Ho Sing, 93 Pac. 204, 205, 6 Cal. App. 752.

Starr & C. Ann. St. 1596, p. 1345, c. 38, par. 413, defines "robbery" as the felonious and violent taking of money, etc., from the person of another by force or intimidation. Held that, where plaintiff in order to steal money in the safe at a railroad station violently assaulted the watchman in charge of the station, he was guilty of an assault with intent to rob the watchman. O'Donnell v. People, 79 N. E. 639, 642, 224 Ill. 218, 8 Ann. Cas. 123.

The act of the General Assembly approved August 6, 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 43), amending Pen. Code 1895, § 151, defining "robbery," by adding to that section "or the sudden snatching, taking or carrying away any money, goods, chattels, or anything of value from the owner or person in possession or control thereof, without the consent of the owner or person in possession or control thereof," did not create an independent and new statutory offense, nor abolish the distinctive element which differentiates the crime of robbery from larceny, i. e., violence. Robbery, which is committed by a sudden snatching, as described in the amending act, is robbery by force, and is punishable as prescribed in Pen. Code 1895, § 152. Pride v. State, 54 S. E. 686, 687, 125 Ga. 748.

Where defendant snatched a watch from the person of the owner with sufficient force to break the chain, he was guilty of "robbery." Perry v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 85 S. W. 732.

The felonious taking of property from the person of another against his will by force, violence, or putting the person in fear is "robbery." The felonious taking of property from the person against his will, by force, or violence, however slight, constitutes the offense. Two persons met a third person. One of the two asked the third if he could change a ten dollar bill, holding out his hand containing some silver. When the third held out the bill to exchange for the silver, the other snatched it out of his hands and both of the two persons ran away. The two were guilty of "robbery." Stockton v. Commonwealth, 101 S. W. 298, 299, 125 Ky. 268.

"Robbery" may be committed by unlawfully, feloniously, forcibly, and without the consent of another, taking from his person his property, though he be not put in fear thereby, or by putting him in fear without using actual force or violence; but, in the latter case, there must be, upon the part of the wrongdoer, such an attempt at intimidation, threat of violence, demonstration, or offer of force, toward the person deprived of his property, for the purpose of securing its surrender, as would be reasonably calculated to put the latter in fear and cause him to part with his property. Commonwealth v. Titworth (Ky.) 98 S. W. 1028, 1029.

Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 1893, declares that every person who shall be convicted of unlawfully taking property of another from his person or in his presence against his will, by violence to his person or by putting him in fear of some immediate injury to his person, shall be adjudged guilty of "robbery in the first degree"; and hence an information alleging that accused did unlawfully and feloniously make an assault, followed by the facts necessary in an information for "robbery in the first degree," is not objectionable in that it failed to charge that the assault was felonious. State v. Calvert, 107 S. W. 1078, 1079, 209 Mo. 280.

An instruction, in an action on an accident policy limiting the loss to one-tenth in the event of death due to injuries intentionally inflicted on insured by another, except assaults for the purpose of robbery, that the word "robbery" was used in its ordinary meaning, that to constitute the offense it was not necessary that the obtaining possession of property must be accomplished through violence or fear, but that it was sufficient if the violence or fear was concomitant with the taking, though defective for failing to more sharply point out the question whether or not the assault was committed for the sole purpose of robbery, was not erroneous. Weidner v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co. of Detroit, Mich., 113 N. W. 50, 51, 132 Wis. 624.

"Robbery" as defined by the Oklahoma statutes is wrongful taking of personal property in the possession of another from his person or immediate presence and against his will, accomplished by means of force or fear. "The fear which constitutes robbery may be either: (1) The fear of an unlawful injury, immediate or future, to the person or property of the person robbed or of any relative of his, or member of his family; or (2) the fear of an immediate and unlawful injury to the person or property of any one in the company of the person robbed, at the time of the robbery." From this it is seen that force is not a necessary element in the crime of robbery. If personal property is wrongfully taken from the possession of another from his person or immediate presence and against his will, through fear of an unlawful injury, immediate or future, to the person or property of the person robbed, or of a relative of his or member of his family, such taking is just as much robbery as though it was committed by actual force. Cochran v. State, 111 Pac. 974, 975, 4 Okl. Cr. 379.

A "robbery" is a "felonious and forcible taking from the person of another of goods or money to any value by violence or putting in fear." An instruction that if accused by stealth got possession of money of the prosecutor by taking it from his person and before accused had secured the money the prosecutor discovered the taking, and by force attempted to regain possession of it, and accused by physical force prevented prosecutor from retaking it, and either retained it himself or fraudulently transferred it to another, it was a taking by force, was error. Jones v. Commonwealth, 74 S. W. 263, 115 Ky. 592, 103 Am. St. Rep. 340 (quoting and adopting definition in Commonwealth v. Prewitt, 82 Ky. 240).

"The statute (Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. Supp. § 7103) defines 'robbery' to be the forcible and felonious taking from the person of another, or from his immediate presence, any article of value by violence or putting in fear, and it is contended by the appellants that the evidence here fails to show such use of force and violence, or such putting in fear, in taking the property, as is necessary to constitute 'robbery' under the statute. The courts generally hold that it is not 'robbery' to merely snatch from the hand or person of another, or to surreptitiously take from another's pocket, money or some other thing of value, as such taking lacks the element of force, or putting in fear, one or the other of which being essential to constitute the crime of burglary. It is also generally held that where the property is obtained by some artifice or trick intended to, and which does, allay resistance and not arouse fear, such as inducing one to part voluntarily with his money or property under the belief that the taker has a lawful right to it, does not constitute 'robbery.' But, on the other hand, it is generally held whenever the elements of force or putting in fear enters into the taking and is the cause that induces the owner of the property to part with it, the taking is 'robbery' no matter how slight the act of force or the cause creating the fear may be, nor by what other circumstance the taking may be accompanied. It is enough that the force or the putting in fear employed is sufficient to overcome resistance on the part of the person from whom the property is taken, and is the moving cause inducing him to part unwillingly with his property." Shannon v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 87 Pac. 351, 352, 44 Wash. 321.

Intent

An instruction defining robbery in the language of the statute, as the felonious and violent taking of money or other valuable thing from the person of another by force or intimidation, was not objectionable as omitting the element of felonious intent. People v. Scarbak, 92 N. E. 286, 288, 245 Ill. 435.

The intention to steal is necessary to constitute "robbery." So an instruction that if accused voluntarily took the personal property of prosecutor from his person and against his will, by violence or by putting him in fear of immediate injury, he was guilty, was erroneous for failing to state that such intention was a necessary element of the crime. Jones v. State, 48 South. 407, 408, 95

Miss. 121, 21 Ann. Cas. 1137 (citing 2 Bish. New Crim. Proc. [6th Ed.] § 1002; 2 Bish. New Crim. Law, § 1159; Sledge v. State, 26 S. E. 756, 99 Ga. 684; People v. Vice, 21 Cal. 344).

In a prosecution for "robbery," an instruction that if defendant, at a date and time specified, feloniously assaulted prosecutor, and did rob, steal, take and carry away from his person and in his presence and against his will the sum of $75 in money, or any other amount, defendant was guilty as charged, was erroneous for failure to require that the money should have been taken "with the intent to deprive" prosecutor thereof. Such instruction was not cured by a subsequent instruction correctly defining the term "robbery." State v. Graves, 84 S. W. 904, 905, 185 Mo. 713 (citing State v. O'Connor, 16 S. W. 511, 105 Mo. loc. cit. 126; Kelley's Crim. Law & Prac. § 582; Bish. Crim. Law, § 1162a; State v. McLain, 60 S. W. 740, 159 Mo. loc. cit. 352).

Where, on a trial for assault with intent to rob, the court defined "robbery" as the felonious taking of the property of another from his person, whether by violence or by putting him in fear, with intent to permanently deprive the owner thereof, an instruction authorizing a verdict of guilty on finding that accused assaulted the prosecutor with intent to rob was not erroneous for failing to charge that it was necessary that accused, at the time he made the assault, did so with the intent to deprive the prosecutor of his property. State v. Bateman, 95 S. W. 413, 414, 196 Mo. 35 (distinguishing State v. Graves, 84 S. W. 904, 185 Mo. 713).

Where defendant leveled a pistol at prosecutor, and compelled him to draw a $10 bill from his pocket, whereupon defendant had the bill changed, and returned $2 to prosecutor, defendant was guilty of "robbery," notwithstanding prosecutor owed defendant $8 for services, and defendant's acts were merely for the purpose of collecting his debt. Fannin v. State, 100 S. W. 916, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 41, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 744, 123 Am. St. Rep. 874.

Larceny included

"Robbery" includes the lesser offenses of larceny and larceny from the person. State v. Taylor, 118 N. W. 747, 748, 140 Iowa, 470.

"Robbery" involves grand larceny. It is larceny with the element of force or intimidation added. People v. Clark, 79 Pac. 434, 145 Cal. 727.

The crime of "robbery by force and violence" includes larceny from the person, and a conviction from the latter offense may be had under a charge of the former. State v. Dunn, 71 Pac. 811, 66 Kan. 483 (citing State v. Pickering, 49 Pac. 314, 57 Kan. 326).

"Robbery" is larceny by force or intimidation, and it is sufficient to charge it in either form. It is not necessary to specify what accused intended to take, nor to aver that the accused intended to deprive the owner of its value. Nor is it necessary to allege ownership in the party assaulted. Mere possession in him is sufficient. Traver v. State, 81 S. W. 615, 72 Ark. 524.

"Robbery in the first degree" may be committed either in the day or in the nighttime. The offense of larceny from the person in the nighttime, defined by Rev. St. 1899, § 1900, is included in that of robbery in the first degree, committed in the nighttime, and a conviction of the former offense may be had under an indictment charging the same, although the evidence shows the commission of the offense of robbery in the nighttime. State v. Smith, 90 S. W. 440, 445, 190 Mo. 706.

"Robbery" is a compound or aggravated larceny, and "larceny" is only another name for stealing or theft. 2 Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 6944, providing that in the prosecution of any offense committed in stealing, etc., any personal estate, it shall not be deemed a variance if it be proved that, at the time when the offense was committed, either the general or special property in the whole or in part of the personality was in the person alleged in the indictment to be the owner thereof, applied to a prosecution for robbery, and evidence that the property in question belonged to a partnership, one of the members of which was the person alleged in the indictment to have been the owner, was sufficient. State v. Fair, 76 Pac. 731, 733, 35 Wash. 127, 102 Am. St. Rep. 897.

In a prosecution for robbery and assault with intent to kill if resisted, an instruction that if the jury find from the evidence beyond reasonable doubt that defendants, or either of them, are guilty of stealing from the person of the prosecuting witness the sum described in the indictment or some part thereof, but do not find that they or either of them assaulted said witness with intent, if resisted, to kill or wound said witness, then they should find the defendants or either of them guilty of the crime of larceny from the person, is not erroneous, as robbery is larceny aggravated by the circumstance that the property taken is taken from the person of another by violence or by putting him in fear, and the greater crime necessarily embraces the lesser offense of the same class. State v. Parr, 103 Pac. 434, 437, 54 Or. 316.

Larceny distinguished

"Robbery" is larceny aggravated by the fact that the property was taken from the person of the owner by violence, or putting him in fear. State v. Smith, 90 S. W. 440, 444, 190 Mo. 706.

"Robbery" is an aggravated form of theft by means of an assault or violence, or use of firearms. The robbery or theft of community property of a husband or wife may be from which ever of them had possession of it at the time. Miles v. State, 108 S. W. 854, 855, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 587.

At common law "robbery" was the felonious taking from another of goods or money of any value by violence or by putting in fear. It is but larceny with the aggravated circumstances of force and arms added. State v. McCoy, 59 S. E. 758, 63 W. Va. 69.

The criterion which distinguishes "robbery" from "larceny" is the violence, actual or constructive, which precedes the taking. There can be no robbery without violence and no larceny with it. Tones v. State, 88 S. W. 217, 220, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 363, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1024, 122 Am. St. Rep. 759, 13 Ann. Cas. 455 (citing Long v. State, 12 Ga. 293).

"Robbery" is "the felonious and forcible taking from the person of another of goods or money to any value by violence or putting in fear." The violence must accompany the act of taking. Any resistance after the property has been taken, made in an effort to regain, does not relate back to the act of taking so as to make it robbery. One who stealthily placed her hand in the pocket of another and took therefrom, without using any force or violence, a sum of money, was guilty of larceny merely, though after the taking and while the owner made an effort to regain his property she drew a pistol and threatened violence. Dawson v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 74 S. W. 701 (quoting and adopting definition in Commonwealth v. Prewitt, 82 Ky. 240).

Larceny from person distinguished

If a thing of value be feloniously taken from the person of another with such violence as to occasion a substantial corporal injury, or be obtained by a violent struggle with the possessor, it is "robbery"; but if the article be taken without any sensible or material violence to the person, and without any struggle for its possession, it is merely "larceny from the person." People v. Ryan, 88 N. E. 170, 171, 239 Ill. 410.

Where one in an attempt to commit larceny from the person is caught by his intended victim with his hand in his pocket, and a struggle then ensues for the possession of money contained in the pocket, the former endeavoring to take the money therefrom and the latter resisting the effort, and the money is finally taken from the pocket violently and by the infliction of physical injuries, the crime is not "larceny from the person," but "robbery by force." The attempted larceny becomes robbery, when force and violence is used to complete the unlawful act. Carter v. State, 60 S. E. 216, 3 Ga. App. 477 (citing Burke v. State, 74 Ga. 372).

"Robbery" is "larceny," with the element of force or intimidation added. Larceny from the person is either by privately stealing, or by open and violent assault, which is usually called robbery. Open and violent larceny from the person, or robbery, the rapina of the civilians, is the felonious and forcible taking from the person of another, of goods or money to any value, by violence or putting him in fear. This previous violence or putting in fear is the criterion that distinguished robbery from other larcenies. State v. Luhano, 102 Pac. 280, 262, 31 Nev. 278 (quoting and adopting People v. Clary, 72 Cal. 59, 13 Pac. 77; 2 Cooley, Bl. Comm. [4th Ed.] p. 1404).

Proof of violence is not essential to a conviction of suddenly snatching, taking, or carrying away property without the consent of the owner or person in possession or control thereof, made robbery by Pen. Code 1910, § 148; but it is only necessary to show that the person robbed was conscious that something was being taken away from him and that he was unable to prevent it, the only difference between robbery of such class and larceny from the person being that, in case of such larceny, property is extracted without knowledge of the possessor. Williams v. State, 70 S. E. 890, 9 Ga. App. 170.

"Robbery" is the wrongful, fraudulent, and violent taking of money, goods, or chattels from the person of another by force or intimidation, without the consent of the owner, or the sudden snatching, taking, or carrying away any money, goods, chattels, or anything of value from the owner or person in possession or control thereof without his consent. Acts 1903, p. 43, amending Pen. Code 1895, § 151. The effect of this statutory definition of robbery is to make the offense which was previously known as larceny from the person, and which was committed by the sudden snatching, taking, or carrying away of money or valuables from the owner without his consent, robbery. It is not necessary that the taking be accomplished by force or intimidation, so as to involve some show of resistance, and the distinguishing characteristics between larceny from the person and robbery as defined in the act of 1903 is the stealthiness of the act. If the taking be secret, stealthy, and without the knowledge of the owner, it is larceny from the person; but if the taking is done with the knowledge of the victim, but without his consent, and by a sudden snatching, the act is robbery. Hickey v. State, 53 S. E. 1026, 125 Ga. 145.

Ownership of property

The gist of the offense of "robbery" is the force or intimidation and taking from the person against his will of a thing of value and belonging to him, and the nature and value of the property taken is immaterial. People v. Nolan, 95 N. E. 140, 250 Ill. 351, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 301, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 401.

To constitute "robbery" it is unnecessary that the property belong to the victim, or that it be taken from his person, if it was unlawfully taken in his presence, against his will or through force or fear. People v. Ma-

das, 94 N. E. 857, 858, 201 N. Y. 349, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 229.

Under the statute declaring that every person convicted of feloniously taking the property of another from his person or in his presence, etc., shall be guilty of "robbery," a clerk having possession of his employer's money has a sufficient ownership thereof to support an allegation of ownership in the clerk in an indictment for robbery. State v. Montgomery, 79 S. W. 693, 695, 181 Mo. 19, 67 L. R. A. 343, 2 Ann. Cas. 261.

"Robbery" is a compound or aggravated larceny, and larceny is only another name for stealing or theft. 2 Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 6944, providing that in the prosecution of any offense committed in stealing, etc., any personal estate, it shall not be deemed a variance if it be proved that, at the time when the offense was committed, either the general or special property in the whole or in part of the personalty was in the person alleged in the indictment to be the owner thereof, applied to a prosecution for robbery, and evidence that the property in question belonged to a partnership, one of the members of which was the person alleged in the indictment to have been the owner, was sufficient. State v. Fair, 76 Pac. 731, 733, 35 Wash. 127, 102 Am. St. Rep. 897.

Under Code, § 4753, making it robbery to steal and take from the person of another any property, the subject of larceny, by violence, etc., an indictment for robbery, charging that defendant "did steal and take away" a sum of money, was insufficient, for not alleging the ownership of the property. State v. Wasson, 101 N. W. 1125, 126 Iowa, 320.

Taking from person

To constitute "robbery" it is unnecessary that the property belong to the victim or that it be taken from his person, if it was unlawfully taken in his presence, against his will, or through force or fear. People v. Madas, 94 N. E. 857, 201 N. Y. 349, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 229.

While robbery is the taking of property "from the person of another," it is sufficient if the property be under the personal protection of, though not in personal contact with, the person from whom it is taken. Hill v. State, 40 South. 654, 655, 145 Ala. 58.

The gist of the offense of "robbery" is the force or intimidation and taking from the person against his will of a thing of value and belonging to him, and the nature and value of the property taken is immaterial. People v. Nolan, 95 N. E. 140, 250 Ill. 351, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 301, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 401.

Though there must be an actual taking of the property from the person to constitute robbery, the crime is consummated if the thief retains possession but a short time, and it is no less robbery because ineffectual in its consequences. People v. Campbell, 84 N. E. 1035, 1037, 234 Ill. 391, 123 Am. St. Rep. 107, 14 Ann. Cas. 186.

Robbery is stealing property with violence from the person or personal custody of another person. It is necessary, in order to constitute that crime, that the goods shall be on the person of the owner, or the owner's agent, or shall be in his presence and in his custody. State v. Lyons, 58 Atl. 398, 401, 70 N. J. Law, 635.

To constitute the crime of "robbery" there must be violence or intimidation of such a character as that the injured party is put in fear of such a nature as in reason and common experience is likely to induce a person to part with his property against his will, and temporarily suspend the power of exercising his will. Steward v. People, 79 N. E. 636, 224 Ill. 434.

"Robbery" at common law is defined to be the "felonious and violent taking of any money or goods from the person of another, putting him in fear, be the value thereof above or under one shilling." According to another definition, "robbery" is the "felonious taking of money or goods or anything of value from the person of another, or from his presence, against his will, by violence or putting him in fear." The taking must be from the person of another, but the "taking from the person" is not understood to mean that the goods are actually on the person in the strict sense of the term. At common law, if property was taken feloniously, with force and violence, or by putting in fear, in the presence of the owner, it was in legal contemplation a taking from his person. O'Donnell v. People, 79 N. E. 639, 642, 224 Ill. 218, 8 Ann. Cas. 123 (citing State v. Calhoun, 34 N. W. 194, 72 Iowa, 432, 2 Am. St. Rep. 252; Clements v. State, 11 S. E. 505, 84 Ga. 660, 20 Am. St. Rep. 385; Crawford v. State, 17 S. E. 628, 90 Ga. 701, 35 Am. St. Rep. 242; Turner v. State, 1 Ohio St. 422; Hill v. State, 60 N. W. 916, 42 Neb. 503; *Crocker v. #### Value of property

The felonious taking of personal property in the possession of another from his person or immediate presence and against his will, accomplished by means of force or fear, is robbery, irrespective of the value of the property so taken. People v. Stevens, 75 Pac. 62, 63, 141 Cal. 488.

The gist of the offense of "robbery" is the force or intimidation, and the taking from the person against his will of a thing of value and belonging to him, and the nature and value of the property taken is immaterial. People v. Nolan, 95 N. E. 140, 250 Ill. 351, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 301, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 401.

ROBBERY IN THE FIRST DEGREE

"Robbery in the first degree" is the unlawful taking of personal property from the person or in the presence of another against his will by means of force or violence or fear of injury by a person armed with a dangerous weapon, or being aided by an accomplice actually present, or when the offender inflicts grievous bodily harm or injury upon the person from whose possession or in whose presence the property is taken. People v. De Veau, 94 N. Y. Supp. 225, 229, 105 App. Div. 381 (citing Pen. Code N. Y. §§ 224, 228).

ROBBERY IN THE SECOND DEGREE

Pen. Code, § 224, defines "robbery in the second degree" as an unlawful taking accomplished by force or fear when not under other circumstances amounting to robbery in the first degree but accomplished either (1) by the use of violence or (2) by putting the person in fear of immediate injury to his person. People v. Monroe, 104 N. Y. Supp. 675, 677, 119 App. Div. 704.

Two persons may be guilty of one robbery in the second degree under Pen Code, § 229 (Penal Law [Consol. Laws, c. 40] § 2126), declaring that "second degree robbery" is the unlawful taking of property, accomplished by force or fear, either by the use of violence, or by putting the person robbed in immediate fear or that of some person in his company in a case specified in section 228, but not under circumstances amounting to robbery in the first degree. People v. Thompson, 91 N. E. 838, 839, 198 N. Y. 396.

ROBBERY IN THE THIRD DEGREE

By Pen. Code, § 230, "robbery in the third degree" is any robbery not constituting the first or second degree. People v. Monroe, 104 N. Y. Supp. 675, 677, 119 App. Div. 704.

Pen. Code, § 230, defines "robbery in the third degree" as robbery "under circumstances not amounting to robbery in the first or second degree." "Robbery in the third degree includes the taking of personal property by means of fear of injury in the future, and it is claimed that it includes the taking of personal property by force not amounting to violence." People v. Thompson, 91 N. E. 838, 839, 198 N. Y. 396.

ROLLING STOCK

Locomotives, flat cars, box cars, logging trucks, hand cars, push cars, coaches, cabooses, and coal cars may be denominated "rolling stock" of a railroad. Flanagan Bank v. Graham, 71 Pac. 137, 141, 42 Or. 403.

St. 1894, p. 355, c. 326, providing that a conditional sale of street railway rolling stock shall not be valid against a purchaser in good faith and without knowledge, unless shown by a written and recorded instrument, and requiring each car sold by conditional sale to be plainly marked on each side with the name of the seller, followed by the word "owner," applies to completed cars, and does not require a conditional sale of trucks, motors and motor equipments to be recorded. Lorain Steel Co. v. Norfolk & B. St. Ry. Co., 73 N. E. 646, 648, 187 Mass. 500.

Railroad property, included in the term "rolling stock," which is in one place to-day and another to-morrow, being continually carried along the line of the road in the actual operation thereof, owing to its character and use, has no actual situs entitling any particular subdivision through which the road runs, to have the benefit of the taxation thereof, in preference to any other subdivision. Such property is in no sense of the word "local property," and the apportionment of the total value of such property according to the length of the road, as in the case of the franchise, is the only practicable way of preventing double assessments thereof, and determining the amount to which each subdivision is justly entitled. San Francisco & S. J. V. Ry. Co. v. City of Stockton, 84 Pac. 771, 774, 149 Cal. 83.

Personal Property Law N. Y. § 61, provides that, whenever any railroad equipment and rolling stock shall be sold, leased, or loaned under a contract which provides that the title shall remain in the vendor, lessor, or bailor until the price is paid, such contract shall be invalid as to any subsequent judgment creditor of or purchaser from such vendee, lessee, or bailee for a valuable consideration without notice, unless the contract is in writing, fully acknowledged, and recorded in the book in which real estate mortgages are recorded in the office of the county clerk or register of the county in which is located the principal office or place of business of the vendee, lessee, or bailee, unless there is plainly marked on both sides of the locomotive or car the name of the vendor, lessor, or bailor, followed by the words "lessor," "bailor," or "vendor," as the case may be. Held, that the words "railroad equipment" and "rolling stock," as used in such section, were equivalent to the words "rolling stock used on a railroad," and since the term "railroad" signifies a common carrier or association engaged in hauling passengers and freight for hire, excluding logging roads, construction roads, etc., such section had no application to locomotives only fit for use on temporary construction railroads, used in connection with work of internal improvement, and hence conditional sales of such locomotives were valid as against the trustee in bankruptcy of the conditional vendee, though not recorded. In re Ferguson Contracting Co., 183 Fed. 880, 881.

ROLLERMILL

The term "rollermill," in its general sense, includes any form of mill for the coarse grinding of grain for feed, and may include a mill and machinery used for the purpose of manufacturing meal, bran, and other feed products. Capital Fire Ins. Co. v. Carroll, 109 Pac. 535, 537, 26 Okl. 286.

ROMAN ADOPTION

The statutes of adoption, enacted to establish, between a minor and one not his parent, the legal obligations of the natural relation of parent and child, and conferring on any person the capacity to succeed to the property of one not his parent, must be understood and applied in accordance with the terms of each statute, in view of existing conditions, and their meaning and effect are not necessarily controlled by the analogies of a "Roman adoption," deriving its significance from the principle that a father's power extended, not only to his children, but to his other descendants. Appeal of Woodward, 70 Atl. 453, 457, 81 Conn. 152.

ROOF

See Board Roof.

ROOFING

"Roofing" means the material for a roof. City of Sylvania v. Hilton, 51 S. E. 744, 746, 123 Ga. 754, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 483, 107 Am. St. Rep. 162.

ROOM

See Poolroom; Storeroom; Waiting Room.

Where defendant occupied a booth underneath the grand stand adjoining the betting room of a race track, such booth constituted a "room," or place, within Laws 1905, p. 131, providing that any person who, being the owner, lessee, occupant, or person in charge of any room, shed, tenement, booth, or building, or any part thereof, within the state, knowingly permits the same to be used or occupied for the purpose of selling pools on races, or therein keeps, uses, or employs any device or apparatus for such purpose, shall be guilty of a felony. State v. Oldham, 98 S. W. 497, 501, 200 Mo. 538.

See Building.

As house

House distinguished

Pen. Code 1895, art. 388b, makes it a felony for any person to keep any premises, building, place, or room for the purpose of being used as a place for gambling with cards; and Vagrancy Act (Acts 31st Leg. c. 59) § 1, subd. k, declares that every keeper of a house of gambling or gaming is a vagrant. Held, that there is a distinction between the offense of keeping a "room," denounced by Pen. Code 1895, § 388b, and keeping a "house," denounced under the vagrancy act, for "room" and "house" are not synonymous or convertible terms, so that the vagrancy act does not repeal the provision of the Penal Code. Parshall v. State, 138 S. W. 759, 764, 62 Tex. Cr. R. 177.

ROOM OR ROOMS

The phrase "room or rooms" in Liquor Tax Law (Laws 1897, p. 234, c. 312) § 31, subd. "g," which forbids having an open or unlocked door to the "room or rooms" where any liquors are sold or kept for sale during the hours when the sale of liquors is forbidden, etc., refers to the room or rooms in which liquors are sold or kept for sale, and not to any adjoining room. An indictment which charged that on a certain Sunday defendant admitted to a certain room certain persons named, not being members of his family nor servants, which room had an entrance into the barroom, was demurrable; the admission of persons to a room adjoining one in which the liquor was sold not being an offense under the statute. People v. Lupton, 103 N. Y. Supp. 172, 173, 52 Misc. Rep. 336.

ROOSTER

The connecting appliance between the engine and first car of a logging train is commonly called a "rooster." Gauthier v. Wood & Iverson, 94 Pac. 654, 655, 49 Wash. 8.

ROPE

See Snug Ropes.

As appliance, see Appliance.

ROSARY

A "rosary" is an article of use and not worn for ornament, and is not a "jewel" or "ornament" within the statute relieving an innkeeper from liability for loss of jewels or ornaments, where he provides a safe, posts notice thereof, and the guest neglects to deposit the same in the safe. Jones v. Hotel Latham Co., 115 N. Y. Supp. 1084, 1085, 62 Misc. Rep. 620.

ROSE WATER

As medicinal preparation, see Medicinal Preparation.

ROSSED PULP WOOD

"Rossed pulp wood" is a kind of wood chiefly poplar and spruce used for making pulp in the manufacture of paper and which has the bark, skin, and rough places of wood, removed by hand shaving or by a rossing machine, the object of the rossing being to cheapen transportation by reducing the bulk and weight of the wood. Such wood is not manufactured within the meaning of the Tariff Act. United States v. Pierce County, 147 Fed. 199, 200, 77 C. C. A. 425.

ROT

See Black Rot.

ROTARY

In Webster's Dictionary "rotary" is defined as "turning, as a wheel on its axis;" in the Century Dictionary, as "turning round and round, as a wheel on its axis." The word "rotary," used in a claim of a patent to describe an element of a combination does not necessarily imply a continuous rotation of the part, so as to make it necessary to limit the claim by reading into it as an additional element mechanism for such rotation, but is properly descriptive, if the part is capable of being rotated by hand or otherwise. Kipp-Armstrong Co. v. King Phillip Mills, 130 Fed. 28, 29; King Phillip Mills v. Kip-Armstrong Co., 132 Fed. 975, 976, 66 C. C. A. 45.

ROUGH

See In the Rough.

ROUGH HANDLING

The clauses of the charge in an action for injury to a shipment of cattle, in which the right to recover was submitted, having explicitly made such right to depend on a finding that the delays and rough handling alleged constituted negligence, and in another clause the jury being instructed that they could not allow anything for such shrinkage or damage as would be ordinary and reasonable in a shipment of cattle over such route, but in estimating the damages, if any, they would take into consideration only such as may have been sustained by the cattle by reason of unreasonable delays and rough handling, "rough handling" in such clause, as well as in one in which it was charged that if defendants transported said cattle with reasonable dispatch, and did not handle them roughly, plaintiff could not recover, is to be treated as meaning such unreasonable and negligent handling as was beyond the natural and usual way of handling such shipments. Southern Kansas Ry. Co. of Texas v. Yarbrough, 109 S. W. 390, 392, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 407.

ROUGH SHADOWING

"Rough shadowing" by detectives means that those engaged in the work are not obliged to conceal the fact that the subject of surveillance is being shadowed or followed; the work being done so openly that the subject, or the general public, or both, may know of it. Schultz v. Frankfort Marine Accident & Plate Glass Ins. Co., 139 N. W. 386, 389, 151 Wis. 537, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 520.

ROUGHING

As applied to printed pictures, "roughing" is a separate process after the printing of a picture, which gives to it somewhat the effect of an oil painting, increases its durability, and improves its appearance. Turner v. Osgood Art Colortype Co., 79 N. E. 306, 307, 223 Ill. 629.

ROULETTE

"'Roulette' is a gambling game and a banking game." Vasey v. Campbell, 88 Pac. 509, 4 Cal. App. 451.

ROUND

ROUND STEEL WIRE

The Tariff Act provides a specific rate or duty on wire, with an additional duty where it is manufactured into articles, also an additional rate when it is coated. Articles made from "round steel wire" coated with copper are subject to each of the latter duties, in addition to that applicable to the wire in its uncoated, unmanufactured state. Burditt & Williams Co. v. United States, 147 Fed. 892, 893.

ROUND TIMBER

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule D, 30 Stat. 167, paragraphs 194 and 196 provide, respectively, for "round timber used in building wharves," and for electric light poles, etc.; and paragraph 699, Free List, § 2, 30 Stat. 202, enumerates "round unmanufactured timber * * * not specially provided for." Held, that any round sticks which in their shape as imported are used for any of the purposes specified in said paragraphs 194 and 196, either in the rough or finished, are subject to classification under those paragraphs; rather than under paragraph 699. Perfection Pile-Preserving Co. v. United States, 147 Fed. 922, 923.

ROUND UNMANUFACTURED TIMBER

See Logs and Round Unmanufactured Timber.

ROUNDHOUSE

A railroad "roundhouse" is a repair shop within the meaning of a condition in a grant of a franchise that the grantee shall establish his "repair shop" at a certain place. Alexandria v. Morgan's Louisiana & T. R. & S. C. Co., 33 South. 65, 68, 109 La. 50.

ROUTE

See Local Route; New Route; Post Roads and Routes.

ROYAL PREROGATIVE

A "royal prerogative" is an arbitrary power vested in the executive, a power or will which is discretionary and uncontrolled. It is often employed in the sense that it is an arbitrary power of the state, as distinguished from a sovereign power, which becomes effective in its exercise by legislation. Zimmerman v. Chelsea Sav. Bank, 127 N. W. 351, 352, 161 Mich. 704.

ROYAL TITLE

A "royal title" is the highest order of title known by any law, or principle, in the province of east Florida. Titles of this description were designed to convey the fee simple to the grantee. They were usually made by the acting governors of the province in the name of the king. They recited the grant to be in perpetuity, and also the specific metes and bounds of the land. This title may be said to correspond in character with that of a patent issued by our government. "Concessions without conditions" are understood to differ from a "royal title" only in this: That most of the latter recite the metes and bounds, whereas the unconditional concession, although definite in quantity and location of the land, is still subject to a survey, which, when made, was followed by maturing the concession by a royal title. There is also a peculiarity in the legal phraseology of a "royal title." In all the grants of this nature the legal right to the lands is asserted. Florida Town Imp. Co. v. Bigalsky, 33 South. 450, 453, 44 Fla. 771 (quoting from the report of the Land Commissioners of 1826).

ROYALTY

See Advanced Royalty.

As personal property, see Personal Property.

As rent, see Rent.

The word "royalty," as used in a gas lease, generally refers to "a share of the product or profit reserved by the owner for permitting another to use the property." Indiana Natural Gas & Oil Co. v. Stewart, 90 N. E. 384, 386, 45 Ind. App. 554.

The word "royalty" as employed in a coal mining lease means the share of the profit reserved by the owner for permitting the removal of the coal and is in the nature of rent. Kissick v. Bolton, 112 N. W. 95, 96, 134 Iowa, 650.

The measure of damages for coal taken from another's land through an honest mistake is the value of the coal taken as it lay in the mine, or the usual reasonable royalty paid for the right of mining; the "royalty" being the price paid for coal as it lies in the earth. Burke Hollow Coal Co. v. Lawson, 151 S. W. 657, 151 Ky. 305.

As used in Milwaukee charter, c. 5, § 23, providing that the board of public works shall have power, under the authority of the common council, to make a contract with a patentee, to use any patented article, process, combination, or work, for the said city, at a stipulated "royalty" for the use thereof, the word "royalty" did not contemplate a contract whereby a sum equal to nearly two-thirds of the whole cost of the paving should go to the patentee, and thereby competitive bidding be prevented. Allen v. City of Milwaukee, 106 N. W. 1099, 1102, 128 Wis. 678, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 680, 116 Am. St. Rep. 54, 8 Ann. Cas. 392.

RUBBEROID

The word "Ruberoïd" is not the subject of exclusive appropriation as a trade-mark for a flexible waterproof roofing, since, even though the roofing contains no rubber, the word is descriptive, and not indicative of origin or ownership. Standard Paint Co. v.

Trinidad Asphalt Mfg. Co., 31 Sup. Ct. 456, 457, 220 U. S. 446, 55 L. Ed. 536; Trinidad Asphalt Mfg. Co. v. Standard Paint Co., 163 Fed. 977, 90 C. C. A. 195.

RUBBLE STONE

Dimension and footing stone distinguished, see Dimension Stone.

RUB DOWN BRICK WORK

Where the specifications of a building contract require the contractor to "rub down all brick work on street sides," the contractor cannot claim pay for cleaning street walls with acid as for extra work; the work coming within the terms of the contract. Chamberlain v. Hibbard, 38 Pac. 437, 438, 26 Or. 428.

RUDE

A statement of a witness that a conductor laid his hand gently upon the shoulder of a passenger for the purpose of ejecting him from the train excludes the idea of rudeness or force. According to Webster's Dictionary, "gently" means softly, mildly, while, "rude" means rough, insulting. Holmes v. Carolina Cent. R. Co., 94 N. C. 318, 323.

RUDELY

"Willfully" is not synonymous with 'rudely.' Under Pen. Code 1895, art. 334, prescribing a punishment against those who "rudely display any pistol or other deadly weapon in a manner calculated to disturb," etc., an information charging that defendant "willfully and unlawfully" displayed a deadly weapon is sufficient. Fuller v. State, 87 S. W. 832, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 300.

RUFFED GROUSE

Grouse as including, see Grouse.

RUIN

Louisiana Rev. Civ. Code, art. 2322, declares that the owner of a building is answerable for the damage occasioned by its "ruin" when this is caused by neglect to repair it, or when it is the result of a vice in its original construction. Held, that the term "ruin," as so used, means the collapse, falling, or giving way of the whole or of some part of the building whereby some person is injured. Frank v. Suthon, 159 Fed. 174, 178.

RULE

See Consent Rule; Home Rule; Six Months Rule; Under the Civil Service Rules.

Front-foot rule, see Front Foot.
Make rule, see Make.

The word "rule" as used in common parlance has a double meaning. It may refer to an express formula of conduct, promulgated by some one having authority to prescribe or command, or to a course or practice pursued generally by one or more persons. Schaufele v. Central of Georgia Ry. Co., 65 S. E. 708, 710, 6 Ga. App. 660.

The terms "rule" and "order," which are synonymous, include commands to lower courts or court officials to do ministerial acts. Carter v. Louisiana Purchase Exposition Co., 102 S. W. 6, 9, 124 Mo. App. 530.

"The process by which a defective transcript on appeal is amended on suggestion of a diminution of the record is denominated a 'rule.'" Hager v. Knapp, 78 Pac. 671, 673, 45 Or. 512 (citing B. & C. Comp. § 594).

"It is not unfrequent to consider and speak of a regular practice under a rule, as itself forming a 'rule.' A regular course of decisions on the text of the law constitutes a rule of construction by which that text is to be applied to all similar cases; but alter the text and the rule no longer governs." Talbot v. Seeman, 5 U. S. (1 Cranch) 1, 36, 2 L. Ed. 15.

"Legislative power," within Const. art. 4, § 1, providing that the legislative power shall be vested in the General Assembly, is the power to make laws; a "law" is a rule of civil conduct prescribed by the supreme power of a state; a "rule" is distinguished from whim, caprice, compact, agreement, or discretion, and "prescribed" means that the rule shall be manifested and published, so as to be known as a rule of civil conduct. Merchants' Exchange of St. Louis v. Knott, 111 S. W. 565, 571, 212 Mo. 616.

The "rule" of the master, the violation of which renders the servant ipso facto negligent, is not the general course or practice by which the work is usually done, but an explicit promulgated regulation or mandatory instruction. Atlantic Coast Line Ry. Co. v. McLeod, 70 S. E. 214, 218, 9 Ga. App. 13.

The phrase "rules of the Code of Civil Procedure" as used in Street Opening Act 1903, § 6 (St. 1903, p. 378, c. 268), means the laws or provisions of that Code, and not merely the rules governing pleading and practice as prescribed therein, especially in view of section 37 providing for a liberal construction of the provisions of the act to promote the objects thereof. City of Los Angeles v. Gager, 102 Pac. 17, 18, 10 Cal. App. 378.

Recommendation of the executive committee adopted by the "Ocean Beach Association" chartered by Act March 13, 1873, and entered in its minutes to the effect that a block of lots be dedicated to public use, is not a "rule or regulation" within a restrictive covenant in its deed for one of such lots that the grantee shall not suffer liquor to be sold on any of the premises conveyed, nor violate provisions in the act of incorporation or the regulations of the association, which deed also contains covenants of seisin, of quiet enjoyment, and of general warranty. Borough of Belmar v. Prior, 79 Atl. 1032, 1033, 81 N. J. Law, 254.

As by-law, regulation, ordinance or law

The word "rules" is synonymous with ordinances, regulations, and by-laws. State ex rel. Krebs v. Huctor, 120 N. W. 199, 200, 83 Neb. 690 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5025).

The meaning of the word "rules" is of wide and varied significance, depending upon the context; in a legal sense it is synonymous with "laws." City of Los Angeles v. Gager, 102 Pac. 17, 18, 10 Cal. App. 378.

A "rule" is a device in words and phrases for the control and direction of those who have something else given them to do. A regulation is a rule of law by which some right is to be exercised. They are words of a like import and import a partial restriction which does not wholly prohibit, and imply uniformity in operation, not discrimination. Borough of Belmar v. Prior, 79 Atl. 1032, 1033, 81 N. J. Law, 254.

Ky. St. § 4306, providing that the fiscal court shall have general supervision of the highways, and shall make rules for their proper management and repair, refers only to rules for the actual work of repair, and hence does not require rules by fiscal court that public contracts exceeding $100 must be let to the lowest bidder, and such a rule, not being required, has not the force of a statute or an ordinance, and the court having made such a rule may abrogate it, and thus a contract for the reconstruction of a highway awarded in violation of the rule is not illegal. Hanlon v. Cleary, 133 S. W. 953, 954, 142 Ky. 46.

RULE ABSOLUTE FOR NEW TRIAL

In the Pennsylvania practice, the docket entry, "rule absolute for new trial," implies all that is meant by the words, "judgment vacated, verdict set aside, and new trial granted." Evans v. Freeman, 140 Fed. 419, 423 (citing Fisher v. Hestonville, M. & F. Pass. Ry. Co., 40 Atl. 97, 185 Pa. 602).

RULE IN SHELLEY'S CASE

Issue as within rule, see Issue (Descendants).

The "rule in Shelley's Case" is that, where the ancestor takes an estate of freehold by gift or conveyance and in the same gift or conveyance an estate is limited either mediately or immediately to his heirs, in fee or in tail, the word "heirs" is a word of limitation of the estate and not a word of purchase. Waller v. Pollitt, 64 Atl. 1040, 1041, 104 Md. 172; Johnson v. Buck, 77 N. E. 163-165, 220 Ill. 226 (citing Baker v. Scott, 62 Ill. 86).

"The rule in Shelley's Case is that, if an estate for life, or any other particular estate of freehold, be given to one with remainder to his heirs, the first taker shall be held to have the fee, and the heirs will take by descent, and not by purchase." Lacy v. Floyd (Tex.) 84 S. W. 857, 859 (quoting and adopting Tied. Real Prop., § 433).

The rule in Shelley's Case is as follows: "When a person takes an estate of freehold legally or equitably under a deed, will, or other writing, and in the same instrument there is a limitation by way of remainder, either with or without the interposition of another estate, of an interest of the same legal or equitable quality, to his heirs or heirs of his body, as a class of persons to take in succession, from generation to generation, the limitations to the heirs entitles the ancestor to the whole estate." Hubbard v. Goin, 137 Fed. 822, 826, 70 C. C. A. 320 (citing 4 Kent's Com. 225).

The "rule in the Shelley Case" is this: "When the ancestor, by any gift or conveyance, taketh an estate of freehold, and in the same gift or conveyance an estate is limited, either mediately or immediately, to his heirs in fee or in tail, 'the heirs' are words of limitation of the estate, and not words of purchase, and the ancestor takes the same in fee or in tail as the case may be." Under a will devising certain real estate to testator's son in fee simple, and a codicil revoking the gift and providing that the property should vest in the son for life, and, at his death, the remainder in fee simple should vest in his heirs, the son took an estate in fee simple. Lee v. Lee, 91 N. E. 507, 508, 45 Ind. App. 645.

The "rule in Shelley's Case" is that where the ancestor takes a freehold estate, and in the same gift or conveyance an estate is limited, either mediately or immediately, to his heirs, either in fee or in tail, the word "heirs" is a word of limitation and not of purchase; but the rule is not applicable unless the estate limited to the ancestor is of the same quality as that limited to the heirs; it being necessary that both estates be either legal or equitable. The "rule in Shelley's Case" is a rule of law and not of construction, and must control, though against testator's manifest intent, unless the word "heirs" is shown not to have been employed in its strict legal sense. While, strictly speaking, there are no equitable remainders, in determining whether an estate limited to heirs upon an equitable life estate is also equitable, so that the rule in Shelley's Case will apply, future equitable interests are usually treated as if they were remainders; the application of the rule being the same whether they are considered equitable remainders or trusts. Lord v. Comstock, 88 N. E. 1012, 1013, 1015, 240 Ill. 492 (citing Baker v. Scott, 62 Ill. 86; Brislain v. Wilson, 63 Ill. 173; Butler v. Huestis, 68 Ill. 594, 18 Am. Rep. 589; Wicker v. Ray, 8 N. E. 835, 118 Ill. 472; Carpenter v. Van Olinder, 19 N. E. 868, 127 Ill. 42, 2 L. R. A. 455, 11 Am. St. Rep. 92; Pease v. Davis, 80 N. E. 249, 225 Ill. 408; McFall v. Kirkpatrick, 86 N. E. 139, 236 Ill. 281; Ward v. Butler, 88 N. E. 189, 239 Ill. 462, 29 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1942; Kales, Future Int. c. 3; Glover v. Condell, 45 N. E. 173, 163 Ill. 566, 35 L. R. A. 360).

To bring a will within the "rule in Shelley's Case," the limitations to heirs must be by way of remainder; and it does not apply to a devise to one and his heirs, or the heirs of his body. Sagers v. Sagers (Iowa) 138 N. W. 911, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 562.

The "rule in Shelley's Case" will not be applied to the construction of a devise to a devisee for life, remainder to his heirs, where from the language of the will testator's intention to give the devisee a life estate only fairly appeared. Westcott v. Meeker, 122 N. W. 964, 966, 144 Iowa, 311, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 947.

Where a freehold estate is, either jointly, severally, or successively, given to two persons who are capable of having a common heir, with remainder to their heirs, the "rule in Shelley's Case" operates, and such persons take a joint inheritance in fee. Walker v. Taylor, 56 S. E. 877, 878, 144 N. C. 175 (citing 1 Prost. Estates, 315; McFeely v. Moore, 5 Ohio, 464, 24 Am. Dec. 314; King v. Beck, 12 Ohio, 390).

"Under that rule, if in any instrument an estate for life is given to the first taker and the remainder is limited either mediately or immediately to his heirs, the first taker takes the whole estate; if the limitation is to the heirs of his body he takes a fee tail; if to his heirs, a fee simple." The rule is an inflexible rule of property and is not intended to effectuate the intention of the parties. Where land was conveyed to a trustee to collect rents and pay them to the beneficiary during her life, and to convey to her appointee by will, or, in default of an appointment, the land to go to her heirs, the limitation to her heirs was of the same kind and quality as the life estate to her, and under the "rule in Shelley's Case" she took an equitable fee. McFall v. Kirkpatrick, 86 N. E. 139, 143, 147, 236 Ill. 281 (citing and adopting Baker v. Scott, 62 Ill. 86; Brislain v. Wilson, 63 Ill. 173; Kales, Future Int. § 133).

A deed to one, his heirs and assigns, of certain land, with a provision in the granting clause, "This deed is only to remain in full force and effect during the lifetime of [the grantor], and at her death it goes back to her heirs," does not convey a fee-simple title to the grantee, under the "rule in Shelley's Case," but conveys only an estate for the life of the grantor. Smith v. Tucker, 95 N. E. 45, 47, 250 Ill. 50.

The "rule in Shelley's Case" is in force in Illinois as a rule of property, and its applicability to a given case does not turn on the quantity of the estate intended to be given to the ancestor, but upon the nature of the estate intended to be given to the heirs. Under a will by which testator devised to his wife all of his real estate during her life, and "on the death of my wife I direct that her heirs have in fee simple, the undivided half of said real estate and my brother * * * the other undivided half thereof, to him and his heirs forever," the portion of the estate which was not devised to the testator's brother falls within the rule in Shelley's Case, and testator's wife took the fee to the undivided half of the property, and the brother took the fee to the other half, subject to the wife's life estate. Ward v. Butler, 88 N. E. 189, 190, 239 Ill. 462, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 942.

Under the "rule in Shelley's Case," if an estate of inheritance be given to the ancestor, and a remainder be thereon limited to his heirs, or to the heirs of his body, such remainder is immediately executed in possession in the ancestor, so that the ancestor takes the whole estate in fee simple if the limitation be to heirs general, and in fee conditional if the limitation be to the heirs of the body. Clark v. Neves, 57 S. E. 614, 615, 76 S. C. 484, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 298 (citing Austin v. Payne [S. C.] 8 Rich. Eq. 10; Williams v. Foster [S. C.] 3 Hill, 193).

The word "children" in a will does not ordinarily mean "heirs," or "heirs of his body," so as to bring the devise under the operation of the "rule in Shelley's Case," unless the context of the will leaves no doubt of such intention. The word "heirs" is a word of limitation, and not of purchase; and, when used in a will, its legal intentment is to designate a class of persons who are to take in succession, from generation to generation, and the law effectuates this purpose by declaring a fee to pass to the first taker, or, as it is sometimes expressed, by giving a life estate to the first taker and a limitation in fee to himself. The words "sons," "daughters," "child," and "children" are not technical, legal terms to which a fixed and determined meaning must be given regardless of the sense in which they are employed; but they are flexible and subject to construction, to give effect to the intention of the testator. The "rule in Shelley's Case" often defeats the clearly expressed intention of the testator. In a devise to one for and during his natural life with remainder to his heirs in fee, the inexorable rule of the common law, from which our courts cannot escape without legislative aid, requires them to set at naught the clearly expressed intention and decide that the testator gave a fee-simple title to the first taker, although he expressly limited it to a life estate by apt words. When, however, the testator has used other words, such as "child" or "children," the rule in Shelley's Case has no application, and the court is left free to adopt a construction which will carry into effect the intention of the testator. It is true the intention, when discovered, may lead to the same result as is reached under the rule in Shelley's Case where the word "heirs" is used, but, if this be so, it is because the intention is carried out by adopting such construction. It will never be so construed to defeat the intention, as may follow from the rigor of the rule in Shelley's Case. Connor v. Gardner, 82 N. E. 640, 644, 230 Ill. 258, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 73 (citing Kales, Future Int. § 129; Schaefer v. Schaefer, 31 N. E. 136, 141 Ill. 337; Strawbridge v. Strawbridge, 77 N. E. 78, 220 Ill. 61, 4 L. R. A. [N. S.] 948, 110 Am. St. Rep. 226).

RULE OF CREDITS

Rev. St. § 5544, declares that the preceding section, providing the commutation to which federal convicts may be entitled for good conduct, shall apply to such prisoners only as are confined in jails or penitentiaries where no credits for good behavior are allowed; but in other cases all prisoners confined in jails or penitentiaries of any state for offenses against the United States shall be entitled to the same "rule of credits" for good behavior applicable to other prisoners in the same jail or penitentiary. Held, that Act Pa. 1901, allowing a specified commutation but making such allowance conditional on the act of the Governor of the state, approved by the board of inspectors or managers of Pennsylvania penitentiaries, did not prescribe a "rule of credits," but rather a commutation of sentence to be exercised at the discretion of state officers, and was therefore not applicable to federal prisoners. United States ex rel. Seiple v. Byers, 127 Fed. 993, 995.

RULE OF LAW

RULE OF PROPERTY

The term "rules of property," as used in the rule that courts of the United States adopt and follow the decisions of the highest court of a state where a course of those decisions, whether founded on statutes or not, have become "rules of property" within the state, mean those rules governing the descent, transfer, or sale of property, and the rules which affect the title and possession thereto. Kuhn v. Fairmont Coal Co., 152 Fed. 1013, 1015 (citing Bucher v. Cheshire R. Co., 8 Sup. Ct. 974, 125 U. S. 555, 31 L. Ed. 795; Hinde v. Vattier, 5 Pet. 398, 8 L. Ed. 168; Van Rensselaer v. Kearney, 11 How. 297, 13 L. Ed. 703; Christy v. Pridgeon, 4 Wall. 196, 18 L. Ed. 322; Williamson v. Suy- dam, 6 Wall. 723, 18 L. Ed. 967; Williams v. Kirtland, 13 Wall. 306, 20 L. Ed. 683; Walker v. State Harbor, 17 Wall. 648, 21 L. Ed. 744; Townsend v. Todd, 91 U. S. 452, 23 L. Ed. 413; United States v. Fox, 94 U. S. 315, 24 L. Ed. 192; Barrett v. Holmes, 102 U. S. 655, 26 L. Ed. 291; Peters v. Bain, 10 Sup. Ct. 354, 133 U. S. 670, 33 L. Ed. 696; Randolph v. Quidnick Co., 10 Sup. Ct. 655, 135 U. S. 457, 34 L. Ed. 200; De Vaughn v. Hutchinson, 17 Sup. Ct. 461, 165 U. S. 566, 41 L. Ed. 827; Madisonville Traction Co. v. St. Bernard Mining Co., 25 Sup. Ct. 251, 196 U. S. 239, 49 L. Ed. 462).

A decision involving a part of a tract of land dedicated to a city for a public landing establishes a "rule of property" with respect to another part of the tract, which must be adhered to, regardless of the merits of the original controversy. A decision adjudging that a city was the owner of property dedicated to it, and had the right to make any disposition of it authorized by its charter, though made in a suit not involving a diversion of the land to a private purpose, is a "rule of property" with respect to the rights of the city in the land. Union R. Co. v. Chickasaw Cooperage Co., 95 S. W. 171, 177, 116 Tenn. 594 (citing Wilkins v. Railroad, 75 S. W. 1026, 110 Tenn. 442).

RULES AND REGULATIONS

The words "rules and regulations," as used in Civ. Code 1895, § 4527, providing that an attachment may issue against a corporation not incorporated by the laws of the state, but transacting business therein, under the same rules and regulations as are prescribed for issuing attachments in other cases, refer to the manner of issuing attachments, and not to the grounds upon which they may issue. Parramore v. Alexander, 64 S. E. 660, 661, 132 Ga. 642.

"Rules and regulations," as the term is employed in Act March 23, 1906 (Laws 1906, p. 466, c. 137), regulating the racing of running horses, etc., and providing (section 3) that the state racing commission established by the act should have the power to prescribe rules, regulations, and conditions under which running races shall be conducted, and that no races shall be conducted except by a corporation or association duly licensed by it, implies uniformity, publicity, and the establishment of standards by which applicants or licensees may know in advance upon what conditions the license may be granted, or will be withheld or revoked. A rule must necessarily be of general application, and a regulation must apply impartially. State Racing Commission v. Latonia Agricultural Ass'n, 123 S. W. 681, 685, 136 Ky. 173, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 905.

Article 4, § 3, of the federal Constitution, which provides that "Congress shall have the power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States," conferred ample authority on Congress to enact the legislation authorizing the establishing of forest reserves on the public lands and the making of rules and regulations by the Secretary of the Interior "to insure the objects of such reservations," and the rules and regulations so made as contained in the compilation of October 3, 1903, relating to the grazing of stock on such reserves, are within the authority so conferred, and reasonable and valid. United States v. Shannon, 151 Fed. 863, 866.

RULES OF CONSTRUCTION

There is a difference between rules governing the interpretation of wills and rules governing their construction, and rules of construction are local in origin and operation, while rules of interpretation are universal, and there can be no judicial construction of a will in a doubtful case until the interpretation of the meaning of the words thereof is ascertained as a matter of fact. In re United States Trust Co. of New York, 138 N. Y. Supp. 150, 158, 78 Misc. Rep. 227.

RULING

The word "rulings," in Rev. Laws, c. 112, § 100, conferring on the Supreme Judicial Court jurisdiction in equity to compel the observance of laws governing street railway companies and regulations made in accordance with the law of the board of railroad commissioners, etc., and to review, annul, or amend the "rulings" of any state board or commission relative to street railways, when considered in its ordinary meaning and in connection with the fact that the commissioners appointed pursuant to Resolves 1896, p. 637, c. 87, providing for the appointment of commissioners to consolidate the public statutes and to suggest mistakes, omissions, inconsistencies, etc., took the section from St. 1898, p. 748, c. 578, § 25, omitting therefrom the words "of law" after the word "rulings," and, when considered in connection with the fact that a great variety of matters affecting street railways are left to state boards and commissions, means rulings of law and excludes findings on questions of fact. Paine v. Newton St. Ry. Co., 77 N. E. 1026, 192 Mass. 90.

"Where issues of fact are submitted to the Circuit Court, and the finding is general, nothing is open to review, except the rulings of the Circuit Court in the progress of the trial, and the phrase 'rulings of the court in the progress of the trial' does not include the general finding of the Circuit Court nor the conclusions of the Circuit Court embodied in such general finding." Keeley v. Ophir Hill Consol. Mining Co., 169 Fed. 598, 600, 95 O. C. A. 96 (quoting and adopting definition in Cooper v. Omohundro, 19 Wall. 65, 22 L. Ed. 47).

In a city ordinance authorizing a street railroad company to operate its lines in certain streets and providing that if the city thereafter pave any street along which the railroad "may run" the company shall pave the space between the rails, the words "may run" mean streets whereon the track of the railroad company shall have been constructed, not streets whereon the company has the right or license to operate its road, but of which right or license it has not availed itself. Harris v. City of Macomb, 72 N. E. 762, 763, 213 Ill. 47.

RUN AHEAD

The direction "run ahead of third class trains" means to pass around such trains at sidings going in the same direction. Cogbill v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 44 South. 683, 684, 152 Ala. 154.

RUN UPON EITHER SIDE

The exception in Rev. St. § 4786, providing that "extra taxes, when levied as hereinbefore provided, shall be on real and personal property within one mile on each side of the free turnpike road, except where any road improvement of free turnpike road, or any toll road, or unimproved state or county road, being unconnected with the same, 'runs upon either side' of such proposed road, within less than two miles, then the extra taxes shall only be levied upon such lands and personal property as lie within one-half the distance of such roads," applies only to roads of the specified kinds, which, being unconnected with the proposed free turnpike, run along such proposed free turnpike on either side within less than two miles, and in the same general direction as, or approximately parallel with, the proposed road. Neither a road which crosses a proposed free turnpike, and which does not run approximately parallel with such turnpike on either side; nor a road terminating or beginning at a point within less than two miles of a proposed free turnpike, and unconnected with such proposed free turnpike, is such a road as is contemplated in the exception provided for in the section; and, when the boundaries of the free turnpike district have been limited to one-half the distance of such road or roads, such district is illegal, and the construction of such free turnpike with such boundaries will be enjoined. Cornell v. Franklin County Com'rs, 65 N. E. 998, 87 Ohio St. 335.

RUNNING

The word "running," as used in Civ. Code 1895, § 2321, creating a presumption of negligence against a railroad company where damage is done by the running of its locomotives, cars, or machinery, does not refer so much to actual motion as it does to the general operation of its locomotives, cars, or machinery. Smith v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 62 S. E. 1020, 1021, 5 Ga. App. 219.

Where a trainman is injured while he is endeavoring to fasten with chains two detached portions of the train which have become separated by the pulling out of a drawhead of one of the cars, by the front part of the train being moved back upon him, the injury is caused by the "running of the train" within the meaning of Civ. Code 1895, § 2321. Southern Ry. Co. v. Holbrook, 53 S. E. 203, 204, 124 Ga. 679.

If a car containing passengers is stopped while in transit, and the passengers are directed by the conductor to change to another car, which is on a track parallel to the first, and if, while they are so doing, the employes of the company put out the lights of the first car, and cause it to jerk suddenly, resulting in injury to a passenger who is in the act of making the change, this would be an "injury resulting from the running of the cars" of the company, within the meaning of the statute, and would also be a "damage done by a person in the employment and service of the company," so as to raise the statutory presumption of negligence against it. Georgia Ry. & Electric Co. v. Reeves, 51 S. E. 610, 611, 123 Ga. 697.

Where a train pulls up to a station and stops and a passenger in alighting is injured because the step of the car is broken or wanting, technically speaking, the train is not "running" in the sense of being in actual motion at the instant when a passenger is alighting. But he is injured by the running of the train in the sense that it is being operated, and that as a part of such operation the company must allow passengers proper opportunities for alighting. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co. v. Bishop, 63 S. E. 1103, 1107, 132 Ga. 71.

RUNNING ACCOUNT

The term "running account," when used in a statute of limitations, means an open, mutual account. Brock v. Wildey, 54 S. E. 195, 125 Ga. 82.

RUNNING AT LARGE

See At Large.

RUNNING, CONDUCTING, OR MANAGING

An assistant station agent passing, by means of a hoop, an order from a dispatcher to a brakeman on a moving train passing the station, pertaining to the movement of the train, is not "running, conducting, or managing a train" within Rev. St. 1909, § 5425, and, where he delivered such order, his negligence in directing a servant under him to run by the side of the train to receive the hoop is not within the statute. Gray v. Wabash R. Co., 137 S. W. 324, 326, 157 Mo. App. 92.

Rev. St. 1899, § 2864, as amended by Laws 1905, p. 135, making a railroad liable for the death of an employe occasioned by the negligence of another employe, while "running, conducting, or managing any locomotive, car, or train of cars," etc., covers the operation of cars at terminal yards, and the death of an employe of a railroad engaged as a brakeman on a loaded coal car while being shunted from main switch track in a terminal yard to a side track, caused by the negligence of fellow servants in the moving of cars and the giving of signals, resulted from the negligence of an employe within the statute. Pratt v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 122 S. W. 1125, 1127, 139 Mo. App. 502.

Rev. St. 1909, § 5425, authorizing an action for the death of an employe caused by the negligence of a coemploye while running, conducting, or managing any locomotive, car, or train, etc., covers all cases where an employe is killed by the negligent act in moving cars of any character used on railroad tracks, regardless of the power propelling the cars, and loading a car with freight and moving the car down a track by means of bars, to facilitate the loading thereof, are within the statute, and, where an employe was killed in consequence of the negligence of coemployes loading and moving a car, the railroad company was liable. Where a car load of telegraph poles fell on a car repairer of the carrier, if no effort was being made to move the car, a right of action did not accrue under Rev. St. 1909, § 5425, authorizing an action for the death of an employe caused by the negligence of a coemploye while running, conducting, or managing any car or train. Peters v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 131 S. W. 917, 919, 150 Mo. App. 721.

RUNNING FOOT

The term "running foot" as used in a street-paving contract, based on a petition of property owners for the improvement of a street, which should not cost the owners more than a specified amount "per running foot," meant "per running foot of property front" and not "per running foot of street." Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Howcott, 33 South. 734, 109 La. 692.

RUNNING FRONT FOOT

What is meant by the expression "running front foot" is the aggregate frontage on both sides of the street. Klein v. Nugent Gravel Co. (Ind.) 66 N. E. 486, 489.

RUNNING POLICY

Where, in a policy of insurance, the nature of the property to be covered and the risk to be assumed are certain, but other prescribed conditions must be observed before it attaches to specific property, the policy is known as a "running policy." Banco de Sonora v. Bankers' Mut. Casualty Co. (Iowa) 95 N. W. 232, 233.

RUNNING REPAIRS

Act May 1, 1905, to provide for the protection of mechanics, etc., employed in the construction and repair of railway equipment, makes it unlawful for a railroad company or corporation, or other persons who own, control, or operate any lines of railroad in the state, to build or repair railroad equipment without first maintaining at every division point a building or shed over the repair tracks where such work is permanently done, so as to provide that all men permanently employed in the construction and repair of railroad equipment shall be under shelter during inclement weather. Held, that the phrase, "where such work is permanently done," means where constantly done, and the phrase "permanently employed" means regularly employed, and the act applies to repair tracks where the "running repairs" were made consisting of the substitution of new for broken parts on cars and supplying missing parts so as to keep the cars in transit. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. State, 112 S. W. 150, 151, 86 Ark. 518.

RUNNING STREAM

The common-law rule against obstructing running streams to the injury of adjacent lands applies in Arizona to well-defined arroyos or natural channels through which surface or flood waters flow. Kroeger v. Twin Buttes R. Co., 114 Pac. 553, 555, 13 Ariz. 348, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1229.

Water which overflows the banks of a river, and then flows down a natural depression in the same general direction as the river runs, and which returns to the river upon the subsidence of the flood, is to be deemed a part of the running stream. Riddle v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 128 Pac. 195, 198, 88 Kan. 248.

Where a lake with its tributaries and outlet during the rainy season constituted a "running stream" of water, it was properly designated as a "running stream" subject to appropriations for irrigation, though it was not shown that it continued to flow to the sea or to a junction with some other stream. Duckworth v. Watsonville Water & Light Co., 89 Pac. 338, 342, 150 Cal. 520.

RUNNING SWITCH

Making a "running switch" on a railroad consists in "kicking" or "shunting" cars forward in breaking or making up a train, by moving them forward at a rapid speed, detached from the engine or a portion of the train. Vance v. Ravenswood, S. & G. R. Co., 44 S. E. 461, 463, 53 W. Va. 338.

"A 'running' or 'flying switch' is performed by attaching the cars to be thrown upon the other track to the engine. The train is then put in motion, running toward the switch, and before it is reached, and when sufficient momentum to answer the purpose has been acquired, the engine is detached, passes on the main track, and, after passing, the switch is changed, and the cars thus detached, by the momentum thus acquired, are carried along the side track to the point intended." Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Baches, 55 Ill. 379, 383, 384.

The method of switching known as making a "running" or "flying" switch consists in detaching the portion of the train to be switched off while the cars are in motion, the forepart of the train advancing with increased speed, while the rear portion, proceeding more slowly, is, at the proper time, switched off upon the desired track; or the engine may push forward a car or part of a train with considerable speed, and then, giving it a strong propulsion, send it off alone on the desired switch. This practice in many courts is condemned as negligent, even towards trespassers, and when the cars are suffered to run over a crossing, after being detached from the train, in making a flying switch, whereby travelers are injured, it is held negligence of an aggravated nature, and the practice is not unfrequently sharply denounced by the courts. Lacey v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 152 Fed. 134, 137, 81 C. C. A. 352 (citing Beach, Contrib. Neg. [3d Ed.] § 217).

RUNNING THE SHORE

The words "running the shore," as used in a description in a deed, "Beginning at a spruce tree on the shore near the head of G.'s cove so called and running across the point to the shore then southeasterly and northwardly running the shore to the point of beginning with all the privileges thereto," means running by the shore, and the flats are excluded. Whitmore v. Brown, 61 Atl. 985, 988, 100 Me. 410.

RUNNING WATER

Water flowing from artesian wells on the public domain is subject to appropriation for irrigation purposes under Civ. Code, § 1410, providing that the right to the use of "running water" flowing in a river or stream or down a canyon or ravine may be acquired by appropriation. De Wolfskill v. Smith, 89 Pac. 1001, 1003, 5 Cal. App. 175.

RUNNING WITH LAND

See Covenant Running With the Land.

RURAL

RURAL HOMESTEAD

Under Const. art 16, § 51, providing that a rural homestead may be one or more parcels, but that it shall be used for a home, or as a place to exercise the calling or business of the head of the family, to constitute rural land a "homestead" it must be used for some one purpose of a home, either by cultivating it, using it directly for raising family supplies, or for cutting firewood and the like. Autry v. Reasor, 113 S. W. 748, 102 Tex. 123.

RURAL MAIL CARRIER

As officer, see Officer.

RURAL REAL ESTATE

The distinction between urban property and rural property is well understood. Urban real estate is that situated in a city or a town resembling a city, while "rural real estate" is that located in the country, in an agricultural district. This distinction was recognized by the common law and is recognized by the Constitution and the decisions. Laws 1901, p. 31, c. 31, relative to the effect of a tenant of urban real estate holding over, is therefore not invalid as special legislation; this classification being proper. Stees v. Bergmeyer, 98 N. W. 648, 650, 91 Minn. 513.

RUSTIC

The word "rustic," as used in an instruction defining "vulgar" as meaning mean, rustic, rude, low, and unrefined, means, among other things, unadorned, awkward, and pertaining to the country, rural. Raley v. State, 105 S. W. 342, 344, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 426.

RYE WHISKY

See Pure Rye Whisky.

S

S. E. 4

The abbreviation "S. E. 4," employed in the description of the property conveyed by a tax deed, will be interpreted as meaning "southeast quarter," when it is explicitly used in another part of the same instrument as the equivalent of these words. Kennedy v. Scott, 83 Pac. 971, 72 Kan. 359.

SE QR 24

In a description of property contained in a list of delinquent real property attached to a notice of tax sale describing it as "se qr 24," the number 24 being in a column headed "sec," the letters "se" clearly meant southeast, and the description given properly described the southeast quarter of section 24. Bandow v. Wolven, 107 N. W. 204, 206, 20 S. D. 445.

S. L. C.

The letters "S. L. C." in a contract of shipment indicate that the shipment is made on the shipper's load and account. Nairn v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co., 106 S. W. 102, 126 Mo. App. 707.

SS.

There is no peculiar virtue in the cabalistic character "ss," which is presumed to have been anciently symbolical of something, but nobody knows precisely what, and hence a complaint is not insufficient because the charging part is not preceded by the words, "State of Nebraska, Otoe County—ss." Seay v. Shrader, 95 N. W. 690, 691, 69 Neb. 235.

SABBATH

See, also, Sunday.

The "Sabbath" is a day of rest and worship, generally recognized as such. State v. Duncan, 43 South. 283, 284, 118 La. 702, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 791, 11 Ann. Cas. 557.

By common usage the terms "Sabbath" and "Sunday" are used indiscriminately to denote the Christian Sabbath; that is, Sunday. "Sabbath day" is synonymous with "Sunday." Town of Winnfield v. Grigsby, 53 South. 53, 54, 126 La. 929 (quoting 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6281).

SACK

"By * * * 'sacks' we understand those encasements which are not usually of permanent value, and such as are ordinarily used for the convenient transportation of their contents." United States v. Nicholls, 22 Sup. Ct. 918, 186 U. S. 298, 300, 46 L. Ed. 1173.

SACK RAFT

A federal court cannot take judicial notice of what constitutes a "sack raft," and that a particular raft is such a raft and unlawful, where the testimony shows that there is no such thing as a sack raft commonly known within its jurisdiction, there being no law of the United States or of the state describing such a raft. In this case witnesses described "sack rafts" as being round, or nearly so, in shape, the outside or boom logs fastened together at their ends with chains or ropes in a loose manner, with considerable slack, and inclosed in these boom logs are loose logs, put in without regard to position or order, with no binders of any sort, so that when the towline is made fast, and the towboat begins to pull on it, the raft becomes more or less elongated, and takes somewhat the shape of a sack or bag. The Mary, 123 Fed. 609, 611, 613.

SADISM

"Sadism" is a mental disease in which the sexual instinct is abnormal or perverted. State v. Petty, 108 Pac. 934, 936, 32 Nev. 384, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 223.

See Fireproof Safe; Iron-Safe Clause; Not Safe; Reasonably Safe; Unsafe.

A brick structure entirely open on one side cannot be a vault or "safe," within the meaning of an ordinance regulating the storage of dangerous explosives. Smith v. Mine & Smelter Supply Co., 88 Pac. 683, 685, 32 Utah, 21.

An instruction, in the language of Kirby's Dig. § 6044, defining a railroad company's duty to maintain stock guards is not objectionable because it uses the words "good" and "sufficient," while the statute uses the words "suitable" and "safe"; the words being substantially the same. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. v. Greer, 119 S. W. 1121, 1123, 90 Ark. 531.

SAFE AND DECENT ACCESS

The phrase "safe and decent access," within the rule requiring public service corporations to afford to all such persons as have occasion to transact with them business of the nature they are holding themselves out as being accustomed to do "safe and decent access" to the places opened up for the transaction of such business, is not limited to mere physical safety and the absence of obscenity, but the employment of the expression "safe and decent access" is intended to connote also the notion of freedom from abuse, humiliation, insult, and other unbecoming and disrespectful treatment. A member of the public is not to be deterred from transacting or offering to transact the business which the law compels a telegraph company to accept impartially from every person by reason of the fact that he cannot enter the public office without being subjected to insult and personal affront. A violation of this duty has occurred whenever a person entering the telegraph office has been met with disrespectful treatment at the hands of the company's agent. It is immaterial that the person thus injured had no interest in the message or that he was the mere agent of another; there being no requirement that one desiring to transact business with public utility corporations shall do so in person. Dunn v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 59 S. E. 189, 191, 2 Ga. App. 845.

SAFE AND SUFFICIENT

The term "safe and sufficient," when applied to a spark arresting device, is relative. A complaint, alleging that defendant operated a railroad through a village between wooden buildings in close proximity to the track and on a day when a strong wind was blowing and when it was unusually dry, carelessly and negligently failed to use safe and sufficient spark arresters to prevent the emission of sparks, and negligently ran a locomotive under such a high and unnecessary head of steam that it threw out unusually large and dangerous sparks which set fire to and burned plaintiff's barn, sufficiently alleged negligence. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. McFall, 76 N. E. 400, 402, 165 Ind. 574.

SAFE AND SUITABLE APPLIANCE

In an action by a servant for personal injuries "safe and suitable" appliances mean reasonably safe and suitable, and, when used in the charge, do not require the master to furnish absolutely safe appliances, and in this sense the word "suitable," is used as meaning "safe or not defective." Davis v. Northwestern R. Co., 55 S. E. 526, 528, 75 S. C. 303.

SAFE APPLIANCE

See, also, Safe Place to Work.

In an action by a servant for personal injuries, alleged to have been caused by a defective fastening in a handhold on a freight car, the trial court charged the jury that, while plaintiff assumed all the risks ordinarily incident to his employment, such assumption of risk did not begin until defendant had used ordinary care to securely fasten and maintain in safe condition the handholds on its cars. The defendant objected to this instruction, on the ground that it imposed on it the duty to exercise ordinary care to securely fasten and maintain in safe condition the appliance in question. The appellate court, in passing on the correctness of the instruction, said: "As a matter of strict law the charge is not accurate. From the inception of his employment the plaintiff assumed the risks ordinarily incident to the service. The risk superadded by the negligence of the master did not form a part of these, unless brought to his knowledge. Applying this principle to the issue in this case, we have this result. The risks ordinarily incident to the use of the lag screw fastening plaintiff assumed, for he knew that many cars thus equipped were handled by appellant. He also assumed the risk of such defects in the appliances as would not have been disclosed to the company by an inspection conducted with ordinary care. This latter risk he assumed in any event; for, if the company had not inspected the car at all, yet, if the defect which caused the accident would not have been discovered by a proper inspection, it fell in the category of assumed risks." The court said, further, in regard to the safety of the appliance used, that it seemed to appear beyond controversy that the lag screw fastening was a safe appliance, when properly attached to sound wood, and that it might be that the ideal is absolute safety, and that ordinary care should be exercised to its attainment, but that, if an ordinarily prudent person should assume the task of exercising ordinary care to furnish a safe appliance for the use of his employes, construing the word "safe" in its absolute sense, he would direct his efforts toward the production of such an appliance as would be safe, however carelessly or unskillfully used, a standard which has nowhere been set for the master; but there was much force in the suggestion of the appellee that the words were not to be taken in their absolute sense, unless attended by a word which carries that meaning. Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Perry, 82 S. W. 343, 345, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 414.

SAFE CRACKER

The term "safe cracker," as used in the title of Act Feb. 19, 1904, 24 St. at Large, p. 396, entitled "An act to provide punishment for safe crackers," has a broader meaning than one who cracks or attempts to crack a safe by the use of an explosive and may cover persons who break or attempt to break into safes through other instrumentalities. It is not essential to constitute a safe cracker that he shall be successful in his attempt to break open a safe, for one may fairly be declared to be a safe cracker who uses explosives in an attempt to break open a safe used for keeping valuables with intent to commit a larceny. Therefore a provision in the act that any person convicted of using any explosive in and about a safe with intent to commit larceny or other crime shall be deemed guilty of a felony did not render the act unconstitutional as embodying a subject not expressed in the title. State v. O'Day, 54 S. E. 607, 608, 74 S. C. 448.

SAFE DEPOSIT COMPANY

For the purpose of the gross receipts tax law (Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 81, § 164), the term "safe deposit company" may be given its accepted and ordinary meaning by holding to be appropriate to such company all kinds of business which fairly fall within the powers usually found in the charters of safe deposit companies or currently conducted by them. State v. Central Trust Co., 67 Atl. 267, 270, 106 Md. 268.

SAFE DEPOSIT VAULT

As warehouse, see Warehouseman.

SAFE HIGHWAY

The term "safe," as applied to public highways, is used in a relative sense, and one driving across a railway, the approaches to which were defectively constructed, was not negligent as a matter of law in attempting to cross, though he knew it to be unsafe for one to ride in a wagon loaded as his was and knew that the only way in which he could safely go over the crossing was to leave the wagon and walk on the ground, where he had encountered such crossing frequently before and by the observance of precautions had always safely avoided danger by driving and riding in his wagon, and on the occasion in question lightened his load by causing his family to get out, set the brakes, and locked the wheels of his wagon, and stood up the better to manage and guide his team down the embankment. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. Leachman, 69 N. E. 253, 255, 161 Ind. 512.

SAFE MEANS

The words "safe means," in an instruction in an action for injuries to a female passenger as she was alighting from a train that it was the carrier's duty to exercise great care in providing "safe means" for passengers to alight, and that if it negligently failed to provide "safe means," and by reason thereof the passenger was injured, she was entitled to recover, did not alone refer to the carrier's failure to provide a step for the plaintiff to alight as alleged, of which there was no proof, but was also applicable to the alleged negligence of the carrier's porter in jerking her from the train while assisting her to alight. Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Beezley, 101 S. W. 1051, 1052, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 108.

SAFE PLACE TO WORK

Reasonably safe place to work, see Reasonably Safe.

See, also, Place.

The word "safe," as applied to the master's duty to provide a safe place to work, must be understood to be used in the sense of "safe" according to the usage, custom, and risk of the business in which the employé is engaged. An employer cannot be convicted of negligence in not providing a safe place to work, where from the very nature of the employment the risks and dangers are as apparent to the employé as to the employer. Welch v. Carlucci Stone Co., 64 Atl. 392, 394, 215 Pa. 34, 7 Ann. Cas. 299.

"Safe place to work," used with reference to the rule as to the master's duty to furnish the servant with a reasonably safe place to work, is a relative term, as to which the word "reasonably" is important; and the safety of the place is to be judged by the nature of the work, and, if this is necessarily not safe, the master can only furnish a place as safe as reasonably practicable, considering the service to be performed. Saversnick v. Schwarzschild & Sulzberger, 125 S. W. 1192, 1193, 141 Mo. App. 509.

The place in which a servant is directed to work is safe, when all the safeguards and precautions which ordinary experience, prudence, and foresight will suggest have been taken to prevent injury to the servant while exercising reasonable care; and a place which is safe so long as machinery is not in operation, and the peril involved is in the improper method of performing the work by improperly starting the machinery, is safe within the law. Peterson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 128 N. W. 932, 933, 149 Iowa, 496, 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 766.

The word "safe," as used in the rule requiring reasonable safety as to place to work and tools furnished a servant, means reasonable safety according to the usages, risks, and dangers of the employment. An employer is only required to furnish a reasonably "safe" place in which to work and reasonably safe tools, and it is reversible error to charge that, if there is any neglect of the employer in furnishing "a safe place to work or in furnishing safe tools," the employer is liable. Powell v. American Sheet & Tin Plate Co., 65 Atl. 1113, 1114, 216 Pa. 618.

The word "safe," as used in the statute requiring employers to furnish a reasonably safe place to work, does not mean a place so made and guarded as to exclude all possibility of danger. No amount of care, prudence, and foresight can produce or insure such a condition. Many employments are of themselves dangerous, and it involves no paradox to say that a place of danger may be safe in the proper sense of the word. It is safe when all the safeguards and precautions which ordinary experience, prudence, and foresight would suggest have been taken to prevent injury to the employé, while he is himself exercising reasonable care in the service which he undertakes to perform. Martin v. Des Moines Edison Light Co., 106 N. W. 359, 361, 131 Iowa, 724.

SAFE SPEED

An instruction, assuming that the operation of a train around a curve "at an unusually high rate of speed" was negligent, is erroneous, as a speed may be safe, though unusual. Flucks v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 122 S. W. 348, 143 Mo. App. 17.

SAFEGUARD

See Proper Safeguard.

SAFELY

Under the complaint in a shipper's action for damages for negligent carriage of live stock, which alleged that the cattle were not "safely" carried, and that they were damaged and injured by the negligence of the defendant, evidence was not limited to the manner in which the injury to the cattle was occasioned, but evidence as to the quality of the hay and water furnished by defendant was within the issues; the word "safely" having reference to the contractual relation between the shipper and the carrier, and not to the carrier's negligence. Heitman v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 123 Pac. 401, 403, 45 Mont. 406.

SAFELY AND SECURELY

An undertaking by a private person to carry goods "safely and securely" is no more than an undertaking to carry them without negligence, and does not amount to an insurance of the goods against losses by thieves or a taking by force. The authorities may be reconciled by the statement that when property is bailed for hire to one who is to do something with it for the bailor, such as transporting it, an agreement to do so is referred to the task to be performed and is held to mean no more than that skill and care will be devoted to that task; but when the bailee is not required to do anything with the property, yet binds himself to return it safely, the obligation is taken to be general and without exception, as no exception is named, and there is no particular undertaking in regard to the property to which the obligation to return in safety can be referred and confined. Where the defendant corporation, engaged in furniture moving, contracted to move plaintiff's furniture, etc., for a certain price, and its agent stated that defendant had previously safely moved furniture and bric-a-brac for others, was responsible, and would move plaintiff's furniture with care and deliver it safely, defendant did not thereby assume the responsibility of a common carrier, but was only liable, as a bailee for hire, for negligence of its servants. Jamnet v. American Storage & Moving Co., 84 S. W. 128, 131, 109 Mo. App. 257 (citing Hutch. Carr. [3d Ed.] § 40; Ames v. Belden [N. Y.] 17 Barb. 513; Stewart v. Stone, 127 N. Y. 500, 28 N. E. 595, 14 L. R. A. 215, distinguishing Foster v. Essex Bank, 17 Mass. 479, 9 Am. Dec. 168; Drake v. White, 117 Mass. 10; Harvey v. Murray, 136 Mass. 377).

SAFETY

See Insure Safety.

Acts Ex. Sess. 1907, p. 25, No. 23, requires state boards to deposit their funds in one of the chartered banks within their jurisdiction offering the highest rate of interest consistent with the safety of the funds, and requires the board to advertise and let the deposits. Held, that a distant bank cannot be excluded solely by reason of any supposed or real danger resulting from its distance, provided it is otherwise entitled to the contract, "safety," as used in the statute, meaning nothing more nor less than that the funds should be safely kept and faithfully and punctually accounted for. Louisiana State Board of Agriculture & Immigration, 48 South. 148, 149, 122 La. 677.

SAFETY APPLIANCES

The word "appliances," within Const. art. 4, § 29, requiring safety "appliances" in mines, includes all things which will secure safety; and the section applies to all physical conditions existing in a mine. Cook v. Big Muddy-Carterville Mining Co., 94 N. E. 90, 93, 249 Ill. 41.

SAFETY DEVICE

A bridge over railroad tracks when necessary to make a crossing safe for public use is a "safety device." State ex rel. City of Minneapolis v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co., 108 N. W. 261, 266, 98 Minn. 380, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 298, 120 Am. St. Rep. 581, 8 Ann. Cas. 1047.

SAID

See At Said Time.

Said court and judges thereof, see Court and Judges Thereof.

The word "said," when used in a document, refers to something that has been mentioned above in the document. Commonwealth v. Schweiters, 93 S. W. 592, 594, 122 Ky. 874.

Where an indictment sets out the name of a county, and charges defendant with having committed perjury in "said county," it refers to the county set out in the preceding part of the indictment. Moss v. State, 83 S. W. 829, 830, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 459, 11 Ann. Cas. 710.

Where the call in the deed is for a beginning corner "at the head of the ditch on the road," and "thence running with said ditch in an eastern direction to the branch," the language "thence running with said ditch" means, by construction of law, that ditch. Sherrod v. Battle, 70 S. E. 834, 836, 154 N. C. 345.

The words "said children," in a will whereby testator gave his residuary estate real and personal, to his sister in trust for the maintenance and education of "my said children" and appointing the sister trustee of the fund, to have and to hold the same as long as the trust might continue, refer to testator's two sole children theretofore named in the will, and their title is that of tenants in common. In re De Rycke's Will, 91 N. Y. Supp. 159, 161, 99 App. Div. 596.

Where a testator by the second clause of his will gave an undivided fourth of his property in trust for R., one of his four children, the third clause giving to each of his other three children an undivided quarter of the "said remainder" of his estate, will be construed as giving to each of them a quarter of the whole estate, remaining after payment of his debts, funeral charges, expenses, etc., it appearing that this was the intention, as otherwise part of the estate would be undisposed of by the will. Angell v. Angell, 68 Atl. 583, 586, 28 R. I. 592.

H., by his will, devised and bequeathed the residue of his estate to the children of his son, W., "that he now has or may or shall hereafter have, and, if his last child should be unborn at the time of his death, to include that one," in equal shares, and directed that the same should be held in trust and invested by his executors, and that, as the "said" children of his son should arrive at the age of 21 years, they should be paid their respective shares, with the interest that should accrue thereon. Held, that the grandchildren living at the death of the testator took vested interests, subject to open and let in their after-born brothers and sisters, payable to them when the entire class of takers shall be determined, and as they respectively reach the age of 21 years. Haggerty v. Hockenberry, 30 Atl. 88, 89, 52 N. J. Eq. 354.

Under a deed poll providing that "said wall so built shall be and remain a party wall, and that either party could add to it, doing work from his own side if the other side was built upon, the words 'said wall' here, we think, mean the wall of the height shown in the plan, so that either party might add to the wall in height, and such addition need not be a party wall." Palmer v. Evangelical Baptist Benevolent & Missionary Soc., 43 N. E. 1028, 166 Mass. 143.

Where a journal entry recited the reading and signing of certain "House bills, the title of which are set out in the foregoing message from the House. The reading of said bill having been dispensed with by a two-thirds vote," etc., the use of the singular instead of the plural form does not indicate that the reading of any one of the bills theretofore mentioned was dispensed with, for the word "said" is a word of reference, and means, as there used, "before mentioned," or "aforesaid," and though "bill" is employed in the singular, it is colored by the antecedent to which "said" refers it, namely, the "House bills" mentioned. Moreover, the error is self-correcting when the phrase is considered as a whole, for the period after the word "house" will not be permitted to separate the phrase from its relation to the subject-matter to which it obviously refers. State ex rel. Woodward v. Skeggs, 46 South. 268-272, 154 Ala. 249.

The granting of a railroad franchise between certain points on condition that only one fare should be exacted for a single passage over "said road" has no application to any fares that shall be charged on other portions of the road not within the terminals of the franchise granted. Byars v. Bennington & H. V. Ry. Co., 90 N. Y. Supp. 736, 738, 99 App. Div. 34.

The word "said" as used in a bond given by a bank and sureties to the state treasurer reciting that such treasurer would deposit certain moneys in the bank in question and that the bank should keep, etc., all "said sums so deposited or to be deposited as aforesaid," points to something previously mentioned in the instrument, and the sureties on the bond are liable for deposits in the bank at the time the bond was executed. Kephart v. Buddecke, 80 Pac. 501, 503, 20 Colo. App. 546.

A paragraph of a cross-complaint for divorce for cruelty alleged that for five months last past plaintiff, by a uniform course of conduct, had been cruel to defendant, and had inflicted on her, through his harsh conduct, great mental cruelty. A later paragraph alleged that, by reason of "said acts and conduct" on the part of plaintiff, defendant had suffered, and did still suffer, great physical and mental suffering. Held, that the words "said acts and conduct" comprehended the whole picture of plaintiff's dereliction as alleged in the complaint; and that the first paragraph was not objectionable, because it charged that the conduct produced "great," instead of "grievous," mental suffering. Nelson v. Nelson, 123 Pac. 1099, 1100, 18 Cal. App. 602.

The complaint, in an action against an insurer, alleged that it entered into a written contract of insurance with the plaintiff, whereby it insured plaintiff for $1,500 against all direct loss or damage by fire on a stock of merchandise, consisting of leaf tobacco, burlap, etc., its own, or held by it in trust or on commission, or sold but not delivered, or for which it might be liable in case of loss or damage, and that the said property so insured by defendant by said contract of insurance, and while in the premises mentioned, was totally destroyed. Held, that the words "said property" related to the property described as insured by the contract, and that by reasonable intentment the complaint in substance alleged plaintiff's insurable interest. Kline Bros. & Co. v. German Union Fire Ins. Co. of Baltimore, 132 N. Y. Supp. 181, 184, 147 App. Div. 790.

A deed conveying one-sixteenth of the oil and gas under a tract of land provided that it was subject to any rights existing in the lessee under a prior lease, but if that lease had expired or becomes void, or if no such lease ever existed, then granting to the lessee all the rights and privileges of drilling and operating on the land to produce, store, and remove "said oil" and gas necessary and usually granted to the lessee in an oil and gas lease. Held, that the words "said oil" could not grammatically and did not refer to the one-sixteenth granted in fee, but referred to their next preceding antecedent, to wit, the oil and gas covered by the prior lease, and hence the new lease conveyed not only a one-sixteenth of all the oil and gas, but, subject to the prior lease, was a lease of the land to the grantee for oil and gas purposes, with exclusive rights, reserving the usual royalty and with covenants and agreements usually contained in an oil and gas lease. Garrett v. South Penn. Oil Co., 66 S. E. 741, 743, 66 W. Va. 587.

The words "manufacturer," "such manufacturer," and "said manufacturer," as used in Acts 1908, p. 281, c. 189, § 15, providing that a licensed manufacturer may sell the products of his brewing at any place within the state, except where such manufactory is situated in no-license territory, but such manufacturer may sell the product of his brewing to be delivered to a common carrier to be transferred to any place where the same may be legally sold, and the said manufacturer may sell the products of his brewing in quantities not less than one gallon at the place of manufacture, except in no-license territory, mean any manufacturer, whether located in license or no-license territory; the only difference between the two classes of manufacturers intended by the statute being that the manufacturer located in license territory can sell and deliver not less than one gallon at the place of manufacture, while the manufacturer located in no-license territory can make no sale and delivery at such place. Robert Portner Brewing Co. v. Southern Express Co., 63 S. E. 6, 8, 109 Va. 22, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 64.

As referring to next antecedent

Pub. St. 1901, c. 191, § 8, provides that tort actions for personal injuries shall survive to the extent stated in the five following sections. By section 9, if such an action is pending at the death of a party, it shall abate, unless decedent's administrator, if decedent was plaintiff, shall appear and prosecute the action before the end of the second term after decedent's death. By section 10, if an action is not then pending and has not become barred, one may be brought any time within two years after decedent's death. By section 11, the damages recoverable in any such action shall not exceed $7,000. Section 12 provides that if the administrator of the deceased party is plaintiff, and the death of such party was caused by the injury complained of in the action, the mental and physical pain suffered, reasonable expenses caused by the injury, probable duration of his life, etc., may be considered as elements of damage. Section 13 provides how the damages recoverable shall be distributed and section 14 provides that all other actions existing in behalf of or against a deceased person, except those for the recovery of penalties and forfeitures of money under penal statutes, shall survive and may be prosecuted or defended by his administrator. Held, construing section 11 in view of Pub. St. 1901, c. 2, § 14, making the words "said" and "such," when used to refer to any person or thing, apply to the person or thing last mentioned, that the words, "In such action," therein, referred to the action authorized by section 10, and not to the pending action authorized to be prosecuted by the administrator by section 9, so that damages recoverable in such action are not limited. Piper v. Boston & M. R. R., 75 Atl. 1041, 1046, 75 N. H. 435.

SAKE

"Sake" is a beverage, a product of the fermentation of rice, produced by a process similar to that employed in making beer in this country; rice being used instead of barley. An analysis of a sample of the importation in question shows it to contain 17 per cent. of alcohol, 3.874 per cent. of solids, and .064 per cent. of ash; the remaining 78.50 per cent. being water. Palariscopic and other tests disclosed the presence of maltose, which is the first product of the change of starch under the action of diastatic ferments, and indicates that the fluid was the product of a starch bearing substance. Sake is amber colored, has a sweet taste, has no head, and is always heated before being drunk. The name sake is apparently arbitrary and, not descriptive, conveys little or no intelligence to the mind. Sake resembles beer in its process of manufacture and in the presence of maltose in the extract which is a characteristic of beer, but is never found in still wines. It resembles still wines in the large percentage of alcohol, and it has many points of similarity to both wine and beer. The holding is that sake is dutiable as an unenumerated article, and not as either beer or still wine under the similitude clause. United States v. Nishimiya, 137 Fed. 396, 398, 69 C. C. A. 588.

"Sake" does not have a substantial resemblance to either wine or beer, so as to be dutiable as such by similitude under the provisions of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 7, 30 Stat. 205, but it is dutiable as an unenumerated manufactured article, under section 6, c. 11, 30 Stat. 205. Stratton v. Komada & Co., 148 Fed. 125, 126 (citing Nishimiya v. United States, 131 Fed. 650; United States v. Nishimiya, 137 Fed. 396, 69 C. C. A. 588).

Sake is dutiable as still wine by similitude, being "similar" to that article in material and use within the meaning of the similitude clause in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 7, 30 Stat. 205, which prescribes the classification of unenumerated articles "similar * * * in material, * * * use," etc., to enumerated articles. The resemblance in material arises from the fact that the predominant substance in both articles is alcohol, and that there is a substantial similarity in their alcoholic strength; the percentage of alcohol being about 18 in sake and from 11 to 16 in still wine. The resemblance in use arises from the fact that both articles are drunk for purposes of exhilaration, and are capable of producing intoxication. United States v. Komada & Co., 162 Fed. 465, 466, 89 C. C. A. 385.

SALABLE VALUE

The term "salable value" is synonymous with market or actual value, and in proper cases with rental value. Hetland v. Bilstad, 118 N. W. 422, 423, 140 Iowa, 411 (quoting Jonas v. Noel, 39 S. W. 724, 98 Tenn. 440, 36 L. R. A. 862).

SALAD OIL

"Salad oil" prima facie means olive oil, and, in the absence of evidence that the term has recently acquired a more general meaning to include other oils, its use without further explanation on packages of cotton seed oil shipped in interstate commerce constitutes a misbranding in violation of Food and Drugs Act June 30, 1906, c. 3915, § 2, 34 Stat. 768. Brina v. United States, 179 Fed. 373, 105 C. O. A. 558.

SALAMANDER

"Salamander" is the unfused material which accumulates in the bottom of a furnace while it is in operation, and which must be removed periodically. Sloss-Sheffield Steel & Iron Co. v. Ralston (Ala.) 58 South. 260, 261.

During the operation of a blast furnace, the heavier portions of the iron, such as carbon, graphites, and silicates, collect in the bottom of the furnace, and by some chemical action the fire brick gradually disappear or fuse with the iron and become a very hard substance, called "salamander." This salamander is considered a better lining than fire brick, because it can withstand a higher degree of heat. Illinois Steel Co. v. Saylor, 80 N. E. 783, 784, 226 Ill. 283.

SAL AMMONIAC

The electrolyte commonly known as "sal ammoniac" is a solution of chloride of ammonium. In re Charles Town Light & Power Co., 183 Fed. 160, 165.

SALARIED OFFICER

Under Laws 1902, p. 972, c. 380, providing that the sheriff of Ontario county shall receive as compensation for all his services and his duties appertaining thereto, which are a county charge on the county or any town therein, an annual salary, and also certain fees, such sheriff is not a "salaried officer," within Code Civ. Proc. § 3307, subd. 4, entitling sheriffs to a fee for each cause placed on the calendar for trial by jury, but declaring that it does not apply to counties wherein the sheriff is a salaried officer. People ex rel. Flynn v. Leech, 89 N. Y. Supp. 178, 179, 43 Misc. Rep. 435.

SALARY

See Annual Salary; Graded Salaries.

Any salary, see Any.

Increase of salary, see Increase.

A "salary" is a periodical allowance made as compensation to a person for his official or professional services, or for his regular work. Board of Com'rs of Teller County v. Trowbridge, 95 Pac. 554, 555, 42 Colo. 449.

The salary of a public officer is a provision made by law for his maintenance and support during his term, to the end that, without anxiety concerning his means of subsistence, he may be able to devote himself entirely to the duties of his office. Ruperich v. Baehr, 75 Pac. 782, 783, 142 Cal. 190 (citing Lewis v. City of Denver, 48 Pac. 317, 9 Colo. App. 328).

Allowance distinguished

Const. 1901, § 96, prohibiting the enacting of a law not applicable to all the counties, regulating "fees, commissions or allowances" of public officers, and section 104, subd. 24, prohibiting the passage of local laws creating, increasing, or decreasing "fees, percentages or allowances" of public officers, have no application to the salary of a solicitor of a judicial circuit, in view of the use of the word "salary" in the Constitution at other places; section 281 being as to increasing or diminishing the "salary, fees or compensation" of any state, county, or municipal officer during his term, and section 167 providing that a solicitor shall receive no other compensation than a salary, to be prescribed by law, a "salary" being a fixed compensation, decreed by authority and for permanence, to be paid at stated intervals, and depending on the time, and not on the services rendered, while an "allowance" is of the same nature with fees, commissions, and percentages, which are uncertain and variable in amount, and depending on the rendition of services, which may or may not be required or performed, and sometimes on the discretion of the court ordering their payment. Brandon v. Askew, 54 South. 605, 608, 172 Ala. 160.

Allowance in lieu of traveling expenses

Acts 1903, entitled "An act concerning the compensation of judges of circuit and superior courts in certain cases," provides, by section 1, that there shall be allowed to the judge of each circuit and superior court district containing more than one county, in addition to the salary now provided by law, the sum of $300, which allowance shall be added to the salary of such judge in lieu of traveling expenses. Acts 1907, entitled "An act fixing the compensation to be paid out of the state treasury as salary to the judges of the circuit and superior courts," provides, by section 1, that there shall be paid to each of the circuit and superior judges as salary from the state annually $3,500, provided that this act shall not be construed to repeal any law or parts of law now in force, authorizing county commissioners in certain counties to make additional allowances to the judges; but no other or different salary allowance shall be made or paid by the state. Held, in view of the executive construction of the act of 1903, as evidenced by the payment of the $300 provided therein as "salary," and not as "traveling expenses," that such act was a salary statute, and not one allowing compensation for traveling expenses; and hence the act of 1907, which was designed as an exclusive provision as to the salary of judges, repeals the act of 1903 by implication. State v. Billheimer, 96 N. E. 801, 802, 178 Ind. 83.

As annual compensation

In the title to Act June 23, 1911 (P. L. 1123), establishing in each county a board of viewers, the term "salaries" appropriately refers to annual compensation paid to members of boards of viewers under terms of the act. In re Reber's Petition, 84 Atl. 587, 590, 235 Pa. 622.

Salary is an "annual compensation for services rendered; a fixed sum to be paid by the year for services." Burrill, Law Dict. The per annum compensation of men in official and in some other positions. Anderson, Law Dict. Where the word "salary" is found in a legislative act, as applied to an officer's compensation for official work done or required, it is generally understood to apply to the officer's per annum allowance, when not otherwise qualified. State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Speed, 81 S. W. 1260, 1263, 183 Mo. 186.

The word "salary" is more frequently applied to annual employment than to any other, and its use may import a factor to permanency, and the use of a sum of money, equivalent to a year's pay, in describing the amount which the employé was to receive, is a proper circumstance for consideration, in connection with other incidents, to determine whether the employment was for a year. Maynard v. Royal Worcester Corset Co., 85 N. E. 877, 878, 200 Mass. 1.

As debt

See Debt.

Emolument distinguished

Ordinarily the word "salary," as applied to public officers, means a fixed compensation made by law to be paid periodically for services, whether there be any service actually rendered or not. The word "emolument" is more comprehensive than "salary." Scharrenbroich v. Lewis & Clark County, 83 Pac. 482, 483, 33 Mont. 250.

As equivalent to compensation

See Compensation.

Clerk hire

B. & C. Comp. § 2390, provides that the Secretary of State may employ clerks to aid in the performance of his duties, provided that the expenditure of moneys for clerk hire shall not exceed the appropriation in the Legislature therefor, and that such clerks shall be paid out of the state treasury. Const. art. 13, fixes the salary of the Secretary of State at $1,500, and provides that he shall receive no fees or perquisites. Held that, since a "salary" is the personal compensation provided to be paid to an officer for his own personal services only, section 2390, providing for an allowance to the Secretary of State for clerk hire, is not in violation of the constitutional provision. State ex rel. v. Dunbar, 98 Pac. 878, 881, 53 Or. 45, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1015.

Commissions

In a suit against an alleged principal, where the issue was agency of one who contracted the debt sued for, an instruction to find for plaintiff if the alleged agent worked for defendants on a "commission or salary" is not misleading because of use of the word "salary," though no witness used it in his evidence, as the word "salary" was used as a synonym of "commission." W. H. White & Son v. Ballard County Bank (Ky.) 117 S. W. 294, 296.

As earnings

See Earnings.

Fees distinguished and synonymous

The word "salary" imports a specific contract for a specific sum for a specified period of time, while "fees" are compensation for particular acts, and "wages" are compensation for services by the day or week—[quoting 7 Words and Phrases, pp. 6287-6291]. Blick v. Mercantile Trust & Deposit Co., 77 Atl. 844, 846, 113 Md. 487.

Rev. St. 1909, § 1013, provides that if a prosecuting attorney is sick or absent, the court shall appoint some person to discharge the duties of the office until the proper officer resumes the discharge thereof, and section 1014 declares that the person so appointed shall possess the same powers and receive the same fees as the proper officer would if present. Held, that the word "fees," as so used, would not be construed as synonymous with "salary," and that such section had no application to counties in which the prosecuting attorney receives an annual salary, and is required to account for and pay into the county treasury all fees received by him by virtue of his office. State ex rel. Harrison v. Patterson, 132 S. W. 1183, 1185, 152 Mo. App. 264.

Const. art. 4, § 28, requires the subjects of each bill to be clearly expressed in its title. Under "An act to repeal section 3240, chapter 27, article 1 of the Revised Statutes of 1899, relating to fees, and to enact a new section in lieu thereof to be known as section 3240" (Laws 1905, p. 155), the Legislature enacted what is now Rev. St. 1909, § 10,695, requiring each probate judge to keep an account of fees collected, and whenever such fees in any one year, deducting expenses, shall exceed the annual compensation provided by law for a judge of the circuit court with jurisdiction in such county, to pay such excess, less 10 per cent., into the treasury of his county for the benefit of its school fund. Held that, as the section repealed fixed the fees of probate judges, the title was broad enough to give notice of and to clearly express the subject of section 10,695; and that, as "Salaries" are the form of compensation prescribed for paying public officers for their services, the subject of salaries was also germane to the subject of fees expressed in the title. State ex rel. Buchanan County v. Imel, 146 S. W. 783, 785, 242 Mo. 293.

A clerk of the district court was given a stated salary, together with fees paid in civil actions by the litigants and in nearly all criminal actions by the county. When a demand for fees was presented to the board of supervisors, it was necessary to check every item and deduct erroneous charges, and extrinsic evidence was sometimes necessary to determine the correctness of particular items. Held, that a claim of such clerk against a county for fees in actions brought for the collection of delinquent taxes was not a claim for a "salary" within Civ. Code 1901, par. 989, requiring the presentation of claims against the county within six months, but providing that this requirement shall not apply to claims for official salaries made demand against the county by some express provision of law; the words "salary" and "fees" having their ordinary signification, the distinction between which is that a salary is a fixed compensation for regular work, while fees are compensation for particular services rendered at irregular periods, payable at the time the services are rendered. Cochise County v. Wilcox, 127 Pac. 758, 759, 14 Ariz. 234.

As fixed by time of service

The word "salary" may be defined generally as a fixed annual or periodical payment for services, depending on the time, and not on the amount of services rendered. King v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 65 S. E. 944, 946, 84 S. C. 73.

The word "salary" may be defined generally as a fixed annual or periodical payment for services, depending on the time, and not on the amount of the services rendered; and though, to give a statute effect, the word will sometimes be more broadly construed, this will not be done where the language of the statute forbids such construction. Spalding v. Thornbury, 108 S. W. 906, 907, 128 Ky. 533.

Const. art. 6, § 6, authorizes the Legislature to provide for more than one circuit judge in the circuit, including Saginaw county, and that such judges, in addition to the "salary" provided by the Constitution, shall receive such additional "salary" as may be fixed by the board of county supervisors. The word "salary" is here used with the same meaning as in section 1, art. 9, and contemplates a "fixed annual or periodical payment for services, depending upon the time and not upon the amount of services rendered." Beach v. Kent, 105 N. W. 867, 870, 142 Mich. 347.

The system which the framers of the Constitution intended to provide by article 11, § 8, prescribing that the Legislature shall fix the compensation by salary of all county officers, was that of a fixed and established compensation by time as distinguished from the system of specific fees for specific services which had theretofore prevailed; and although the word "salary" is sometimes used to denote compensation paid for particular service, it was used in the Constitution to mean a payment dependent on the time and not on the amount of the service rendered by the officer. State ex rel. Stratton v. Maynard, 76 Pac. 937, 939, 35 Wash. 168 (quoting Cox v. Holmes, 44 Pac. 262, 14 Wash. 255).

Incident to office

"Salary," like an oath of office, is an incident to office merely, and not a necessary element in the determination of its character. The fact that there is no salary or emolument affixed to an office does not make it any the less a civil office. In re Members of Legislature, 39 South. 63, 64, 49 Fla. 269 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 4924).

Mileage

"The term 'salary' may be and is variously applied. It is usually used as designating recompense, reward, or compensation for services rendered. Mileage may become a part of compensation. If the mileage allowance is limited to the amount actually expended in traveling, then it cannot, of course, add anything to the income of the recipient of the salary. But if the mileage is not so limited, as where a certain amount is allowed for each mile traveled, and this amount exceeds the actual mileage charged, then the balance above such charge becomes a part of the official income or compensation the same as though it were a part of the 'salary.' As a concrete proposition, it is not controlling that such accretions to official compensation are not designated as 'salary.'" Marioneaux v. Cutler, 91 Pac. 355, 359, 32 Utah, 475 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6287 et seq.).

Permanency of employment imported

"Where a person is employed at a salary, the term itself imports permanency of employment." White v. Koehler, 57 Atl. 124, 70 N. J. Law, 526.

Wages distinguished

"Salary" refers to a superior grade of services and implies a position or office, and suggests something higher, larger, and more permanent than "wages." First Nat. Bank v. Barnum, 160 Fed. 245, 247.

The word "salary" imports a specific contract for a specific sum for a specified period of time, while "wages" are compensation for services by the day or week. Blick v. Mercantile Trust & Deposit Co., 77 Atl. 844, 846, 113 Md. 487.

The term "wages" has a less extensive meaning than the term "salary." "Wages" is usually restricted to sums paid as hire or reward to domestic or menial servants or to artisans, mechanics, laborers, or others employed in similar occupations, while "salary" has reference to the compensation of clerks, bookkeepers, and other employes of a like class, officers of corporations, and public officers. Spellberger Bros. v. Brandes, 58 South. 75, 79, 3 Ala. App. 590.

"Wages," in its ordinary acceptance, has a less extensive meaning than "salary," and is usually restricted to sums paid as hire to domestic or menial servants and to artisans, mechanics, laborers, and others employed in various manual occupations, while "salary" has reference to the compensation of clerks, bookkeepers, other employes of like class, officers of corporations, and public officers. Massie v. Cessna, 88 N. El. 152, 154, 239 Ill. 352, 130 Am. St. Rep. 234.

Wages synonymous

Lexicographers and some authorities class "salary" and "wages" as synonymous. Board of Com'rs of Teller County v. Trowbridge, 95 Pac. 554, 556, 42 Colo. 449.

Worcester says in referring to "wages" that "in ordinary language the term wages is usually employed; the sums paid to persons hired to perform menial labor." Winfield defines the term as meaning "the compensation paid to a hired person for services. This compensation to the laborer may be a specified sum for a given term of service or a fixed sum for a specified work; that is, payment may be made by the job." It has also been held that, "if there is any difference in the popular sense between 'salary' and 'wages,' it is only in the application of them to the more or less honorable service. State v. Duncan, 1 Tenn. Ch. App. 339, 341, 342 (quoting Commonwealth ex rel. Wolfe v. Butler, 99 Pa. 542).

Broadly, the word "salary" means a recompense or consideration made to a person for his pains or industry in another man's business. Whether it be derived from "salarium," or more fancifully from "sal," the pay of the Roman soldier, it carries with it the fundamental idea of compensation for services rendered. Indeed, there is eminent authority for holding that the words "wages" and "salary" are in essence synonymous. Hopkins v. Cromwell, 85 N. Y. Supp. 839, 841, 89 App. Div. 481.

A "sale" is a contract by which property is transferred from the seller to the buyer for a fixed price in money paid or agreed to be paid by the buyer. De Bary v. Dunne, 172 Fed. 940.

A "sale" may be defined as a contract founded on a money consideration by which the absolute or general property in the subject of the sale is transferred from the seller to the buyer. Koehler v. St. Mary's Brewing Co., 77 Atl. 1016, 1018, 228 Pa. 648, 139 Am. St. Rep. 1024.

A "sale" is an agreement by which one of two contracting parties, called the "seller," gives the thing, and passes the title to it for a certain price in current money. Skirvin v. O'Brien, 95 S. W. 696, 700, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 1.

The word "sale" is defined to be a contract for the transfer property from one person to another for a valuable consideration. Radebaugh v. Scanlan, 82 N. E. 544, 547, 41 Ind. App. 109 (citing Anderson's Law Dict.; and Micks v. Stevenson, 51 N. E. 492, 22 Ind. App. 475, 478, wherein the same definition from Kent was quoted with approval).

A "sale" is a transmutation of property from one man to another in consideration of some price. Dunn v. Mayo Mills, 134 Fed. 804, 810, 67 C. C. A. 450 (citing Black Comm. 446).

A "sale" is a transmutation of property, or a right from one person to another in consideration of a sum of money, as opposed to barter, exchanges, or gifts. Lucas v. County Recorder of Cass County, 106 N. W. 217, 220, 75 Neb. 351.

A "sale" is a transmutation of the property in a personal chattel from one to another for a quid pro quo, paid or agreed to be paid; the passing of title and possession of any property for money which the buyer pays or promises to pay. State v. Colonial Club, 69 S. E. 771, 772, 154 N. E. 177 (quoting 7 Words and Phrases, pp. 6291, 6292).

To constitute a sale of a chattel, there must be an intention and an offer to sell, and an acceptance of the offer and an intention to buy, and the court in determining whether title to a chattel has passed must consider the intention of the parties and the assent of both parties to a sale. Priest v. Hodges, 118 S. W. 253, 254, 90 Ark. 131.

To constitute a sale, there must be a consideration or price, a seller, a purchaser, and a delivery of the thing sold. City of Iola v. Lederer, 120 Pac. 354, 356, 86 Kan. 347.

The elements of a "sale" at common law are: mutual agreement, competent parties, money consideration, and transfer of absolute or general property in the subject-matter. Wheless v. Meyer & Schmid Grocer Co., 120 S. W. 708, 712, 140 Mo. App. 572.

"To constitute a valid 'sale' there must be competent parties, mutual assent, a thing, the absolute or general property in which is transferred from the seller to the buyer, and a price in money paid or promised." Logan v. Stephens County (Tex.) 81 S. W. 109, 110 (quoting Anderson, Law Dict.); Matthews v. Freker, 57 S. W. 262, 265, 68 Ark. 196; Chris- tensen v. Cram, 105 Pac. 950, 156 Cal. 633 (quoting 1 Benj. Sales, § 1, and citing 1 Mechem, Sales, § 1).

"A 'sale' is a contract founded on a money consideration, by which the absolute or general property in the subject of sale is transferred from the seller to the buyer, and the essentials of a sale are: (1) A mutual agreement; (2) competent parties; (3) a money consideration; (4) a transfer of the absolute or general property from the seller to the buyer. If any of these ingredients be wanting, there is no sale." Clark v. Gault, 83 N. E. 900, 903, 77 Ohio St. 497.

A contract to cut timber and saw the same into lumber and sell the lumber or deliver it to the owner is not a contract for the sale of land or any interest therein within the statute of frauds (Code 1907, § 4289, subd. 5), nor within section 3355, declaring that alienation of land must be in writing. Simpson & Harper v. Harris & Scrandrett, 56 South. 968, 970, 174 Ala. 430.

The word "sale" is a legal term of fixed and definite meaning. By a contract of sale, the property and the title thereto pass to the vendee. Where an adult, who employed a minor, sent him to defendant's saloon to buy intoxicating liquor for him, and the minor so informed the saloon keeper, the sale was to the employer and not to the minor. Laing v. State, 28 S. W. 1040, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 136, 138.

A person charged with illegally selling intoxicating liquors cannot be convicted of furnishing or conveying the same; a "sale" being defined to consist of an agreement by which the title passes from one and vests in another, a transfer of property from seller to buyer for a price in money paid or promised. Reed v. State, 103 Pac. 1070, 1071, 3 Okl. Cr. 16, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 268.

A "sale," as used in the statute prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors, consists of a contract by which one of the parties sells and delivers to the other intoxicating liquors, and is not made out by proof that the alleged buyer got two bottles of whisky and left $2 in the place thereof in the absence of any showing of a prior agreement that the sale should be so made. Lane v. State, 92 S. W. 839, 840, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 335.

In determining whether there was a sale in violation of the liquor laws, the definition of Rev. Civ. Code, § 1299, declaring that a "sale is a contract by which, for a pecuniary consideration, called a price, one transfers to another an interest in property," was applied. State v. Delamater, 104 N. W. 537, 540, 20 S. D. 23, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 774, 129 Am. St. Rep. 907.

On a trial for violating the local option law, a charge that a sale is the transfer of property from one person to another for money or some valuable consideration, etc., sufficiently defines a "sale," especially in the absence of any requested charge covering any supposed omission. Ellis v. State, 130 S. W. 171, 173, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 630.

A "sale" of liquor in violation of the local option law consists of a transfer of intoxicating liquor to the buyer for a valuable consideration to be paid in money, or anything of value accepted in payment. State v. Fulman (Del.) 74 Atl. 1, 7 Pennewill, 123.

The money being paid and the liquor delivered, the "sale" is complete, so as to warrant a conviction for violation of the local option law. Smith v. State (Tex.) 91 S. W. 592.

A sale in violation of the local option law may be made by implication as well as by direct contract, so that no words are necessary to constitute a transaction a "sale," but passage of the property with intent to sell is enough. Jackson v. State, 123 S. W. 142, 57 Tex. Cr. R. 341.

Defendant ordered whisky C. O. D., and another, having ascertained the fact, procured from defendant an order on the express company and paid the C. O. D. and charges. Held, a "sale" by defendant. Caton v. State (Tex.) 95 S. W. 540, 541.

Where it appeared that witness went to the rear of a restaurant, where he met defendant and told him what he wanted, and that defendant turned around and went into the cook room, opened the door to a side room, where there was whisky, and that at defendant's invitation witness helped himself to whisky and paid defendant therefor, a "sale" was shown. Robinson v. State, 110 S. W. 905, 907, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 567.

Under the local option law, forbidding under penalty any person in prohibition territory to sell, exchange, or give away, with intent to evade the provisions of the law, any intoxicating liquors whatsoever, where intoxicating liquors were purchased by an incorporated society, and sold or distributed to the members at approximate cost, the act constituted a sale. State v. Kline, 93 Pac. 237, 241, 50 Or. 426.

Where a minor gave defendant an order on a firm without the state directing it to deliver a case of beer to defendant as the signer's agent, the order being on a printed form kept by defendant, and on arrival of the case defendant put the beer on ice, and the signer, on procuring a bottle, paid 20 cents for it, there was a sale, under Rev. St. 1899, § 2179, making it an offense to sell liquor to a minor. State v. Field, 119 S. W. 499, 500, 139 Mo. App. 20.

On a trial for pursuing the business of selling intoxicating liquors, a charge that the state was not required to show that such "business" or "occupation" was accused's principal "business" or "occupation," or that he gave the whole or the greater part of his time to such business, but that if, although engaged in his usual occupation, he secretly sold intoxicating liquors when the opportunity presented, he would be guilty of such offense, was not objectionable on the grounds that it did not properly define "business" or "occupation," and was argumentative and restrictive and on the weight of evidence. Dickson v. State (Tex.) 146 S. W. 914, 918.

A liquor establishment shipped a gallon of whisky consigned to itself, and the bill of lading was sent to a bank with draft attached. The person for whom the whisky was intended declined to pay the draft and take up the bill of lading. Defendant procured from him an order on the bank for the bill of lading, and also an order on the carrier for the whisky, and collected from each of the three persons one-fourth of the amount necessary to procure the whisky, and then divided it between the other three and himself. Held, that there was a sale. Skiles v. State, 123 N. W. 447, 448, 85 Neb. 401.

Pub. St. 1901, c. 112, § 15, provides that if any person, not being an agent of a town to sell spirits, shall sell any spirituous liquor he shall be fined. The sale of liquor having been prohibited in L., defendant maintained an office, in charge of his brother as agent, where he pretended to take orders for a Boston liquor house for the sale of liquor, to be shipped from Boston by express. The prosecuting witness went to the office, stated to defendant's brother that he wanted to buy two quarts of whisky, paid the price, and was told that he could get the whisky at the express office in L. the next day. He went to the express office the succeeding day, paid the express charges, and received the liquor. Held, to show a "sale" of liquor in L., in violation of the statute, and not a transaction in interstate commerce. State v. Gross, 82 Atl. 533, 534, 76 N. H. 304.

In view of prior legislation on the liquor traffic, the word "sale" in the title of Acts 1909, c. 1, entitled an act to prohibit the "sale" of intoxicating liquors as a beverage near a schoolhouse where a school is kept, whether the school be in session or not, includes all sales without regard to their form or character; and the word "tipple," in section 1, declaring it unlawful "to sell or tipple" any intoxicating liquors as a beverage within four miles of such a schoolhouse, denotes a subdivision of the more comprehensive term "sale," as used in the title, and its equivalent "to sell" as used in the body; and the word "or," between "sell" and "tipple," is used in a disjunctive sense, the prohibition not being against tipples sales alone, but as well against any other sales; and the words "as a beverage" refer to a sale of liquor, not necessarily to be consumed by the immediate purchaser, but to be finally used, when it reached the consumer, as a beverage, so that a sale in wholesale quantities of intoxicating liquors, by a manufacturer thereof to a wholesaler, with only a general and promiscuous purpose, includes a beverage sale, within the prohibition of the statute. J. W. Kelly & Co. v. State, 132 S. W. 193, 195, 123 Tenn. 516.

The uncontradicted testimony of two state agents that defendant delivered a can of adulterated milk at a lunchroom, taking a receipt therefor from the person in charge, is sufficient evidence of "sale," or "offer for sale," in violation of Consol. Laws, c. 1, § 32, making it unlawful to sell or offer for sale adulterated milk. People v. McDermott Dairy Co., 122 N. Y. Supp. 294, 296.

Where a food inspector, on visiting defendant's premises, where he was carrying on a candy jobber business, informed defendant that he was an inspector to examine his candies, and after taking six samples asked defendant how much he owed him therefor, and was told "10 cents," which he paid, the transaction constituted a "sale," within New York City Sanitary Code, § 68, prohibiting the sale of any adulterated food within that city. People v. Greenberg, 119 N. Y. Supp. 325, 326, 134 App. Div. 599.

A condition in a grant of lands to a railroad company, that they should be sold only to actual settlers with a limitation as to quantity and price, was not waived by the government by its acquiescence in a transfer of the entire grant to a corporation organized to succeed to all the property, rights and franchises of the original grantee, which was not a sale within the meaning of the condition, but merely a substitution of grantees; the land still remaining subject to the condition in the hands of the transferee. United States v. Oregon & C. R. Co., 186 Fed. 861, 887.

The sole manufacturer of a medicine made in accordance with a secret formula, but unpatented sold the same only under a system of contracts between himself and wholesale dealers to whom alone he sold at retail prices, by which they bound themselves to sell at a certain price and only to retail dealers designated by him, and between him and such retail dealers, by which in consideration of being so designated they bound themselves to sell to consumers only and at a certain price. Held, that under such a contract to call the purchaser an agent is to juggle with words, as "sale" is a word of precise legal import, and every wholesaler who orders goods under one of complainant's uniform contracts becomes a buyer, obtains the title, and may convey the title to another. John D. Park & Sons Co. v. Hartman, 153 Fed. 24, 38, 82 C. C. A. 158, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 135.

Plaintiff was a retail grocer, who prior to the passage of Act Aug. 2, 1886, c. 840, 24 Stat. 209, had sold oleomargarine. After that he ceased handling it; but, having two or three customers who desired it, at their request and for their accommodation he sent orders in their respective names to the manufacturer for 10-pound packages at a time, to be shipped to each customer in his care. The manufacturer shipped the same to its local branch house, addressed and billed to the customers. The branch house, which did not deliver to retail customers, left the packages at plaintiff's store, and he delivered the same, with other groceries. The customers returned the bills to him, and he remitted for the same to the manufacturer each month, charging the customers with the cash so sent. There was no fraud nor attempt at concealment, and plaintiff made no profit whatever on the transactions. Held, that such transactions were not sales of the article by plaintiff, and did not render him subject to tax as a wholesale dealer. Grier v. Tucker, 150 Fed. 658, 663.

Plaintiff, the owner of property insured, made an agreement to sell to H. for a specified price; possession to be given March 1, 1902. The contract, however, was conditioned on the ability of H. to raise $5,500 on the property; it being agreed that, unless such sum was raised, the deal was off. To enable H. to raise such loan, a contract and deed were executed, and placed in the hands of loan brokers to hold, and not to be delivered without plaintiff's permission. The title being defective, an action was brought in H.'s name to cure the same, and thereafter a portion of the property was destroyed by fire before H. obtained the money or any sale was consummated. Held, that such transaction did not constitute a "sale or contract to sell" the property, within a policy providing that it should be void in case of a "sale or contract to sell" the property, or if any change or diminution other than death take place in the interest, title, or possession of insured. Swank v. Farmers' Ins. Co. of Cedar Rapids, 102 N. W. 429, 430, 126 Iowa, 547.

Actual transfer of property

A "sale" is a contract by which one transfers to another an interest in property, and in order to constitute a "sale" the contract must give and pass rights of property. Giffen v. Selma Fruit Co., 89 Pac. 855, 856, 5 Cal. App. 50.

A "sale" is a contract subject to all the general principles of law relating to contracts. The mere transfer of a chattel is not a sale, nor is a contract transferring a chattel a sale, but to constitute a sale the general property in the thing, rather than the thing itself, is transferred, and it is transferred for a price measured in money or money's worth. Sale implies the price in a sum of something; a measure of value. No contract of sale can exist without a price in a sum of money, a measure of value. Still v. Cannon, 75 Pac. 284, 285, 13 Okl. 491 (citing Burdick's Elements of Sale, § 1; Hill, Sales, p. 169.)

Mutual assent.

Where the evidence shows that the minds of the parties never met at any time during all the negotiations for the sale of certain land, and until the option was withdrawn and there was a difference of opinion as to the price to be paid and the condition of the title to be conveyed, no contract was entered into because of such misunderstanding. Phelps v. Good, 96 Pac. 216, 218, 15 Idaho, 76.

Usually the word "sale" denotes a completed mutually binding contract; but under contracts creating the ordinary relationship of principal and real estate broker the broker has made a sale whenever, through his influence, a person ready, able, and willing to buy on the terms proposed is brought to the principal, though through the fault of the principal no sale is consummated. Humphries & Jackson v. Smith, 63 S. E. 248, 249, 5 Ga. App. 340.

A "sale" is a contract for a transfer of property from one person to another for a valuable consideration; three things being essential thereto: The thing sold, which is the object of the contract, the price, and the consent of the parties. A corporation owning a street car system and franchise leased the entire concern for a term of 40 years to another corporation, composed of practically the same stockholders and governed by the same board of directors. The lease provided that, upon its termination for breach of covenant by the lessee, it should surrender all cars, appliances, etc., generally called personal property of every kind belonging to the lessor and all betterments made by the lessee. Soon after the lessee became financially involved, and it, together with the lessor and a syndicate acting as agent for both parties, and which controlled a majority of the stock in each, entered into a tripartite agreement, under which the lease was surrendered upon demand of the lessor at the order of the syndicate and the entire property turned over to the lessor. There had been no violation of the terms of the lease, and the lessor had reserved no right in the lease to cancel it, except for defaults specifically mentioned therein. Held, that the surrender of the lease did not constitute a "sale," as there was no meeting of two minds, but constituted a mere abandonment of the property under one name and the taking over of it by them under another name. Barrie v. United Rys. Co. of St. Louis, 119 S. W. 1020, 1052, 138 Mo. App. 557 (citing 2 Bl. Comm. § 446; 2 Kent [14th Ed.] § 468, par. 4; Benj. Sales [5th Eng. Ed. 1906] pp. 1, 2, § 1; Bouv. Law Dict.; Ward v. State, 45 Ark. 351, 353; State v. Wingfield, 22 S. W. 363, 115 Mo. 428, 436, 37 Am. St. Rep. 406; Madison Avenue Baptist Church v. Baptist Church in Oliver St., 46 N. Y. 131, 140).

Competent parties

Under Pen. Code 1895, § 444, making it criminal for any person to sell any minor any spirituous intoxicating liquor, the word "sell" is not to be taken in its strict technical sense, for one of the elements of a "sale" is competent parties, and, a minor not being a competent party to obtain liquor, there can be no sale to him in the technical sense. Newsome v. State, 58 S. E. 71, 72, 1 Ga. App. 790.

Consideration

A "sale" implies, of necessity, a consideration or price. First Nat. Bank of Concordia v. McIntosh & Peters Live Stock & Commission Co., 84 Pac. 535, 538, 72 Kan. 603.

A "sale" ex vi termini imports the transfer of personal property upon a valuable consideration, as distinguished from a gift, which imports a like transaction gratuitously or upon a merely good consideration. Maxwell v. State, 37 South. 266, 140 Ala. 131.

"Under a contract reciting a sale on condition that the buyer shall pay, etc., title does not pass until fulfillment of the conditions." Kennedy v. Lee, 82 Pac. 257, 259, 147 Cal. 596.

The essentials of a "sale" are: First, a mutual agreement; second, competent parties; third, a money consideration; fourth, a transfer of the absolute or general property in the subject of the sale from the seller to the buyer. In charging an illegal sale of intoxicating liquors, an allegation of the price or consideration is indispensable. City of Cannelton v. Collins, 88 N. E. 66, 67, 172 Ind. 193, 19 Ann. Cas. 692.

On an indictment for unlawfully selling liquor without a license, it was shown that accused kept a room in which he conducted a game called "stud poker"; chips were used to represent money; at the beginning of each game a player would purchase a number of these from accused and pay the money for them, and during the game accused would supply the players with beer and would take a portion of the chips, which was called a "rake-off"; at the end of the game the remaining chips in the hands of the winner were "cashed in". Held that the jury could infer that the "rake-off" was in consideration of the beer furnished the players, and that it constituted a "sale" of the beer. State v. Collins, 68 S. E. 268, 67 W. Va. 530, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1024.

"A distinguishing feature of a 'sale' is that it is a transfer of the absolute title to a thing for a price in money or its equivalent. There can therefore be no valid sale unless the price has been determined upon by the parties themselves, either expressly or impliedly, or unless some means or method be agreed upon by the parties or established by law by which the price may be determined. Hence in the case of executory contracts where parties are negotiating in respect of a 'sale' and of the price to be paid thereon, the contract of sale cannot be deemed to be completed so long as the price remains undetermined." Crocker-Wheeler Co. v. Bullock,

Same—Money

The word "sale" usually imports a money consideration. Alcorn v. Gieseke, 111 Pac. 98, 101, 158 Cal. 396.

A "sale" means an exchange of property for money. Ewers v. Weaver, 182 Fed. 713, 714.

A "sale" is generally understood to mean the transfer of property for money. Colgan v. Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank, 114 Pac. 460, 464, 59 Or. 469 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6291).

To constitute a "sale" in violation of the Local Option Law, it is not necessary that the purchaser deliver to the seller the money for the whisky; it is only necessary that both parties assent to payment, if any is made or is to be made therefor. Dawson v. State, 117 S. W. 136, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 315.

While the word "sale," in transactions relating to personal property, usually has reference to a money consideration, yet it will be given a broader significance when the meaning of the law or of a private contract demands it, and the much more generally accepted definition of a sale is an exchange of an interest in real or personal property for money or its equivalent. Mansfield v. District Agr. Ass'n No. 6, 97 Pac. 150, 151, 154 Cal. 145.

On a trial for selling liquor without a license, it appeared that the liquor sold by accused was paid for by two metal checks issued by a company, good for 50 cents each, at the company's commissary store. Any one holding the checks could take them to the company's office and get money on them. Held sufficient to prove a sale. A "sale" is a transfer of property from one person to another for a price to be paid in current money. There is a distinction between a "sale" and an exchange or barter, in that in an exchange of property the price or value is not measured in money terms. A sale may exist without an actual payment of the consideration in money, provided the bargain is made and the value measured in money. Duke v. State, 41 South. 170, 146 Ala. 138 (citing Gunter v. Leckey, 30 Ala. 591, 596; Ooker v. State, 8 South. 874, 91 Ala. 92, 94).

Whether a given contract is one of "sale" which passes the property is one of construction to be determined by the court as a matter of law. There was no "sale" of wagons by plaintiff to defendant, passing the title to defendant, where plaintiff agreed to sell them for $80, and defendant handed him $1 to bind the trade, and said he would be up on a certain day and pay the balance, there being no proof that plaintiff agreed to sell for anything but cash, and the presumption being that he did not, so that defendant, having without plaintiff's knowledge taken and sold the wagons, is liable for conversion. Adair v. Stovall, 42 South. 596, 597, 148 Ala. 465.

Land was conveyed to a district agricultural association in trust as a place for holding agricultural exhibitions, a part thereof to be sold or disposed of to the best advantage for the purpose of improving the agricultural grounds and for meeting the expenses of the trust, including the expenses of litigation. The trustees of the association thereafter deeded part of the latter tract to B. in payment of legal services rendered the association and of services to be rendered in future. Held, that the power of disposition of the tract was not limited to a sale for cash, and even giving the word "sale" the definition of Civ. Code § 1721, as an exchange of property for a money consideration, the association was also authorized to "dispose" of the property which would empower it to transfer the property itself in payment of legal expenses. Mansfield v. District Agr. Ass'n No. 6, 97 Pac. 150, 151, 154 Cal. 145.

"Although it has been sometimes held that the sale must be a transfer for money, and that every other transfer is an exchange or barter, the better opinion is that the transaction is still a 'sale,' although the transfer is made for something else than money provided each article is transferred at an agreed or the market value so that the one thing is received in payment of the price of the other." Where lands are valued at a certain sum, and other lands taken in payment therefor are valued at a less sum, and the difference is represented by promissory notes, it meets the criterion prescribed, which is "whether there is a fixed price, as a determination of the value at which the things are to be exchanged. If there is such a fixed price, the transaction is a 'sale,' but, if there is not, the transaction is an exchange." Where a broker procured a purchaser for the land sold by taking another piece of land for a part of the price, and these terms were accepted by the vendor, the transaction is a "sale," entitling the broker to performance of the vendor's contract to allow him all over a specified amount that he could get for the land. Ullmann v. Land, 84 S. W. 294, 295, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 422 (citing Tied. Sales, § 12; Thornton v. Moody [Tex.] 24 S. W. 331).

Delivery

An agreement to sell personal property without delivery thereof does not constitute a "sale." Pabst Brewing Co. v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 107 S. W. 728, 729.

An information alleging wrongful sale of intoxicating liquor was not objectionable for failure to charge its delivery, since an allegation of a sale imports a delivery. People v. Steinhauer, 93 N. E. 299, 248 Ill. 46.

Where there is no price paid for goods and no delivery of them, there is no "sale," but a mere contract to sell. Gerardi v.

Carnolo, 61 Atl. 599, 601, 27 R. I. 214 (quoting Bayley v. French, 19 Mass. [2 Pick.] 590).

Where goods were bought f. o. b. at a certain place, the carrier became the seller's agent, and there was no "sale" until delivery at the point of destination. Alabama Nat. Bank v. C. C. Parker & Co., 40 South. 987, 988, 146 Ala. 513.

It is elementary law that an offer may be accepted and a bargain struck so that a contract of "sale" becomes absolute and title passes without either delivery or payment of price. Delivery is not a material factor, and is not essential to a completed sale unless so made by the agreement. Citizens' Nat. Bank of Ft. Scott v. Bank of Commerce, 101 Pac. 1006, 1008, 80 Kan. 205.

A "sale" of personal property is a transmutation of property from one man to another in consideration of some price or recompense in value, and so one having an agency to sell wine, which he was expected to deliver, is not entitled to a commission on the mere procuring of orders, the title of the wine not passing until an actual delivery; an "order" being only an executory agreement which cannot even be deemed a "sale" for the purpose of determining the number of sales made by the agent in a given time. Hall v. French American Wine Co., 134 N. Y. Supp. 158, 160, 149 App. Div. 609.

Deed, conveyance, or transfer

"Sale" may be defined as a contract founded on a money consideration by which the absolute or general property in the subject of the sale is transferred from the seller to the buyer." The words "sale" and "conveyance" when applied to real estate are in common parlance, in judicial decisions, and by law-writers often used interchangeably, and a deed of conveyance of real estate therefore answers a reference to a sale of real estate, especially when the reference is used by persons unlearned in the law in the contract of a sale of real estate and the reference is otherwise substantially accurate. Crotty v. Effler, 54 S. E. 345, 347, 60 W. Va. 258, 9 Ann. Cas. 770.

Rev. Laws, c. 13, § 72, provides that a collector may disclaim and release a tax title held by a city or town which he has reasonable cause to believe is invalid for error in the assessment, sale or taking. A tax deed made by defendant town to itself was declared invalid by the land court for defects therein, and thereupon a disclaimer by the town was duly executed and recorded. Held, that it was the intent of the statute to afford a remedy, whether the failure in the title arose from errors in the assessment or in the subsequent proceedings, that the deed was a part of the "sale," which term commonly includes the passing of title, and hence that for a defect in the deed the town had authority to disclaim. Nickerson v. Town of Hyde Park, 95 N. E. 794, 795, 209 Mass. 365.

Literally the "sale of a patent right" is the sale of the interest of the patentee, or one of the letters patent, and is consummated generally by a transfer of the letters patent. It is universally recognized, however, that a sale of the rights conferred by letters patent within a certain territory is a sale of the patent right, and, where the owner sells the right to use and to manufacture for sale and use during only a portion of the life of the patent and for a prescribed territory, it is a sale of a patent right. Nyhart v. Kubach, 90 Pac. 796, 797, 76 Kan. 154.

Giving and receiving earnest money

The original idea of "earnest," in the Roman Law, signified the conclusion of the contract, and it is that idea which obtains in the common-law jurisdiction, and under the statutes of fraud of England, and of some of the states of this Union. But now, the giving and receiving of earnest money, though evidence of a completed bargain, is considered of no importance, or of the smallest importance, in ascertaining whether property has passed by virtue of such bargain; that question being determined by the nature of the bargain concluded by the giving of the earnest. Under Justinian, the effect of the giving and receiving of "arrha" was to enable the contractants to retain the privilege of withdrawing from the contract, on certain conditions, and the same effect is attributed to the giving and receiving of the equivalents "arrhes" and "earnest," by the codes of France and of Louisiana, respectively. An agreement for the sale of real estate, therefore, which contemplates the passing of property, not immediately and by virtue thereof, but by an act to be executed at a later date and which in other respects, contains the elements essential to a sale, is a "promise of sale," and when made with the giving of earnest may be receded from by either of the parties; "he who has given the earnest, by forfeiting it, and he who has received it, by returning the double," as expressly provided by article 2463, relating to when a "promise to sell amounts to a sale." Smith v. Hussey, 43 South. 902, 904, 119 La. 32 (citing Civ. Code, arts. 2462, 2463; Elgee Cotton Cases, 22 Wall. 195, 22 L. Ed. 863; Benjamin, Sales [2d Ed.] pp. 260, 262; Howe v. Hayward, 108 Mass. 55, 11 Am. Rep. 306; Gut. Brac. [Am. Transl.] 145; Just. Inst. III. 24; Marcade, art. 1590 Code Napoleon [our Code art. 2463]; Marcade, vol. 6, p. 172; Laurent, vol. 24, p. 37).

Operation of law

The transmission of title to shares of stock held by a corporation, which takes place by operation of law on its consolidation with another corporation, is not a "sale" of the stock, within the meaning of a by-law forbidding stockholders to sell their stock without first offering it to the corporation at the lowest price at which the holder will sell. Silversmiths Co. v. Reed & Barton Corp., 85 N. E. 433, 199 Mass. 371.

As conferring authority to execute necessary instruments

The employment of a broker to sell lands—that is, to procure purchasers—does not of itself or prima facie confer authority to bind the owner to sell by a contract in writing, and such authority is not usually to be inferred from the use by the principal and agent in that connection of the terms “for sale” or “to sell” and the like; such words in that connection usually meaning no more than to negotiate a sale by finding a purchaser upon satisfactory terms. Stengel v. Sergeant, 68 Atl. 1106, 1107, 1110, 74 N. J. Eq. 20.

Under Code, §§ 1721, 1727, defining a “sale” as a contract by which one engages for a price to transfer to another a certain thing, etc., an instrument executed by an owner employing a broker to procure a purchaser of real estate, which recites that, in consideration of the services of the broker, the owner authorizes him “to sell for me in my name and receipt for deposit thereon,” for a specified time, the property described, for a price fixed, and agrees “to sell and convey by a good * * * grant,” etc., gives the broker authority to contract for the sale to a purchaser procured by him. Bacon v. Davis, 98 Pac. 71, 73, 9 Cal. App. 83.

Abandon distinguished

See Abandon—Abandonment.

Accord and satisfaction distinguished

A “sale” differs from “accord and satisfaction” because in that contract the thing is given for the purpose of quieting a claim and not for a price. A power of attorney authorizing the attorney “to bargain, sell, and convey, * * * to any person, * * * and for any sum of money or other consideration as to him may seem” most to the advantage of the principal, all lands situate in a specified county, and to receive the consideration for which the sale may be made, and to execute valid deeds to the purchasers, does not authorize the attorney to make deeds in settlement of claims of persons to the land. Skirvin v. O'Brien, 95 S. W. 696, 700, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 1.

Agreement to sell distinguished

A “contract of sale” is distinguishable from a “sale,” in that the former is a promise to sell, while a sale is a transfer of title. Silver v. Moore, 84 Atl. 1072, 1073, 109 Me. 505.

Where there is no price paid for goods and no delivery of them, there is no “sale” but a mere contract to sell. Gerardi v. Caruolo, 61 Atl. 599, 601, 27 R. I. 214 (quoting Bayley v. French, 19 Mass. [2 Pick.] 590).

A “sale,” within the meaning of all statutes making certain sales of liquor illegal, is a complete sale passing title to the liquor from the vendor to the vendee, not a mere executory contract of sale. State v. Davis, 60 S. E. 584, 585, 62 W. Va. 500, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1142 (citing State v. Hughes, 22 W. Va. 743; State v. Flanagan, 17 S. E. 792, 38 W. Va. 53, 22 L. R. A. 430, 45 Am. St. Rep. 836).

The distinction between an “actual sale” and a mere “executory agreement to sell” personal property is that in the former the thing which is the subject of the contract becomes the property of the buyer the moment the contract is concluded, and without regard to the fact whether the goods be actually delivered to the buyer, or remain in the possession of the seller; while in the latter the goods remain the property of the seller till the contract is executed. Idaho Implement Co. v. Lambach, 101 Pac. 951, 955, 956, 16 Idaho, 497.

Bailment distinguished

A transaction is a “sale,” as distinguished from a “bailment,” when there is no obligation to return the specified article. In re Allen, 183 Fed. 172, 175.

A contract or lease of a certain number of sheep for a certain time, providing for payment of a certain amount of wool per head and a fixed increase per 100 head, stipulating for the payment of taxes and branding, and requiring their return at the expiration of the lease, unless it is renewed is a “bailment” and not a “sale.” Wetzel v. Deseret Nat. Bank, 83 Pac. 570, 571, 30 Utah, 62.

An instrument in writing by which the manufacturer of certain passenger railroad cars leased them to a railroad company which had ordered them, but was unable to pay cash for them as agreed, at a specified rental per month, with the privilege to the lessee to purchase the cars, constitutes a “bailment,” and not a “sale.” American Car & Foundry Co. v. Altoona & B. C. R. Co., 67 Atl. 838, 839, 218 Pa. 519 (citing Stiles v. Seaton, 49 Atl. 774, 200 Pa. 114; Lippincott v. Scott, 47 Atl. 1115, 198 Pa. 283, 82 Am. St. Rep. 801; Crist v. Kleber, 79 Pa. 290).

Complainant entered into a contract by which it agreed to furnish fertilizer to defendant to be paid for by him by a certain date at a stated price. The contract provided that the fertilizer should remain the property of complainant until sold by defendant, and that complainant should then become the owner of the proceeds, whether cash or notes, which should be held for its use and benefit until it should be fully paid. Held, that such contract was not one of “bailment” but of “sale” with an attempt to retain a lien upon the property sold, and that complainant could maintain an action at law thereon if valid to recover the price when due. Coweta Fertilizer Co. v. Brown, 163 Fed. 162, 165, 89 C. C. A. 612.

A bankrupt was a dealer in agricultural implements and bought goods from a claimant. In the fall, out of season, he wrote for certain articles to be shown at a fair, and they were shipped, and billed to him as sold "subject to next spring's terms." In the spring, shortly before the bankruptcy, claimant made a demand for the goods, which was refused. Held, that there was nothing in the transaction to indicate a bailment, rather than a sale, or to overcome the presumption of ownership arising from the bankrupt's possession, and that claimant was not entitled to recover the property from the trustee. That goods are billed to a party as though it was a sale, while not conclusive, is of more or less persuasive force. In re Wood, 140 Fed. 964, 965.

Plaintiff contracted to furnish certain pumping machinery to be installed in the hull of a dredge being constructed by defendant. The contract provided that plaintiff should install the machinery at its own expense; that defendant should afford the facilities of its yards for such installation, and furnish men and material for that purpose at cost; that defendant should keep the machinery insured for the benefit of plaintiff; and that it should pay one-third of the price when the machine was delivered, one-third when it was installed on board the dredge, and the balance on completion of the test by the party for whom the dredge was being constructed. Held, that on delivery of the machinery, and payment of the first installment of the purchase price, there was a completed "sale," and not a mere bailment, of the machinery to defendant. William R. Trigg Co. v. Bucyrus Co., 51 S. E. 174, 176, 104 Va. 79.

Petitioners contracted with F. prior to his bankruptcy to ship certain goods to him to be sold for their account, and to remain petitioners' property until sold. F. agreed to sell the goods at retail only, and to remit to petitioners each week the cost price of their goods sold during the previous week, and once each season to account and adjust the difference between sales and remittances. The contract also provided that, if F. violated the contract, petitioners might take their goods back and hold F. for any loss they sustained, and that the stock should be fully insured against fire through petitioners; the cost to be paid by F. Held, that such contract constituted a valid "bailment" and not a "sale" as between petitioners and F., though not recorded, and, F. having failed to make the payments agreed on, petitioners were entitled to the goods or their proceeds as against F.'s trustee in bankruptcy. In re Fabian, 151 Fed. 949, 950.

Goods were billed by petitioners to a bankrupt at definite prices and on fixed terms of credit and discount; the bankrupt undertaking to settle or pay for them and to be responsible for the freight. He also agreed to give petitioners his exclusive trade and to render accounts for goods sold every six months. He was also required to hold separate and in trust all "goods unsold and all currency, open accounts, notes, liens, mortgages, or other values received for goods sold," and that, where goods were sold on credit, notes should be taken on blanks furnished by petitioners and made payable to their order; the bankrupt indorsing and guaranteeing them. Held, that the trust provision of the contract related merely to the manner of payment for the goods, and that the contract was one of "sale," and not of "bailment." In re Heckathorn, 144 Fed. 499, 502.

Whether a transaction by which goods are placed by one party in the hands of another to be sold is a "bailment" or a "sale" depends on its inherent character and purpose, and it is immaterial what name is given to it, or that it is an agreed condition that title shall not pass until payment is made. A bankrupt for a number of years had dealt in silk thread which she purchased from claimants. Having fallen behind in her payments, it was arranged that thereafter the goods should be "consigned" to her, and that the goods on hand should be invoiced and credited on her general indebtedness and charged to her on "consigned account." She was to report monthly the goods on hand and the amount sold, paying for the latter at the regular wholesale prices at which the goods were billed to her. It was further agreed that the goods should remain the property of claimants and subject to their order. No restriction was made on the manner of selling, or the prices to be charged by her, and she kept no separate account of receipts from the goods sold. Held, that as to her creditors the transaction was a sale, and that the goods on hand at the time of bankruptcy could not be reclaimed, whether they were on hand when the arrangement was made or received thereafter. In re Wells, 140 Fed. 752.

A contract for the reduction of ore between claimant and the T. Company, the bankrupt's predecessor, provided that the claimant should deliver ore to the T. Company for reduction on a schedule of treatment rates which included freight to the mill, that settlement for all ore shipped by claimant to the T. Company should be based on the latter's weights and samples, that, in case of disagreements as to assay values, the same should be submitted to certain arbitrators, and that payments for all gold ore delivered should be made by the T. Company promptly on agreement as to assay values, on a basis of $20 an ounce for gold, less treatment charges. On delivery of ore each car was numbered and weighed, a test made to determine moisture, and samples taken and divided into three parts—one for the claimant, one for the T. Company, and a third for the umpire in case of dispute—after which the ore was mixed with ore shipped by others, and it was then impossible to identify claimant's ore. All risk of loss through theft or failure of the ore to come up to sample value was on the T. Company, and settlements were made by check of the latter, in which it was treated as a debtor. Held, that the contract construed by the parties' method of business operated as a "sale" of ore delivered and not as a "bailment," so that claimant was not entitled to a preference in the distribution of the assets of the T. Company's bankrupt successor. Chisholm v. Eagle Ore Sampling Co., 144 Fed. 670, 671, 75 C. C. A. 472.

If the identical thing delivered is to be returned, it is a "bailment," and there is no transfer of title; but if the one to whom it is delivered may return another thing of the same kind, or an equivalent in the form of money, or otherwise, it will ordinarily constitute a sale, and effect a change of possession. Mining property, consisting of real estate and personal property, was leased by the owner to another for a term of years at a stipulated royalty, and it was agreed in the lease that at its expiration the personal property, which included some that would be consumed by use, should be returned by the lessee in kind or value, according to an invoice which had been made, at the option of the lessor. Held, the transaction was in the nature of a "sale" of the personal property, and the title thereto passed to the lessee. Scott Mining & Smelting Co. v. Shultz, 73 Pac. 903, 904, 67 Kan. 605 (citing Carpenter v. Griffin [N. Y.] 9 Paige, 310, 37 Am. Dec. 398; Lafin & R. Powder Co. v. Burkhardt, 97 U. S. 110, 24 L. Ed. 973; Caldwell v. Hall, 60 Miss. 380, 44 Am. Rep. 410; Mallory v. Willis, 4 N. Y. 85; Hurd v. West [N. Y.] 7 Cow. 752; National Car & Locomotive Builder v. Cyclone Steam Snow-Plow Co., 51 N. W. 657, 49 Minn. 125; Smith v. Smith's Estate, 51 N. W. 694, 91 Mich. 7; Barnes v. Morse, 38 Ill. App. 275; Herryford v. Davis, Use of Jackson & S. Co., 102 U. S. 235, 26 L. Ed. 160; Jones, Bail. § 74; Story, Bail. § 47).

Barter distinguished

There is a distinction between a "sale" and an exchange or barter, in that in an exchange of property the price or value is not measured in money terms. Duke v. State, 41 South. 170, 146 Ala. 138 (citing Gunter v. Leckey, 30 Ala. 591, 596; Coker v. State, 8 South. 874, 91 Ala. 92, 94).

"Where one commodity is exchanged for another of the same or different kind, without agreement as to price or reference to money payment, the transaction is not a 'sale,' but a 'barter' or 'exchange.'" State v. Brown, 102 S. W. 394, 395, 83 Ark. 44, 119 Am. St. Rep. 109 (quoting and adopting the definition in Gillan v. State, 2 S. W. 185, 47 Ark. 555).

Contract of sale

A "contract of sale" is distinguishable from a "sale," in that the former is a promise to sell, while a sale is a transfer of title. Silver v. Moore, 84 Atl. 1072, 1073, 109 Me. 505.

Gift distinguished

See Gift.

Lease distinguished

A conveyance of standing timber for saw-mill purposes is a sale of land and not a lease, within Civ. Code 1895, § 3613, declaring that on a sale of land there is no implied warranty of title, and hence a vendee of standing timber cannot defend against a suit on purchase-money notes on any plea predicated on the breach of an implied covenant of quiet enjoyment. McLendon Bros. v. Finch, 58 S. E. 690, 692, 2 Ga. App. 421.

An agreement to sell a machine for a certain price, installments to be paid on acceptance of the proposition and shipment of the machine, with an option of returning it within a certain time in lieu of the last payment, and giving no claim on the part paid, is a lease for experimental purposes with the privilege of completing the purchase, and not a sale within Civ. Code, § 1770, providing that one who manufactures an article under an order for a particular purpose warrants it reasonably fit therefor. Kullman, Salz & Co. v. Sugar Apparatus Mfg. Co., 96 Pac. 369, 372, 153 Cal. 725.

A contract provided that plaintiff leased from the owner of certain land a tract containing 250 acres and agreed to pay $205 for the year 1905, with the privilege of re-renting the property on the same terms for seven successive years, and that in case of such renewals, on full payment of the rent, the owner on completion of the period would convey the property to plaintiff in consideration of $1, and the amount, with legal interest, of taxes paid pending the contract. Held, that such contract operated as a lease, and the annual payments as rent, so long as it was executory, and on completion of the payments it became a "sale," at plaintiff's option, on his paying $1, taxes, and interest pending the contract. Heard v. Heard, 41 South. 827, 828, 148 Ala. 673 (citing Davis v. Robert, 8 South. 114, 89 Ala. 404, 18 Am. St. Rep. 126; Wilkinson v. Roper, 74 Ala. 140).

Option distinguished

Where a broker, employed to sell property on specified terms, procured a person who executed an escrow agreement to purchase the property, or forfeit $1,000, such agreement was a mere option to purchase, and not a sale, and did not entitle the broker to commissions. Pehl v. Fanton, 119 Pac. 400, 402, 17 Cal. App. 247.

Order distinguished

See Order (In Commercial Law).

Pledge distinguished

The delivery of goods by a debtor to his creditor in payment of his debt constitutes a "sale," and not a "pledge," which is a bailment to secure the payment of a debt or the performance of some other act, in which the pledgee only acquires a special property in the thing pledged. Trenholm v. Miles, 59 South. 930, 931, 102 Miss. 835.

Alienation

The word "sale," in the statute of frauds (Shannon's Code, § 3142), means alienation; and an action on a parol contract by an owner, binding him to donate land to another, is within the statute. Bailey v. Henry, 143 S. W. 1124, 1127, 125 Tenn. 390.

Assignment for creditors

Under Rev. Civ. Code, § 1299, defining a sale as a contract by which an interest in property is transferred to another for a consideration, where the owner simply transferred title to his son to enable him to close up the business and pay the proceeds to such of the father's creditors as he saw fit, the transaction was not a sale, being more in the nature of a secret trust in favor of the father. Hall v. Keeney, 118 N. W. 1038, 1041, 22 S. D. 541, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 513.

Barter

The word "sale" as used in the title of an act to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors of any and every kind upon the Island of St. Simons, in the county of Glynn, authorized legislation upon the subject of barter. James v. State, 52 S. E. 295, 124 Ga. 72.

According to the definitions of the word "sale" in Bouvier's Law Dictionary, "An agreement by which one of two contracting parties, called the seller, gives a thing and passes the title to it, in exchange for a certain price in current money, to the other party, who is called the buyer or purchaser, who, on his part, agrees to pay such price;" in Five Per Cent. Cases, 4 Sup. Ct. 210, 110 U. S. 471-478, 28 L. Ed. 198, and Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Sanders, 47 Fed. 604-606, "A sale, in the ordinary sense of the word, is a transfer of property for a fixed price in money or its equivalent;" in Rapal & L. Dictionary, "A transmutation of property or a right from one man to another in consideration of a sum of money as opposed to barter, exchange and gifts;" and in Century Dictionary, "A sale in its broadest sense comprehends any contract for the transfer of property from one person to another for a valuable consideration"—the word "sale" as used in Pol. Code 1895, § 1548, making it an offense "to sell or barter for a valuable consideration, either directly or indirectly, or give away to induce trade at any place of business, or furnish at any other public places, any alcohol or any intoxicating liquors," is to be construed in its broad sense, and therefore includes what is commonly known as barter and exchange. Howell v. State, 52 S. E. 649, 650, 124 Ga. 698 (citing James v. State, 124 Ga. 72, 52 S. E. 295; Chin v. Ligon, 71 Ga. 694, 51 Am. Rep. 281).

Exchange

An "exchange," as distinguished from a "sale," is a contract whereby specific property is given in consideration of the receipt of property other than money. Freeman v. Trummer, 91 Pac. 1077, 1079, 50 Or. 287.

The common idea of commerce is reciprocal agreements by which one person delivers to another a material thing for money, which is a sale, or for another thing, which is an exchange. International Text-Book Co. v. Lynch, 69 Atl. 541, 543, 81 Vt. 101.

There is a distinction between a "sale" and an "exchange" or "barter," in that in an exchange of property the price or value is not measured in money terms. Duke v. State, 41 South. 170, 146 Ala. 138 (citing Gunter v. Leckey, 30 Ala. 591, 596; Coker v. State, 8 South. 874, 91 Ala. 92, 94).

"Where one commodity is exchanged for another of the same or different kind, without agreement as to price or reference to money payment, the transaction is not a 'sale,' but a 'barter' or 'exchange.'" State v. Brown, 102 S. W. 394, 395, 83 Ark. 44, 119 Am. St. Rep. 109 (quoting and adopting the definition in Gillan v. State, 2 S. W. 185, 47 Ark. 555).

The court, in determining whether there has been a sale or exchange of personal property, will determine whether there is a fixed price at which the properties are to be exchanged, and, if there is such fixed price, the transaction is a sale; otherwise, it is an exchange. Fagan v. Hook, 111 N. W. 981, 982, 134 Iowa, 381.

Under Revisal 1905, § 3957, providing that all cotton seed meal offered for "sale" shall have branded on the bag containing it or on a tag attached thereto the weight of the package, the ingredients, and the name and address of the manufacturer, an exchange of a ton of cotton seed for 1,333½ pounds of cotton seed meal is a sale within the statute. State v. Southern Cotton Oil Co., 70 S. E. 741, 742, 154 N. C. 635.

Where a defendant disposed of stock at a fixed valuation and took other property in payment at fixed valuations, this constituted a sale, rather than an exchange, as affecting defendant's liability for a share of commissions for the sale of the stock under a partnership agreement. Goodwin v. Mortsen (Tex.), 128 S. W. 1182, 1184.

Where the owner of fruit has it manufactured into liquor, receiving the product of the identical fruit furnished, the distiller is not guilty of a "sale of liquor"; but if the fruit is exchanged for liquor already manufactured, or if the distiller furnishes the owner of the fruit liquor in advance, the transaction is a "sale." Barnes v. State (Tex.) 88 S. W. 805, 806.

An "exchange" of liquor for other liquor is a "sale" within the local option law. In such case there is no distinction between a sale and an exchange: that is, a sale includes an exchange. Brown v. State, 114 S. W. 198, 200, 121 Tenn. 186 (citing Keaton v. State, 38 S. W. 522, 36 Tex. Cr. R. 259).

The word "sale," as used in a statute prohibiting sale of liquors in a local option district, is used in its broader sense including barter and exchange and not in the restricted technical sense of a sale for a money price. Where a physician delivered to his patient whisky in exchange for money and said that the whisky belonged to another patient, and the understanding was that the bottle ordered by the patient should replace the one delivered, the transaction amounted to a "sale." Daniel v. State, 125 S. W. 37, 38, 57 Tex. Cr. R. 467 (citing Keaton v. State, 38 S. W. 522, 36 Tex. Cr. R. 259).

A "sale" in the ordinary sense of the word is a transfer of property for a fixed price in money or its equivalent; but, if the purchase price is paid by the transfer of other property, the transaction is more properly denominated an "exchange" or trade. Where, to acquire means of irrigating for lands so as to make them salable, they were transferred to a land and irrigation company, the owners taking stock and bonds therefor, the transaction was a consolidation of interests, and not a "sale" of the lands, within a contract entitling plaintiff to commissions for services in effecting sales of the land, and though plaintiff could not recover under a contract entitling him to commissions for effecting "sales" of lands, where they were conveyed to a corporation, the owners taking stock and bonds therefor, he could recover the reasonable value of his services in bringing about the transaction. Close v. Browne, 82 N. E. 629, 632, 230 Ill. 228, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 634.

A contract between an owner of South Dakota land and an owner of Illinois land stipulating that the former "sold" to the latter the South Dakota land at $16 per acre, and agreed "to accept as part payment" the Illinois land at $45 per acre, is a contract for the exchange of the lands, and not for a sale, within the Code, defining a "sale" as a contract by which for a pecuniary consideration called a price one transfers to another an interest in property, and defining an "exchange" as a contract by which parties mutually agree to give one thing for another, etc.; the price per acre being fixed in the contract to form a basis for an exchange, and no sale being intended by either party. Steere & Ballah v. Gingery, 110 N. W. 774, 776, 21 S. D. 183.

According to the definitions of the word "sale" in Bouvier's Law Dictionary, "An agreement by which one of two contracting parties, called the seller, gives a thing and passes the title to it, in exchange for a certain price in current money, to the other party, who is called the buyer or purchaser, who, on his part, agrees to pay such price;" in Five Per Cent. Cases, 4 Sup. Ct. 210, 110 U. S. 471-478, 28 L. Ed. 198, and Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Sanders, 47 Fed. 604-606, "A sale, in the ordinary sense of the word, is a transfer of property for a fixed price in money or its equivalent;" in Rapal. & L. Dictionary, "A transmutation of property or a right from one man to another in consideration of a sum of money as opposed to barter, exchange and gifts;" and in Century Dictionary, "A sale in its broadest sense comprehends any contract for the transfer of property from one person to another for a valuable consideration"—the word "sale" as used in Pol. Code 1895, § 1548, making it an offense "to sell or barter for a valuable consideration, either directly or indirectly, or give away to induce trade at any place of business, or furnish at any other public places, any alcohol or any intoxicating liquors," is to be construed in its broad sense, and therefore includes what is commonly known as barter and exchange. Howell v. State, 52 S. E. 649, 650, 124 Ga. 698 (citing James v. State, 124 Ga. 72, 52 S. E. 295; Cain v. Ligon, 71 Ga. 694, 51 Am. Rep. 281).

"Although it has been sometimes held that the 'sale' must be a transfer for money, and that every other transfer is an exchange or barter, the better opinion is that the transaction is still a sale, although the transfer is made for something else than money, provided each article is transferred at an agreed or the market value so that the one thing is received in payment of the price of the other." Where lands are valued at a certain sum, and other lands taken in payment therefor are valued at a less sum, and the difference is represented by promissory notes, it meets the criterion prescribed, which is "whether there is a fixed price, as a determination of the value at which the things are to be exchanged. If there is such a fixed price, the transaction is a 'sale,' but, if there is not, the transaction is an exchange." Ullmann v. Land, 84 S. W. 294, 295, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 422 (citing Tied. Sales, § 12; Thornton v. Moody [Tex.] 24 S. W. 331).

Contract for future delivery

The taking of an order for future delivery of intoxicants by one representing a foreign liquor concern, and acceptance of the price at the time the order is taken, constitutes a "sale" within an ordinance prohibiting sales of intoxicants; the order not appearing to be subject to the liquor concern's approval, and the transaction appearing to be an attempt to circumvent the law. State v. Small (S. C.) 60 S. E. 676, 677, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 451.

Contract for manufacture

Where the owner of fruit has it manufactured into liquor, receiving the product of the identical fruit furnished, the distiller is not guilty of a "sale of liquor"; but if the fruit is exchanged for liquor already manufactured, or if the distiller furnishes the owner of the fruit liquor in advance, the transaction is a sale. Barnes v. State (Tex.) 88 S. W. 805, 806.

Contract of sale

A "sale of property" is a contract, and, like every other contract, requires an agreement between two or more. A mere taking over of the property without any agreement with another competent to contract is not a sale. Lowe v. Ozmun, 86 Pac. 729, 732, 8 Cal. App. 387.

A "sale" prima facie means a sale effectual in point of law, including the execution of a contract where the law requires a contract in writing. Brown v. Gilpin, 90 Pac. 267, 271, 75 Kan. 773.

Where the owner of property negotiates to sell it, but the prospective purchaser does not bind himself by any contract to take the property, the arrangement is not a "sale" which would avoid the payment of commission to a broker who had previously been given the sale of the property, and who had obtained a purchaser without knowledge of the negotiations of the owner for the sale of the property. York v. Nash, 71 Pac. 59, 62, 42 Or. 321.

The verb "sell" and the noun "sale" vary in meaning according to the different context in which they are used. Ordinarily a sale is an executed contract—a completed transaction, binding on seller and buyer alike. In contracts creating the relationship of principal and real estate broker, however, a different meaning is generally given by construction. The broker "sells" when he finds a purchaser ready, able, and willing to buy on the terms proposed by the principal. A contract for commissions on sales entitles the broker to the specified compensation whenever through his influence such a prospective purchaser has been brought to the principal, though by reason of some fault or disinclination of the latter the sale is never completed or is consummated on terms somewhat different from those originally proposed by the principal. A contract of sale binding both the seller and purchaser is a "sale" within the meaning of the rule applicable to such relations. Humphries & Jackson v. Smith, 63 S. E. 248, 249, 5 Ga. App. 340 (citing Hill & Moultrie v. Wheeler, 58 S. E. 502, 2 Ga. App. 349; Rice v. Ware & Harper, 60 S. E. 301, 3 Ga. App. 579; Lindley v. Keim, 34 Atl. 1073, 54 N. J. Eq. 423; Rice v. Mayo, 107 Mass. 550).

"The word 'sale' does not necessarily, and in all connections mean that a conveyance must be made, or that the title must pass." But when nothing appears in the context of circumstances to control it, the word primarily means a consummated sale; that is, a sale and delivery, or a passing of the title. Thus, a complaint which alleges that plaintiff "sold" to defendant personal property for a specified sum, that defendant paid a part, and that the balance was due, owing, and unpaid, on account of the sale of the property, is an attempt to follow Code Civ. Proc. § 428, by stating the facts constituting the cause of action in ordinary language, and sufficiently alleges, after verdict, that the unpaid price was due by alleging a completed sale. Christensen v. Cram, 105 Pac. 950, 156 Cal. 633 (citing Eaton v. Richer, 23 Pac. 286, 83 Cal. 185).

There is no material variance between the petition, which alleges plaintiff's employment to procure a purchaser for a specified commission, the procurement of a purchaser, and the subsequent sale of the land to him, and the evidence, which shows that the owner and the purchaser procured by the broker entered into an enforceable contract for the sale and purchase of the land, and that the owner failed to perform, though the purchaser was ready and willing. Sanderson v. Wellsford, 116 S. W. 382, 384, 53 Tex. Civ. App. 637.

Issuance of stock

The original issuance of stock by a corporation is not within Laws 1905, p. 474, c. 241, as amended by Laws 1906, p. 1008, c. 414, imposing a tax on all "sales or transfers" of corporate stock, whether made on or shown by the books of the corporation, or by any assignment in blank, or by any delivery or any paper or other evidence of transfer or sale. People v. Duffy-McInnerny Co., 106 N. Y. Supp. 878, 879, 122 App. Div. 336.

Judicial sale

The word "sale," in Gen. St. 1894, § 4611, limiting the time for suing to set aside a guardian's sale, means a sale under license of the probate court, evidenced by confirmation and a conveyance resting thereon, though irregular in form. Brown v. Pinkerton, 103 N. W. 897, 898, 95 Minn. 153, 111 Am. St. Rep. 448.

Lease

A lease granting oil and gas mining privileges for a term of years is not a "sale of realty" as contemplated by section 5314, Comp. Laws 1909. Duff v. Keaton, 124 Pac. 291, 293, 33 Okl. 92, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 472.

A lease of the exclusive right to sell a patented article in a specified territory and agreement by the patent owners to protect lessee in the exclusive sale of the article for a specified term is a "sale of a patent right," within Gen. St. 1901, § 4358, regulating the sale of patent rights, and imposing a penalty for failure to comply therewith. State v. Morey, 105 Pac. 501, 502, 81 Kan. 149.

A mortgage by an owner of a plantation of crops grown by her or under her direction on the plantation during specified years, stipulating that, if she should abandon or sell the property before the maturity of the debt, the mortgagee might take possession, did not operate as a lien on crops raised during one of the years by the mortgagor's husband as a tenant, over and above the reasonable rent which he paid; a lease being a "sale" for a term. First Nat. Bank of Headland v. Howell, 51 South. 762, 763, 165 Ala. 383.

The term "sale," as used in the Constitution in reference to the disposition of school lands, means the transfer of the absolute or general property in the thing sold and a mineral lease given under Laws 1889, p. 68, c. 22, and the amendments thereof, providing for an issuance of a permit for the purpose of prospecting for the term of one year, with the right at any time to receive a mining lease of the land for 50 years for the purpose of mining, is not a sale of the land. State v. Evans, 108 N. W. 958, 99 Minn. 220, 9 Ann. Cas. 520.

Loan

Where accused let another have some whisky to be repaid in whisky, it was a "sale." Black v. State (Tex.) 151 S. W. 1053, 1055.

The mere lending of a bottle of intoxicants, to be returned in kind, as an accommodation, the transaction not being intended as a subterfuge, is not a "sale," violating the local option law. Ray v. State, 79 S. W. 535, 536, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 176.

A loan of a pint of whisky, the same amount to be returned by the borrower, constitutes a "sale," regardless of whether the person loaning it is a member of a club engaged in taking orders for whisky. Tombeaugh v. State, 98 S. W. 1054, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 286, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 937, 123 Am. St. Rep. 841, 14 Ann. Cas. 275.

Shannon's Code, § 6795, prohibits one to sell or tippie intoxicants within four miles of any schoolhouse; Acts 1899, p. 309, c. 161, § 1, replacing Shannon's Code, § 6780, substantially to the same effect, prohibits their sale without license; and Shannon's Code, § 6783, requires the provisions of the article to be construed liberally to prevent evasion. Accused loaned whisky to another under an agreement to return it in kind. Held, that the transaction was a "sale," within the meaning of that term in both statutes. Brown v. State, 114 S. W. 198, 200, 121 Tenn. 186.

"A 'sale' is an exchange of goods or property for money paid or to be paid." On a trial for selling liquor without a license, a witness testified that he asked accused to sell him some whisky; that accused replied that he could not sell, but that he would loan him some; that accused let the witness have two bottles of whisky; that nothing was said as to when the same should be returned or paid for; that about an hour and a half later the witness returned and asked accused what it cost to get the whisky there, and gave accused that sum, and told him that, when he made an order for whisky, to get the witness some, and keep that in place of what he had got. Held a sale as a matter of law. State v. Brown, 102 S. W. 394, 395, 83 Ark. 44, 119 Am. St. Rep. 109 (quoting and adopting the definition in Cooper v. State, 37 Ark. 412).

"It has been a question of more or less trouble, under the local option laws in the different appellate courts of the federal Union, as to what the term 'sale' imports. In some it is held that it imports only a money consideration; in others, that the exchange of intoxicating liquors for some other commodity is a sale; and, under peculiar circumstances, that the loan of intoxicating liquors to be returned in kind is a sale. It has also been held that intoxicants delivered in the payment of a debt, or for services performed, is a sale. In Texas the broader signification of sale has been held to be correct; and if the exchange, or even the loan, of whisky was intended to cover up a sale, that would constitute a violation of our local option statute. But none of the decisions to which our attention has been called in this state has ever held that the mere loaning of a bottle of intoxicants, to be returned in kind, as an accommodation, constitutes a sale. Under the facts of the Bruce Case, 36 Tex. Cr. R. 53, 35 S. W. 383, and Keaton's Case, 36 Tex. Cr. R. 259, 38 S. W. 522, the loan or exchange was done simply to cover up a sale, and these parties were carrying on a liquor traffic in the local option territory, and the loans were simply evasions of the law, and really were sales. But it was not intended by those decisions, nor is it the meaning of the law, and the Legislature certainly did not intend to hold as a sale the mere loan by one neighbor to another of intoxicants until that neighbor could secure and return the same amount of intoxicants. That in no sense would constitute a sale under our law. It would seem that, if a mere accommodation loan would constitute a sale, there would be two sellers and no purchaser, or there would be two sales; that is, the man who loaned the whisky and the man who returned the whisky would each be a seller. Our law is not intended to cover this character of transaction. The Constitution and the law both limit the transaction to a sale. If appellant simply loaned Riggins a bottle of whisky, to be returned when Riggins' whisky came by express, and it was not intended as a subterfuge to cover a sale, he would not be guilty; and this phase of the law should have been presented to the jury." Ray v. State, 79 S. W. 535, 536, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 176.

Where defendant, for the accommodation of a third person, took his money and procured whisky from another person and delivered it to him, without any interest in it or profit from it, he was not guilty of a "sale." Simpson v. Commonwealth, 152 S. W. 255, 256, 151 Ky. 442.

One who buys liquor for another with money furnished by the other, and who neither has any interest in the liquor nor acts as agent for the seller, is not a seller of liquor, but if, in taking the other's order for such liquor, he is peculiarly interested in the transaction, it is a "sale" on his part. Lee v. Commonwealth, 136 S. W. 624, 143 Ky. 355.

Where a person, having secured a doctor's prescription for whisky for his own use, procured the whisky thereon for another with the other's money, his act constituted a "sale" by him within the local option law, whether he made a profit or not. Hawkins v. State, 114 S. W. 813, 814, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 75, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1008, 131 Am. St. Rep. 790.

Where accused ordered liquor for another from a dealer without the state, receiving an amount sufficient to pay therefor, accused was an agent, and was not liable under Code 1907, § 7363, making it an offense to aid in an unlawful sale or purchase or other unlawful disposition of liquor, or to act as agent of the purchaser in procuring an unlawful purchase, etc.; the separation of accused's part of the liquor from that ordered for the other not being a "sale" or "other unlawful disposition of" liquor within the statute. Vernon v. State, 50 South. 57, 58, 161 Ala. 83.

An instruction that it was not necessary that a party should make a profit in his business in order to be guilty of pursuing the occupation of selling intoxicating liquors was not an improper limitation on the meaning of the words, "occupation" or "business," as used in the statute, and was proper where the evidence showed that accused would order whisky for his store customers, and charge it in their store account at cost to be paid when the rest of the account was paid, since each of these transactions constituted a "sale." Dickson v. State (Tex.) 146 S. W. 914, 919.

A conviction for selling intoxicating liquors without a license is not justified on a showing that defendant purchased whisky for others at their request and with their money. "If one, seeing his neighbor on his way to town, requests him to purchase for him a bottle of whisky, promising to return the purchase money when he sees him, and the neighbor does so, and leaves the bottle at the house of the one for whom he purchased, this does not render the party purchasing the whisky guilty of making a 'sale.'"

Whitmore v. State, 77 S. W. 598, 599, 72 Ark. 14.

Gift of liquor

In view of the other provisions of the prohibitory law, the section thereof which forbids the "giving" of intoxicating liquor to minors must be construed to have reference only to gifts properly so called, and not to "sales," and therefore a conviction upon an information drawn under that section cannot be sustained by proof that the defendant sold intoxicating liquor to a minor. State v. Fletcher, 87 Pac. 729, 730, 74 Kan. 620 (citing Com. v. Davis, 75 Ky. [12 Bush] 240; Young v. State, 58 Ala. 358; Parkinson v. State, 14 Md. 184, 74 Am. Dec. 522).

"Sale," as used in the local option law of 1887 (Laws 1887, p. 179; Rev. St. 1899, c. 22, art. 3), entitled "An act to prevent the evils of intemperance by local option in any county of the state and cities of 2,500 inhabitants or more by submitting the question of prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquor to the voters," did not cover the mere gift of a drink of liquor by a private person, who is in no sense a dealer in liquors, to one of his friends as a mere act of courtesy or hospitality. State v. Fulks, 105 S. W. 733, 737, 207 Mo. 26, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 430, 13 Ann. Cas. 732.

Serving liquor in club or lodge

The distribution of intoxicating liquors among the members of a club is a "sale" within the law. State v. Johns, 118 N. W. 295, 299, 140 Iowa, 125.

Where an incorporated club purchased liquors in bulk with money in the treasury, a sale of the same at the usual price, though made only to its members, constitutes a "sale" within the prohibition laws. Adams v. State (Tex.) 145 S. W. 940, 942.

The distribution of intoxicating liquors in less quantity than five gallons by a social club to its members for a consideration, though without profit, is a "sale," within Rev. Laws 1905, § 1519, and is prohibited, unless protected by license. State ex rel. Young v. Minnesota Club, 119 N. W. 494, 495, 106 Minn. 515, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1101.

The dispensing by a bona fide social club to its members without profit, and as incidental merely to its organization, of intoxicating liquors, is a "sale," within the statute declaring a punishment for whoever, not having a license to keep a dramshop, sells intoxicating liquors to be drank on the premises. South Shore Country Club v. People, 81 N. E. 805, 806, 228 Ill. 75, 12 L. R. A. [N. S.] 519, 119 Am. St. Rep. 417, 10 Ann. Cas. 383 (citing People v. Law & Order Club, 67 N. E. 855, 203 Ill. 127, 62 L. R. A. 884).

Transactions whereby an incorporated club issues coupon books to its members at a fixed price redeeming the coupons in liquors carried by the club constitute "sales," though no profits result to the club, since it is no defense to a charge of unlawfully disposing of liquor that the sale was made at a loss. Bachelors' Club v. City of Woodburn, 119 Pac. 339, 343, 60 Or. 331.

The furnishing of liquors to the members of an incorporated club by the officers or employees thereof is a "sale," in violation of a city ordinance prohibiting the selling of intoxicating liquors, though the club is bona fide, and the directors and managers, as well as the bartender actually making the sale, are liable; the directors and managers because authorizing the sale, and the bartender because making the sale. Lloyd v. Canon City, 103 Pac. 288, 289, 46 Colo. 195.

The property of a social club which sold liquor to its members is owned in common by its stockholders, and the money paid for liquor goes into the corporate fund in lieu of the liquor received by him, which belonged to the corporation, and is used to support the club, so that, if there be a profit from the sales of liquor, it lessens the amount which those members not purchasing liquor from the club would have to pay. Held, that the dispensing of liquor to club members is a "sale," within San Diego City Charter, c. 2, subd. 33, authorizing the council to regulate the sale of intoxicants. In re Cutting, 121 Pac. 304, 305, 17 Cal. App. 604; Duff v. Keaton, 124 Pac. 291, 83 Okl. 92, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 472.

A steward of a club ordered beer for the members thereof, and placed it in the clubroom for them. A member stated that he paid a dollar for membership; that he got tickets, which represented his interest in beer the steward ordered; that, when the keg came, a ticket was put in the box and a glass of beer drawn, each ticket representing a glass; that the beer was ordered by the steward for the purchasers of tickets, and paid for by him. Held to establish a "sale" by the steward. Adkins v. State, 95 S. W. 506, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 524.

Rev. Pen. Code, § 822, provides that the word "person" includes corporations. Rev. Civ. Code, § 1299, provides that "sale" is a contract by which, for a pecuniary consideration called a "price," one transfers to another an interest in property. Held, that the exchange of liquors by an incorporated commercial club to its members for checks sold to them violated Rev. Pol. Code, §§ 2834, 2835, 2838, 2852, making the sale of liquors in quantities less than five gallons by any person, whether as owner, clerk, agent, servant, or employé, a misdemeanor. State v. Mudie, 115 N. W. 107, 110, 22 S. D. 41.

An Elks' club, through its board of control or its servant, kept intoxicating liquors at the clubrooms and delivered them to any member on request, for which he paid in cash, or had charged to his account, a price fixed by the board, and could consume it or otherwise dispose of it; the money received being used to replenish the treasury or buy other liquors and supplies. Held that, when the club members authorized the board of control to dispose of liquor belonging to the club, they relinquished their right to have the club property remain intact for joint use, and the disposition of liquor to members under such circumstances was a "sale," within an ordinance imposing a fine for the sale of intoxicating liquor. Manning v. Canon City, 101 Pac. 978, 979, 45 Colo. 571.

Where a commercial club organized as a corporation to advance, by social intercourse and friendly exchange of views, the commercial prosperity and growth of the city and state, maintains a stock of intoxicating liquors sufficient to fulfill the wants of its members and their guests, purchased by the club, at wholesale prices and supplied to the members thereof and their guests exclusively without pecuniary profit in small quantities or in individual drinks to be consumed within the club rooms merely as an incident to the main objects and purposes of the club, such distribution is a "sale" within Rev. Codes, § 1506, making it unlawful to sell liquors without having procured a license and given bond. Ada County v. Boise Commercial Club, 118 Pac. 1086, 1089, 20 Idaho, 421, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 101.

A club was incorporated for social purposes. A manager devoted his time to the management of its affairs. A membership fee of $1 was paid to him. The members of the club obtained beer by purchasing tickets. The beer was obtained the day after the purchase of the tickets. The manager instructed the members how to order beer by stating that, when the members wanted beer, they should put money in a box and take out a ticket for each nickel, and that the beer could be procured at the clubroom the following night. Held, that the club members, when they paid their money into the treasury, parted with it to the club, so that when it sent out the money it bought beer on its own behalf, making the manager liable for a "sale." Feige v. State, 95 S. W. 506, 509, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 513 (citing Krnavek's Case, 41 S. W. 612, 38 Tex. Cr. R. 44).

Accused was steward of a fraternal benefit association, incorporated under the state laws in good faith as such, and not merely for evading the liquor laws. Some of the local lodges served liquors to the members, while others did not; the lodge of which accused was steward being among the former. The stock of liquors, cigars, etc., was purchased by the lodge and paid for from its treasury, and only members were admitted to the lodgeroom where liquor could be obtained; it being necessary, to obtain it, for a member to purchase a card from the secretary for $1, and have certain amounts punched from the margins of the card by the steward in payment for liquor. The revenue derived from the sale of cards was used solely to keep up the liquor stock and pay lodge expenses. Held, that accused's dispensation of intoxicants to a lodge member was a "sale," contrary to the local option law. State v. Robinson, 146 S. W. 456, 163 Mo. App. 221.

An incorporated social club maintained in the club quarters containing parlors, bedrooms, dining rooms, etc., a room where liquors were furnished to members and nonresident guests. Slips were signed by the member showing the character of the liquors furnished and the cost thereof, and these slips were turned in by the employé in charge of the room to the club's bookkeeper, and were charged to the accounts of the member, and were paid by him. The liquors were purchased by the club at wholesale, and were furnished to the members and nonresident guests at the prices usually charged by retail dealers. Held, that the transaction was a sale within an ordinance prohibiting any person from selling or disposing of liquors without obtaining a license, and authorizing a person desiring to keep a barroom to apply for a license, etc.; a "sale" being an agreement by which title passes from one and vests in another, and a "barroom" being a room in which liquors are kept with the intention to furnish them to be drunk on the premises. City of Spokane v. Baughman, 103 Pac. 14, 16, 54 Wash. 315.

When intoxicating liquors are purchased by an unincorporated social club, to be used only by members and specially invited guests, the members paying therefor a price fixed by a club regulation not intended for making a profit, but merely to cover the outlay and replenish the stock, it is generally conceded that the members of the organization are the joint owners of the general property in all the alcoholic drinks thus kept, that the officer who, upon a request therefor, dispenses such liquor to members of the club, is their agent, and that the delivery of a quantity of such goods to a member, though for a consideration, whereby a special property is transferred, is not, in the strict sense of the term, a "sale," because the element of a bargain is lacking. Under the local option law (Laws 1905, p. 48, § 15), forbidding under penalty any person in prohibition territory to sell, exchange, or give away, with intent to evade the provisions of the law, any intoxicating liquors whatsoever, where intoxicating liquors are purchased by an incorporated society, and sold or distributed to the members at approximate cost, the act constituted a "sale." State v. Kline, 93 Pac. 237, 241, 50 Or. 426.

Mortgage

A "sale" is an agreement by which one of two contracting parties, called the seller, gives a thing and passes title to it in exchange for a certain price, and a chattel mortgage is not within the definition. Noble v. Ft. Smith Wholesale Grocery Co., 127 Pac. 14, 17, 34 Okl. 662, 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 455.

A mortgage is not a "sale" or "alienation," within Ky. St. § 4021 (Russell's St. § 5913), providing that the lien on property for taxes shall not be defeated by sale or alienation, unless made more than five years before suit to enforce the lien; and a mortgagee, acquiring a mortgage more than five years before a suit to enforce a tax lien, is not within the statute. Rissberger v. City of Louisville (Ky.) 118 S. W. 319.

Under the statutes of the territory and of the state of Montana a mortgage does not possess any of the characteristics of a sale, but has always been considered a mere lien, fixed upon property by contract of the parties, to secure the payment of a particular obligation or the performance of a particular act. A "sale" passes title to the property, while a mortgage does not. Under Prob. Prac. Act, §§ 367, 369, conferring on a guardian power to sell his ward's estate for the purpose of raising funds to pay debts or to maintain the ward, the guardian cannot be authorized to mortgage the land of his ward to secure a debt contracted for the improvement of the estate. Davidson v. Wampler, 74 Pac. 82, 84, 29 Mont. 61.

Mortgage sale under power

The sale, in the exercise of a power contained in a mortgage which conveys the title of the mortgagor, is only the "sale" as completed by the execution of a deed at the expiration of the period allowed for redemption. North Dakota Horse & Cattle Co. v. Serumgard, 117 N. W. 453, 460, 464, 17 N. D. 466, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 508, 138 Am. St. Rep. 717.

A sale to himself by a mortgagee of the mortgaged property under a power of sale, without insurer's consent, was a "sale," within a fire policy provision that the policy should be void on sale of the property without insurer's assent, though the policy was made payable to the mortgagee as its interest might appear. Boston Co-operative Bank v. American Central Ins. Co., 87 N. E. 594, 201 Mass. 350, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1147.

Option

An option is not a "sale." An option to purchase does not become a contract to purchase until the privilege given by the option has been exercised by an acceptance. Kessler v. Pruitt, 93 Pac. 965, 971, 14 Idaho, 175 (citing Hopwood v. McCausland, 94 N. W. 469, 120 Iowa, 218).

A delivery of an article at a fixed price, to be paid for or returned, constitutes a "sale." State v. Betz, 106 S. W. 64, 66, 207 Mo. 589.

Order for goods subject to cancellation

An order for goods subject to cancellation by vendee is not a "sale," within a contract entitling a salesman to a commission on sales. Wolfsheimer v. Frankel, 115 N. Y. Supp. 958, 960, 130 App. Div. 853.

Conveyance to corporation for stock and bonds

Where testamentary trustees conveyed factories belonging to the estate to a corporation organized for the purpose, and received stock and bonds in return, to enable them to sell the property more advantageously, the transfer did not constitute a "sale," within the meaning of the will, which directed the executors to sell the original property as soon as possible, so that the direction to sell the property was applicable to the securities received. Bartlett v. Slater, 97 N. E. 991, 993, 211 Mass. 334.

A "sale," in the ordinary sense of the word, is a transfer of property for a fixed price in money or its equivalent; but if the purchase price is paid by the transfer of other property, the transaction is more properly denominated an "exchange" or "trade." Where, to acquire means of irrigating for lands, so as to make them salable, they were transferred to a land and irrigation company, the owners taking stock and bonds therefor, the transaction was a consolidation of interests, and not a "sale" of the lands, within a contract entitling plaintiff to commissions for services in effecting sales of the land, and though plaintiff could not recover under a contract entitling him to commissions for effecting "sales" of lands, where they were conveyed to a corporation, the owners taking stock and bonds therefor, he could recover the reasonable value of his services in bringing about the transaction. Close v. Browne, 82 N. E. 629, 632, 230 Ill. 228, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 634.

Conveyance or transfer in payment of debt

Where money was borrowed from B. or furnished by him to defendant for the purpose of taking whisky from an express office, and the whisky was turned over to B. in discharge of such debt, it constituted a "sale." Fields v. State, 107 S. W. 857, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 451.

A delivery of goods to another, who was to sell them on a commission, the proceeds to be credited on notes of the owner held by the one to whom the goods were delivered, was not a "sale" and delivery of the goods to him, resulting in an obligation to pay therefor. Collyer v. Krakauer, 107 N. Y. Supp. 739, 740, 122 App. Div. 797.

Plaintiff sold his merchandise, fixtures, and business to K., who, being unable to pay the balance of the price, retransferred the property to plaintiff in bulk, in consideration of the satisfaction of the debt, without making an inventory or furnishing a list of his creditors and notifying them, as required by St. 1903, p. 276, c. 415, regulating sales in bulk. Held, that such retransfer, though an accord and satisfaction of K.'s debt to plaintiff, was also, in respect to the merchandise, a "sale" within such act, and was therefore fraudulent as against K.'s creditors. Gallus v. Elmer, 78 N. E. 772, 193 Mass. 106, 8 Ann. Cas. 1067.

Although the word "sale" does not in the letter comprehend a transaction in which money alone passes, yet as used in a Code provision making void the "sale" of the wife's separate estate to the husband's creditors in extinguishment of the debt, and declaring invalid any "sale" by or to her husband, made without the sanction of the judge of the superior court, the transaction itself, in respect to its effect on the wife's fortune, would be the same, and that is the thing to be regarded. Payment by the wife of the husband's debt, whether made in money or other effects belonging to her, is void, if the creditor have notice of her title; and the same rule applies where, with like notice to the creditor, the payment is made by the husband with her money, whether she consents to it or not. Under this rule a transfer by a married woman to her husband of a bond for titles, on consideration that he carry out her obligations as to payment of the debt therein referred to, is a sale by her of her separate property, and is invalid, in the absence of an order of the superior court of her domicile allowing the same. Webb v. Harris, 53 S. E. 247, 248, 124 Ga. 723 (citing Humphrey v. Copeland, 54 Ga. 545).

Promise to sell

A "promise to sell," with some modification, is equivalent to a "sale." Stafford v. Richard, 46 South. 107, 108, 121 La. 76.

A "promise of sale" amounts to a "sale," and specific performance of it will be enforced. Girault v. Feucht, 41 South. 572, 574, 117 La. 276 (citing McDonald v. Aubert, 17 La. 450; Peck v. Bemiss, 10 La. Ann. 160).

In a "promise to sell," the thing, the price, and the consent are essentials. Kaplan v. Whitworth, 40 South. 723, 725, 116 La. 337.

A "promise to sell" is in effect a "sale." This is the rule when the promise is not accompanied by a conditional or binding clause; but a promise provided the title was approved was not a pure and simple "promise to sell." Flournoy v. Miller, 38 South. 818, 819, 114 La. 1028.

A "promise to sell" amounts to a "sale," when there exists a reciprocal consent of both parties as to the thing and the price thereof; but to have effect either between the contracting parties or with regard to other persons the promise to sell must be vested with the same formalities as are prescribed by statute concerning "sales" in all cases where the law directs that the sale shall be committed to writing. But if the promise to sell has been made with the giving of earnest, each of the contracting parties is at liberty to recede from the promise, to wit, he who has given the earnest by forfeiting it, and he who has received it by returning the double. Civ. Code, arts. 2462, 2463. Smith v. Hussey, 43 South. 902, 904, 119 La. 32.

Relinquishment

Senate Bill No. 47, Act Feb. 8, 1911, authorizing the state land board to relinquish to the general government unsurveyed school sections in exchange for surveyed, unreserved, and unappropriated public lands within the state, equivalent thereto in area and value, in legal subdivisions and as contiguous as may be to the sections in lieu of which it is taken, is not a "sale" of school lands, within Const. art. 9, § 8, providing that no school lands shall be sold for less than $10 per acre, and that a sale or disposal of the land must be made at public auction, but is rather a simple exchange of lands, whereby the state would be enabled to procure an equivalent area of land to which it could obtain immediate possession. Rogers v. Hawley, 115 Pac. 687, 690, 19 Idaho, 751.

Sale on condition

Where a peddler delivered goods on an understanding that title should vest in the one to whom they were delivered on payment of all the installments of "rent," the transaction amounted to a "sale," within Acts 1902-03-04, p. 484, c. 27 (Va. Code 1904, p. 2223), making sales by peddlers unlawful unless a license has been issued. Crall v. Commonwealth, 49 S. E. 638, 640, 103 Va. 855; Id., 49 S. E. 1038, 103 Va. 862 (citing City of South Bend v. Martin, 41 N. E. 315, 142 Ind. 31, 29 L. R. A. 531; Evansville & T. H. Ry. Co. v. Erwin, 84 Ind. 457; Lanman v. McGregor, 94 Ind. 301).

Sale on credit

In order to constitute a "sale" of whisky in violation of the local option law, it is not necessary that the purchaser deliver to the seller the money for the whisky; but it is necessary that both parties assent to the sale and payment, if any is made or is to be made therefor. Dawson v. State, 117 S. W. 136, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 315.

A "sale" is the transfer of the property in goods to another for an agreed price, and generally the title or property in the thing transferred passes to the purchaser as soon as delivery is made according to the terms of the contract. It is not necessary that the price agreed upon be paid to constitute a sale; but credit may be extended for the agreed price, and the title will pass as fully and effectually as if the consideration had been paid before the delivery, if delivery is actually consummated, unless a different intention is manifested by agreement or otherwise. Hill Veneer Co. v. Monroe, 189 Fed. 834, 836.

Traffic

One engaged in the "traffic" of whisky is guilty of selling whisky, within the meaning of an ordinance regulating the "sale" of liquor. State v. Small, 63 S. E. 4, 5, 82 S. C. 93, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 454.

SALE AFTER SIX MONTHS

An entry of judgment, providing for "sale after six months," fairly meant a decree of foreclosure and for the sale of the land described in the mortgage after a six-months stay of execution in accordance with the statute in force at the time the mortgage was given. Brunbaugh v. Wilson, 107 Pac. 792, 794, 82 Kan. 53.

SALE AND DELIVERY

For a salesman to have the goods with him at the time of a sale, and deliver them, constitutes a "sale and delivery." In re Abel, 77 Pac. 621, 622, 10 Idaho, 288.

SALE AND RETURN

See, also, Sale or Return.

A "sale and return" is a sale with the right of the buyer to return the goods at his option within a reasonable time. Where a dealer delivered jewelry to M. with the right to sell it and pay the dealer a specified sum, M. having the right to dissolve the transaction by return of the goods within a reasonable time after the transaction, no specific time being stipulated, it was a "sale and return," and the title passed to M.; the right to return the goods and dissolve the transaction being a condition subsequent. William Frantz & Co. v. Fink, 52 South. 131, 134, 125 La. 1013.

SALE AS A BEVERAGE

The fact that insured was the driver of a beer wagon for a brewing company, taking orders for beer from dealers, and delivering it to them, and collecting therefor, would not constitute the "sale as a beverage" within the meaning of a by-law avoiding the certificate of any person engaging in the sale of spirituous or malt liquors as a beverage. Supreme Tribe of Ben Hur v. Lennert, 98 N. E. 115, 117, 178 Ind. 122.

SALE AT RETAIL

SALE BY ADVERSE PROCESS

"Sale by adverse process" means the divesting of title, and when the title is divested the property becomes subject to barter and trade. P. L. 1846, p. 353, chartering a cemetery company and providing that the cemetery land and personal property will not be liable to be levied on and sold for debts, taxes, or otherwise while used for cemetery purposes, is not repealed by General Sewer Act April 28, 1899 (P. L. 100), giving municipalities general power to assess the costs of authorized improvements against property benefited, or by Act June 4, 1901, § 5 (P. L. 364), as amended by Act March 19, 1903, § 3 (P. L. 43), providing that places of burial not used for profit shall not be subject to tax or municipal claim, except for sewer claims or sewer connections, etc. Appeal of Union Dale Cemetery Co., 75 Atl. 835, 836, 227 Pa. 1.

SALE BY AGREEMENT

To constitute a "sale by agreement," there must be an intent to sell and an intent to purchase, a purpose to pass title. Palmer v. Jordan Mach. Co., 186 Fed. 496, 512.

SALE BY RETAIL

See Retail.

SALE BY SAMPLE

See Selling by Sample.

"Ordinarily a 'sale by sample' is a sale of goods then in existence in bulk, but not present for examination by the buyer. Whether a sale is by sample depends upon the facts disclosing the intention of the parties." Alabama Steel & Wire Co. v. Symons, 83 S. W. 78, 81, 110 Mo. App. 41.

Every exhibition of a sample of goods to a purchaser at the time of a sale does not of itself amount to a representation that the sample exhibited has been taken from the bulk of the goods offered for sale, nor make the sale a "sale by sample," in the absence of an agreement to that effect. Columbia River Packers' Ass'n v. Springfield Grocer Co., 108 S. W. 113, 114, 129 Mo. App. 132.

A "sale by sample" is not accomplished whenever a specimen of the thing under consideration is exhibited to the buyer or discussed during the progress of negotiations; but there must be a definite intention on the part of both buyer and seller that a definite article shall be the standard to which every delivery must conform. In re Nathan, 200 Fed. 379, 381, 118 C. C. A. 531.

SALE BY THE TRACT OR ENTIRE BODY

A "sale by the tract or entire body," as those words are used in Civ. Code 1895, § 3542, means where a tract or body of land is sold as such, and not at so much per acre according to the acres which it may contain. Thus, if a tract of land should be described in a bond for title by metes and bounds, or by some descriptive name or designation which would describe it as a whole, and the number of acres should merely be stated as an additional description, this would be a "sale by the tract or entire body." Strickland v. Hutchinson, 51 S. E. 348, 123 Ga. 396.

SALE FOR CASH

See Cash Sale.

SALE IN BULK

SALE IN GROSS

Where a sale of land is of a specific tract by name or description, each party taking the risk of quantity, the sale is said to be a "sale in gross." Kendall v. Wells, 55 S. E. 41, 42, 126 Ga. 343.

Though land is described in a contract of sale by metes and bounds, the contract is for a "sale in gross." Hence the precise area in feet and inches is not of its essence. Lighton v. City of Syracuse, 96 N. Y. Supp. 692, 700, 48 Misc. Rep. 134 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, 638).

SALE IN THE USUAL COURSE OF BUSINESS

See Usual Course of Business.

SALE OF COMMODITIES

Where grantors of a shore front at a summer resort reserved the right to build a pier, covenanting not to permit the "sale of commodities" thereon, and to charge only an entrance fee, their covenant is not broken by charging for the use of roller skates at a rink on the pier, where all who pay the entrance fee may go to every part of the pier, including the rink. Atlantic City v. Associated Realities Corp., 67 Atl. 937, 938, 72 N. J. Eq. 634.

SALE OF FRANCHISE AND PROPERTY

Stock Corporation Law, § 16, which is entitled "voluntary sale of franchise and property," provides that a stock corporation with the consent of the holders of two-thirds of its stock may convey its property, rights, privileges, and franchises, or any interest therein, or any part thereof, to a domestic corporation engaged in a business of the same general character, and that, before the conveyance is made, such consent shall be obtained at a meeting of the stockholders. A stock corporation having operated a calendar department and employed salesmen and kept accounts for it separate from its other business but doing the printing or lithographing for such department, sold to a corporation, organized for the purpose, its business, assets, good will, and contracts with salesmen, in all about one-thirteenth part of its whole business. Held that the sale was not an ordinary business transaction, but a sale and transfer of a part of its franchise and property, within the meaning of the section. In re Timmis, 93 N. E. 522, 523, 200 N. Y. 177.

SALE OF TINWARE

A sale of the exclusive right to sell a patented article in a certain territory is not a "sale of tinware," within a statute exempting from statutory provisions as to peddlers one who sells tinware, although the article, the right to sell which is sold, is of tinware. Burns v. Sparks (Ky.) 82 S. W. 425, 426.

SALE ON TRIAL

A contract to install smoke consumers containing a guaranty to prevent smoke and a stipulation for a 60-day test of the device by the buyer, and for the removal thereof on its failure to satisfy, is a contract for a "sale on trial," which has elements in common with sales known as "sale or return," and "sale if satisfactory," and the title therein would pass only sub modo, if at all. Missouri Smoke Preventer Co. v. City of St. Louis, 103 S. W. 513, 518, 205 Mo. 220.

In the case of "sales on trial or approval," there is no sale until the approval is given, either expressly or by implication resulting from keeping the goods beyond the time allowed for trial. In "sales on trial," the mere failure to return the goods within the time specified for trial makes it absolute. Where defendants purchased certain agricultural machinery on trial, under a warranty that it would do a certain amount of work, which it failed to do, they were bound to offer to return the machine within a reasonable time, and, having failed to make any objection thereto for more than three months, and until suit for the price, they were estopped to deny liability therefor. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Arnold, 76 S. W. 323, 324, 116 Ky. 508 (citing Benj. Sales [4th Ed.] §§ 595, 596).

SALE OR RETURN

See, also, Sale and Return.

A "sale or return" is a bargain and sale upon a condition subsequent, title passing subject to the right to rescind and return. Giordano v. Nizzari, 115 N. Y. Supp. 719, 720 (citing Hunt v. Wyman, 100 Mass. 198, 200).

A contract for the sale of goods, whereby the title passes for the time being, but subject to the option of the purchaser to rescind, or return the property within the time stipulated, is a "sale or return." Ophir Consol. Mines Co. v. Brynteson, 143 Fed. 829, 833, 74 C. C. A. 625.

An option to purchase if one likes is essentially different from an option to return a purchase if one should not like it, and in the one case the title will not pass until the option is determined, while in the other the property passes at once, subject to the right to rescind and return. State v. Betz, 106 S. W. 64, 66, 207 Mo. 589.

Where plaintiff sent rings to defendant under an agreement that she should keep them and account to plaintiff for their specified value if she was pleased with them, otherwise that she should return them to plaintiff within a reasonable time, the agreement was not a contract of "sale or return," but was a mere option to purchase or return. "An option to purchase if he liked is essentially different from an option to return a purchase if he should not like. In one case, the title will not pass until the option is determined; in the other, the property passes at once, subject to the right to rescind and return." Gottlieb v. Rinaldo, 93 S. W. 750, 751, 78 Ark. 123, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 273.

In the case of "sale or return," the sale becomes absolute, and the property passes only after a reasonable time has elapsed without the return of the goods. Where defendant purchased certain agricultural machinery on trial, under a warranty that it would do a certain amount of work, which it failed to do, they were bound to offer to return the machine within a reasonable time, and, having failed to make any objection thereto for more than three months, and until suit for the price, they were estopped to deny liability therefor. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Arnold, 76 S. W. 323, 324, 116 Ky. 508 (citing Benj. Sales [4th Ed.] §§ 595, 596).

Where goods were delivered to a bankrupt on memorandum, the expectation of both parties being that, if the bankrupt signified his desire to keep the goods within 30 days from delivery, they should be charged to him, otherwise they should be returned, the transaction constituted a "sale or return," the title remaining in the seller until the expiration of the buyer's option, so that, on the buyer's becoming a bankrupt, the seller was entitled to a return of all such goods as had been delivered to the bankrupt within 30 days prior to the filing of the bankruptcy petition. In re Schindler, 158 Fed. 458, 459.

When goods are delivered to the buyer on a contract of "sale or return," the property therein passes immediately to the buyer, defensible by a return of the goods, within the time fixed for their return, or, if no time has been fixed, within a reasonable time. Where a pair of horses were delivered to a bankrupt a few days prior to his bankruptcy, under an agreement for their sale to him at a stated price, but subject to his right to return them if not satisfactory after trial, and he in fact never tried them, but they remained in his possession and passed to his receiver in bankruptcy, the transaction was one of sale or return by which, under the American rule, the title passed to the bankrupt, subject to be divested if the option to return should be exercised, and the seller could not reclaim the property. In re Landis, 151 Fed. 896-899 (quoting and adopting definition in R. M. Benjamin's Gen. Principles of the American Law of Sales [2d Ed.] pp. 80, 81).

Certificates of stock in defendant corporation were delivered by its agent to plaintiff pursuant to an offer to sell him the stock at a stated price. He did not pay for the stock, but agreed to visit the office of the company, when he returned the stock and refused to complete the purchase because the current price at which it was being sold was less than that stated to him. After further negotiations a written contract for the sale and purchase of the stock was entered into for a smaller price and by which the corporation and its president agreed to take the stock back and refund the money paid therefor with interest at a certain time, if plaintiff was not then satisfied to retain it. Held, that such contract was one of conditional sale only, or what is known as a "sale or return contract," by which no absolute title passed and was not ultra vires the corporation, as in violation of Mills' Ann. St. Colo. § 485, which prohibits the purchase by corporations of their own stock, except when forfeited for nonpayment of assessments; nor did it involve any use of corporate funds which could be detrimental to stockholders. Ophir Consol. Mines Co. v. Brynteson, 143 Fed. 829, 833, 74 C. C. A. 625.

SALE PER AVERSIONEM

There can be no "sale per aversionem," unless the object be designated by adjoining tenements, or conveyed from one fixed boundary to another fixed boundary. Minor v. Daspl, 54 South. 413, 414, 128 La. 33.

SALE UPON SUBSEQUENT CONDITION

"A 'cash sale' and a 'sale upon subsequent condition' are entirely different. In the first the payment of the purchase money and delivery of the property are concurrent acts, one and the same transaction, while the latter is a sale and delivery of the thing sold on condition subsequent, subject to be defeated by failure of the purchaser to comply with the terms of the contract of purchase. The former may be avoided by the vendor upon the failure by the vendee to pay the purchase money while the property is in his hands or in the hands of any other purchaser, unless the payment of the purchase price has been waived." Strother v. McMullen Lumber Co., 98 S. W. 34, 36, 200 Mo. 647 (quoting with approval from Johnson-Brinkman Commission Co. v. Central Bank of Kansas City, 22 S. W. 813, 116 Mo. 558, 38 Am. St. Rep. 615).

SALE WITHOUT A LICENSE

Where no separate bar is maintained in a room connected with the barroom in premises licensed for sale of liquor, serving liquor in said room is not a "sale without a license." People v. Fappiano, 138 N. Y. Supp. 667, 670, 77 Misc. Rep. 613.

A corporation sold liquor on its premises without having a license therefor. The county commissioners had issued a liquor license to a member of the corporation authorizing a sale of liquor on such premises. The commissioners intended to enable the corporation to sell liquors at such place, but determined to issue the license to the individual member, instead of to the corporation, which was entitled to a license, and intended that the license should operate as a license to the corporation and enable it to sell liquor without violating the law. Held, that a sale of liquor by the corporation was a "sale without a license," in violation of Gen. St. 1902, § 2690, prohibiting a sale of liquor without a license. Connecticut Breweries Co. v. Murphy, 70 Atl. 450, 452, 81 Conn. 145.

SALES OR SHIPMENTS

Plaintiff had a contract with defendant to sell barite in certain territory, at an agreed commission on all sales or shipments, whether made direct by plaintiff or otherwise forwarded, or made direct by defendant. Held, that the words "compensation or commission" and "sales or shipments" did not mean a consummated sale, but that plaintiff was entitled to a commission on procuring a purchaser ready, willing, and able to purchase. Concannon v. Point Min. & Mill Co., 135 S. W. 988, 991, 156 Mo. App. 79.

and being generally accepted to mean a person who sells goods for a merchant, and not to mean the merchant himself. United States v. Gin Hing, 76 Pac. 639, 640, 8 Ariz. 416.

Complainant contracted to solicit orders for the bankrupt for weather strips, and, when obtained, to superintend the placing thereof by workmen acting under his direction. The bankrupt paid the wages of the workmen and furnished the material, and out of the price retained the cost of the labor and material and 15 per cent. of the price additional, paying claimant whatever was left from the amount collected for his compensation. Held, that plaintiff was a "salesman," notwithstanding his duty of supervising the installation of the strips, and his compensation was "wages," within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 64b, 30 Stat. 563, entitling wages of workmen, salesmen, etc., to priority. In re Roebuck Weather Strip & Wire Screen Co., 180 Fed. 497, 498.

SALESMEN MAKING SALES

The term "salesmen making sales," as used in Rev. St. 1895, art. 5049, subd. 3, providing that every traveling person selling patent or other medicine shall pay the tax therein prescribed, except commercial travelers or "salesmen making sales" or soliciting trade, or salesmen engaged in the sale of drugs at wholesale, includes a person who sells and delivers the goods at the time of the contract, or, in other words, one who carries the goods with him, makes the sale, and delivers them. *Needham v. ### SALOL

"Salol" is a medicinal preparation which contains no alcohol as a component part, but in the preparation of which alcohol is sometimes used, and which may, and in some cases is, manufactured by other processes without the use of alcohol. It is dutiable as "medicinal preparations containing alcohol or in the preparation of which alcohol is used." United States v. Schering, 123 Fed. 65, 66, 59 C. C. A. 283, reversing Schering v. United States, 119 Fed. 472, 473.

SALOON

The word "saloon" has a varied meaning. It may be applied to a place for retailing spirituous liquors, or to many other kinds of places. McMurtry v. State, 43 S. W. 1010, 38 Tex. Cr. R. 521, 524.

The "saloon," in common parlance, is a place where intoxicating liquors are sold. Fourment v. State, 46 South. 266, 267, 155 Ala. 109.

"The popular idea associated with the word 'saloon' is that it is a room, rather than a building with several rooms. Webster also defines 'dramshop' as 'a shop or barroom where spirits are sold by the dram,' and therefore authority to keep a saloon at a certain street and number does not authorize the use of the whole building, but the room where licensee had his bar and ran his saloon was the place where he sold liquor, within the meaning of 'place' as used in the statute and city ordinances." Malkan v. City of Chicago, 75 N. E. 548, 551, 217 Ill. 471, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 488, 3 Ann. Cas. 1104.

A "saloon" is a building or place where liquors are kept for sale at retail, and may include more than one room. A room used by saloon keepers in connection with their saloon business is a part of the saloon, within the statute making it an offense to permit a female under the age of 21 years to remain in or about a saloon. State v. Baker, 92 Pac. 1076, 1078, 50 Or. 381, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1040 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6310).

The sale of soda water and ice cream in a drug store does not bring the proprietor thereof within the statute providing that keepers of "eating houses, restaurants, and saloons" cannot be lawfully granted permits for the sale of liquor. In re Henery, 100 N. W. 43, 44, 124 Iowa, 358.

In San Jose city ordinance July 1, 1908, entitled "An ordinance establishing the limits within which retail and wholesale licenses and transfers thereof will be granted," and providing that no license for any bar, barroom or saloon, or other public drinking place should be granted, etc., the words "bar," "barroom," and "saloon" were used, according to their commonly accepted definition, to mean rooms or places where intoxicating liquors were sold, and the ordinance was therefore not objectionable because the body thereof did not in terms mention intoxicating liquors. Richter v. Lightston, 118 Pac. 790, 791, 161 Cal. 260.

An allegation of the answer in an action on a benefit certificate that insured while a member engaged in the sale of malt, spirituous, and vinous liquors to be used as a beverage in the capacity of proprietor, agent, and servant—"that is to say, that on or about" a certain date, insured "engaged in the occupation of bartender in a saloon in the city of B."—sufficiently alleged a breach of the by-laws providing that a member who engages in the manufacture or sale of spirituous or malt liquors to be used as a beverage in the capacity of agent or servant shall forfeit all rights of membership; a "saloon" being a place where intoxicating liquors are sold as a beverage, and a "bartender" being one who works in a saloon serving the patrons with liquid refreshments. Schwane-kamp v. Modern Woodmen of America, 120 Pac. 806, 807, 44 Mont. 528.

An association of several persons, each paying a certain sum of money to one to have him procure and keep on hand a stock of intoxicating liquors, from which each might secure any quantity by paying therefor in cash, or, if the quantity did not exceed the value of $2, by charging it against that amount advanced nominally as a "membership" fee, was a "whisky saloon," within the prohibitory law. State v. Peak, 72 Pac. 237, 238, 66 Kan. 701.

SALOON BARTENDER

One employed about a restaurant and saloon, and who as an accommodation to his employer occasionally tends bar and sells liquor, though not employed or paid for that purpose, is not a "saloon bartender" or engaged in the "sale of * * * liquors * * * in the capacity of * * * agent or servant," within by-laws of an insurance order forfeiting the certificate of a member so employed. Stevens v. Modern Woodmen of America, 107 N. W. 8, 10, 127 Wis. 606, 7 Ann. Cas. 566.

SALOON KEEPER

Insured was a "saloon keeper," within a policy limiting the death benefits to be paid, though his wife was the owner of the saloon and he never served drinks, where she never had anything to do with its control, and he employed the bartenders, purchased the stock, deposited the money, made up the cash, paid the bills, performed a saloon keeper's duties, was commonly known as "Zeke," and the sign "Zeke's Place" was on the saloon. Solomon v. American Guild, 44 South. 387, 151 Ala. 297.

SALOON PURPOSES

A lease of a building for "saloon purposes" does not limit to sale of intoxicants exclusively, but permits sale of soft drinks and cigars. Hecht v. Acme Coal Co., 117 Pac. 132, 133, 19 Wyo. 18, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 773, 777, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 258.

A lease of premises for saloon purposes, made when it was lawful to sell intoxicants, and used by the lessee as a saloon for the sale of intoxicants, soft drinks, cigars, etc., until the prohibition law went into effect, is not terminated by the law so as to release the lessee from liability for future rent, for the business is not totally destroyed; the word "saloon" as used in the lease including the sale of intoxicants, but not excluding the sale of other things. O'Byrne v. Henley, 50 South. 83, 84, 161 Ala. 620, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 496 (quoting 7 Words and Phrases, pp. 6310-6311).

SALT MARSH

Meadow as including, see Meadow.

SALTS OF CINCHONA BARK

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 647, 30 Stat. 201, the provision for "salts of cinchona bark" includes derivatives of cinchona bark which preserved its essential medicinal element; and euquinine, which is such a preparation, though not chemically a salt, is within said provision. United States v. Merck & Co., 168 Fed. 244, 245, 94 C. C. A. 74.

SALVAGE

"Salvage" is compensation allowed to persons by whose assistance a vessel or her cargo or the lives of persons belonging to a vessel are saved from danger or loss. Gonzales v. United States, 42 Ct. Cl. 299, 310.

The underlying idea in all "salvage" allowance is a reward or bounty for services in saving property from impending danger or imminent peril of loss to the owner by one on whom no legal obligation rests to perform such service. The Job H. Jackson, 161 Fed. 1015, 1017.

"Salvage" is the compensation allowed to persons by whose voluntary assistance a ship at sea, or her cargo, or both, have been saved, in whole or in part, from impending sea peril, or in recovering such property from actual peril or loss, as in cases of shipwreck, derelict, or recapture. Central Stockyard & Transit Co. v. Mears, 85 N. Y. Supp. 795, 796, 80 App. Div. 452.

The word "salvage," as used in the maritime law, contemplates services rendered in connection with perils of the sea and to vessels or other craft and instrumentalities in use in the navigation of the sea or other waters, and there can be no lien for salvage for services rendered to a vessel while in a dry dock permanently attached to the shore for repairs in extinguishing a fire communicated to such vessel from buildings on the land; nor is a suit to enforce a claim for such services within the admiralty jurisdiction. The Jefferson, 158 Fed. 358, 361.

As between salvors and salvaged, "salvage" applies to the ship and cargo, if they were in imminent peril by sea, which is to be ascertained from the surrounding circumstances when the service was rendered, regardless of the cause of the peril. Pettyjohn v. Oregon Coal & Navigation Co., 113 Pac. 438, 439, 58 Or. 392.

Amount of award

"Salvage" is a reward for perilous service and skill, and not a quantum meruit for labor expended. The Minnie E. Kelton, 181 Fed. 237, 245.

The value of a "salvage service" performed is not to be estimated in the light of subsequent events, but of the facts which seem to surround it at the time. The Lowther Castle, 195 Fed. 604, 605.

"'Salvage' is a reward or bounty, exceeding the full value of their services, given to those by means of whose labor, intrepidity, and perseverance a ship or her goods has been saved from shipwreck or other dangers of the sea." The Lottie E. Hopkins, 133 Fed. 405, 407 (quoting and adopting the definition in the case of The Lyman M. Law, 122 Fed. 816).

"'Salvage' is in the nature of a bounty for extraordinary exertions, as distinguished from payment for ordinary exertions, being the outgrowth of public policy, and designed to encourage persons who are under no legal obligations to do so to go to the rescue of vessels exposed to perils beyond their own ability to subdue, by giving a reward in addition to compensation for the work done. The amount of such bounty or reward depends upon the success achieved, the value of the property saved, and the degree of danger from which it was rescued, and it is enhanced or diminished according to the skill or courage displayed, the time and labor bestowed, and the risk to persons or property encountered by the salvors. While there are many ingredients, the one essential element is that the property shall be saved from danger, either actually impending or reasonably to be apprehended. In the absence of such peril, it is not 'salvage,' however beneficial and meritorious the service may be." The Robert S. Besnard, 144 Fed. 992, 1002.

"Salvage" is personal in its primary character, and the ingredients of salvage service, as generally stated, are: "First, enterprise in the salvors in going out in tempestuous weather to assist a ship in distress, risking their lives to save life and property; secondly, the degree of danger and distress from which the property is rescued; thirdly, the degree of labor and skill undergone and displayed by the salvors; fourthly, the time occupied; fifthly, the respective values of the property salvaged and risked. When all these concur, a large award will be given. When none, or scarcely any, the compensation can hardly be termed a salvage compensation; but it is little more than remuneration pro opere et labore." Hence a mortgagee of a tug which had been sunk, who let lighters to the owner under hire expressly stipulated, is not a "salvor," where another raised the vessel and the lighterman whose boat was used performed no service, except as watchman, and the hire of the lighter not ranking as a salvage claim. The Thomas Morgan, 123 Fed. 781, 785 (quoting and adopting the definition in Newson, Law of Salvage, p. 1).

SALVAGE EXPENSES

Sums paid out to avert a loss, which, if it had occurred, would have fallen upon the underwriter, may fairly be regarded as in the nature of "salvage expenses," and may be brought within the meaning of the sue and labor clause of a marine policy; and the fact that there were expenses incurred to save the cargo alone, and that these expenses were incurred on land, cannot defeat the jurisdiction of a court of admiralty of a suit for their recovery under the policy. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Pacific Cold Storage Co., 157 Fed. 625, 629, 87 L. R. A. 14, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1161.

SALVAGE SERVICE

If the captors abandon a prize, a neutral bringing her into port will be entitled to "salvage." The Two Cousins, 42 Ct. Cl. 436, 445.

The rescue of a vessel already on fire, tied to a burning dock, an immense warehouse, filled with merchandise, giving out such heat as to drive men from decks of ships tied alongside was a "salvage service" of a high order. The Indian, 159 Fed. 20, 23, 86 C. C. A. 210.

A libel claiming compensation for services rendered by tugs in subduing a fire communicated from the shore to a vessel undergoing repairs in a dry dock from which all the water had been emptied states a claim for "salvage" within the admiralty jurisdiction. Simmons v. The Jefferson, 30 Sup. Ct. 54, 56, 215 U. S. 130, 139, 54 L. Ed. 125, 17 Ann. Cas. 907.

Libellant's steam propeller, worth $25,000, while towing a derrick down the Hudson river, saw a pier at Hoboken on fire, and, leaving her tow, went into the adjoining slip and rescued claimant's car float, worth $22,000, which lay outside of a barge then on fire. The float was in a position of considerable danger, and the steamer was also subjected to some risk; it being necessary to play streams of water on both vessels during the performance of the service, to prevent them from taking fire. Held, that the service was one of "salvage," for which libellant was entitled to an award of $1,000. The Car Float No. 19, 138 Fed. 435, 436, 437.

As requiring peril of property

Respondent steamship was moored to the pier of an oil company, extending from its yards in which there were a large number of tanks, when one of the tanks exploded with great violence, the oil became ignited, and created a large fire. The tank was about 1,400 feet from the vessel, but there were other tanks between and $15,000 cases of oil on the pier awaiting loading on the ship. It was dark, and the engines of the vessel were not connected with the steam. Held, that the services of a tug which towed her away to a safe place of anchorage were "salvage services," although the fire did not in fact reach the pier, and that the crew were entitled to recover salvage in the sum of $600; the owner having settled his claim. The Lowther Castle, 195 Fed. 604, 608.

Towage distinguished

There is no generic difference between "towage" and "salvage." The same service may sometimes be called by either name; but where a court decides that the service calls for "liberality," and holds that a bonus should be given in order to encourage similar services, then such court should properly and strictly call the service a "salvage" service, for "liberality is salvage, and there is no place for liberality in an action of contract." It often becomes material to draw a distinct line between "salvage" and "towage," because a reward ought sometimes to be given to the crew of the salving vessel, and other participants in salvage services; and such reward should not be given if the services were held to be merely "towage." The Rebecca Shepherd, 148 Fed. 727, 730, 733 (citing The J. C. Pfuger, 109 Fed. 93).

If a vessel is in a position which requires "towage" service only, the mere fact that she had previously suffered injury does not change the nature of the service to one of "salvage," unless there are some circumstances of peril, immediate or to be reasonably apprehended, from which the vessel is relieved, or some hazard encountered or unusual work done by the relieving vessel. The Robert S. Besnard, 144 Fed. 992, 1004.

There is no generic difference between "towage" and "salvage." The same service may sometimes be called by either name; but when a court decides that the service calls for "liberality," and holds that a bonus should be given in order to encourage similar services, then such court should properly and strictly call the service a "salvage" service, for "liberality is salvage, and there is no place for liberality in an action of contract." C. Pfuger*, 109 Fed. 93).

"Towage service" is often distinguished from "salvage service" by the fact that the former is aid rendered in the movement of vessels not in distress, while salvage service is confined to aid rendered to those in distress. It is immaterial to the liability of the insurer under a marine policy whether the loss or damage to which the tug was subjected arose out of a towage or a salvage service, where the policy insured the tug against loss and damage arising from or growing out of any accident caused by collision or stranding resulting from any cause whatever to any other vessel or vessels for which said steamer or its owners may be legally liable. Ferguson v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co., 125 Fed. 141, 142.

"A 'salvage service' is a service which is voluntarily rendered to a vessel needing assistance, and is designed to relieve her from some distress of danger, either present or to be reasonably apprehended." A steamer with two barges in tow attempted to seek refuge on a dark night, with the wind blowing 75 miles an hour, and in attempting to enter the harbor a collision occurred between the two barges, and the rear one was cast adrift half a mile from a shore on which she was being driven by the wind. A tug, in response to signals from the steamer, came to her assistance, and at her request went in search of the barge, and, having found her, took a line and started with her from the harbor. After proceeding a short distance the line slipped from the towposts, and the barge again went adrift and was driven on shore; the tug being unable to render further assistance owing to insufficient depth of water. The service performed by the tug was one of salvage, and not of towage. The S. C. Schenk, 158 Fed. 54, 59, 85 C. C. A. 384 (quoting McConochin v. Kerr, 9 Fed. 50, 53).

The tug Dauntless, with a barge in tow, navigating Chesapeake Bay at night in a gale on the way from Baltimore to Norfolk, was signaled for assistance by another tug having five barges in tow. Anchoring her own barge in Hampton Roads, the Dauntless then found that four of the other tug's barges had gone adrift, and was asked to find them and take off their crews. She found three of them anchored in mid-channel a mile east of Thimble Light; the other having been sunk and her crew saved by the lightkeeper. The three were in great peril, with the sea washing over them and their masters and crews in fear of losing their lives. At their request the Dauntless undertook to tow them to safety, and did so, taking first one on which there were a woman and a child, then the other two. The service commenced at 11:30, and continued until 9 in the morning, during which time weather conditions improved but little, and was attended by considerable danger to the crew, who were obliged to go on board the barges. Held, that the service was not one of "towage," but of "salvage," and one of merit, and that the Dauntless was entitled to an award from the one first rescued equal to 12½ per cent. of the value of the vessel, cargo, and freight money, and an award of 7½ per cent. from each of the others. The Carroll, 163 Fed. 425, 426.

Where the nature of a service rendered was in fact salvage, the burden rests on one who claims it to have been a towage service to plead and prove a binding contract for the towage. A "salvage service" is a service which is voluntarily rendered to a vessel needing assistance, and is designed to relieve her from some distress or danger, either present or to be reasonably apprehended, while a "towage service" is one which is rendered for the mere purpose of expediting her voyage, without reference to any circumstances of danger. Respondent steamship was moored to the pier of an oil company, extending from its yards, in which there were a large number of tanks, when one of the tanks exploded with great violence. The oil became ignited and created a large fire. The tank was about 1,400 feet from the vessel, but there were other tanks between and 15,000 cases of oil on the pier awaiting loading on the ship. It was dark, and the engines of the vessel were not connected with steam. Held, that the services of a tug, which towed her away to a safe place of anchorage, were "salvage services," although the fire did not in fact reach the pier, and that the crew were entitled to recover salvage in the sum of $800; the owner having settled his claim. The Lowther Castle, 195 Fed. 604, 605, 608.

Towing disabled vessel

The services of three tugs in freeing a steamship whose anchor chain, while anchored off Staten Island, had become fouled with that of another anchored vessel after a collision between them during a high wind, which still continued, held "salvage service," and entitled to be compensated as such; also, after such tugs and others had towed the steamship across the bay to a dock which was an ordinary towage service, their further service in rescuing her, when she had been broken loose from her moorings by the gale, and in protecting her from further injury by striking against the wharf, was a "salvage service." The Ciudad De Reus, 178 Fed. 802, 804.

The schooner Holden, laden with lumber, left Willapa Harbor, Wash., for China, but when 150 miles out lost her rudder and rudder post in a storm. She jettisoned a part of her deck load and rigged a jury rudder, with which she worked her way back to the strait of Juan de Fuca, which she reached in the night after 13 days. In the morning she hoisted distress signals. During the day she sailed across the strait, but came back to the same place on the Washington side with her jury rudder wrecked and with a list of some 9 degrees by shifting of cargo. Toward night the steam schooner Nelson came to her assistance and agreed to tow her to Port Townsend. After considerable difficulty and danger a line was passed aboard and a start made; but during the night, which was very rough, the hawser parted three times, and it was with difficulty that the Holden was again picked up. At noon the next day she was left safely anchored in Port Angeles. Held, that the service was clearly a "salvage service." The Willis A. Holden, 174 Fed. 5, 9, 98 C. C. A. 43.

A steamship went ashore when the tide was half flood, and at high tide made an unsuccessful effort to get off. Afterwards, she pumped out some of her water ballast tanks, lessening her draft forward 2½ feet, but was unable to get loose until the following day, when a tug, having left Boston for the purpose of offering assistance and arriving at about high tide, offered her services, which were accepted, and, having made fast a hawser, the steamship was pulled off by the efforts of both vessels, whereupon she proceeded to Boston by her own steam without further injury to herself or cargo. The actual time of pulling off did not exceed 15 minutes and the tug was absent 5 hours, and was at no time in any great or unusual danger, nor was the steamship in any serious danger of injury, except from resting on the bottom. Whether she could have released herself without assistance was doubtful. Held, that the service rendered by the tug was "salvage service," for which it was entitled to compensation. The Devonian, 150 Fed. 831, 383.

SALVOR

A "salvor" is defined to be a person who, without any particular relation to the ship in distress, proffers useful service, and gives it as a volunteer adventurer, without any pre-existing contract that connected him with the duty of employing himself for the preservation of the vessel. The Dumper No. 8, 129 Fed. 98, 99, 63 C. C. A. 600 (citing New York Harbor Protection Co. v. The Clara, 90 U. S. [23 Wall.] 15, 16, 23 L. Ed. 150).

A "salvor" is a person who renders voluntary service to rescue a vessel or property from marine peril, and who is successful in whole or in part. He has a claim which may be enforced by a suit against the ship, or its cargo, or both; and, more than that, he is entitled to the possession of the property saved, provided it is such personalty as may be reduced to possession, and has a lien for the salvage compensation until his claim is satisfied. Central Stockyard & Transit Co. v. Mears, 85 N. Y. Supp. 795, 796, 89 App. Div. 452.

SAME

See Substantially the Same; With Same Effect.

Under a statute requiring every judgment to be indexed in the judgment docket in the name of each defendant, the word "same," occurring immediately below the name of a judgment debtor on the index, constituted a sufficient index of the judgment next listed against him. Fulkerson's Adm'r v. Taylor, 46 S. E. 309, 102 Va. 314 (citing and adopting Cooke v. Avery, 13 Sup. Ct. 346, 147 U. S. 375, 37 L. Ed. 209; Willis v. Smith, 17 S. W. 247, 66 Tex. 31).

Last antecedent

The word "same," in a real estate mortgage securing a note, otherwise negotiable, providing that the mortgagor agrees to pay all the taxes and assessments, levied on the premises, and all taxes and assessments levied on the holder of the mortgage, for and on account of the same, does not refer to the word "premises," but discloses an intention to bind the mortgagor, not only to pay the taxes assessed against the mortgaged property, but also the taxes that the mortgagee might become liable for as owner of the mortgage, and the mortgage destroys the negotiability of the note. Garnett v. Meyers, 94 N. W. 803, 804, 65 Neb. 280.

Sanitary District Act (Laws 1889, p. 135) § 24, providing for the discharge of water collected in a district into the Desplaines river declared that when the drainage channel shall be completed and the water turned into the river to an amount of 300,000 cubic feet per minute, the "same" shall be a navigable stream. Held, that the word "same" referred to the channel of the sanitary district, and not to the water after it left the channel, and that the act did not therefore constitute a legislative declaration that the Desplaines river was navigable. People v. Economy Light & Power Co., 89 N. E. 760, 770, 241 Ill. 290.

Antecedent other than last

The certificate of publication of the notice of application for judgment of sale for an assessment, reciting that the foregoing "is a list of delinquent * * * lots" on which special assessments and special taxes remain due and unpaid, "with notices hereto attached, and that the same were duly published and advertised," is not ambiguous; the words "the same" applying to and including all the lists and notices thereinbefore mentioned. Gage v. People, 72 N. E. 1084, 213 Ill. 410.

The word "same," in a stipulation continuing a cause until the next term which stipulates that "we agree that the summons and the order of delivery was served upon the defendant * * * by delivering to him a true copy of the annexed, which is by this agreement made the original order herein on said day, and defendant waives all irregularities in the same," etc., refers to the subject of the sentence in which it appears, namely, to the summons and the order of delivery, and defendant, in order to secure a continuance, agreed thereby to waive all irregularities in the summons. Ammons v. Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co., 141 Fed. 570, 573, 72 C. C. A. 614.

SAME ACT

The words "same offense," found in the clause of the federal Constitution (Amend. art. 5), guaranteeing that no person "shall be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb," are not synonymous with the words "same act." In re Stubbs, 133 Fed. 1012, 1014.

SAME APPEARANCE

The object in a design patent is, not to identify the article as an article of trade, but to ornament it, so as to make it pleasing to the eye; and while "sameness of appearance" is identity of design, the test of infringement is not whether an ordinary purchaser might be deceived into buying one article for the other, but the sameness of appearance which constitutes "infringement" is the sameness of æsthetic effect on the eye of an ordinary observer. Bolte & Weyer Co. v. Knight Light Co., 180 Fed. 412, 414, 103 C. C. A. 558.

SAME AS LAST

Plaintiff contracted to sell goods as might be required by defendant during a specified period, payment to be made the 20th of the month for the goods shipped the preceding month. After the expiration of the contract plaintiff agreed to sell a specified quantity of similar goods to be delivered at intervals and paid for on receipt of invoice and bill of lading. Subsequently defendant ordered additional goods. Plaintiff replied that he would enter the order for the additional goods, "terms same as present order," and sent a memorandum providing for cash payment on receipt of each invoice. Defendant modified the memorandum by adding "same as last," which was accepted by plaintiff. Held, that the words "same as last" referred to the second agreement, and not to the first, especially in view of the fact that the parties so interpreted the words. Licking Rolling Mill Co. v. W. P. Synder & Co. (Ky.) 89 S. W. 249, 251.

SAME AS LAWFUL WEDLOCK

The clause "the same as if born in lawful wedlock" used in Comp. Laws Nev. 1900, § 3046, providing that an illegitimate child shall be the heir of its mother, does not allow him or his issue to inherit from her lineal or collateral kindred, since such statutes are strictly construed. Holmes v. Adams, 85 Atl. 492, 493, 10 Me. 107.

SAME BUSINESS

A crew operating an engine and one who engages as a day laborer in removing a boiler from the furnace plant of the company to its coal mines for use at the latter in getting out coal to be consumed in the furnace and locomotive are engaged in the "same business," within the meaning of Civ. Code 1895, § 2610. Georgia Coal & Iron Co. v. Bradford, 62 S. E. 193, 195, 131 Ga. 280, 127 Am. St. Rep. 228.

SAME CAUSE

See Neither Party, Etc.

Code Civ. Proc. § 2050, relieving one discharged on habeas corpus from being again arrested for the "same cause," means when imprisonment is based on the same information, and not imprisonment under a new information, followed by a lawful warrant. Sutton v. Butler, 133 N. Y. Supp. 936, 938, 74 Misc. Rep. 251.

An action by a passenger against a carrier for personal injuries and an action by his administrator against the carrier for his negligent death are for the same cause and between the same parties or their representatives within Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 456, and a deposition of the passenger taken in the action by him is admissible in evidence in the action by the administrator. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Huffman, 97 N. E. 434, 436, 177 Ind. 126.

SAME CAUSE OF ACTION

The "same cause of action" is where the same evidence will support both actions, although the actions may happen to be grounded on different writs. This is the test to know whether a final determination in a former action is a bar to a subsequent action. Jackson v. Thomson, 64 Atl. 421, 424, 215 Pa. 209.

The injury from pollution of waters of a stream flowing through plaintiff's farm from construction, without condemnation, of a city sewer into the stream, and operation thereof, being permanent, an action therefor and a subsequent action for continuance of the injury present the "same cause of action."—injury to plaintiff's land from wrongful appropriation of the stream for a public use—within Rev. St. 1909, §§ 1800, 1804, authorizing pendency of another suit for the same cause of action to be pleaded in bar of a second suit. Smith v. City of Sedalia, 149 S. W. 597, 599, 244 Mo. 107.

A judgment upon a judgment upon a note of a firm against a partner not served nor appearing in the first action is not obtained upon the same cause of action as the note, and is no bar to a subsequent action on the note. What is meant by the "same cause of action" is where the same evidence will support both actions, although the actions may appear to be grounded on different writs. This is the test to know whether a final determination in a former action is a bar or not to a subsequent action, and it runs through all the cases in the books, both for real and personal actions. First Nat. Bank of Albuquerque v. Lewinson, 76 Pac. 288, 12 N. W. 147 (quoting Rogers v. Odell, 39 N. H. 417).

SAME CIRCUMSTANCES

An instruction that "ordinary care" was such care as the great majority of mankind would and do exercise in the transactions of human life under like conditions and circumstances, was not erroneous because of the use of the expression "under like circumstances"; this being the equivalent of "under the same or similar circumstances," which is the proper standard. Warden v. Miller, 87 N. W. 828, 830, 112 Wis. 67.

SAME CONDITION

Improved city real estate left in trust by a will was leased for 99 years by authority from the court; the lease providing that the lessee should maintain the property in good condition and repair, that he should not remove nor destroy the improvements, that if he should cause improvements, repairs, or changes to be made he should "replace old improvements by new ones of equal value and fully as substantial," and that he should maintain insurance on the property, payable to the trustee of the estate, "for the use and benefit" of the beneficiaries under the will. It further provided that, should there be a partial or total loss of the buildings and improvements, the insurance money collected therefrom should "be applied and expended to replace said improvements upon said property in the same condition as before said damage occurred." Held, that such provisions were intended principally to afford security for the rent and the restoration of the property in unimpaired condition at the end of the term, and should be construed together with that purpose in view, that the provision that the insurance money should be used to replace the improvements "in the same condition" as before did not require the lessee, after the buildings had been destroyed by fire, to rebuild them in the same form as the old, but that his obligation was only to replace them with new ones "of equal value and fully as substantial," for which purpose he was entitled to the insurance money; nor did such provisions warrant the trustee, after collecting the insurance, and when the lessee was proceeding to build a large hotel on the property of four or five times the value of the old buildings, in refusing to pay over the insurance money on the ground that the beneficiaries did not approve of the building. Pike v. Cincinnati Realty Co., 179 Fed. 97, 99, 102 C. C. A. 391.

SAME DEVICE

A device which is constructed on the same principle, which has the same mode of operation, and which accomplishes the same result as another by the same means, or by equivalent mechanical means, is the "same device," and a claim in a patent of one such device claims and secures the other. Lourie Implement Co. v. Lenhart, 130 Fed. 122, 129, 64 C. C. A. 456 (citing Union Paper Bag Mach. Co. v. Murphy, 97 U. S. 120, 125, 24 L. Ed. 935).

SAME DISTANCE

While the holding in case of Wight v. United States, 17 Sup. Ct. 822, 167 U. S. 512, 42 L. Ed. 258, in which the court declared that section 2 of the Interstate commerce act prohibited any "rebate or other device by which two shippers, shipping over the same line the same distance, under the same circumstances of carriage, are compelled to pay different prices therefor," would seem to support the view that the shipment must be the "same distance," as the phrase is literally understood, still, when applied to the transportation of freight, such a construction is thought to be too narrow. The court does not say that there shall be the same mileage distance. If it is true that a place in question was regarded by the carriers as being practically in the same freight zone, then it is apparent that the ordinary signification of the phrase quoted is of latitudinal extent, and does not imply any precise space or limits between different points. United States v. Vacuum Oil Co., 153 Fed. 598, 607.

SAME FORM

See Same Size and Form.

Code Civ. Proc. § 407, provides that a summons must be directed to the defendant, signed by the clerk and issued under the seal of the court, and must contain the names of the parties, etc., and section 408, providing for the issuance of alias summons, requires that it shall be "in the same form as the original." Held, that section 408 meant that the alias summons should conform to the requirement of section 407, and did not preclude the insertion therein of the name of a defendant, which through a clerical error had been omitted from the original summons. Doyle v. Hampton, 116 Pac. 39, 41, 159 Cal. 729.

SAME GENERAL NEIGHBORHOOD

A person holding himself out to the public as a physician and surgeon is bound to have and exercise such skill as physicians and surgeons in the same general neighborhood in the same general line of practice ordinarily have and exercise in like cases. The phrase "the same general neighborhood," as so used, is of much broader application than would be the phrase "the same neighborhood." Sheldon v. Wright, 67 Atl. 807, 813, 80 Vt. 298.

SAME INVENTION

"Same invention," as used with reference to the reissue of a patent, includes whatever invention was described in the original letters patent and appears therein to have been intended to be secured thereby. The reissue, therefore, cannot be permitted to enlarge the claims of the original patent by including matter once intentionally omitted. Franklin & Co. v. Illinois Moulding Co., 123 Fed. 48, 50 (quoting Parker & W. Co. v. Yale Clock Co., 8 Sup. Ct. 38, 123 U. S. 99, 31 L. Ed. 100).

The question whether a reissue patent is for the "same invention," within Rev. St. § 4916, should be considered not merely as a verbal question, but as a substantial question to be solved by reference to the structure itself as well as to the specification and claims. The reissue may properly correct insufficiency of description of what is clearly shown in drawings as an obvious feature of the structure and may add claims adequate to protect the substance of an invention or inventions that fairly appear in the original and which the inventor sought to protect. Coldwell-Gildard Co. v. Stafford Co., 197 Fed. 568, 572.

SAME MANNER

In Code 1906, c. 127, § 12, providing that all causes in which orders of dismissal or orders of nonsuit have been set aside and the cause reinstated shall remain on the docket and be proceeded with "in the same manner" as if the order had never been made, the quoted phrase means with all the rights preserved, the same as if a nonsuit had never been suffered. Duty v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co., 73 S. E. 331, 334, 70 W. Va. 14.

In Rev. St. 1898, § 750, which provides that in certain cases the trial court may, by order entered in the minutes, "stating the cause therefor," appoint a suitable person to act as district attorney for the time being, and "in the same manner," and in its discretion, appoint counsel to assist the district attorney in the prosecution of criminal cases, the words "in the same manner" do not require the statement of the cause for the appointment of counsel to assist the district attorney in the record, but only require that the order be entered in the minutes as an order appointing a district attorney pro tem. is entered. Colbert v. State, 104 N. W. 61, 63, 125 Wis. 423.

In a will by which testator provided that on the death of one of his children one-third of the income of a trust fund should be payable in like manner for the benefit of his widow for life, and on her decease, leaving lawful issue of testator's son, then living, such one-third of the income and principal to go to such issue "in the same manner" as the other two-thirds had been decreed, the phrase "in the same manner" designated the mode in which the recipient should be benefited and did not describe the recipient. Sterling v. Ives, 62 Atl. 948, 954, 78 Conn. 498.

Const. pt. 2, art. 98 (99), provides for taking the sense of the qualified voters on the subject of a revision of the Constitution at meetings warned for that purpose and for a return of the votes to the general court, and if it shall appear by such return that in the opinion of the majority of the qualified voters there is a necessity for a revision, etc., the general court shall call a convention for that purpose, the delegates to be chosen "in the same manner" and proportioned as the representatives to the general court. Held, that the Legislature may provide for the election of delegates to the convention at the annual town meetings and at special elections to be held for that purpose in cities on the same date; the words "in the same manner," not implying, in view of other constitutional provisions and of legislative construction, that the choice must be made at the same time that representatives are elected. In re Opinion of the Justices, 79 Atl. 29, 30, 76 N. H. 586.

SAME MEETING

The session of a deliberative assembly convened in pursuance of a special motion adopted at a regular meeting to adjourn the meeting to a stated time, is a continuation of the regular meeting, at which the assembly can do anything it could have done at the earlier session, and is the "same meeting," within a rule of the counsel providing that, when a motion has been once made and carries, it shall be in order for any member voting with a majority to move for a reconsideration at the same meeting. Stiles v. City of Lambertville, 62 Atl. 288, 73 N. J. Law, 90.

SAME OFFENSE

The words "same offense," found in the clause of the federal Constitution (Amend. art. 5) guaranteeing that no person "shall be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb," are not synonymous with the words "same act." In re Stubbs, 133 Fed. 1012, 1014.

The term "same offense," as used in a statute providing for an increase in punishment where a defendant had previously been convicted of the same offense, means an offense of the same character, and not the same identical transaction. Kinney v. State (Tex.) 78 S. W. 225, 226; Muckenfuss v. State, 117 S. W. 853, 854, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 216.

Under Pen. Code 1895, art. 1014, authorizing increased punishment on a second and third conviction for the "same offense," a prior conviction for the violation of the Sunday law, without indicating the nature of the offense, is a conviction of an offense similar in character to the charge that accused opened his theater for public amusement on Sunday, authorizing increased punishment on his conviction. Muckenfuss v. State, 117 S. W. 853, 854, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 216.

As used in Bill of Rights, § 13, providing that no person shall for the "same offense" be twice put in jeopardy of his life or limb, the phrase quoted must be interpreted as equivalent to the same criminal act. Where one began a quarrel, and twice discharged his pistol in the street, then followed another into a store, pistol in hand, threatened to shoot, the whole affair occupying not more than ten minutes, he cannot be convicted, under Ky. St. 1899, § 1308, of flourishing and using a deadly weapon, after a conviction for shooting at random on the public highway. Carman v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 76 S. W. 1078, 1079.

An acquittal under an indictment charging robbery, making no reference to the crime having been committed in a place which the statute names in defining burglary, and not accusing defendant of having wrongfully entered such place, is not a bar to a prosecution for burglary with intent to murder, as defendant could not properly have been convicted under the first indictment of the offense charged in the second within the Bill of Rights, declaring that no person shall be twice put in jeopardy for the "same offense." Nagel v. People, 82 N. E. 315, 317, 229 Ill. 598.

Acts Tex. 1905 (29th Leg.) p. 372, c. 153, authorizing an injunction against the use of premises for keeping or exhibiting games prohibited by the laws of the state, was not in violation of the Bill of Rights, declaring that no person for the "same offense" shall be twice put in jeopardy of life or liberty, though the defendant, if he violated the injunction, might be punished for contempt and again for violating the criminal law; such offenses not being the same. In the former case he is punished for a violation of the orders of the court, and in the latter for an offense against the peace and dignity of the state. Ex parte Allison, 90 S. W. 870, 871, 99 Tex. 455, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1111, 122 Am. St. Rep. 653.

Within Bill of Rights, § 14, providing that no person for the "same offense" shall be twice put in jeopardy of life or liberty, nor be again put upon trial for the same offense after a verdict of guilty in a court of competent jurisdiction, the degrees of homicide are not distinct offenses, but are merely grades of one common offense, to wit, homicide; so that one may be tried upon an indictment for murder and convicted of manslaughter, and a new trial after acquittal of murder and reversal of a conviction of manslaughter is a trial de novo so far as concerns the introduction of evidence, so that evidence tending to show accused's guilt of murder is admissible, though under Code Cr. Proc. art. 762, he cannot be convicted of a higher degree than manslaughter. Cornelius v. State, 112 S. W. 1050, 1053, 1054, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 173 (citing and adopting Hirshfield v. State, 11 Tex. App. 207; Adams v. State, 16 Tex. App. 162).

SAME PARTIES

In the statute providing for the set-off of mutual demands, and providing that the set-off must be between the "same parties," the words "same parties" do not mean "all the parties"; and in an action against the maker and indorser of a note, joined in the same suit, the indorser may set off an individual claim against plaintiff growing out of the transaction which gave rise to the execution of the note. Wilson v. Exchange Bank, 50 S. E. 357, 358, 122 Ga. 495, 69 L. R. A. 97, 2 Ann. Cas. 597.

A judgment for or against a party will operate as a bar to another action against him alone, although other parties were joined with him in the first action and the subject-matter of the action adjudicated as to all such parties, the phrase "the same parties" in connection with the rule of res adjudicata not meaning that all the parties plaintiff and defendant to the first action must be joined in the later action to render the plea of estoppel available, but where the action is against a number of defendants and the merits litigated and adjudicated as to all, and the same plaintiff subsequently proceeds against one, the later action being between the "same parties" within the meaning of the rule. Sul-sun Lumber Co. v. Fairfield School Dist., 127 Pac. 349, 352, 19 Cal. App. 587.

SAME PIECE OF WORK

Where a railroad bridge gang, in repairing a depot platform, divided into two squads and removed cotton bales from a portion of the platform to another part on which the repairs had been made, and during the removal all the men worked together, they were engaged in the "same piece of work," within Sayles' Rev. Civ. St. art. 4560h, providing that all persons engaged in the common service of another, doing the same character of work, or working together at the "same piece of work," are fellow servants with each other. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Still, 101 S. W. 442, 445, 100 Tex. 499.

SAME RIGHTS

Gen. St. 1906, § 1389, provides that causes of action by and against the same parties in the same rights may be joined in the same suit, with immaterial exceptions. Held, that causes of action existing in favor of one individually and as an administrator or executor of another's estate are not "in the same rights" within the statute, the recovery in the former case being in a personal capacity, and in the latter in a representative capacity, in the right of another; and the cause of action accruing to the father of a deceased minor, under Gen. St. 1906, § 3147, giving a right of action for the death of a minor from the wrongful act of another, and the cause of action accruing to the administrator of a decedent, under sections 3145, 3146, cannot be joined in the same declaration. Pensacola Electric Co. v. Soderlind, 53 South. 722, 723, 60 Fla. 164, Ann. Cas. 1912 B, 1251.

SAME SIZE AND FORM

A patent of a circular knitting machine describes, as a substantial improvement intended to be covered, such a construction of the machine as to enable the finished work to be taken up either above or below the cylinder; an essential feature of such construction being the making of the two cylinders of the "same size and form." Held, that the term "same size and form" means substantially of the "same size and form"; "size" having reference to the diameter of the cylinder at either the knitting ends, and "form" having reference solely to the angle of inclination of the sides of the cylinder. Cooper v. Otis Co., 156 Fed. 665, 669.

SAME TAXES

Where a city charter provided that the city might collect a road tax from all property in the corporation equal to that then levied by law for road purposes, and that the citizens and property within the corporation should be exempt from the "same taxes" for county road purposes (Sess. Laws 1893, pp. 551, 552, art. 4, § 2, sub-sec. 2), the words quoted referred to the character of the taxes, and not to their amount, and hence the county could not thereafter levy any taxes for road purposes within the city limits. Tillamook City v. Tillamook County, 107 Pac. 482, 484, 56 Or. 112.

SAME TRANSACTION

Code Civ. Proc. § 127, subd. 1, provides that a counterclaim must be a claim existing in favor of a defendant and against a plaintiff, between whom a several judgment may be had in the action, and arising out of the contract or transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of plaintiff's claim, or connected with the subject of the action. Held that, where plaintiff sued defendant on several notes given for the balance of the purchase price of a threshing outfit sold to defendant, under a contract by which plaintiff agreed to remedy any defects in the engine, etc., and defendant agreed to render plaintiff assistance while making such repairs, a claim by defendant for injuries sustained by his minor son by the negligence of plaintiff's servant while repairing the threshing engine was a cause of action arising out of the "same transaction," and was available as a counterclaim, although sounding in tort. Advance Thresher Co. v. Klein, 133 N. W. 51, 52, 28 S. D. 177.

Code Civ. Proc. § 484, providing that claims arising out of the "same transaction, or transactions connected with the same subject of action," may be joined in the same complaint, does not authorize the joinder in one complaint of a cause of action for breach of warranty owing to the explosion of a gun sold plaintiff and a cause of action for the wrong in putting on the market a defective and dangerous weapon. Reed v. Livermore, 91 N. Y. Supp. 986, 987, 101 App. Div. 254.

SAME YEAR

The inn and tavern act of 1846 (2 Gen. St. N. J. p. 1794), providing in section 45 that "the freeholders required to recommend to the courts suitable persons for license to keep inns and taverns shall be such as shall not have recommended any other application for a license, * * * in the same township, city, or borough for the 'same year,'" means that a freeholder who has recommended an application for license within a year prior to the beginning of the license which he subsequently recommends is not competent to so do. The object of the statute was to prevent a freeholder from recommending any other application for a license which was to become operative, in whole or in part, during the year covered by the license granted upon any application which he had previously recommended. Cope v. Common Council of City of Somers Point, 64 Atl. 156, 73 N. J. Law, 376.

SAMPLE

See Sale by Sample; Selling by Sample. Salesman's samples as baggage, see Baggage.

SAN DOMINGO MAHOGANY

The term "San Domingo mahogany," as used in a building contract requiring such mahogany to be used in a portion of the building, is to be interpreted in the trade sense and not in the ordinary sense of the term; and the contract is complied with by the use of mahogany having the same color and texture as the genuine San Domingo mahogany, although grown elsewhere. Snoqualmi Realty Co. v. Moynihan, 78 S. W. 1014, 1018, 179 Mo. 629.

SANCTION

"Every law must have its 'sanction'; that is to say, its means of enforcement. Without such it can hardly be deemed a law. Sanctions are of two kinds—those which redress civil injuries, called 'civil sanctions,' and those which punish crimes, called 'penal sanctions.'" Commissioners' Court of Nolan County v. Beall, 81 S. W. 526, 528, 98 Tex. 104 (quoting Bouv. Law Dict.).

SAND

As mineral, see Mineral.
Manufactures of, see Manufactures—Manufactured Articles.

"This material, which forms one of the ingredients of mortar, is the granular product arising from the disintegration of rocks." Donaldson v. Roksament Stone Co., 170 Fed. 192, 193 (quoting and adopting definition in Mahan's Civil Engineering).

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free list, par. 671, 30 Stat. 201, relating to "sand, crude or manufactured," the term "sand" is inapplicable to any metalliferous mineral, though it be in comminuted fragments; and corundum ore, being a mineral of this character, is not, when ground, classifiable as "sand." * * * manufactured." F. W. Myers & Co. v. United States, 155 Fed. 502; Id., 163 Fed. 53, 89 C. C. A. 284.

SANDWICH

As constituting meal, see Meal.

SANE

SANE OR INSANE

See Suicide, Sane or Insane.

Die by his own hand or act, sane or insane, see Die by His Own Hand.

SANITY

"Sanity" is not an ingredient of crime. It is a condition precedent to all intelligent action, as well benevolent as nefarious. It is a pre-existing fact, which may be taken for granted as implied by law and general experience. We do not infer sanity from the criminal act, as we do malice and premeditation. Sanity is a premise, not a conclusion. State v. Quigley, 58 Atl. 905, 908, 26 R. I. 263, 67 L. R. A. 322, 3 Ann. Cas. 920.

"Sanity," within the rule that in probating a will testator's "sanity" must be proved, is used in its legal and not in its medical sense. In re American Board of Com'rs for Foreign Missions, 66 Atl. 215, 221, 102 Me. 72.

"Sanity" is not a disease to be diagnosed by an expert, but a normal condition so commonplace that its existence in one attracts no attention from another member of the human race. No better foundation should be required for the opinion of a sane person of normal intelligence affirming the "sanity" of another than the facts of adequate opportunity for observation, and the absence of symptoms or manifestations which attracted his attention or impressed themselves on his mind or memory. State v. Lyons, 37 South. 890, 898, 113 La. 959.

SAPPHIRE

As precious stone, see Precious Stones.

SARDINES

The fish known as "sardines" are found in the Mediterranean Sea, and on the coasts of Italy, Spain, and France, but not in American waters. In Maine, herring are packed for sardines. State v. Kaufman, 57 Atl. 886, 887, 98 Me. 546.

SASH

"Sash," as used in a contract to furnish building materials, including window sashes, doors, blinds, and all inside wood and glass work required, the first payment to be made on delivery of the sash, did not mean the headlights over the doors. Smith v. Collins, 12 N. Y. Supp. 53, 54, 58 Hun, 608.

SATISFACTION—SATISFY

See Accord and Satisfaction; Full Satisfaction; Fully Satisfied; If Satisfied; Perfect Satisfaction; Proved Satisfactory; Reasonable Satisfaction; Reasonably Satisfy; Successful or Satisfactory.

Paid as satisfied, see Paid.

Cause of action

There is a clear distinction recognized by the courts between a "satisfaction" and a "release" growing out of the right of the injured party to choose whether he will seek redress against all or a less number of those jointly liable to him. On the one hand, a naked promise not to sue, an action against a part only of the joint tort-feasors, and a forgiveness of the others, or a formal release, unsupported by a consideration, will in neither case operate as a release of those not favored. In other words, a release in fact may be given to a part of the joint trespassers, although no part of the damage has been paid, and those not released held liable for the whole. On the other hand, a contract which purports to be a "satisfaction" and release of a wrongdoer jointly liable with others, to be effective, must clearly show that the injured party for a consideration has surrendered to the party in whose favor the contract runs all claim for recompense for and on account of the trespass complained of. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Hilligoss, 86 N. E. 485, 488, 171 Ind. 417, 131 Am. St. Rep. 258 (citing and adopting Fleming v. McDonald, 50 Ind. 278, 19 Am. Rep. 711; Ashcraft v. Knoblock, 45 N. E. 69, 146 Ind. 169, 174, and Cooley, Torts [3d Ed.] pp. 224, 235).

Claim or debt

The term "satisfaction" has a distinctive significance in legal phraseology, and imports a release and discharge of the obligation in reference to which it is given, so that a statement that money was paid in satisfaction of all claims imports a release and discharge of, not only the claim on which it is written, but every other claim which the creditor then had against the debtor. Jersey Island Dredging Co. v. Whitney, 86 Pac. 509, 511, 149 Cal. 269.

A "technical release" is an instrument under seal or some other form of satisfaction which legally imports full payment. The difference between a "technical release" and a "satisfaction in fact" is that in one case the law regards the claim as paid and will not allow the party to deny by proof, while in the other the claim was in fact paid. Ryan v. Becker, 111 N. W. 426, 427, 136 Iowa, 273, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 329 (citing Eastman v. Grant, 34 Vt. 387; Bloss v. Plymale, 3 W. Va. 393, 100 Am. Dec. 752; Miller v. Beck, 79 N. W. 344, 108 Iowa, 575).

The act of a creditor in accepting and collecting a check upon which was written the words "in full payment to date," following an honest dispute as to the balance due on an account, constituted a "satisfaction" of the account. Metropolitan Shirt Waist Co. v. Kamloner, 138 N. Y. Supp. 1067, 1068.

Contracts

"Where a contractor agrees to furnish the material and to erect on the land of a municipal corporation a garbage furnace according to the plans and specifications, which are a part of the contract, and warrants its capacity to consume a named quantity of garbage, without emitting offensive odors, to be paid for when completed and tested according to the 'satisfaction' of the committee of the town council, and the contractor performs the contract according to plans and specifications, and, the test being made, the furnace is shown to have the capacity warranted and in all things to comply with the contract, the committee cannot defeat the contractor's right of recovery by capriciously and unreasonably refusing its satisfaction with the work." A declaration in a suit for the contract price, which shows these facts and alleges that the committee, without just cause or reason and moved by caprice and prejudice, has refused to declare satisfaction with such tests, although the work and tests should have fully satisfied the committee and the defendant, and would have satisfied persons of ordinary care, caution, prudence, and fairness, is not subject to demurrer, as showing no cause of action, nor to special demurrer, because it has not alleged that the furnace was tested to the satisfaction of the committee. Parlin & Orendorff Co. v. City of Greenville, 127 Fed. 55, 62, 61 C. C. A. 591.

Where an employé entered into a contract with his employer to continue at least three years if the former proved himself "competent and satisfactory," and agreed to perform all the duties of a first-class gardner and manager of his employer's place, to "the satisfaction" of the latter, he was subject to be discharged if the employer was dissatisfied; and this was not dependent on whether there were reasonable and sufficient grounds for such dissatisfaction. The promisor, whose satisfaction is made the test, must act honestly and in good faith; his dissatisfaction must be real not merely pretended. Thus, if a suit of clothes were agreed to be made to the satisfaction of the purchaser at a fixed price, if they were in fact satisfactory to him, he could not feign dissatisfaction in order to get out of the contract, merely because another similar suit was offered to him at a less price. This would not be dissatisfaction. It would be fraud. Some courts have held that, if a test of a reasonable character is necessary to determine fitness, the person to be satisfied must make such test or allow it to be made. So, if an employer should agree to pay for the services of an employé at a given rate if they were satisfactory to him, he should give the employé a trial. Some of the decisions which are apparently in conflict with the ruling above stated may be distinguished by reason of the particular facts involved in them. Some may be reconciled with the general rule by taking into consideration the element of good faith or mere pretense of dissatisfaction. MacKenzie v. Minis, 63 S. E. 900, 903, 132 Ga. 323, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1003, 16 Ann. Cas. 723 (citing 9 Cyc. 624; Baldwin Fertilizer Co. v. Cope, 110 Ga. 325, 35 S. E. 316).

Evidence

The words "to the satisfaction of the jury" in an instruction that it was sufficient to entitle a recovery if plaintiff prove to the jury's satisfaction, etc., were equivalent to "find" or "believe," and there was no error in their use. Terre Haute Traction & Light Co. v. Payne, 89 N. E. 413, 417, 45 Ind. App. 132.

The words "to your satisfaction," as used in an instruction that the jury must convict the accused if the state has shown "to your satisfaction" that he committed the offense, means to the satisfaction of the jury beyond a reasonable doubt. Washington v. State, 52 S. E. 910, 912, 124 Ga. 423.

An instruction in an action for personal injury that the burden is on plaintiff to "satisfy" the jury by a preponderance of the evidence of the truth of the allegations of his complaint before he is entitled to a verdict, and that, where he has failed to so "satisfy" the jury, the verdict must be for defendant, and that, if plaintiff has established to the "satisfaction" of the jury the truth of the allegations of the complaint, the verdict must be for him, is not open to the objection that the words "satisfy" and "satisfaction" are not equivalent to the word "find," since the word "satisfy" in an instruction that the burden of proof is on a party to "satisfy" the jury of a fact is synonymous with the word "believe," and the word "satisfy" as used in the statement that a party must satisfy the jury of a material fact means to relieve the jury from all uncertainty or doubt. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Walker, 84 N. E. 730, 735, 41 Ind. App. 588.

Where the court charged that the issues were to be determined by a preponderance of the evidence, correctly defined the term preponderance of the evidence, and stated that if enumerated facts were proved by a preponderance of the evidence, the jury should find such facts by their verdict, a charge that the burden was on plaintiff to establish by evidence to the satisfaction of the jury, the material averments of the complaint, though objectionable, if standing alone, as imposing a too high degree of proof, was not misleading, the words "to satisfaction of the jury" meaning in such event no more than "find" and "believe." Sherman v. Indianapolis Traction & Terminal Co., 96 N. E. 473, 475, 48 Ind. App. 623.

In a prosecution for homicide, an instruction on insanity recited that although the jury might believe from the evidence, to the exclusion of a reasonable doubt, that defendant shot and killed deceased, yet, if they were "satisfied" from the evidence that at the time of the shooting defendant was suffering from mental disease, and because thereof he did not know right from wrong, etc., then they should acquit. The only other instructions given related to murder, manslaughter, and reasonable doubt. Held, that the instruction was erroneous, in the use of the word "satisfied." Wilcox v. Commonwealth, 129 S. W. 309, 310, 138 Ky. 846.

An instruction in a criminal prosecution which requires defendant's evidence of good character to "satisfy" the jury that his reputation was good is bad, as requiring too much proof of defendant, the word "satisfy," without any qualification, being susceptible of the meaning "to convince beyond a reasonable doubt," and defendant being entitled to begin with the presumption of his good reputation, and all reasonable doubts on the subject being resolvable in his favor. Commonwealth v. Colandro, 80 Atl. 571, 575, 231 Pa. 343.

The word "satisfied," in an instruction requiring the jury to be satisfied from the evidence that defendant's agent had authority to act for it in the matter in controversy, was improper, since plaintiff was only required to establish such fact by a preponderance of the evidence. Western Cottage Piano & Organ Co. v. Anderson, 101 S. W. 1061, 1065, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 513.

An instruction by the defendant, in an action on contract, that, "if the evidence fails to satisfy you, you will find for defendant," was properly refused, as the plaintiff was entitled to recover upon a preponderance of evidence, and the word "satisfy" in an instruction to the jury means more than that the facts should be shown by a preponderance of evidence (citing Words and Phrases, vol. 7, pp. 6332-6336). San Antonio & A. P. Ry. Co. v. Graves & Patterson (Tex.) 131 S. W. 613, 614.

Fine and costs

There is no substantial distinction between the words "paid" and "satisfied." Under Pen. Code, § 1205, providing that a judgment that the defendant pay a fine may also direct that he be imprisoned until the fine be satisfied, a judgment fining defendant $100 and directing his imprisonment "until said fine is paid, such imprisonment not to exceed one day for each $20 of said fine that shall so remain unpaid," is not void for using the word "paid," instead of "satisfied," and does not deprive defendant of the right to discharge part of the fine by imprisonment for part of the time. Ex parte Krouse, 82 Pac. 1043, 1044, 148 Cal. 232 (citing Ex parte Henshaw, 15 Pac. 110, 73 Cal. 486).

Judgment

B. & C. Comp. § 241, amending Hill's Ann. Laws 1892, § 295, declaring that, if after entry of judgment 10 consecutive years elapsed without an execution being issued thereon, such judgment shall be conclusively presumed to be paid and satisfied, unless an execution is issued thereon within a year from the passage of the act, applies to existing as well as subsequently recovered judgments, and the word "satisfied" was used in the sense of discharged of record or destroyed. Bowman v. Holman, 99 Pac. 424, 426, 53 Or. 458.

"'Satisfaction' means payment, and payment of a judgment cannot be treated as void for the purpose of attacking the jurisdiction of the court that rendered it." So, where a surety on an appeal bond paid a judgment against it which was void for want of jurisdiction, such payment could not be treated as invalid in attacking the jurisdiction of the court that rendered the judgment; the judgment having passed beyond review, in the absence of a vacation of the satisfaction. Churchill v. More, 96 Pac. 108, 109, 110, 7 Cal. App. 787 (quoting and adopting definition in Morton v. Superior Court, 4 Pac. 491, 65 Cal. 498).

Legacy

A general legacy may be satisfied, although not strictly speaking adeemed. It is this which distinguishes ademption from satisfaction. One depends upon the intention of the testator as inferred from his acts, and the other upon the extinction of the thing or fund granted. A general legacy will be satisfied where testator advances to the legatee even a small sum with the intent to discharge the legacy or to substitute the advancement for the bequest. But provisions in a husband's will, made before she got a divorce, giving her all the real estate, including the homestead, in fee, and all the personalty, except $1,000 to each of the daughters, were not satisfied by provisions in the divorce decree for the support of the wife and minor child, which were based on the testator's obligation to support them. In re Brown's Estate, 117 N. W. 260, 262, 139 Iowa, 219 (citing Weston v. Johnson, 48 Ind. 1; Cowles v. Cowles, 13 Atl. 414, 56 Conn. 240).

A general legacy may be satisfied, though not strictly adeemed. It is this which distinguishes ademption from "satisfaction," one depending on the intention of the testator as inferred from his acts, and the other on the extinction of the thing or fund granted. A general legacy will be deemed satisfied where testator advances to the legatee even a small sum with intent to discharge the legacy or to substitute the advancement for the bequest. In re Brown's Estate, 117 N. W. 260, 262, 139 Iowa, 219.

Mortgage

The word "satisfy," in Civ. Code, § 2876, providing that where the holder of a special lien is compelled to "satisfy" a prior lien, he may enforce payment of the amount thereof as a part of the claim for which his own lien exists, when considered in connection with section 2911, providing for a satisfaction of record, and declaring that it must be entered when any mortgage has been "satisfied," means payment or discharge, and a junior mortgagee who pays a senior mortgage satisfies it, though there is no formal release of record. Windt v. Covert, 93 Pac. 67, 69, 152 Cal. 350.

SATISFACTION OF THE COURT

The phrase "satisfaction of the court," in the federal statute, providing that the facts to justify naturalization of an applicant shall appear to the satisfaction of the court, show that a discretion is vested in the court to determine whether an alien is fit for admission; but such discretion is not arbitrary, and must be a sound judicial discretion, and if abused, is subject to review, and the discretion must be regulated according to known rules of law, and is a legal, and not a personal, discretion. United States v. Hraskey, 88 N. E. 1031, 1033, 240 Ill. 560, 130 Am. St. Rep. 288, 18 Ann. Cas. 279 (citing Anderson Transfer Co. v. Fuller, 51 N. E. 251, 174 Ill. 221; 14 Cyc. p. 384).

SATISFACTORY

Where articles of merchandise to be used for business purposes were ordered under an agreement that if "after a thorough trial" they were not found "to work satisfactorily" the order was to be canceled, the term "satisfactorily" meant satisfactorily to a reasonable man. Fechteler v. Whittemore, 91 N. E. 155, 157, 205 Mass. 6.

Under a contract for the establishment of a heating plant to work "satisfactorily" to the school board, so long as the members of the board acting reasonably are not satisfied, the prime essential to the last payment being collectible, was wanting. Manning v. School Dist. No. 6 of Ft. Atkinson, 102 N. W. 356, 362, 124 Wis. 84.

Where plaintiff agreed to furnish to defendant information concerning a certain vein or lead of ore within the boundaries of a lode claim, for which defendant agreed to pay a certain per cent. of the selling price of said claim, if on investigation by defendant the information should be "satisfactory" to him, he had the exclusive right to determine whether it was satisfactory, and his judgment was controlling and to be deemed conclusive, though it was to be exercised honestly and in good faith. McCrimmon v. Murray, 117 Pac. 73, 75, 43 Mont. 457.

Warranty that pumps sold would work in a "satisfactory manner" only obligated the seller to furnish pumps which would work satisfactorily to a reasonable person, and did not require it to furnish pumps satisfactory to a city engineer, though the seller had knowledge that they were purchased by the buyer to deliver under a contract with the city requiring acceptance by a person to be appointed by such city engineer. Lockwood Mfg. Co. v. Mason Regulator Co., 66 N. E. 420, 421, 183 Mass. 25.

The word "reasonable," as used in an instruction, means governed by reason; agreeable to reason; and its synonyms are just and honest. "Satisfactory" means relieving the mind of doubt or uncertainty, and enabling it to rest with confidence. "Probable" means capable of being proved; having more evidence for than against. And the instruction is erroneous, for accused's explanation of the possession of stolen property may or may not be reasonable, probable, satisfactory, or true, yet, if in the minds of the jury it creates a reasonable doubt of his guilt, he is entitled to an acquittal, and the burden is thrown on the prosecution to establish the falsity of it beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Trosper, 109 Pac. 858, 859, 41 Mont. 442.

Plaintiff constructed a printing press, which was in the nature of an experiment for the printing of labels. He sold the same to defendant under a contract providing that, if the machine was not "satisfactory," it was to be returned free of expense to the seller. The contract also required the buyer to pay therefor after "satisfactory" trial a specified sum or its equivalent, and that on payment of the price plaintiff agreed to execute and deliver to the buyer a sufficient bill of sale, etc. Held, that the word "satisfactory" meant that defendant's decision that the machine was not satisfactory should be conclusive so that defendant, having given reasonable notice of such decision, could refuse to accept the machine without liability for the price. Kidder Press Co. v. J. V. Reed & Co., 117 S. W. 950, 952, 133 Ky. 850, 134 Am. St. Rep. 450.

Under a contract to construct an equipment for melting brass, by which plaintiff was to place the outfit in operation for 60 days' trial for the approval of defendant, and, if the results obtained after the trial were in accordance with the specifications and "satisfactory" to defendant, he was to pay for it, defendant's liability was conditioned on his actual satisfaction, and dissatisfaction, though unreasonable, was sufficient to relieve him, if expressed in good faith. Williams Mfg. Co. v. Standard Brass Co., 53 N. E. 862, 863, 173 Mass. 356 (citing and distinguishing Hawkins v. Graham, 21 N. E. 312, 149 Mass. 284, 14 Am. St. Rep. 422).

Under a contract to do work in a "satisfactory" manner, the contractor is not bound to satisfy the owner, but only do the work in a manner that ought to satisfy. Greenberg v. Lumb, 129 N. Y. Supp. 182, 183.

"Satisfactory," as used in a contract which provides that employment shall continue so long as it shall be satisfactory to the employer, gives such employer a discretionary power, and the determination is not for a court or jury on the basis of what a reasonable man would do. Brown v. Retsof Min. Co., 111 N. Y. Supp. 594, 597, 127 App. Div. 368.

It is proper to refuse to charge that the testimony of a witness who speaks from his personal knowledge is more "satisfactory" than the testimony of another who speaks of matters which lie in opinion only. The word "satisfactory," so used, means manifestly truthful, and whether both witnesses are equally credible can only be determined by the jury under all the circumstances of the case. State v. Skillman, 70 Atl. 83, 87, 76 N. J. Law, 464.

SATISFACTORY DEED

A vendor's obligation to furnish a "satisfactory deed" does not require him to comply with the purchaser's whims respecting title, but the fact that title tendered might seriously interfere with selling the land or borrowing money thereon, might reasonably render such deed unsatisfactory. Clark v. Asbury (Tex.) 134 S. W. 286, 288.

SATISFACTORY EVIDENCE

See Perfect and Satisfactory Title.

See, also, Clear Evidence or Proof.

"Satisfactory evidence" is that evidence which ordinarily produces moral certainty or conviction in an unprejudiced mind, such as ordinarily satisfies an unprejudiced mind beyond reasonable doubt. Goltra v. Penland, 77 Pac. 129, 133, 45 Or. 254 (citing B. & C. Comp. § 688; 1 Greenl. Ev. [14th Ed.] § 2).

An instruction in a criminal case that, where the evidence is entirely circumstantial, yet is not only consistent with the guilt of defendant, but inconsistent with any other rational conclusion, it is the duty of the jury to convict, though such evidence may not be as satisfactory to their minds as the direct testimony of credible eyewitnesses would have been, while erroneous, not only in authorizing a conviction on evidence less "satisfactory" than in the case of direct evidence, whereas Code Civ. Proc. § 1835, defining "satisfactory" evidence to be such "as ordinarily produces moral certainty or conviction in an unprejudiced mind," provides that such evidence alone will justify a verdict, but also in declaring it to be the jury's duty to convict if the "evidence" (not the facts) be inconsistent with any other rational conclusion than guilt—is harmless, the circumstantial evidence of defendant's guilt being at least "satisfactory," as defined by the Code, and being uncontradicted, and the improbability of a different result but for the instruction being such as to produce an abiding conviction to that effect. People v. Taggart, 82 Pac. 396, 1 Cal. App. 423.

An instruction in a civil action, that plaintiff was required to establish his case to the satisfaction of the jury, was error, since the jury might find for plaintiff if they believed from the preponderance of the evidence that he was entitled to recover; "satisfactory evidence" or "sufficient evidence" meaning the amount of proof which ordinarily satisfies an unprejudiced mind beyond a reasonable doubt. Brewer v. Doose (Tex.) 146 S. W. 323, 325 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6335).

SATISFACTORY PRICE

The words "satisfactory price," as used in a contract whereby defendant contracted to furnish logs to plaintiff's sawmill and sell the lumber, agreeing to log the mill to its capacity, limited only to the amount of lumber defendant should be able to sell at satisfactory prices, should receive a reasonable construction. A price should be construed satisfactory which would yield the defendant a reasonable profit over and above the gross cost of the lumber to it, plus the reasonable value of the timber and the cost of making sales of lumber. A fair construction of the contract would require the defendant to furnish timber from which could be manufactured salable lumber and to make reasonable efforts to put sound and salable lumber on the market; and if, by such effort, sales at reasonable profits could be made, to keep plaintiff's mill continuously running, defendant was obliged to furnish sufficient saw logs to keep it going. Rhodes v. Holladay-Klotz Land & Lumber Co., 79 S. W. 1145, 1154, 105 Mo. App. 279.

SATISFACTORY PROOF

An accident policy provided for payment on the beneficiary furnishing "satisfactory proof" to the insurer's board of directors of the death of the insured, and that his death was caused wholly and entirely by external, violent, and accidental means. The beneficiary first submitted certain proof, which was received, and defendant then submitted some additional questions to be answered by the attending physician, whose answering affidavit disclosed that another physician had been insured's regular physician and had seen him just prior to his death, whereupon defendant submitted questions to be asked of this physician, and on receipt of his affidavit rejected the claim. Held, that such additional affidavits constituted a part of the preliminary proofs furnished in accordance with the policy. Traiser v. Commercial Travelers' Eastern Acc. Ass'n, 88 N. E. 901, 902, 202 Mass. 292.

SAUCES AND PICKLES

"The word 'sauce' as commonly used, designates a condiment, generally but not always of liquid form, eaten as an addition to and together with a dish of food, to give it flavor and make it more palatable, and is not applied to anything which is eaten, alone or with a bit of bread, either for its own sake only, or to stimulate the appetite for other food to be eaten afterwards. For instance, cheese eaten with bread, or ham or chicken eaten in a sandwich, or anchovies or herrings, caviare, or shreds of salt fish, eaten, whether with or without bread, as an appetizer before a meal, would hardly be called a sauce." Gray, J., in Bogle v. Magone, 14 Sup. Ct. 718, 152 U. S. 623, 625, 38 L. Ed. 574.

In the Tariff Act, the provision for "sauces" means for a seasoning or dressing usually placed on the table to be used with prepared food; and thick soy, which is not so used, but is employed as an ingredient of sauces, or as a flavor or color for food while cooking, is not a "sauce," and does not resemble a sauce in material, quality, texture, or use, but is classifiable as an unenumerated manufactured article, under section 6, 30 Stat. 205. United States v. Wo On & Co., 167 Fed. 314, 315, 92 C. C. A. 626.

SAUSAGE

In determining whether sausage prepared by the mixture of spices, cereals, and water with pork meat was properly described as sausage, within Pub. Acts 1895, p. 358, No. 193, as amended, the term "sausage" should be construed in its ordinary sense to mean an article of food composed of meat, salt, spices, without the addition of cereals, in accordance with the generally accepted use of the term, and not in accordance with the custom of manufacturers and dealers. Armour & Co. v. Bird, 123 N. W. 580, 583, 159 Mich. 1, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 616.

The provision in the Tariff Act, for "sausages, Bologna," does not include sausages of Chinese origin. Wing Sing Lung & Co. v. United States, 180 Fed. 392, 393, 103 C. C. A. 538; Wing Sing Lung v. Same, 171 Fed. 906.

SAVE

SAVE HARMLESS

The condition of a bond to "save and keep harmless" the obligee from certain debts existing against him is not broken by the fact that the debts have passed into judgments against him. Miller v. Fries, 49 Atl. 674, 66 N. J. Law, 377

SAVING BENEFIT OF PLEA

"Saving the benefit of a plea to the hearing" means that if on argument it is considered that as far as it appears the plea may be a defense, but that there may be something disclosed in the evidence that will avoid it, supposing the matters pleaded to be strictly true, the court will not preclude the question; such order being but an adjournment of the discussion. Dietrich v. Deavitt, 69 Atl. 661, 663, 81 Vt. 160.

SAVING CLAUSE

According to Bishop on Written Law, a "saving clause" in a statute "is only an exemption of a special thing out of the general things mentioned. There is no particular rule for its location or its verbal form, but it is generally near the end." The rule that that part of the statute which is later in position must prevail over a preceding part does not apply to a saving clause which is in irreconcilable conflict with the body of the act, and in such case the saving clause must be rejected as void. Shutt v. State, 89 N. E. 6, 7, 173 Ind. 689.

SAVING EXCEPTION

There is a difference between "saving exceptions" and filing them, and the statute which provides that exceptions may be filed within 20 days from the act excepted to has no reference to the time when they should be alleged. In the superior court the matter is regulated by the rule that "no exception shall be allowed by the presiding justice, unless the same be alleged and saved at the time when the opinion, ruling, direction, or judgment excepted to is given, and all exceptions to any charge to the jury shall, unless previously saved, be alleged before the jury are sent out." Graves v. Hicks, 80 N. E. 605, 194 Mass. 524.

SAVINGS BANK

The Minnesota Savings Association was incorporated under Gen. Laws 1867. By Sp. Laws 1873, c. 117, the name was changed to Savings Bank of St. Paul, and a capital stock of $100,000 was provided; such capital to be employed in the business, and to become a guaranty fund. Held, that the association remained a "savings bank." State ex rel. Douglas v. Savings Bank of St. Paul, 92 N. W. 403, 404, 87 Minn. 473.

SAVINGS BANK BOOK

See Pass Book.

SAVINGS DEPOSITOR

The term "savings depositors," as used in Mills' Ann. St. § 529, giving preference in case of insolvency of the bank to the savings depositors, includes not only those who may deposit their money in the bank for the purpose of safe-keeping merely and receive interest thereon, but also those who deposit them upon time certificates of deposit. Tabor v. Mullen, 86 Pac. 1007, 1009, 37 Colo. 399.

SAW

See Ripsaw.

SAW LOGS

As timber, see Timber.

The words "saw logs" and "squared timbers," as used in a contract for the delivery of a certain number of "saw logs" and an agreement to pay therefor two cents per cubic foot for "squaring said logs," has reference to logs that will square out at least 18 cubic feet to the log. Hinote v. Brigman & Crutchfield, 33 South. 303, 305, 44 Fla. 589.

SAW MACHINERY

As tool, see Tools—Tools of Trade.

SAW PLATES

See Circular Saw Plates.

An article enumerated according to its use as "saw plates" includes articles intended for other uses having the qualities and characteristics of the article designated. Hermann Boker & Co. v. United States, 168 Fed. 573, 574.

SAW TIMBER

Where, at the time that a contract was entered into providing for the removal of all "saw timber" from certain land, it is shown that no cordwood was being cut on the land or in the vicinity, and that one of the contracting parties was desirous of getting the timber for his mill, and intended to set up the mill near the land, and the other parties sold him the timber with that in view, the term "saw timber" should be construed to exclude the right to cut timber for cordwood, and limited to timber suitable for being manufactured into lumber or other mill products; it not being until after the season of operation of the mill that defendant claimed the right to cut other timber. Roots v. Boring Junction Lumber Co., 92 Pac. 811, 818, 50 Or. 298.

A deed of land reserved the "saw timber" for 10 years. The contract for the conveyance stipulated for a reservation of timber, and the change was made to "saw timber" at the request of the grantee, to enable him to get firewood off the land, and to give him the right to cut small trees and underbrush to clear the land, to make it better adapted to produce grass. Parol evidence showed that the term "saw timber" had a well-defined meaning, and included all kinds of timber suitable in size and length to make logs eight inches in diameter and eight feet long. Held, that the term "saw timber" referred to growing trees of all varieties which could be used to advantage in any class of manufacture or construction, so that the reservation was of all timber growing on the land that would make logs eight inches in diameter and eight feet in length. Teachout v. Clough, 127 S. W. 672, 675, 677, 143 Mo. App. 474.

SAWED LUMBER

Lumber which has been subjected to a fireproofing process that largely increases its value, but which can still be applied to the ordinary uses of sawed lumber, is not dutiable as "manufacture of wood," but as "sawed lumber." F. W. Myers & Co. v. United States, 147 Fed. 204, 205, 77 C. C. A. 430.

SAWMILL

Addition to, see Addition.

Operating sawmill, see Operate.

Where plaintiff purchased of defendant a sawmill and all machinery connected therewith located on certain land, reserving everything on the land, except timber, sawmill, and machinery, the term "sawmill" was limited to a machine constructed for the purpose of sawing logs, and therefore did not include the shed covering the mill. A sawmill is a machine for sawing logs, whether or not it is accompanied by a shed; and a shed covering such a mill is not a part of the sawmill, but is a part of the real estate to which it is attached. A saw is a "tool for cutting," and a "mill" is "a machine for grinding." According to the standard lexicographers, the first meaning of "mill" is a machine or device for grinding, cutting, etc. The particular purpose for which it is designed is usually designated by a prefix, such as sawmill, gristmill, etc. The term "mill" necessarily carries with it the idea of a machine, device, or tool, but it does not necessarily convey with it the idea of a shed or house. The term "mill" is frequently used to designate, not only the machine used for grinding, cutting, etc., but also in a general and comprehensive sense to designate the house or shed where such machinery may be in operation, and many lexicographers give this as the secondary meaning of the word. Alexander v. Beekman Lumber Co., 95 S. W. 449, 451, 78 Ark. 169 (citing Thesaurus Dict. Eng. Lang. and Worcester. Cent. Webster, and Internat. Dicts.).

The description "one medium Rusher unmounted left-hand sawmill," in a mortgage describing separately the various pieces of machinery and material going to make a complete sawmill, does not include other complete pieces of machinery particularly described in the mortgage, but is restricted to the specific piece of machinery thereby described, though the word "sawmill" may include all of the machinery necessary in the operation of such a mill, as well as the building and the ground on which it is situated. McGregor v. Port Huron Engine & Thresher Co. (Tex.) 120 S. W. 1128, 1133.

SAWMILL PURPOSES

See Suitable for Sawmill Purposes; Timber for Sawmill Purposes.

SAY

An allegation in an indictment that defendant did falsely and maliciously impute a want of chastity to one B. by then and there, in the presence of A. P., "falsely and maliciously saying of and concerning her," etc., is sufficient under Rev. St. 1892, § 2419, providing that whoever "speaks of and concerning any woman," etc., since the word "saying," used in connection with "in the presence of and in the hearing of" in the indictment, is equivalent to the word "speaking" in the statute. Stutts v. State, 42 South. 51, 52, 52 Fla. 110.

SCAFFOLD

As appliance, see Appliance.

As place of work, see Place.

Erection of scaffold, see Erect—Erection.

Webster's International Dictionary defines a "scaffold" as a temporary structure of timber, boards, etc., for various purposes, as for supporting workmen and material in building. Caddy v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 88 N. E. 747, 750, 195 N. Y. 415, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 30.

The words "scaffolding" and "mechanical contrivance" include any contrivance made of parts erected or used for support in or about the particular kinds of work mentioned in the statute. Koepp v. National Enameling & Stamping Co., 139 N. W. 179, 184, 151 Wis. 302.

A platform, made by planks resting on crosspieces nailed to upright timbers, for workmen to stand on while attaching iron plates to a vessel, is a "scaffold," within Labor Law § 18, requiring employers to furnish employes safe scaffolding when working on buildings or other structures. Herman v. P. H. Fitzgibbons Boiler Co., 120 N. Y. Supp. 1074, 1075, 136 App. Div. 286. So where separate platforms were erected at varying heights upon upright beams in the construction of a building, each platform may be deemed a separate "scaffold" within the Labor Law, as affecting the right of a workman to recover for injury received while standing on the lower platform in removing the one above it. Lyons v. McNulty Bros. 136 N. Y. Supp. 39, 77 Misc. Rep. 176. The term includes a board laid across stringers of an unfloored hallway on the fifth floor of a building in course of construction for passage from room to room. Convey v. Finn, 114 N. Y. Supp. 864, 866, 130 App. Div. 440; a beam of timber hung from one column to another, and lashed to them by ropes, for the purpose of holding the iron girders of a steel building until the wall was erected between the beams, and also to furnish a place for the employes to walk in spacing the girders. Welk v. Jackson Architectural Ironworks, 90 N. Y. Supp. 541, 542, 98 App. Div. 247; a staging consisting of "painter's horses" and planks placed on the horses about eight feet above the floor of a car repair shop, Caddy v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 88 N. E. 747, 748, 195 N. Y. 415, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 30; a plank placed between brick piers for the use of a painter, Holsapple v. International Paper Co., 137 N. Y. Supp. 450, 452, 152 App. Div. 606; planks laid on "horses" placed on each side of a hole in the floor above the basement of a steel building in process of construction for the use of the workmen, Warren v. Post & McCord, 112 N. Y. Supp. 960, 964, 128 App. Div. 572; and planks laid on arch beams in a building in process of construction for the use of employes to carry material, Nixon v. Thompson-Starrett Co., 115 N. Y. Supp. 130, 131 App. Div. 152; but not ties laid on the deck of a bridge in process of construction for the purpose of accommodating a traveling derrick, and also used by a signalman as a place to stand while assisting in shifting the rails, Brady v. Pennsylvania Steel Co., 119 N. Y. Supp. 75, 77, 134 App. Div. 372. This statute does not apply to ordinary staging put up in a room about five feet above the floor to facilitate the placing of fixtures; and a master is not liable for an injury to an employe from its use under the statute, where he is not liable under the common law. Schapp v. Bloomer, 73 N. E. 563, 564, 181 N. Y. 125.

Plaintiff, a carpenter, was employed in erecting a house. A scaffold for the work was built in sections. Two planks laid side by side rested on crosspieces, one end of a crosspiece being nailed to the house, and the other end to an upright. As the work progressed, the scaffold was raised; the planks being put on crosspieces higher up. While plaintiff was doing this, one plank being placed on the higher crosspieces, and he being on the other, the one on which he was walking broke from a defect therein. Held, that the "scaffold" was one used in erecting the building, and furnished by the employer for that purpose, within the Labor Law, so as to make the employer liable, and that plaintiff was not merely changing the scaffold, and not using it as such. Jones v. Gamble, 126 N. Y. Supp. 143, 145, 140 App. Div. 733.

Defendant desiring to remove certain false work in the ceiling over the bins of an elevator, stringers were laid on angle irons standing 3 feet above the floor on each side of an open bin about 20 feet apart, and loose planks were laid across the stringers. The stringers were made, under directions of defendant's assistant superintendent, out of 2x6 material which had been previously used, varying from 5 to 9 feet long. These were laid together, overlapping each other, and fastened together with nails, which did not go through more than two planks; the whole stringer being 21 feet long and 6 inches thick. Plaintiff, a laborer, laid two of the stringers on the angle irons over one of the open bins, and while taking down the false work a piece 2x6 and 5 feet long fell on the plank, breaking one of the stringers and precipitating plaintiff to the bottom of the bin, 75 feet below. Held, that the structure was a "scaffold" within the Labor Law, which defendant caused to be furnished to plaintiff, making defendant absolutely answerable for the safety of such erection. MacDonald Engineering Co. v. Manns, 177 Fed. 203, 204, 101 C. C. A. 373.

SCALE

See Stumpage Scale.

SCALE WEIGHT

"Scale weight" is the determination of the weight by what the material actually weighs in pounds. Hale Bros. v. Milliken, 90 Pac. 365, 369, 5 Cal. App. 344.

SCALES

See Competent Scales.

SCALP

SCALPER

"Scalpers" are persons engaged in buying and selling railroad tickets as brokers. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Caffrey, 128 Fed. 770.

A "scalper," as used in an attrition mill for preventing foreign substances from getting into the mill, is a device consisting of a sieve that oscillates. It is spread under the elevator that carries the feed to the grinding mill, so that the feed passes over this before it reaches the attrition mill. The oscillation of the sieve shoves the foreign substances to one side while the fine grain goes through. It is a device to prevent spoiling the mills. Sticht v. Buffalo Cereal Co., 101 N. Y. Supp. 905, 907.

SCAMMONY RESIN

As medicinal preparation, see Medicinal Preparation.

SCANDAL

"Scandal" in a pleading consists of any unnecessary allegation bearing cruelly on the moral character of an individual, or stating anything contrary to good manners, or anything unbecoming the dignity of the court to hear." McNulty v. Wiesen, 130 Fed. 1012, 1013.

"Scandal" is impertinent matter which is also criminatory or which otherwise reflects on the character of an individual, and no matter which is not also impertinent will constitute scandal, however strong its aspersions or reflections. Manhattan Trust Co. v. Chicago Electric Traction Co., 188 Fed. 1006, 1008.

"Pruriency" is an elastic term. Matter and conduct which some good people deem prurient other good people deem chaste. There is no fixed standard of pruriency. It is largely a matter of education and taste. And the same is true in respect of 'scandal' and 'shamelessness.' Hence where a critic published of a book and its author that they were a "scandal" and "shameless," and that the author was "prurient," under circumstances that would not justify the charges beyond question, it was for the jury to say whether the inferences drawn by the critic from the facts were reasonably possible, and therefore permissible. MacDonald v. Sun Printing & Publishing Ass'n, 92 N. Y. Supp. 37, 40, 45 Misc. Rep. 441.

SCANDALUM MAGNATUM

The dignity of dignitaries in olden times was under especial protection, while words spoken in derogation of a common person were, at the most, mere slander; such words spoken in derogation of a peer, a judge, or other great officer of the realm were called "scandalum magnatum." Del Ponte v. Società Italiana Di M. S. Guglielmo Marconi, 60 Atl. 237, 239, 27 R. I. 1, 70 L. R. A. 183, 114 Am. St. Rep. 17.

SCENIC RAILWAY

A "scenic railway" being a railway on which cars are run for the purposes only of amusement, where the track is elevated for a considerable distance at the place of beginning and built on an incline, the cars being propelled by the force of gravity, is not "such place of public amusement" as a "merry-go-round," and is not prohibited from being kept open on Sunday, by Rev. Codes, § 6825. In re Hull, 110 Pac. 256, 257, 18 Idaho, 475, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 465.

SCHEDULE

See Duly Scheduled.

Since the word "schedule," as used in the statute requiring a railroad company to keep open its depots for a specified period preceding the arrival of passenger trains allowed "by schedule" to stop, implies that the operation of a train is governed by rule, an allegation, in a complaint in an action against a railroad company for injuries sustained by an intended passenger by reason of being compelled to wait out of doors for a train, that the train was due "to arrive and stop for the taking on of passengers" at a time stated, does not show a violation of the statute. Draper v. Evansville & T. H. R. Co., 74 N. E. 889, 165 Ind. 117, 6 Ann. Cas. 569.

A "schedule" or "inventory" is a list or catalogue of property merely, without attempt to describe the same in detail. A "schedule" of property for taxation is a list of assessable articles without attempt to describe the same in detail. A "statement" is "a formal, exact, detailed presentation." A "statement" would contain all that would appear in a "schedule" or list, but would contain minutiae and matter of description not necessary to a "schedule" or "inventory." Section 49 of the Revenue Act (3 Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896, p. 3423, c. 120), prescribing a penalty for the failure of a railroad to file a statement with the county clerk, refers to the statement or schedule showing the property held for right of way, and the length of tracks and turnouts and tracts of land through which the road runs (which property is afterwards described as "railroad track") which is required to be filed by section 41 of the act, and cannot be extended by implication to include the failure to report the value of the railroad track annually, or to return the lists of rolling stock required to be returned by section 44, or to the failure to make the list or schedule of personal property or real estate, which is required to be listed by section 46. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. People, 75 N. E. 368, 370, 217 Ill. 164.

The action of the county board of supervisors in auditing and certifying the expenses of primary elections, as required by Code Supp. 1907, § 1087a5, is a part of its proceedings, and a schedule of the items of such expenses is within Code, § 441, requiring the publication of "schedules of bills allowed." Index Printing Co. v. Board of Sup'rs of Muscatine County, 130 N. W. 401, 402, 150 Iowa, 411.

SCHEME

See Confidence Scheme; Similar Scheme. Scheme of chance, see Chance.

To constitute the offense of "using the mails to effectuate a scheme to defraud," within Rev. St. § 5480, the scheme must have contemplated the use of the post office establishment to effectuate it, and not the use of the mails as a mere incident to some fraudulent scheme. United States v. McCrory, 175 Fed. 802, 804.

A scheme by the owner of a saloon, to be effected by opening correspondence through the mails, to induce different persons to each purchase a half interest in his saloon as a partner, and to pay largely more than it was worth, by misrepresenting its value and the amount of its profits, and to thus obtain their money without their receiving any equivalent therefor, held a "scheme to defraud," within the meaning of Rev. St. § 5480, and to be sufficiently charged in an indictment thereunder. Van Deusen v. United States, 151 Fed. 989, 81 C. C. A. 175.

The elements of the offense of devising a "scheme" or "artifice" to defraud, to be effected by means of the post office establishment of the United States in violation of Rev. St. § 5480, are: (1) That defendant devised the "scheme" to defraud, as alleged; (2) that he intended to effect such "scheme" or "artifice" by opening correspondence or communication with the persons intended to be defrauded, by means of the post office establishment of the United States, or by inciting them to open correspondence with him respecting such "scheme" or "artifice"; and (3) that in the furtherance and execution of the "scheme," or in attempting to further the same, defendant deposited or caused to be deposited in the United States post office letters, papers, writings, or circulars, or took from the post office papers or writings connected with the furtherance of such "scheme." A "scheme" is a design or plan formed to accomplish some purpose. An "artifice" is an ingenious contrivance or device of some kind and, when used to defraud, corresponds with "trick" or "fraud." Hence a "scheme" or "artifice" to defraud, within the meaning of the statute, is to form some plan, device, or trick to perpetrate the fraud upon another. United States v. Dexter, 154 Fed. 390, 893, 896.

An indictment for using the mails to defraud, in violation of Rev. St. § 5480, by subdividing a tract of land in Louisiana of small value into lots 10 or 20 feet square, and selling certificates, each purporting to give the holder an option to purchase an interest in a lot, upon false representations that the lots were within an oil district and very valuable, and that large cash offers had been made for certain of the same, construed, and held not to charge a "lottery" or a "gambling enterprise" but a "scheme and artifice to defraud" within the meaning of the statute, which, when carried on by means of correspondence through the mails, constituted a violation thereof. Gourdain v. United States, 154 Fed. 453, 458, 83 C. C. A. 309.

To constitute a "scheme to defraud" to be carried out by the use of the mails, in violation of Rev. St. § 5480, as amended by Act March 2, 1889, c. 393, § 1, 25 Stat. 873, it is not necessary that the scheme should be fraudulent on its face; but, although it is apparently a legitimate business, it is within the statute if there was an intention not to conduct such business honestly, but to use it to defraud. McConkey v. United States, 171 Fed. 829, 832, 96 C. C. A. 501.

A scheme to induce persons to purchase stock in a corporation by false and fraudulent representations that the money paid would go into the corporation's treasury for development purposes, that the officers would not sell their shares, and believed that they would become of enormous value, that stock held by officers was nontransferable, that only treasury stock was on the market, and that all increases on the selling of the stock was justified by the development of the business, was a "scheme and device to defraud," within Rev. St. § 5480, prohibiting the use of the mails in furtherance of a scheme or artifice to defraud, etc.; the statute being intended broadly to prevent the use of the mails to despoil the public, whether such result was intended to be accomplished by plain falsehoods, or by the most alluring and complicated contrivances. Wilson v. United States, 190 Fed. 427, 433, 111 C. C. A. 231.

An indictment for violating Rev. St. § 5480, as amended by Act Cong. March 2, 1889, c. 393, § 1, 25 Stat. 873, prohibiting the use of the United States mails in furtherance of a "scheme or artifice to defraud," must allege, not only that the defendant had devised a scheme or artifice to defraud, but must also plead facts showing what the artifice was, wherein the fraud consisted, and how it was to be accomplished, the words "scheme or artifice" not being equivalent to a plan or mode of effecting a fraud, but must be a plan so cunningly devised and presented as to appeal to human passion for gain, by untruthful and seductive embellishment of advantages, begetting confidence where it would not otherwise be bestowed; and hence an indictment merely charging that defendant caused another to order a diamond ring from complainant to be paid for on the installment plan, through the United States mails, with the intent not to pay for the same, did not charge a scheme to defraud, and was therefore insufficient. Etheredge v. United States, 186 Fed. 434, 437, 108 C. C. A. 356.

The offense of using the mails in furtherance of "schemes devised for the purpose of obtaining money or property under false pretenses," denounced by Rev. St. § 3894, includes only schemes having a similitude to the lottery and other like schemes particularly described by the particular words of the section, and does not cover the use of the mails to promote other schemes to obtain money or property by means of false pretenses, which is embraced by the provisions of section 5480, making criminal the use of the mails to carry on any scheme or artifice to defraud. Making false and fraudulent representations through the mails to prospective buyers of cattle, to promote a scheme to defraud by inducing them to come and inspect the cattle, after which inferior cattle were to be substituted in the place of those inspected and sold, is not punishable under Rev. St. § 3894, making criminal the use of the mails in furtherance of lotteries, or schemes of gain dependent upon chance, or "schemes devised for the purpose of obtaining money or property under false pretenses," but such acts constitute the offense prohibited by section 5480, of using the mails to carry on any scheme or artifice to defraud. United States v. Stever, 32 Sup. Ct. 51, 53, 222 U. S. 167, 56 L. Ed. 145.

SCHISM

A "schism" being a splitting up of a church, a schism took place in the general assembly of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church when one part of the assembly of 1905 declared that church by that name to be a thing of the past, while the other part, carrying out a previously announced purpose, met at a hall and completed the organization of the general assembly which claimed to speak for the church. Ramsey v. Hicks, 89 N. E. 597, 598, 44 Ind. App. 490.

"A 'school' is a place of primary instruction; an establishment for the instruction of children; as a primary school; a common school; a grammar school." Northrop v. City of Richmond, 53 S. E. 962, 963, 105 Va. 335.

A "school" is an institution of learning below a college or university, a place of primary instruction, and generally refers to common or public schools maintained at the expense of the public, and is a generic term, and denotes an institution for instruction or education, and is not measured by the walls of a building. State v. Kalaher, 129 N. W. 1060, 1061, 145 Wis. 243.

The word "schools," in Const. art. 9, § 2, providing that the general supervision of the public schools shall be vested in a board of education, and section 5 providing against the use of public funds in aid of any church or religious society to help support any school, academy, seminary, college, or other literary or scientific institution, refers to the public, free common schools generally adopted in the country, having special specific reference to the district schools throughout the state established for the training and instruction of the youth in the elementary branches of learning below the grade of academy, seminary, college, university, or other literary or scientific institution. Pike v. State Board of Land Com'rs, 113 Pac. 447, 451, 19 Idaho, 268, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1344.

The word "school," except when applied to a building or place, implies plurality or consociation. St. John's Military Academy v. Edwards, 128 N. W. 113, 114, 143 Wis. 551, 139 Am. St. Rep. 1123.

Act June 18, 1895 (P. L. 203), provides that persons in charge of schools shall refuse admission to children except on certificate of a physician that they have been successfully vaccinated or had smallpox. Held, that such duty is imposed upon the superintendents, principals, and teachers in charge of schools, and mandamus will not lie to compel school directors to exclude a child from school who has failed to obtain the certificate. By "school or schools" the Legislature certainly meant the places where the pupils are attending, and the daily notice to be given there can be given only to teachers, since the directors are not daily present at the "schools." Commonwealth ex rel. Carson v. Rowe, 67 Atl. 56, 57, 218 Pa. 168.

College

A commercial college, teaching such branches as arithmetic, reading, penmanship, spelling, bookkeeping, geography, history, etc., is a "school," within the meaning of section 13, art. 1, c. 77, Comp. St. 1903 (Cobbe's Ann. St. 1903, § 10412). Rohrbaugh v. Douglas County, 107 N. W. 1000, 1001, 76 Neb. 679.

The word "schools" is one of broad signification, and sometimes it may appear, by the connection in which it is used, to include higher institutions of learning; but ordinarily, and without something to indicate that a wider meaning was intended to be given to the word, it will not be taken to include higher institutions of learning, such as colleges, universities, or institutions for the teaching of trades, professions, or business; and where a street railway was, as a condition to a grant of a location, required to provide to pupils in attendance upon the public schools, the state normal school of W., or any school in W., transportation at half price while going to and from school, neither a college nor a business institute in W. could fairly come within the language of the rest. Murphy v. Worcester Consol. St. Ry. Co., 85 N. E. 507, 512, 199 Mass. 279.

Rev. Pol. Code, § 2859, as amended by Laws 1907, c. 175, provides that no person shall maintain any place for the sale or disposal of intoxicating liquors within 300 feet of the grounds of any public or private school. Laws 1907, c. 177, declares that no license shall be granted for the sale of intoxicating liquors at any place within one-third of a mile of any college or academy which gives instruction in regular classical and scientific courses, and that the sale of liquor within such prescribed territory may be enjoined, provided that the act shall not be construed to apply to any school or college devoted only to instruction in business methods. Civ. Code, § 2443, provides that words in use in any statute are to be understood in their ordinary sense, except when a contrary intention plainly appears. Held, in an action to enjoin the maintenance of a licensed saloon within 300 feet of an institution or "business college" conducted by plaintiff in which he gave instruction in book-keeping, typewriting, stenography, commercial law, etc., that "school" meant a place for instruction in any branch or branches of knowledge, an establishment imparting education, also the institution or collective body of teachers and learners in such a place; and that, without qualification, was used of an institution for teaching children, and that, in view of the express exclusion of such institutions as that of the plaintiff by Laws 1907, c. 177, it was not such a school as was comprehended by section 2859 as amended; and hence that plaintiff was not entitled to an injunction. Granger v. Lorenzen, 133 N. W. 259, 260, 28 S. D. 295.

Different schools in same building

Sanborn's St. Supp. 1906, § 1548, subds. 5, 6, provide that no liquor license shall be granted for a saloon within 300 feet of any public or parochial school ground, whenever a list of the parents and guardians of pupils enrolled in any such school, together with a remonstrance by a majority thereof, are filed with the city clerk. There were both high school and grade school pupils in the school building in question, but the list and remonstrance did not contain a majority of the parents and guardians of children in either, but only contained a majority of parents and guardians of children enrolled in the high school building. Held, that the word "school" did not mean all the pupils in one school building, and that two schools may be conducted in one building, or one school in two buildings, and the list was therefore insufficient. State v. Kalaher, 129 N. W. 1060, 1061, 145 Wis. 243.

Private school

A "school," in the ordinary acceptation of its meaning, is a place where instruction is imparted to the young. If a parent employs and brings into his residence a teacher for the purpose of instructing his child or children, and such instruction is given as the law contemplates, the meaning and spirit of the law have been fully complied with. This would be the school of a child or children so educated, and would be as much a private school as if advertised and conducted as such. A parent in good faith employed a teacher formerly employed in the public schools to teach his child. It was arranged that the child should be taught in all the branches taught in the public schools. The child attended the teacher's home regularly every school day, and received instruction equal to that which could have been received at the public schools. The teacher did not advertise herself as keeping a private school, and had no regular tuition fixed nor any school equipments, and made no arrangement to take other pupils. This was a school, within Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 6033a, providing that every parent shall be required to send his child to a public, private, or parochial school each year. State v. Peterman, 70 N. E. 550, 551, 32 Ind. App. 665.

School of dancing, riding, etc.

A "school" within the meaning of the constitutional provision exempting certain property from taxation is a place where systematic instruction in useful branches of learning is given by methods common to schools and institutions of learning, and does not ordinarily include schools for teaching dancing, riding, etc. People v. Deutsche Evangelisch Lutherische Jehovah Gemeinde Ungeänder Augsburgische Confession, 94 N. E. 182, 164, 249 Ill. 132.

SCHOOL CHILDREN

A franchise granted an electric railroad company provides that "school children" going to and returning from school shall ride for half fare. Rem. & Bal. Code, §§ 4317, 4333, and 4366, speak of those attending the State University, the State College, and normal schools as "students," and in chapter 8, § 4406, where common schools are defined, the Legislature adopts the word "children." In section 4714, under the title "Compulsory Education," the law refers to "child" or "children." Held that, as the common acceptance of the words "school children" is children attending the common school, it must be considered that the parties had that in mind at the time of the granting of the franchise, so that students at the State University and of business colleges would not be entitled thereunder to ride for half fare. State ex rel. City of Seattle v. Seattle Electric Co., 128 Pac. 220, 221, 71 Wash. 213, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 172.

SCHOOL CORPORATION

Code, § 2794, which provides that, "upon the written petition of any ten voters of a city, town, or village of over one hundred residents to the board of the school township in which the portion of the town having the largest number of voters is situated, such board shall establish the boundaries of a proposed independent district, including therein all of the city, town or village," etc., when read in the light of the history of the school legislation, should be considered as though the words "school corporation" were substituted or "school township," and is applicable to a case where the town includes territory which was a part of one or more independent school districts. Rural Independent School Dist. No. 10 v. New Independent School Dist., 94 N. W. 284, 285, 287, 120 Iowa, 119.

A "school district" is composed of certain contiguous territory, governed by one school board, authorized to select one school site, secure one schoolhouse, and conduct one school, except where separate schools are required for colored pupils. Kellogg v. School Dist. No. 10 of Comanche County, 74 Pac. 110, 117, 13 Okl. 285.

A legally constituted "school district" is the territory erected into a school district by operation of law. The board of education do not constitute the district. That is merely the method provided for its government, the machinery for managing the schools in the district. McCarter v. Board of Education of Borough of Bradley Beach, 63 Atl. 93, 94, 73 N. J. Law, 301.

A "school district" is not the county. It is a legal subdivision of the county, but it is a distinct entity, and is in this state a distinct municipal corporation. Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 468, requiring prosecuting attorneys to give advice to all the county and precinct officers and directors and superintendents of common schools as to their official business, and to draw up in writing all contracts and like instruments of an official nature, for the use of said officers, does not require a prosecuting attorney to appear in court and conduct litigation on behalf of a school district without compensation other than that received in his official capacity. *Bates v. ### As quasi corporation

As quasi public corporation, see Quasi Public Corporation.

A "school district" is a quasi corporation created pursuant to legislative enactment. It can exercise only those powers which are expressly conferred by statute or which arise therefrom by necessary implication. A. H. Andrews Co. v. Delight Special School Dist., 128 S. W. 361, 362, 95 Ark. 26.

A "school district" is but a quasi corporation, with limited powers, and can do only those things which the law expressly allows or implies. *Montpeller Sav. Bank & Trust Co. v. School Dist. ### SCHOOLHOUSE

The word "schoolhouse," as used in Acts 1908, c. 27, § 13 (Code Supp. 1909, c. 45, § 1571), requiring the board of education of every district to provide by purchase or condemnation suitable schoolhouses and grounds, includes the land for schoolhouses. State ex rel. Post v. Board of Education of Clarksburg School Dist., 76 S. E. 127, 71 W. Va. 52.

In a statute providing that the school trustees shall have power to remove "schoolhouses" when directed by a vote of the district, the term "schoolhouse" does not mean simply the house, but refers rather to the school plant, including the general equipment, furniture, maps, charts, globes, and pupils and teacher. A school board cannot disregard the right of the people to say what shall be done with reference to the permanent location of the school. State ex rel. Bean v. Lyons, 96 Pac. 922, 923, 925, 37 Mont. 354 (quoting and adopting definition in State ex rel. Jay v. Marshall, 32 Pac. 648, 13 Mont. 136).

High school

A high school is fairly included in the terms "for school purposes" and "schoolhouse or schoolhouses," in the statute declaring that the board shall decide that it is necessary to raise money for purchasing or taking and condemning lands for school purposes or for erecting a schoolhouse or schoolhouses. Carling v. Jersey City, 58 Atl. 395, 397, 71 N. J. Law, 154.

Nurses' training school

Liquor Tax Law (Laws 1896, p. 51, c. 112) § 11, subd. 1, relates to the sale of liquors to be drunk upon the premises, and section 24, subd. 2, prohibits traffic under the former section in any building on the same street and within 200 feet of a building occupied exclusively as a schoolhouse. Held, that the term "schoolhouse" included all schoolhouses in which the public common schools and high schools were conducted and private and semipublic schools of the same grade, but did not include a building in which a nurses' training school was conducted. ### SCHOOL LANDS

As public grounds, see Public Grounds.

The term "school lands" within Const. art. 9, § 8, providing that not to exceed 25 sections of school lands shall be sold in any one year which sale shall be in subdivisions of not to exceed 160 acres to any one individual, company, or corporation embraces only sections 16 and 36 in each township, and does not include lands granted by Congress to the state for specific educational purposes which were granted to the state for the use of the public free common schools. Pike v. State Board of Land Com'rs, 113 Pac. 447, 451, 19 Idaho, 268, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1344.

SCHOOL MATTERS

See Election Pertaining to School Matters.

SCHOOL NOT CONDUCTED FOR PROFIT

See Profit.

SCHOOL OFFICER

All other school officers, see All Other.
As civil officers, see Civil Officer.

SCHOOL PROPERTY

Improvement of school property, see Improvement.

Pol. Code, § 1617, subd. 4, empowering the school board to rent school property, does not mean to rent property for use of schools, because such property would not be "school property." Mahoney v. Board of Education of City and County of San Francisco, 107 Pac. 584, 586, 12 Cal. App. 293.

SCHOOL PURPOSES

See Building Used for; Occupied for School Purposes; Unoccupied for School Purposes.

A "high school" is fairly included in the term "school purposes," in the statute relating to raising money for acquiring land for "school purposes." Carling v. Jersey City, 58 Atl. 395, 397, 71 N. J. Law, 154.

SCHOOL TAX

As county tax, see County Tax.

SCHOOL TOWNSHIP

Code, § 2794, which provides that, "upon the written petition of any ten voters of a city, town, or village of over one hundred residents to the board of the school township in which the portion of the town having the largest number of voters is situated, such board shall establish the boundaries of a proposed independent district, including therein all of the city, town or village," etc., when read in the light of the history of the school legislation, should be considered as though the words "school corporation" were substituted for "school township," and is applicable to a case where the town includes territory which was a part of one or more independent school districts. Rural Independent School Dist. No. 10 v. New Independent School Dist., 94 N. W. 284, 287, 120 Iowa, 119.

Under the express provisions of Burns' Ann. St. 1908, §§ 6404, 6405, a "school township" is a corporation, and has control of the schools, schoolhouses, and school funds. It is a distinct legal entity from that of the civil township. Teepie v. State ex rel. Bower, 86 N. E. 49, 51, 171 Ind. 268.

SCHOOL TRUSTEE

As officer, see Officer.

As state officer, see State Officer.

SCHOOL YEAR

Year as school year, see Year.

SCIATICA

In an action for injuries to a passenger, where plaintiff's evidence tended to show that he was afflicted with "sciatica," which is defined as neuralgia of the sciatic nerve, and, in a popular sense, any affection of the hip or adjoining parts, a verdict for $1,000 held excessive and reduced to $250. Brannon v. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co., 57 South. 172, 173, 129 La. 916.

SCIENCE

See Christian Science.

The term "science, art, or skill," as a limitation of expert evidence, is not confined to matters involving abstruse scientific conditions. Schwantes v. State, 106 N. W. 237, 247, 127 Wis. 160 (citing Webst. Dict.; Page v. Parker, 40 N. H. 47; Doster v. Brown, 25 Ga. 24, 71 Am. Dec. 153; Heald v. Thing, 45 Me. 392; Lawson, Exp. Ev. p. 229; Whart. Law of Ev. [3d Ed.] § 444).

SCIENTIFIC ASSOCIATION

An incorporated school is a "scientific" or "literary" association within St. 1898, § 1038, exempting from taxation property of such associations. Board of Trustees of Lawrence University v. Outagamie County, 136 N. W. 619, 620, 150 Wis. 244.

SCIENTIFIC INSTITUTION

Under Rev. St. c. 9, § 8, providing for taxation of real estate against the person in possession, a university fraternity in possession of a chapter house, built on the campus under a contract to purchase from the university, is liable for taxes assessed against the property; the fraternity not being exempt as a literary or "scientific institution" within section 6, par. 2. Inhabitants of Orono v. Kappa Sigma Society, 80 Atl. 831, 832, 106 Me. 320.

SCIENTER

Guilt knowledge necessary to fraud is sometimes designated by the technical term "scienter." Collins v. Chipman, 95 S. W. 666, 673, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 563 (citing Big. Fraud, 117); Mason v. Moore, 76 N. E. 932, 937, 73 Ohio St. 275, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 597, 4 Ann. Cas. 240; Curtley v. Security Sav. Soc., 89 Pac. 180, 183, 46 Wash. 50.

"A false representation, made with the knowledge of its falsity by the utterer, is 'scienter' in law, and therefore proof that the party made the false representation concerning a material fact with knowledge that it was false at the time it was made, satisfies the law in so far as 'scienter' is concerned, for, from the fact that the representation was made with knowledge of its falsity, it must be taken that it was made with an intent to deceive and the corrupt element or evil design, actual knowledge of its falsity being present, 'scienter' is thereby actually established. On an allegation under this phase of the scienter, the issue is the actual evil intent, as distinguished from honest error and innocent mistake. A second phase of the law of scienter arises when the utterer of the representation does not know it to be false, but he asserts a material fact as of his own knowledge, when in truth he has no knowledge on the subject as to whether the representation is true or false. Under this phase of the matter, the law being satisfied by proof of the party's reckless or wanton conduct in asserting positively as of his own knowledge a fact concerning which he knew nothing, raises up and supplies the scienter constructively from the reckless conduct, and, since it would be impossible to prove that the utterer knew or believed at the time that his statement was untrue, the question of his good or bad faith in so recklessly representing facts as of his own knowledge is not an issue, for the law steps in and denounces the whole as fraudulent by supplying the scienter. It would not be competent for him to show that he believed the facts to be as stated by him at the time." Serrano v. Miller & Teasdale Commission Co., 93 S. W. 810, 813, 117 Mo. App. 185.

SCILICET

See Videlicet.

SCINTILLA OF EVIDENCE

A "scintilla of evidence" is any material evidence which, if true, would tend to establish the issue in the mind of a reasonable juror. Taylor v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 59 S. E. 641, 643, 78 S. C. 552; Crosby v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 61 S. E. 1064, 1067, 81 S. C. 24.

The "scintilla of evidence rule" is one under which it is the duty of the trial court to submit the case to the jury if there is a scintilla of evidence to sustain the plaintiff's case, but the verdict cannot stand upon a "scintilla of evidence" against overwhelming credible evidence to the contrary. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Zachary's Adm'r (Ky.) 106 S. W. 842, 843. See, also, Boswell v. First Nat. Bank of Laramie, 92 Pac. 624, 635, 16 Wyo. 161.

Whether there is only a "scintilla of evidence" is for the court to determine; and, where the court so finds, it must withdraw the case from the jury, and it cannot submit the case to the jury because it finds there is more than a scintilla, and yet instruct that, if the jury find there is only a scintilla, they will not be justified in a verdict for plaintiff. Consolidated Gas, Electric Light & Power Co. v. State, to Use of Smith, 72 Atl. 651, 653, 660, 109 Md. 186 (citing Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, to Use of Savington, 18 Atl. 969, 71 Md. 590).

SCIRE FACIAS

The "scire facias" is a common-law writ, and not a statutory remedy to obtain a personal judgment, and based upon the particular proceeding to which it is applicable. Kirk v. United States, 131 Fed. 331, 335.

"'Scire facias' is the proceeding by which a criminal bond is forfeited." Mason v. Terrell, 60 S. E. 4, 7, 3 Ga. App. 348.

"Scire facias" is a judicial writ at common law to revive judgments, or to obtain satisfaction thereof, from sureties upon bail or other recognizances taken in the proceedings in which the judgment is rendered.

Egan v. Chicago Great Western Ry. Co., 163 Fed. 344, 350.

"Scire facias" at common law is not strictly an original writ, but is a judicial writ founded on matter of record, but, when considered as to the judicial character of the records upon which it is founded the writ is a mere continuance of the former action when the record is a judicial record—e. g., a judgment—liability being fixed by the original judgment, and not by the writ, but, when the writ is founded upon a nonjudicial record, it is of the nature of an original writ, and is the commencement of the action. Malsberger v. Parsons (Del.) 75 Atl. 698, 700, 1 Boyce, 254.

While "scire facias" cannot be regarded as an original action where it is used to revive a judgment, but it must be so regarded where it is based on a recognizance, but whether it be regarded as an original action or not, where it is used to enforce a recognizance, the judgment in such an action must be regarded as a finality and res judicata. State v. Boner, 49 S. E. 944, 57 W. Va. 81 (citing Freeman, Judgm. § 448; Crawford v. Fickey, 23 S. E. 662, 41 W. Va. 544).

A "scire facias" is a judicial writ, and ought to be founded on a record. Where the crown has unadvisedly granted anything by letters patent which ought not to be granted, the remedy to repeal the patent is by writ of scire facias in chancery. In the United States the remedy is by bill in equity for a judicial decree of nullity and an order of cancellation of a patent issued in mistake or obtained by fraud, where the government has a direct interest or is under obligation to the public respecting the relief invoked. McCarter v. Sooy Oyster Co., 75 Atl. 211, 217, 78 N. J. Law, 394 (citing 8 Bac. Abr. 609; 3 Bl. C. 260; Bouv. Law Dict. [Rawle's Revision] 960; United States v. Beebe, 8 Sup. Ct. 1083, 127 U. S. 338, 32 L. Ed. 121).

A petition or complaint reciting a prior order for alimony pendente lite, nonpayment thereof, the amount of accrued and unpaid alimony, and refusal of defendant to pay the same, and praying for judgment that plaintiff have execution against the property of defendant subject to execution, is substantially a writ of "scire facias" and is unknown to our practice. Kapp v. Seventh Judicial Dist. Court, 107 Pac. 95, 96, 32 Nev. 264, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 177.

A "scire facias" is a writ founded on some record remaining in the court from which it is issued, and, although it is a judicial writ of execution, yet it so far partakes of the nature of an original writ that the defendant is entitled to plead to it, and, as to the judgment debtor and his heirs or personal representatives, it is a continuation of the former proceeding. As known to the common law, it was founded upon some matter of record, as judgments, recognizances, letters patents, etc., and its object was either to obtain execution of the matter of record upon which it was based or to vacate or set it aside. Brooks v. Preston, 68 Atl. 294, 295, 296, 106 Md. 693 (citing Poe, Pl. & Prac. [3d Ed.] § 585; Bish v. Williar, 59 Md. 384; 19 Ency. Pl. & Prac. 262, 263; Bridges v. Adams, 32 Md. 580).

As action or suit

"Scire facias" has been regarded in law as an action or suit. McLellan v. Lunt, 14 Me. 254, 258.

A "scire facias" to revive a dormant judgment is in the nature of a suit, and the defendant is bound to plead all matters of defense that he has, just as he would in an ordinary suit, or else he will be, after the judgment, concluded as to any defense which could have been made the subject-matter of a plea. Helms v. Marshall, 49 S. E. 733, 734, 121 Ga. 769 (citing Lewis v. Allen, 68 Ga. 400).

While "scire facias" to revive a judgment is like a suit on a judgment in respect to parties, and in that it requires a defense, the judgment in the suit on the judgment is for the debt and damages, while that on the scire facias is that plaintiff have execution, and until the judgment debt is satisfied scire facias may be prosecuted at the same time as the action on the debt, and the pendency of the scire facias does not abate the suit on the judgment. Dreunen v. Dunn, 52 South. 313, 314, 166 Ala. 213, 139 Am. St. Rep. 28.

"A 'scire facias,' whether considered as an original or judicial writ, is an action and such as the defendant may plead to. It is considered both as process and declaration. It is in the nature of a declaration, and the proper course to take advantage of informalities is by demurrer." A writ of scire facias on a recognizance is considered as process and declaration. State v. Delaney, 70 Atl. 311, 76 N. J. Law, 547 (citing and adopting Bac. Abr. 624; 2 Tidd's Prac. 1090).

As action, proceeding, or suit

See Action; Civil Action—Case—Suit—Etc.; Proceeding; Suit.

As continuation of a proceeding

A "scire facias" to revive a judgment is a continuance of the original action, and is not a new action. A federal circuit court has power to issue its writ of scire facias to revive its judgment and to prescribe a reasonable method of service thereof without the district. The conformity act does not require the court to follow the method prescribed by a state statute in serving the writ. Collin County Nat. Bank of McKinney, Tex., v. Hughes, 155 Fed. 389, 391, 83 C. C. A. 661.

A proceeding by "scire facias" is not, strictly speaking, an action, but a mere continuation of and ancillary to the original action. Bick v. Dixon, 126 S. W. 235, 147 Mo. App. 69.

"Scire facias" to revive a judgment is not a new suit, but a continuation of the old one to obtain execution which can no longer be issued as of right because of lapse of time, the writ serving the double purpose of a writ and declaration, and following the judgment to be revived as to amount, date, and parties. White's Adm'r v. Palmer, 66 S. E. 44, 46, 110 Va. 490.

"While a 'scire facias' has been called an action for some purposes, and by some decisions has been apparently treated as a new action, even where its object is to revive a judgment, the better opinion, and that supported by the weight of authority, is to the effect that a proceeding by scire facias to revive a judgment is not an original proceeding, but a mere continuance of the former suit. It is merely a supplementary remedy to aid in the recovery of the debt evidenced by the original judgment, and upon such proceedings the merits of the original judgment cannot be inquired into, and a judgment rendered in such a proceeding is not a new one for the debt and damages, but merely an order that execution shall issue. It may be said, however, that in all cases it is in the nature of an action, in that the defendant may plead thereto." A proceeding by scire facias to revive a judgment is in effect but the application by the plaintiff to the court for an execution on his judgment after the time when he could have demanded execution of the clerk. Goddard, to Use of Hyde, v. Delaney, 80 S. W. 886, 890, 181 Mo. 564 (quoting and adopting definition in 18 Ency. Pl. & Pr. 1059).

As original proceeding

"Scire facias" is a judicial writ used to enforce the execution on some matter or record on which it is usually founded; but though a judicial writ, or writ of execution, it is so far an original that the defendant may plead to it. As it discloses the facts on which it is founded, and required an answer from the defendant, it is in the nature of a declaration, and the plea is properly to the writ. Hollister v. United States, 145 Fed. 773, 779, 76 C. C. A. 337 (quoting and adopting Winder v. Caldwell, 55 U. S. [14 How.] 434, 14 L. Ed. 487).

SCOLD

"Scolding" is mere clamor, railing, personal reproof. Rahles v. J. Thompson & Sons Mfg. Co., 119 N. W. 289, 290, 137 Wis. 506, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 296.

SCOPE

The word "scope" primarily means a "mark" or "target," and hence "design," "aim," "purpose," or "intention," and as used in Civil Service Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 7) § 25, prohibiting appointments from employment within the "scope" of established rules means "intent and purpose." People ex rel. Garvey v. Prendergast, 132 N. Y. Supp. 115, 118, 148 App. Div. 129.

SCOPE OF AGENCY

The "scope of an agency" is to be determined, not alone from what the principal may have told the agent to do, but from what he knows, or ought to know in the exercise of ordinary care and prudence, the agent is doing in the premises. Law Reporting Co. v. Elwood Grain Co., 115 S. W. 475, 477, 135 Mo. App. 10.

SCOPE OF AUTHORITY

"Scope of authority," "course of employment," and "authority," as used in the law relating to a master's liability for torts of his servant, are often used indiscriminately and interchangeably, and sometimes as representing, respectively, the more restricted and the more enlarged criterion of liability of the master. Penas v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 127 N. W. 926, 933, 112 Minn. 203, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 627, 140 Am. St. Rep. 470.

The terms "course of employment" and "scope of authority," as applied to a servant's acts, are not susceptible of accurate definition, since what acts are within the scope of the servant's employment so as to render the master liable therefor must be gathered from the surrounding circumstances, the master's liability depending upon his consent, express or implied, to the servant's acts. Robards v. P. Bannon Sewer Pipe Co., 113 S. W. 429, 431, 130 Ky. 380, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 923, 132 Am. St. Rep. 394.

A servant's delegation of his personal duty is beyond the "scope of his authority." Raible v. Hygienic Ice & Refrigerating Co., 119 N. Y. Supp. 138, 140, 134 App. Div. 705.

The trainer of one maintaining a stable of race horses having no authority to hire or select boys to be used in training, but his authority being restricted to use of such boys as had been employed for such purpose, his act of placing on a horse a boy not so employed was without his "scope of authority"; so that, unless it was ratified, the master was not liable for injury to the boy. Corrigan v. Hunter, 122 S. W. 131, 133, 139 Ky. 315, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 187.

SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT

The phrase "while in the employment" is not synonymous with "in the scope of employment." The line is not always easy to draw, but, if not drawn, the employer is made responsible for every tort committed by the employé during the time of employment. Stewart v. Cary Lumber Co., 59 S. E. 545, 567, 146 N. C. 47 (dissenting opinion).

The words "within the scope of his employment" have no legal or technical meaning distinct from their ordinary meaning, and, in an action against railway company for injuries from being struck by a piece of ice kicked from a passing train by a brakeman, it is not error to refuse to explain their meaning as used in the instructions. Maysville & B. S. R. Co. v. Willis (Ky.) 104 S. W. 1016, 1018.

In Code Iowa 1897, § 1750, which provides that "any officer, agent or representative of an insurance company doing business in this state who may solicit insurance, procure applications, issue policies, and adjust losses or transact the business generally of such companies shall be held to be the agent of such insurance companies, with authority to transact all business within the scope of his employment, anything in the application, policy, contract, by-laws, or articles of incorporation of such company to the contrary notwithstanding," the phrase "scope of his employment" has a more restricted meaning than "scope of his agency," and is necessarily limited by the terms of the employment; and when, therefore, an agent is employed to make contracts for his principal only in writing, a verbal contract is beyond the scope of his employment, and is not by the statute rendered binding on the company. Mulrooney v. Royal Ins. Co. of Liverpool, Eng., 157 Fed. 598, 606.

"The words 'within the scope of his employment,' as applied to the liability of a master for the wrongful acts of his servant, are probably not susceptible to any satisfactory definition of general application; each case must be determined by the particular facts and circumstances surrounding it. Before the master can be held liable for the negligence or wrongful act of his servant, it must appear that the servant was engaged at the time in the performance of the duties of his employment, and if so engaged, and the wrongful act was performed in connection with such duties and in apparent furtherance of their accomplishment, the master will be liable, even though the act be in excess of the authority conferred by him or in violation of his express directions, provided, however, that it is not done in furtherance alone of the personal desires or ends of the servant. The intent with which an act is done affords a more reliable test as to whether it is within the scope of the servant's employment than do the methods of its accomplishment." A servant employed as watchman to protect railroad property and to eject trespassers has implied authority to use force when necessary, and hence, in shooting a trespasser on the property, such servant acted within the scope of his employment. Conchin v. El Paso & S. W. R. Co., 108 Pac. 260, 261, 13 Ariz. 259, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 88.

The test of whether a servant is acting within the "scope of his employment" at the time of his negligent act is, was the act done while the servant was doing the master's work, no matter how irregularly. Jones v.

A master is not liable for the torts of the servant, done while in the performance of the servant's duties, unless the act itself pertains to the service for which he is employed. The mere fact that the act is done by the servant with the intention of serving the master is insufficient to bring it within the "scope of his employment." Shelby v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 125 S. W. 1189, 1190, 141 Mo. App. 514.

The words "acting within the scope of his employment," used with reference to the acts of an ordinary employé, have no legal or technical meaning distinct from their ordinary meaning, so that the court's failure to define their meaning is not error. Maysville & B. S. R. Co. v. Willis (Ky.) 104 S. W. 1016, 1018.

SCOTCH WHISKY

"Scotch whisky" is not made from corn, but is made from malted barley. Levy v. Uri, 31 App. D. C. 441, 445.

SCOW

As vessel, see Vessel.

SCOWMAN

As laborer, see Laborer.

SCRAP

See Busheling Scrap.

Composition scrap, see Composition Metal.

SCRAP IRON

The term "scrap iron" as used in a contract for the sale of scrap iron intended to be obtained from the dismantling of a building would not ordinarily include structural material in a standing building, certainly not in a building in good condition not to be dismantled. United Rys. & Electric Co. v. Henry Wehr & Co., 63 Atl. 475, 478, 103 Md. 323.

The term "scrap iron," as used in the Tariff Act, providing that nothing shall be deemed scrap iron except waste or refuse iron that has been in actual use and is fit only to be remanufactured, expressly covers old iron and cannot cover anything else, and this provision is more specific than that for "junk, old," which includes an infinite variety of things of which one kind is "scrap iron." Buehne Steel Wool Co. v. United States, 159 Fed. 107, 109, 86 C. C. A. 297; C. W. Sheldon & Co. v. United States, 159 Fed. 105, 106, 86 C. C. A. 295.

Old iron chains are not "junk, old," within the meaning of the Tariff Act, but are dutiable as "scrap iron" * * * fit only to be remanufactured." G. W. Sheldon & Co. v. United States, 152 Fed. 318, 320.

SCRAP STEEL

Steel rails, which are new, but by reason of defects are depreciated in value, but which have not lost their character or identity as rails, are not within the provision of the Tariff Act for "scrap steel * * * fit only to be remanufactured," but are dutiable as "rails," even though they may be intended to be used as scrap iron. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. McCall, 147 Fed. 925.

Old fishplates, which are so worn as to have lost their usefulness for railway purposes and are suitable for use only as "scrap steel," are not dutiable under the Tariff Act as "railway fishplates," but as "scrap steel * * * fit only to be remanufactured." R. L. Ginsburg & Sons v. United States, 147 Fed. 531, 532 (citing Downing v. United States, 122 Fed. 445, 58 C. C. A. 427; Dwight v. Merritt, 11 Sup. Ct. 768, 140 U. S. 213, 35 L. Ed. 450).

SCRAPBOOKS

Books or albums used for preserving collections of postal cards are dutiable as "scrap-books," under the Tariff Act. American News Co. v. United States, 149 Fed. 1022, 79 C. C. A. 531; American News Co. v. United States, 142 Fed. 786, 787.

SCRAWL

The character or device "(L. S.)," printed or written, appearing in the usual place for the seal, opposite the signature of the maker of a note, amounts to a "scrawl," within the statute providing that a "scrawl," printed or written, affixed as a seal to any written instrument, shall be effectual as a seal. Langley v. Owens, 42 South. 457, 459, 52 Fla. 302, 11 Ann. Cas. 247.

SCREEN

In Laws 1904, p. 140, c. 99, requiring the separation of white and colored races on the street cars, but permitting the use for that purpose of adjustable "screens" or "partitions," the words "partitions" or "screens" ex vi termini import complete separation between the races, so that passengers in one compartment would be shut out from passengers in the other. The word "screens," as well as the word "partition," imports that one race is to be shut out from any contact with the other. Signs, 8x12 inches in size, having painted thereon the words "white" and "colored," respectively, and supported on the backs of seats in street cars, were not adjustable screens, within the meaning of the law. Southern Light & Traction Co. v. Compton, 38 South. 629, 630, 86 Miss. 269.

SCREW-DRIVER

As deadly weapon, see Deadly Weapon.

SCRIBNER'S LOG RULE

"Scribner's log rule," as applied to logging contracts, requires that a diameter be taken at each end of the log and the sum of the two diameters be divided by two for finding the true diameter. Des Allemands Lumber Co. v. Morgan City Timber Co., 41 South. 332, 339, 117 La. 1.

SCRIP

See Dividend in Scrip.

In corporation parlance, "scrip" is the certificate or evidence of the right to obtain shares in a corporation. Sweetsir v. Chandler, 56 Atl. 584, 588, 98 Me. 145.

Warehouse receipt

The warehouse receipts authorized to be issued under the State Warehouse Act (Laws 1912, p. 707) are not "scrip, certificates, or other evidence of state indebtedness" within the meaning of Const. art. 10, § 7, restricting the issuance of such paper. State v. McCown, 75 S. E. 392, 396, 92 S. C. 81.

SCRIPT

See County Script.

Receipts issued to makers of notes and receivable by the payee in lieu of cash as payments upon the notes are sometimes termed "script." Sharp v. State, 67 S. E. 1124, 7 Ga. App. 749.

SCRIVENER

A "scrivener" exercised conjoint duties of a banker, broker, and an attorney; his business being to receive other men's money, and lay out at interest, and then receive it back again, and keep it in his hands, and then again lay it out at interest. Hoffman v. Froma Realty Co., 138 N. Y. Supp. 935, 938, 153 App. Div. 770.

SCRIVENER'S RULE

The "scrivener's rule," that where an agent who negotiates a loan for his principal is allowed to retain possession and control of the security taken on the loan, he has apparent authority, after maturity, to receive payment for his principal, rests upon estoppel, and requires that he should have been the agent of the lender in making the loan, and that the indicia of indebtedness shall have been intentionally left in his possession, and that the person relying on such rule must have known and relied on such agency and possession. The rule has never been extended to hold that possession of the indicia of indebtedness by the assignor of a mortgage implied authority on his part to accept payment for the assignee. As the rule cannot be applied to justify payment to a supposed agent of the creditor, except according to the strict letter of the obligation, it does not justify payment of a part for the whole. Hoffman v. Froma Realty Co., 138 N. Y. Supp. 935, 938, 153 App. Div. 770.

SCROLL

As seal, see Seal.

SCULL

The slag, dross, and other impurities in molten iron discharged from the top of the converter and driven on the roof-shield are called "scull." Barry v. Jones & Laughlin Steel Co., 83 Atl. 299, 234 Pa. 367.

SCULPTURE

See Cast of Sculpture.

SCYTHE

A "scythe" is a simple tool used by mankind from remote ages to the present for the cutting of grass, grain, and weeds. Its use is a simple matter of universal knowledge, about which reasonable minds do not differ, and is therefore a subject of which courts may take judicial knowledge. Post v. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co., 97 S. W. 233, 234, 121 Mo. App. 562.

SEA

See Beyond Seas; High Seas; Main Sea; Perils of the Sea.

In boundaries

An ancient patent described its southern boundary as the "sea." The two rivers which were the eastern and western boundaries flowed into a bay which was affected by the tides. The grantee never made any claim of ownership to the ocean, as the southern boundary reached, by extending eastern and western lines, some four miles to the ocean. A subsequent patent of adjacent lands used the words "sea or main ocean" as a boundary. Held, that the north shore of the bay formed the southern boundary; the word "sea," at the time of the patent and for a long time thereafter, being used as synonymous with the word "bay." Rockaway Park Improvement Co. v. City of New York, 124 N. Y. Supp. 1096, 1097, 140 App. Div. 160.

SEA MILE

See Mile.

SEA MOSS

"Irish moss" or "sea moss" is a species of sea weed whose gelatinous qualities render it valuable as an article of food. It is a marine plant of the genera corallina. It is a sea weed (Chondrus crispus) which grows abundantly along the rocky parts of the Atlantic coasts of Europe and North America. It is collected for commercial purposes on the west and northwest of Ireland and in very large quantities on the coast of Plymouth county, Mass., U. S. It is used for food, medicine, and a thickener for printing calico and for finning beer. "Sea grass," used for making mattresses and upholstering purposes, is an entirely different article from sea moss and is not known commercially as sea moss, and is not dutiable as such under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 81, 30 Stat. 151, but is entitled to free entry under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 617, 30 Stat. 199, which covers "moss, seaweeds, and vegetable substances, crude or unmanufactured, not otherwise specially provided for." In re F. W. Myers & Co., 123 Fed. 952, 955 (quoting and adopting definition in Worcester, Dict.; Imperial Dict.; Ency. Brit.).

SEA SERVICE

A naval officer is not entitled to sea pay while occupied in traveling on duty partly on a merchant steamer and partly on land, and in reporting to the Navy Department, since this is not "sea service" within the meaning of Rev. St. U. S. § 1571, declaring that "no service shall be regarded as sea service except such as shall be performed at sea, under the orders of a department, and in vessels employed by authority of law." United States v. Thomas, 25 Sup. Ct. 102-105, 195 U. S. 418, 49 L. Ed. 259.

SEA STORES

"Sea stores" are the supplies of different articles provided for the subsistence and accommodation of the ship's crew and passengers, and do not include coal. United States v. Hawley & Letzerich, 160 Fed. 734, 739.

SEABOARD

See Atlantic Seaboard.

SEASHORE

Land covered by highest flood tide

"Seashore" is that space of land over which the water of the sea spreads in the highest water, during the winter season." Minor's Heirs v. City of New Orleans, 38 South. 999, 1003, 115 La. 301.

SEAWEED

Nori, a seaweed gathered from the ocean and sun-dried, without the addition of any other substance and without being subjected to any other process than spreading it on mats to facilitate drying is "seaweeds * * * crude or unmanufactured," within the meaning of the Tariff Act. United States v. M. Furuya & Co., 176 Fed. 480.

SEAWORTHY—SEAWORTHINESS

See, also, Unseaworthy.

To be "seaworthy" a vessel must be sufficiently tight, staunch, and strong to resist the ordinary attacks of winds and seas. Sanford & Brooks Co. v. Columbia Dredging Co., 177 Fed. 878, 882, 101 C. C. A. 92. See, also, The F. & T. Lupton, 182 Fed. 144, 147.

A ship is "seaworthy" if it is reasonably fit to carry the cargo which it has undertaken to transport. To constitute "seaworthiness" of the hull of a vessel in respect to cargo, the hull must be so tight, staunch, and strong as to be competent to resist all ordinary action of the sea and to prosecute and complete the voyage without damage to the cargo under deck. The Ninfa, 156 Fed. 512, 521 (citing Dupont de Nemours & Co. v. Vance, 19 How. 162, 167, 15 L. Ed. 584).

The words "seaworthy," "seaworthiness," and "tight and sound," as used in reference to a vessel, mean the sufficiency of such vessel in materials, construction, equipment, and outfit for the trade or service in which it was employed. Paddock-Hawley Iron Co. v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co. of Providence, R. I., 93 S. W. 358, 360, 118 Mo. App. 85.

Where a vessel was bored through her waterways, through the ends of the beams and at some point into the timbers from the mainmast to the foremast, and no sound wood was found, such a frame as exhibited by such borings cannot be regarded as "seaworthy." Morse v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 129 Fed. 233, 235.

The term "seaworthy," as now construed, has relation to the article carried and the different compartments of the ship and their particular use, as well as to the navigability of the vessel. The Indrapura, 178 Fed. 591, 594.

As requiring proper stowage of cargo

The requirement of "seaworthiness" at the beginning of a voyage includes, not only seaworthiness in hull and equipment, but also in the stowage of the cargo. Corsar v. J. D. Spreckels & Bros. Co., 141 Fed. 260, 264, 72 C. C. A. 378.

A warranty of "seaworthiness" in a charter party is absolute and not conditional, and includes a warranty of proper stowage for the voyage. The Medea, 179 Fed. 781, 792, 103 C. C. A. 273.

As requiring refrigerating apparatus

"Seaworthiness" is defined to be, "in maritime law, the sufficiency of the vessel in materials, construction, equipment, officers, men, and outfit for the trade or service in which it is employed." The test of seaworthiness is whether the vessel is reasonably fit to carry the cargo which she has undertaken to transport. The furnishing of a refrigerating apparatus in good order and repair, competent for the safe transportation of a cargo of dressed beef, which a vessel has undertaken to carry, is within the obligation to use due diligence to provide a seaworthy vessel, imposed upon the owner by the Harter

Act (Act Feb. 13, 1893, c. 105, 27 Stat. 445), as a condition precedent to the enjoyment of the benefits of that act in limiting the owner's liability as therein provided. The Southwark, 24 Sup. Ct. 1, 3, 191 U. S. 1, 48 L. Ed. 65 (quoting Bouv. Law Dict.).

SEAL

See Common or Corporate Seal; Corporate Seal; County Seal; Official Seal; Signed, Sealed, and Delivered in the Presence of.

Element of specialty, see Specialty.

Execution as importing, see Execute.

My hand and seal, see My.

The purpose of a "seal" is to attest in a formal manner the execution of an instrument. King v. Gwynes, 42 South. 959, 960, 118 La. 344 (citing Black, Law Dict.).

Under a statute providing that any instrument of writing, to which the maker shall affix a scrawl by way of seal, shall be of the same effect and obligation to all intents as if the same were sealed, the word "seal" attached to a release opposite the signature of the person executing it, without any scrawl, stamp, impression, or mark, was sufficient to constitute the release of an instrument under seal. Jackson v. Security Mut. Life Ins. Co., 84 N. E. 198, 200, 233 Ill. 161 (citing and adopting Doe ex dem. Ankeny v. McMahon [Ill.] 3 Scam. 12; Lewis' Ex'rs v. Overly's Adm'r [Va.] 28 Grat. 627).

Where a copy of a deed is offered in evidence, having a certificate of acknowledgment certified by the officer as under his official seal, and the clerk, in copying, appends to such official signature the word "seal," the word will be presumptively held to represent such officer's seal and a copy is properly admitted in evidence over such objection. Wilson v. Braden, 49 S. E. 409, 410, 56 W. Va. 372, 107 Am. St. Rep. 927.

Printed word "Seal"

"Any stamp, impression, or mark made or adopted by the signer and annexed to his signature as and for his seal will answer the purpose of sealing; as, for instance, a written or ink seal, the characters 'L. S.' or the word 'Seal,' a scroll, a scrawl inclosing the word 'Seal,' or a piece of paper in the form of a seal attached by mucilage, opposite the signature, or even a flourish or mark, however inconsiderable. In the absence of statute, however, obviating all necessity therefor, a scroll or some indicium of a seal is necessary." The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania says: "The days of actual sealing of legal documents in its original sense of the impression of an individual mark or device upon wax or wafer, or even on the parchment or paper itself, have long gone by. It is immaterial what device the impression bears, and the same stamp may serve for several parties in the same deed. Not only so, but the use of wax has almost entirely, and even of wafers very largely, ceased. In short, sealing has become constructive, rather than actual, and is in a great degree a matter of intention." A mortgage reciting that it is executed under "hand and seal," and bearing the printed word "Seal" after the name of the mortgagor, constitutes a sealed instrument, within the statute of limitations barring actions on sealed instruments in 20 years. Philip v. Stearns, 105 N. W. 467, 469, 20 S. D. 220, 11 Ann. Cas. 1108 (quoting Lorah v. Nissley, 27 Atl. 242, 156 Pa. 329).

A mortgage reciting, "In witness whereof, the said parties of the first part have hereunto set their hands and seals," and in which the word "seal" follows the name of each mortgagor, is a "sealed instrument" within Code Civ. Proc. § 58, permitting an action on such an instrument any time within 20 years. Green v. Frick, 126 N. W. 579, 580, 25 S. D. 342.

Scrawl or scroll

The character or device "(L. S.)," printed or written, appearing in the usual place for the seal, opposite the signature of the maker of a note, amounts to a "scrawl" or "scroll," within the statute providing that a "scrawl" or "scroll" printed or written, affixed as a seal to any written instrument, shall be effectual as a seal. Langley v. Owens, 42 South. 457, 459, 52 Fla. 302, 11 Ann. Cas. 247.

A "scroll" is "a flourish, tracing mark, or design, used in place of a seal." A statute permitting a person to affix to a paper "a scroll by way of seal," or to adopt as his seal any scroll, etc., made thereon by another, does not require the scroll to have any particular form or to be placed at any particular point with respect to the name of the party adopting it. A scroll appearing immediately after the name of one person may be adopted by another whose name appears on the instrument below the first name. Pardee v. Johnston, 74 S. E. 721, 722, 70 W. Va. 347 (quoting definition in Webst. Dict.).

A "scroll" may be adopted and used by a corporation as its seal in the execution of a legal instrument upon which a seal is designed to be used. W. B. Conkey Co. v. Goldman, 125 Ill. App. 161, 166. See, also, New York Life Ins. Co. v. Rhodes, 60 S. E. 828, 830, 4 Ga. App. 25.

SEALED

Under Civ. Code 1902, § 992, providing that, where a deposition is taken by another than the magistrate authorizing it, it shall be sealed up with the title of the case indorsed, etc., a seal in its ordinary acceptation, denoting an outward imprint, is not required on the envelope; the words "sealed up" having reference to the manner in which the envelope containing the deposition is to be closed or fastened. Jenkins v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 65 S. E. 636, 83 S. C. 473.

In the absence of some statutory provision, a bill of exceptions will not be regarded as "sealed" unless it is identified by the certificate of the trial court. Bostwick v. Willett, 60 Atl. 398, 399, 72 N. J. Law, 21.

"Corked" and "sealed," when used in reference to bottles, are not synonymous. Bottles are corked before sealing, and when corked are sealed by incasing the mouth in wax, or other material used for the same purpose, sufficiently close to exclude the air. The term "sealed," as used in Act March 29, 1899 (Laws 1899, p. 137), providing that any person who raises grapes or berries may make wine thereof, and sell in quantities not less than one-fifth of a gallon, or in sealed bottles, without a license, when the same is properly labeled as provided by "such act," should be construed as requiring the incasing of the mouth of the bottle in wax after it has been corked, and hence the sale of wine in bottles which were corked only was a violation of the statute. Koban v. State, 81 S. W. 235, 72 Ark. 407.

SEALED INSTRUMENT

See, also, Seal.

An instrument denominated a "Real Estate Mortgage Coupon Bond," containing stipulations not usually found in notes, having interest coupons attached, and bearing the name and seal of the maker, is a "sealed instrument." Gibson v. Allen, 104 N. W. 275, 276, 19 S. D. 617.

As a general rule, "sealed instruments" within the limitation statute include all sealed contracts regardless of their nature, and an action on a sealed contract, executed in 1898, to make monthly payments for rent due, is controlled by St. 1898, § 4220, permitting actions on sealed instruments within 20 years after the action accrues. Mariner v. Wiens, 119 N. W. 340, 341, 137 Wis. 637.

The words "Witness ——— hand and seal," at the conclusion of an instrument, followed by the signature of the maker, with the word "Seal" in brackets annexed to the signature, are equivalent to "Witness my hand and seal," or "Signed and Sealed," and the instrument is an instrument under seal, within Civ. Code 1895, § 3765, limiting the time for an action on an instrument under seal, but providing that no instrument shall be considered under seal unless so recited in its body. Anderson v. Peteet, 64 S. E. 284, 6 Ga. App. 69.

The mere recital in the testimonium clause of an instrument, signed and delivered for a deed, that the parties have affixed their seals is not sufficient to make it a "sealed instrument" if no seal or scroll, mark, or word equivalent thereto is annexed to the signatures. Comley v. Ford, 64 S. E. 447, 450, 65 W. Va. 429.

A note, in the body of which there is no recital that it is to be a sealed instrument.

does not, under Civ. Code 1910, § 4359, become a "sealed instrument" because there is placed after the signature of the maker a scroll, or the letters "[L. S.]," or any similar device, nor because underneath the body of the note are the words, "Signed, sealed, and delivered in presence of," followed by the name of the subscribing witness. Waterman v. Barclay, 72 S. E. 716, 717, 10 Ga. App. 108.

A bond signed in the name of a corporation by the vice president, with the corporate seal affixed, is a "sealed instrument," though the seal is not opposite to the vice president's signature. United States v. Mercantile Trust Co., 62 Atl. 1062, 1063, 213 Pa. 411.

As obligation

See Obligation.

SEAM

In geology, a thin layer or stratum of rock is called a "seam." The same term is applied to coal. Chapman v. Mill Creek Coal & Coke Co., 46 S. E. 262, 263, 54 W. Va. 193. See, also, Newcomer & Lewis v. Scriven Co., 168 Fed. 621, 625, 94 C. C. A. 77.

SEAMAN

Any seaman, see Any.

As laborer, see Laborer.

As mechanic, see Mechanic.

Rev. St. § 4536, providing that no wages due or accruing to any seaman shall be subject to attachment or arrest from any court, and that every payment of wages to a seaman shall be valid at law notwithstanding any attachment thereof, is applicable as well to a seaman operating on coastwise vessels as on merchant vessels generally, and hence it is no answer to a libel in admiralty against a tug engaged in the coasting trade for a seaman's wages earned thereon that the wages had been attached by garnishment. The Amella, 183 Fed. 899, 900.

Rev. St. § 2174, authorizing the naturalization of any foreign seaman who "shall have served three years on board of a merchant vessel of the United States," after having declared his intention to become a citizen, on production of his certificate of discharge and good conduct during that time, is sufficiently broad to embrace every "seaman" who has served the required time on an American vessel, coastwise or other. In re Lind, 192 Fed. 209, 211.

Horsemen

Horsemen, signed for service on a vessel in caring for horses during a voyage, are "seamen," for the purpose of determining the application to them of the immigration acts. United States v. Atlantic Transport Co., 188 Fed. 42, 43, 110 C. C. A. 420.

SEARCH

In Rev. St. 1892, § 1394, allowing the clerk certain compensation for making "searches" for unpaid taxes and tax certificates, the searches, for which the Legislature fixes the compensation at 15 cents each, mean the examination each year for the purpose of ascertaining if a tax sale was made that year, whether the search resulted in the finding of such sale or not. Edwards v. Law, 36 South. 569, 570, 46 Fla. 203.

Const. 1890, § 23, which provides that the people shall be secure from unreasonable "seizure or search," is not violated by Laws 1910, c. 134, giving to the state, or county a suit for penalties provided therein, which may be begun by attachment, since there is no search or seizure within the meaning of the provision; the statute merely affording a remedy by attachment for the collection of the penalty. State v. Marshall, 56 South. 792, 797, 100 Miss. 626.

A "search" ordinarily implies a quest by an officer of the law, and a seizure contemplates a forcible dispossession of the owner. A corporation charged with a violation of the anti-trust act of July 2, 1890, is entitled to immunity under Const. U. S. Amend. 4, from such an unreasonable "search" and seizure as the compulsory production before a grand jury, under a subpoena duces tecum, of all understandings, contracts, or correspondence between such corporation and six other companies, together with all reports and accounts rendered by such companies from the date of the organization of the corporation, as well as all letters received by that corporation since its organization, from more than one dozen different companies, situated in seven different states. Hale v. Henkel, 28 Sup. Ct. 370, 379, 201 U. S. 43, 50 L. Ed. 652.

SEASON

See Busy Season; Dull Season; During Season; Foot-Ball Season; Irrigation Season.

The word "season," as used in a deed granting the right to work growing trees for turpentine purposes, which provides that the "said timber is to be boxed during the season 1905 or 1906, and providing that the right for turpentine purposes is to run for a period of four years from the time each lot is boxed, is not limited for the purpose of fixing the date at which the term should begin to one day but contemplates a longer time. The word must be construed in accordance with Pen. Code 1895, § 496, which provides that any person who shall cut turpentine boxes at any other time than from the 15th of November to the 15th of March shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, when so construed, the boxing season of 1905 commences November 15, 1905, and ends March 15, 1906, and is separate and distinct from the boxing season of 1906, which begins November 15, 1906, and ends March 15, 1907. Purdom Naval Stores Co. v. Knight, 59 S. E. 433, 129 Ga. 590 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6376).

SEASONABLY TURN

Rem. & Bal. Code, § 5558, which provides that vehicles traveling upon a public highway shall "seasonably turn" to the right of the center of the way when passing another vehicle coming in the opposite direction, means that travelers shall turn to the right in such season that neither shall be retarded in his progress, by reason of the other occupying his half of the way, when he may have occasion to use it in passing; but a person may lawfully use what is to him the left-hand side of the street if there is no travel at that time upon that part of the way, or if the travel is not so heavy as to make it dangerous. Segerstrom v. Lawrence, 116 Pac. 876, 877, 64 Wash. 245.

"Seasonably turn," as used in Rev. St. c. 19, § 2, providing that when persons traveling with a team are approaching to meet on a way they shall seasonably turn to the right of the middle of the traveled part of it so far that they can pass each other without interference, means that travelers shall turn to the right in such season that neither shall be retarded in his progress by reason of the other occupying his half of the way which the law has assigned to his use when he may have occasion to use it in passing. In short, each has an undoubted right to one-half of the way whenever he wishes to pass on it, and it is the duty of each without delay to yield such half to the other. Neal v. Rendall, 56 Atl. 209, 211, 98 Me. 69, 63 L. R. A. 668.

SEAT

See County Seat; Mill Seat.

In stock exchange

The rights and privileges of membership in a stock exchange is commonly called a "seat" in the exchange. In re Grant, 116 N. Y. Supp. 1152, 1155, 132 App. Div. 739.

SEAT OF JUSTICE

The terms "seat of justice" and "county seat" are synonymous, and are used indifferently to express the same thing in all our statutes relating to the subject. Rev. St. 1899, § 9055, providing that the recorder shall keep his office and records at the "seat of justice" in each county, merely requires him to keep them at the "county seat," and not at the courthouse itself. Babcock v. Hahn, 75 S. W. 93, 94, 175 Mo. 136.

SEC.

SECOND

SECOND CLASS

"By way of explanation, it may be stated that the printing known as 'first class' is the cheapest grade of printing, and that designated as 'second class' is a much more expensive grade." Commonwealth v. Bacon (Ky.) 111 S. W. 387, 392.

SECOND ELECTION

In Gen. St. 1909, § 7027, authorizing the calling of a second election to vote bonds in aid of a railroad on a petition of a majority of the legal voters, the word "second" means "another" or "subsequent" election, and the authority of a county to hold bond elections is not exhausted on the holding of a first and second election. Garden City, G. & N. R. Co. v. Masch, 109 Pac. 684, 688, 82 Kan. 795.

SECOND FEET

The only reliable method by which any certain number of inches of water can be determined is on the basis of what is termed by engineers as "second feet," or the quantity of water flowing past a certain point in a given space of time; the ratio being that one inch of water under a six-inch pressure equals one-fortieth of a "second foot"—that is, 40 miners' inches furnish a flow of water equal to one cubic foot (7½ gallons) per second of time. Gardner v. Wright, 91 Pac. 286, 297, 49 Or. 609.

SECOND OFFENSE

The words "second offense," as used in Rev. St. § 4364—20b, which declares that whoever shall sell liquors where sales are prohibited shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and which prescribes the punishment for the first offense and for a second offense, mean a second conviction. Hence an affidavit which charges three separate sales to different persons on the same day, but does not allege a previous conviction, is in legal effect a charge of a first offense only. Curey v. State, 70 N. E. 955, 956, 70 Ohio St. 121.

The provisions of Labor Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 31) §§ 160—173, relating to mercantile establishments, requires several things to be done in the performance of duties under that subdivision, and Penal Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 40) § 1275, as amended by Laws 1911, c. 749, increasing the amount of punishment on conviction of a "second offense," does not require a conviction of the same offense, but the punishment is based on the violation of any of the provisions of such act. People v. James Butler, Inc., 138 N. Y. Supp. 1068, 1069, 154 App. Div. 311.

SECOND TIME

See Convicted a Second Time.

SECOND WATER

The term "second water," in mining parlance, means water that has been used by a lower proprietor after it has been used by an upper one for mining purposes. Gold Ridge Min. Co. v. Tallmadge, 74 Pac. 325, 327, 44 Or. 34, 102 Am. St. Rep. 602.

SECONDARILY LIABLE

A guaranty of the payment of a note, indorsed on the back thereof, binds the guarantor to pay on default of the maker, and his liability is secondary, within Negotiable Instruments Law (Laws 1890, c. 94) § 120, providing that a person "secondarily liable" is discharged by a binding agreement extending the time of payment without his assent, and he is discharged by a binding extension of time given the maker by the holder. Mechanics' Bank & Trust Co. v. Hood, 150 S. W. 420, 421, 126 Tenn. 443.

Neg. Inst. Act (Pub. Laws 1896-1900, p. 84, c. 674) art. 1, § 3, provides that the person "primarily" liable on an instrument is the person who, by the terms thereof, is absolutely required to pay the same, and that all other parties are "secondarily" liable. Article 6, § 71, provides that a person placing his signature on an instrument otherwise than as maker, drawer, or acceptor is deemed to be an indorser, unless he clearly indicates his intention to be bound in some other capacity. Article 8, § 97, provides that where a negotiable instrument has been dishonored, if notice of dishonor is not given to an indorser, he shall be discharged. Held, that persons who placed their signatures on the back of a note before delivery for the accommodation of the maker were indorsers, and could not be held as joint makers on the ground that the holder would not have taken the note without their signatures. Deahy v. Choquet, 67 Atl. 421, 422, 28 R. I. 338, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 847.

The liability of a guarantor is based on the terms of his contract, which is distinct from the terms of the instrument on which it is indorsed, and he does not agree to make the debt his own, but only to answer on his principal's default, and his contract, while it may require him to pay the note, is secondary within Rev. Codes 1905, § 6494, providing the terms for the release of a person secondarily liable. The terms "primarily liable" and "secondarily liable," as used in Rev. Codes 1905, § 6494, have reference to the remedy provided for enforcing the obligation of one signing a negotiable instrument, rather than to the character of the obligation, and the remedy against a guarantor is not primary and direct, but collateral and secondary. Northern State Bank of Grand Forks v. Bellamy, 125 N. W. 888, 889, 19 N. D. 509, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 149.

SECONDARY BATTERY

A "primary battery" is one in which chemical action takes place directly to produce electromotive force, while in a "secondary battery" the electromotive force is produced by a chemical action set up after a current of electricity has been passed through the cell for some time. Secondary batteries are commonly called "storage batteries." In re Charles Town Light & Power Co., 183 Fed. 160, 165.

SECONDARY BOYCOTT

An organized union of employes may, by concerted action, cease dealing, either socially or in a business way, with a former employer, and this act is a "primary boycott," and such employes may, by fair oral or written persuasion, induce others interested in, or sympathetic with, their cause to withdraw their social intercourse and business patronage from the employer, and they may request another to withdraw his patronage from the employer, and may use the moral coercion of threatening a like boycott against him if he refuses to do so, and the latter act is the "secondary boycott," but any act which passes beyond moral suasion, and plays by intimidation on physical fears, is unlawful, and will be restrained. Pierce v. Stablemen's Union, Local No. 8,760, 103 Pac. 324, 325, 156 Cal. 70.

SECONDARY EASEMENT

The term "secondary easement" is applied to the right to enter and repair and do those things necessary to the full enjoyment of an easement as existing; but such right does not entitle one, having an easement consisting of the right to divert, at a certain point on lands of others, water from a stream, and conduct it by a certain route and means over such lands, to divert the water at another point on such lands, and conduct it over them by a different route and different means, where the elements have rendered it impossible to divert it at the original point and conduct it by the original way and means. White Bros. & Crum Co. v. Watson, 117 Pac. 497, 499, 64 Wash. 666, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 254.

Every easement includes what are termed "secondary easements" (that is, the right to do such things as are necessary for the full enjoyment of the easement itself); but this right is limited and must be exercised in such reasonable manner as not to injuriously increase the burden upon the servient tenement. Under Pol. Code Cal. § 2631, providing that, by taking and accepting land for a highway, the public acquire only the right of way and "the incidents necessary to enjoying and maintaining it," the county has no right to bore wells in the highway and use the subterranean water for sprinkling it. Wright v. Austin, 76 Pac. 1023, 1024, 143 Cal. 236, 65 L. R. A. 949, 101 Am. St. Rep. 97 (quoting North Fork Water Co. v. Edwards, 54 Pac. 69, 121 Cal. 662).

SECONDARY EVIDENCE

"Secondary evidence" is such evidence as from necessity in some cases is substituted for stronger and better proof. O'Connor v. United States, 75 S. E. 110, 111, 11 Ga. App. 246.

"'Secondary evidence' is that which is inferior to primary. Thus a copy of an instrument or oral evidence of its contents is secondary evidence of the instrument and contents." When a written contract is to be proved by parol testimony, no vague, uncertain recollection concerning its stipulations ought to supply the place of the written instrument itself, but the substance of the agreement must be proved satisfactorily. Proof of negotiations, conversations, and acts, of parties before, at the time of, and after the execution of a written instrument, are not competent to prove its contents where the instrument is lost. Capell v. Fagan, 77 Pac. 55, 30 Mont. 507, 2 Ann. Cas. 37 (quoting the definition in Code Civ. Proc. § 3107).

SECONDARY FRANCHISE

The right or privilege to be a corporation is a franchise, often called a "primary franchise." The secondary franchise or right of making use of the purchased privilege, which the books denominate the "franchise to do," is entirely distinct and separate from the franchise to be or to exist here as a corporation. American Smelting & Refining Co. v. People ex rel. Lindsley, 82 Pac. 531, 534, 34 Colo. 240.

City authorities have no legal power to create corporations or to grant franchises. This can be done by the state alone; but the city can concede the right of way through her streets. Such right is not a franchise in law. The privileges conceded are "secondary franchises," instrumentalities by means of which the corporate owners granted by the charter may be exercised. Shreveport Traction Co. v. Kansas City, S. & G. Ry. Co., 44 South. 457, 461, 119 La. 759 (citing Tilton v. New Orleans City R. Co., 35 La. Ann. 1069; Farmer v. Myles, 30 South. 858, 106 La. 339; Muntz v. Algiers & G. Ry. Co., 35 South. 624, 111 La. 432, 64 L. R. A. 222, 100 Am. St. Rep. 495).

SECONDARY INVENTION

"A 'primary invention' is one which performs a function never performed by any earlier invention, while a 'secondary invention' is one which performs a function previously performed by some earlier invention, but in a substantially different way from any that preceded it." The Supreme Court of the United States has defined the legal distinctions flowing from this diversity as follows: "Where an invention is one of a primary character, and the mechanical functions performed by the machine are, as a whole, entirely new, all subsequent machines which employ substantially the same means to accomplish the same result are infringements, although the subsequent machine may contain improvements in the separate mechanisms which go to make up the machine." Secondary patents should receive a construction narrower than that given to primary patents. Von Eberstein v. Chambliss, 166 Fed. 463, 468, 469 (quoting and adopting definitions in Walker, Patents, 313; Morley Sewing Mach. Co. v. Lancaster, 9 Sup. Ct. 302, 129 U. S. 273, 32 L. Ed. 715).

SECONDARY PATENT

The distinction between "primary and secondary patents" is now given less force than formerly by the courts, for every patent may be regarded as primary within its field; and it follows, then, that every patent should have as broad an interpretation as the courts may fairly give it and as full and fair a use of the doctrine of equivalents as the courts may fairly allow it. Kip-Armstrong Co. v. King Philip Mills, 130 Fed. 28, 31.

SECONDHAND

The term "secondhand" is general and refers to articles that have been before sold and used, either one or many times. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Wilson Hack Line, 101 S. W. 1042, 1043, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 38.

SECONDHAND MAN

A "secondhand man" is a dealer in secondhand goods. Schroeder v. Reinhardt, 100 S. W. 538, 539, 123 Mo. App. 582.

SECRECY OF THE BALLOT

Chapter 213 of Session Laws of 1911, providing for party enrollment of electors by assessors before primary election, and prescribing the form of affidavit to be so required of each elector to entitle him to enrollment as a partisan and to qualify him to vote at the coming primary election, construed and held, that the Legislature has the right to require nominations to be made at primary elections by the use of a ballot, and may provide that such election shall be conducted within organized political parties, and may deny the right to vote to those electors not belonging to any organized political party, and may require as a reasonable test of party fealty that the elector shall subscribe an oath stating that he belongs to an organized political party and requiring him to designate it therein by name, and that the law requiring such a test and making the required oath a condition precedent to the right of an elector to participate at the party primary election is not unconstitutional as prescribing an added franchise requirement, or as restricting the right of suffrage, or as violating the "secrecy of the ballot," within the meaning of sections 121, 122, and 129 of our state Constitution. State ex rel. v. Flaherty, 136 N. W. 76, 77, 23 N. D. 313, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 132.

SECRET AND FRATERNAL SOCIETY

Pub. Acts 1895, p. 595, c. 255, § 1, defines the term "secret and fraternal society" to include any corporation or voluntary association organized for the sole benefit of its members, not for profit, having a lodge system with a ritualistic form of work and a representative form of government, providing for the payment of benefits in case of death; and section 7 declares that all benefits accruing from such society are exempt from attachment. Section 11 declares that the act shall not apply to societies of Masons or Odd Fellows nor associations composed of their respective members. By Pub. Acts 1899, p. 1050, c. 117, was added to section 11 of the prior act a provision that section 11 should apply to all "fraternal societies." A mutual aid association composed of Odd Fellows having a lodge system, but not shown to have a ritual of its own, was not within the statute, and hence benefits payable therefrom were not exempt from attachment. Wm. A. Miles & Co. v. Odd Fellows' Mut. Aid Ass'n, 55 Atl. 607, 76 Conn. 132.

SECRET FRATERNITY

"Oath-bound" and "secret," as used in St. 1909, p. 332, prohibiting "secret, oath-bound" fraternities in the public schools, are synonymous. Bradford v. Board of Education of City and County of San Francisco, 121 Pac. 929, 932, 18 Cal. App. 19.

SECRET PROCESS

A "secret process" and the article made under it are separate and distinct things, and each is subject of ownership. Hartman v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 145 Fed. 358, 378.

SECRET PROFITS

"Secret profits," which promoters are prohibited to make, are such profits as are made without disclosure to the real parties in interest, and obtaining their express or implied consent. Arnold v. Searing, 78 Atl. 762, 767, 78 N. J. Eq. 146.

SECRETARY

The "secretary" of a corporation is a mere servant. His position is that he is to do what he is told, and no person can assume that he has any authority to represent anything at all. Taylor v. Sutherland-Meade Tobacco Co., 60 S. E. 132, 134, 107 Va. 787 (quoting and adopting the definition in 2 Cook, Corp. [5th Ed.] § 717, note).

SECT

The holding of morning exercises in the public schools, consisting of the reading by the teacher without comment of nonsectarian extracts from the Bible, King James' version, and repeating the Lord's Prayer and the singing of appropriate songs, in which the pupils are invited, but not required to join, does not convert the schools into a "sect or religious society, theological or religious seminary" or a "sectarian school" within Const. art. 1, § 7, and article 7, § 5, providing that no money shall be appropriated from the treasury for the benefit of any sect or religious society, theological or religious seminary, or for the support of any sectarian school, a "sect" being a body of persons distinguished by particularities of faith and practice from other bodies, a religious society being a voluntary association of individuals or families united for the purpose of having a common place of worship, and to provide a proper teacher to instruct them in religious doctrines, and a theological or religious seminary being a place for the preparation of men for the ministry, or for the teaching of religious doctrines, and the word "sectarian" being defined as pertaining to, peculiar to, or devoted to the interest of a sect or denomination. Church v. Bullock, 100 S. W. 1025; Id., 109 S. W. 115, 118, 104 Tex. 1, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 860.

SECTARIAN

A prayer offered at the opening of a public school for the aid and presence of the Heavenly Father during the day's work, asking for wisdom, patience, mutual love, and respect, looking forward to a heavenly reunion after death, and concluding in Christ's name, is not "sectarian," for a form of prayer not authorized by a particular church is not necessarily "sectarian." Hackett v. Brooksville Graded School Dist., 87 S. W. 792, 794, 120 Ky. 608, 69 L. R. A. 592, 117 Am. St. Rep. 599, 9 Ann. Cas. 36.

SECTARIAN BOOK

"That the Bible, or any particular edition, has been adopted by one or more denominations as authentic, or by them asserted to be inspired, cannot make it a 'sectarian book.' The book itself, to be sectarian, must show that it teaches the peculiar dogmas of a sect as such, and not alone that it is so comprehensive as to include them by the partial interpretation of its adherents. Nor is a book sectarian merely because it was edited or compiled by those of a particular sect. It is not the authorship nor mechanical composition of the book, nor the use of it, but its contents, that give it its character. * * * The question is not whether the version used is canonical or apocryphal." The King James translation of the Bible, or any edition of the Bible, is not a sectarian book, and the reading thereof without comment in the public schools does not constitute sectarian instruction, within the meaning of Ky. St. 1903, § 4368, providing that no books of a sectarian character shall be used in any common school, nor shall any sectarian doctrine be taught therein. Hackett v. Brooksville Graded School Dist., 87 S. W. 792, 794, 120 Ky. 608, 69 L. R. A. 592, 117 Am. St. Rep. 599, 9 Ann. Cas. 36.

SECTARIAN INFLUENCE

A regulation of the superintendent of public instruction prohibiting teachers in public schools from wearing a distinctly religious garb while teaching therein is a reasonable and valid exercise of the powers conferred upon him to establish regulations as to the management of public schools, because the influence of such apparel is distinctly sectarian, and the prohibition is in accord with the public policy of the state, as declared in Const. art. 9, § 4, forbidding the use of property or credit of the state in the aid of "sectarian influences." O'Connor v. Hendrick, 77 N. E. 612, 614, 184 N. Y. 421, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 402, 6 Ann. Cas. 432.

SECTARIAN INSTITUTION

Religious control exercised over incorporated institutions which are not "sectarian institutions" under their charters does not make them such within the meaning of D. C. Rev. St. § 457, and section 34 of the Maryland Bill of Rights, invalidating gifts and devises for religious purposes, unless made at least one month before the death of the donor or testator. Speer v. Colbert, 26 Sup. Ct. 201, 204, 200 U. S. 130, 50 L. Ed. 403.

SECTARIAN INSTRUCTION

"The section of the Constitution which provides that 'no sectarian instruction shall be allowed in any school or institution supported in whole or in part by the public funds set apart for educational purposes' cannot, under any canon of instruction * * * be held to mean that neither the Bible nor any part of it, from Genesis to Revelation, may be read in the educational institutions fostered by the state" (quoting and approving Freeman v. Scheve, 91 N. W. 846, 93 N. W. 169, 65 Neb. 853, 59 L. R. A. 927), and the reading of King James' translation of the Bible without comment in the public schools does not constitute "sectarian instruction," within the meaning of St. 1903, § 4368, providing that no books of a sectarian character shall be used in any common school, nor shall any sectarian doctrine be taught therein. Hackett v. Brooksville Graded School Dist., 87 S. W. 792, 798, 120 Ky. 608, 69 L. R. A. 592, 117 Am. St. Rep. 599, 9 Ann. Cas. 36.

SECTARIAN SCHOOL

A prayer offered at the opening of a public school for the aid and presence of the Heavenly Father during the day's work, asking for wisdom, patience, mutual love, and respect, looking forward to a heavenly reunion after death, and concluding in Christ's name, is not "sectarian," for a form of prayer not authorized by a particular church is not necessarily "sectarian," nor does such a prayer make the school a "sectarian school," within Const. § 189, prohibiting the appropriation of educational funds in aid of "sectarian schools." Hackett v. Brooksville Grad-

The holding of morning exercises in the public schools, consisting of the reading by the teacher without comment of nonsectarian extracts from the Bible, King James' version, and repeating the Lord's Prayer and the singing of appropriate songs, in which the pupils are invited, but not required to join, does not convert the schools into a "sect or religious society, theological or religious seminary" or a "sectarian school" within Const. art. 1, § 7, and article 7, § 5, providing that no money shall be appropriated from the treasury for the benefit of any sect or religious society, theological or religious seminary, or for the support of any sectarian school, a "sect" being a body of persons distinguished by particularities of faith and practice from other bodies, a religious society being a voluntary association of individuals or families united for the purpose of having a common place of worship, and to provide a proper teacher to instruct them in religious doctrines, and a theological or religious seminary being a place for the preparation of men for the ministry, or for the teaching of religious doctrines, and the word "sectarian" being defined as pertaining to, peculiar to, or devoted to the interest of a sect or denomination. *Church v. ### Of political party

Where a county committee was not even voted for, and made no contest for election as county committeemen at a primary election conducted pursuant to the Primary Election Law, no "section" was created or existed to give the state convention jurisdiction, within Election Law (Laws 1896, as amended), providing that election officers in the city of New York shall be appointed from lists authenticated and filed by the chairman of the executive committee of the county committee of the party, and that, if more than one list shall be submitted in the name of the same political party, only that list shall be accepted which is authenticated by the officer of the section of the party which was organized as regular by the last preceding state convention of such party. People ex rel. McCarren v. Dooling, 112 N. Y. Supp. 71, 75, 128 App. Div. 1.

Of statute

Webster defines the word "section" as a distinct part or portion in a book or writing, the subdivision of a chapter, the division of a law or other writing or instrument, and says that in laws a section is sometimes called a paragraph or article. The word "paragraph," as used in Act Cong. June 30, 1902, c. 1323, § 16, providing that land allotted to a citizen of the Creek Nation shall not be alienated within five years, and that each citizen shall select from his allotment 40 acres as a homestead inalienable for 21 years, and providing the manner of selecting homesteads for certain classes of persons, and that the homesteads of citizens shall descend to their children, etc., and concluding by declaring any agreement or conveyance violative of any provision of this "paragraph" shall be void, means "section." Alfrey v. Colbert, 104 S. W. 638, 646, 7 Ind. T. 338.

If the provisions of that act (Gen Acts 1911, p. 159), discriminating against foreign insurance companies, were unconstitutional, this would not affect the validity of the provision relative to the imposition of license or privilege taxes by municipal corporations, since the two provisions are separable, especially in view of the express provisions of section 34 that, if any section is declared unconstitutional, it shall not affect the remaining sections; the word "section" not meaning separately numbered clauses, but any clauses treating of different matters. City of Montgomery v. Royal Exchange Assur. Corp. of England, 59 South. 508, 510, 5 Ala. App. 318.

In Civ. Code 1902, § 1509, subd. 5, the provision that the citizens of Colleton county exempted from the operation of the general stock law under "this section" shall build a certain fence, the words "this section" refer to subdivision 5, so as to render it alone unconstitutional, as imposing an additional burden, and not to the whole of section 1509, as the Legislature could not have intended the citizens of the other portions of the county, also exempted by other subdivisions, to help build a strictly local fence. Carter v. Barnes, 68 S. E. 1054, 1055, 87 S. C. 102.

The word "section," in Act. March 3, 1887, c. 373, 24 Stat. 552, raising the limit of jurisdiction of suits in equity to $2,000, and providing that this "section" shall not affect the jurisdiction of courts of the United States in cases commenced by direction of any officer thereof, or cases for winding up the affairs of any national bank, refers to the entire act, and the act does not deprive United States Circuit Courts of jurisdiction of a suit in equity under Act March 3, 1875, c. 137, 18 Stat. 470, brought by a receiver of a national bank, where the amount involved exceeded $50. Rankin v. Herod, 130 Fed. 390, 391.

SECTIONAL STEAM BOILER

In the Pratt patent, No. 439,684, and the Hoxie patent, No. 595,852, both for "sectional steam boilers," that term is used as embracing all water-tube boilers, and not as limited to a boiler built in sections; each section being composed of a group of tubes having front and rear headers common only to the tubes of that group. Babcock & Wilcox Co. v. North American Dredging Co., 151 Fed. 265, 266.

SECULAR

SECULAR BUSINESS

"Secular business," as used in Acts 1899, p. 1084, c. 435, § 2, subsec. 2, providing that all property belonging to educational institutions used in "secular business" competing with a like business, having paid taxes to the city, should be taxed, refers to the exercise of some secular business where the property is employed for the purpose of profit. The mere fact that a University rendered certain of its property for residential and business purposes, the income of which was used for the benefit of the University, did not amount to a use of such property "In secular business," rendering it subject to general taxation. Vanderbilt University v. Cheney, 94 S. W. 90, 93, 116 Tenn. 259.

A moving picture show, for which admission is charged, is not a "secular business" prohibited on Sunday by Pen. Code, § 259, providing that specified acts are prohibited as serious interruptions of the repose and religious liberty of the community, and specifying particular acts in sections 263, 265-267, 277, which did not include such shows. Nor is such show rendered a "secular business" by the fact that it required the employment of individuals, where it is not shown that such persons were not keeping another day holy, under Pen. Code, § 264, rendering such persons immune from prosecution. William Fox Amusement Co. v. McClellan, 114 N. Y. Supp. 594, 598, 62 Misc. Rep. 100.

SECULAR OR BUSINESS DAY

The meaning of the phrase "days of public rest and legal holidays" is the opposite of "secular or business day" and excludes entirely and absolutely the idea of holding court. State v. Duncan, 43 South. 283, 287, 118 La. 702, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 791, 11 Ann. Cas. 557.

SECURE

See Fasten and Secure; Property Secure.

The word "secure," when used as a verb active, signifies to protect, insure, save, ascertain. The word "securing" in the Constitution, empowering Congress to promote the progress of science and useful arts by securing, for limited times, to authors and inventors, the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries, refers to inventors as well as authors, but an inventor or author has no perpetual right to sell the invention or the writing. Rev. St. § 4965, imposing a penalty for infringement of the copyright of any map, picture, work of sculpture, unlike section 4964, relating to books, does not give the proprietor a right to maintain a civil action at law to recover damages for the infringement, and, the exclusive right to property in such artistic productions being purely statutory, the remedy for infringement is limited to that prescribed by statute. Walker v. Globe Newspaper Co., 130 Fed. 593, 597 (quoting and adopting definition in Wheaton v. Peters, 33 U. S. [8 Pet.] 591, 8 L. Ed. 1055).

SECURE A NOTE

A promise "to secure" a note is a stipulation that it shall be paid, according to its tenor and effect. It is as strong a term as an engagement to guaranty. Where the plaintiff loaned money to A. B. at the request of the defendant, taking A. B.'s note for the amount, payable in two years, and the following special agreement of the defendant on the back of the note, viz.: "I agree to secure the within note to H. T. out of or with a deed of a piece of land and water privilege situated," etc., "given to the said [defendant] by E. H. [maker of the note]"—this constituted a guaranty, and the defendant was not entitled to notice of nonpayment. True v. Harding, 12 Me. 193, 195.

SECURED BANKABLE NOTE

Where defendant undertook and agreed to sell personal property of plaintiff at public auction, the proceeds to be in cash or secured bankable notes, the phrase "secured bankable notes" meaning commercial paper immediately convertible into cash, defendant was in effect authorized only to accept cash for the purchase, and his acceptance of the unpaid notes of plaintiff was unauthorized and entitled plaintiff to recover the purchase price. Rindles v. Bordewyk, 139 N. W. 113, 114, 30 S. D. 439.

SECURED CLAIM

Where plaintiff's debt was secured by the mortgage of a person non compos mentis, it was not a "secured claim" within the statute authorizing attachment, providing for attachment in an action on a contract express or implied for the payment of money not secured by mortgage, loan, or pledge on real or personal property, or, if so secured, when such has been rendered nugatory by the act of the defendant. Bowman v. Wade, 103 Pac. 72, 77, 54 Or. 347.

SECURED CREDITOR

"Secured" is not a word of description; it implies an act. A creditor who takes a note for his debt is never understood to be a "secured creditor." A bond which carries nothing more than a promise to pay is no more a security than a promissory note.

When a bond or note is "secured," it must mean that there is something behind it not common to other creditors, or it means nothing. A recital in a corporate bond that it is secured by all the property and assets of the company imports that the bonds are secured by some particular lien. Stickel v. Atwood, 56 Atl. 687, 689, 25 R. I. 456.

A creditor of a partnership, which has been dissolved and the debts thereof assumed by one of the partners, thereby constituting him the principal debtor and the other partner surety, is not a "secured creditor," within the meaning of the bankruptcy act, and is not required to disclose the suretyship of the other partner. Schmitt v. Greenberg, 109 N. Y. Supp. 881, 882, 58 Misc. Rep. 570.

A creditor of a bankrupt holding a mortgage on exempt property is not a "secured creditor" within Bankr. Act 1898, § 1 (23), providing that secured creditors shall include one who has security for his debt on the property of the bankrupt of a nature to be assignable under the act, or who owns such a debt for which some indorser, surety, or other person secondarily liable for the bankrupt, has such security on the bankrupt's assets. In re Bailey, 176 Fed. 990, 992.

Under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1, subd. 23, 30 Stat. 545, providing that the term "secured creditor" shall include a creditor who has security for his debt on the property of the bankrupt of a nature assignable under the act, or who owns such a debt for which some indorser, surety, or other person secondarily liable for the bankrupt has such security, a creditor, in order to be "secured," must either hold security against the property of the bankrupt himself, or be secured by the individual obligation of another who holds such security. Gorman v. Wright, 136 Fed. 164, 165, 69 C. C. A. 76.

A "secured creditor," in the sense of the United States bankruptcy laws, is one who must either hold security against the property of the bankrupt, or be secured by the individual obligation of another, who holds such security. Notes of the bankrupt, secured only by the personal indorsement of another, may be included as unsecured debts in a composition of the bankrupt with his creditors; and the confirmation of the composition by judgment of the proper court will discharge the bankrupt, as maker of said notes, without affecting the rights of creditors holding the same as against the indorsers. Stauffer, Eshleman Co. v. Abington Hardware & Furniture Co., 60 South. 202, 203, 131 La. 715.

Under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1, subd. 23, defining a "secured creditor" as one who has security for his debt on the property of the bankrupt of a nature to be assignable, etc., and section 57, authorizing the allowance of claims of secured creditors, etc., a holder of a warehouseman's receipt which is attached as collateral security of a note executed to the warehouseman is not a "secured creditor" on the bankruptcy of the warehouseman, and his act in presenting his claim against the bankrupt's estate without surrendering the receipt, but expressing a willingness to credit all sums received on the debt, does not prevent him from suing on the bond of the warehouseman failing to surrender the goods described in the receipt. State ex rel. First Nat. Bank of Morris, Okl., v. Federal Union Surety Co., 137 S. W. 613, 615, 156 Mo. App. 603.

SECURED ON MY REAL ESTATE

A will giving testator's wife the interest on a sum of money, so long as she lives and remains unmarried, "to be left secured on my real estate," does not require the legacy to the wife to be secured by a mortgage on testator's real estate, but creates a charge on such real estate without the aid of a mortgage. Plum v. Smith, 62 Atl. 763, 764, 70 N. J. Eq. 602.

SECURELY

See Safely and Securely.

SECURELY GUARDED OR FENCED

The effect of St. 1898, § 1636j, requiring all belting, shafting, gearing, etc., so located as to be dangerous to employes in the discharge of their duties to be "securely guarded or fenced," is to prohibit the use of such machinery as is mentioned therein, unless by the exercise of ordinary care it can be rendered reasonably safe for servants in the discharge of their duties in the exercise of like care. Willette v. Rhineland Paper Co., 130 N. W. 853, 865, 145 Wis. 537.

SECURITY

See Collateral Security; Further Security; Good Security; Investment Security; Personal Security; Public Securities.

Other security, see Other.

"To be security" in a contract is to be a party to it in the character of a surety unless there is something indicating a different intention. Where a written contract is made in form between two, and signed by the parties named, and at the same time a third person adds, I agree "to be security" for the promisor in the above contract, with his signature, the latter is holden as a joint promisor. Norris v. Spencer, 18 Me. 324, 327.

Debt distinguished

See Debt.

As fund

See Fund.

As indicating a mortgage or trust deed

"Security" is a word of broad import. Certain trust deeds in real estate are recognized by our decisions, by which trust deeds the legal title passes to the trustee, with power of sale. In all respects these deeds and transfers of title are 'security,' but they are not mortgages. A mortgage by which no title whatsoever passes, and whereby but a lien upon the property is acquired, is likewise 'security.'" Renton v. Gibson, 84 Pac. 186-188, 148 Cal. 650.

As partner

The word "security," as used in a letter from a buyer to a seller of goods stating that "Mr. B., who went my security for stock, is the cause of the countermand of order," amounted to a declaration that B. was only a security of the seller, and not a partner. James Clark Distilling Co. v. Bauer, 49 S. E. 160, 56 W. Va. 249.

Bills, bonds, notes, etc.

The term "securities" embraces promissory notes, not only in a popular sense, but in a legal sense as well. Wagner v. Scherer, 85 N. Y. Supp. 894, 895, 89 App. Div. 202.

Where an agreement recited that plaintiff held C.'s note and also held as "security" a mortgage and note executed by others to C., and defendant guaranteed payment of C.'s note, and plaintiff agreed on payment to assign the "security" subject to the right of the owners of the equity to pay the mortgage debt, defendant was entitled to an assignment of the note as well as of the mortgage securing it. Griggs v. Moors, 47 N. E. 128, 130, 168 Mass. 354.

Where a testator, who owned both stocks and bonds, of which the stocks were the most valuable, bequeathed to his wife $25,000 in cash or securities, at her election, which securities shall be of the amount of $25,000 at par value, the wife was entitled to take stocks of the par value of $25,000, even though they were actually worth much more; for, while the word "securities," strictly construed, does not cover corporate stock, the term, in its broadest sense, embraces bonds, certificates of stock, promissory notes, bills of exchange, and all other evidences of debt. In re Stark's Will, 134 N. W. 389, 399, 149 Wis. 631.

Debt not synonymous

The lien which arises by operation of law on the execution of a deed to secure a debt is a legal entity distinct from the debt itself, securing the payment of the debt not only by affording evidence of its existence, but by providing for its payment, the terms debt and security not being synonymous. McIntire v. Garmany, 70 S. E. 198, 8 Ga. App. 802.

Evidence of indebtedness synonymous

In its broadest sense, the term "security" embraces all evidences of debt. In re Stark's Will, 134 N. W. 389, 399, 149 Wis. 631.

The word "securities," as used in 69 O. L. 173, 174, is a synonym of "evidence of indebtedness." Cincinnati, H. & D. Ry. Co. v. Kleybolte, 88 N. E. 879, 880, 80 Ohio St. 311.

Land

The word "securities," as used in a will whereby the testator devised property to his executor in trust to collect the rents, issues, and profits of the same, giving full power to the executors to sell or dispose of any of the securities that the testator might hold at the time of his death, does not include land. Hence the power to sell securities did not authorize the executors to sell lands, and the executors' attempted conveyance thereof was consequently void. Pratt v. Worrell, 57 Atl. 450, 453, 66 N. J. Eq. 194.

Liens

A lien on the interest of a legatee's interest in an estate for money lent to him by the executors is "security" within insolvent laws for a debt due from him to them. Haskell v. Hill, 47 N. E. 586, 587, 169 Mass. 124.

Warranty

"One definition of the word 'security' is that it is something which makes the enjoyment or enforcement of a right more secure or certain." Rapalje & L. Law Dict. Where the contract of sale of a piano contained a warranty of title from the seller, such covenant amounted to a "security" to the purchaser. Coolidge v. Ayers, 77 Vt. 448, 61 Atl. 40, 41.

SEDUCE—SEDUCTION

"Seduction" is not a common-law offense. It is created by statute. Kerr v. United States, 104 S. W. 809, 811, 7 Ind. T. 486.

"Seduction" is the act of persuading a woman to surrender her chastity. Carson v. Slattery, 49 South. 586, 587, 123 La. 825.

The word "seduce," when used to denote the conduct of a man towards a woman, is generally understood to mean the use of some influence, promise, arts, or means on his part by which she is induced to surrender her chastity and virtue to his embraces. Ireland v. Ward, 93 Pac. 932, 933, 51 Or. 102.

The word "seduce," when used with reference to the conduct of a man towards a woman, is "universally understood to mean an enticement of her on his part to the surrender of her chastity, by means of some art, influence, promise, or deception calculated to accomplish that object, and to include the yielding of her person to him." Hart v. Knapp, 55 Atl. 1021, 1023, 76 Conn. 135, 100 Am. St. Rep. 989 (quoting and adopting State v. Bierce, 27 Conn. 319).

"The word 'seduced,' when applied to the conduct of a man toward a woman, has a defined and well-understood meaning; and a charge that defendant seduced, debauched, and carnally knew plaintiff is tantamount to saying that he used some undue influence, artifice, deceit, fraud, or made some promise to induce plaintiff to surrender her chastity and virtue to him." Peterson v. Crosier, 81 Pac. 860, 863, 29 Utah, 235 (citing the definitions in 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6389).

A charge that in order to constitute the offense of seduction the female must be under the age of 25 years and unmarried, and have yielded her chastity and person under a promise of marriage, is a correct definition of the crime of seduction. Knight v. State, 144 S. W. 967, 991, 64 Tex. Cr. R. 541.

Where, on a trial for seduction, the court defined "seduction," and stated that it was to lead an unmarried woman under the age of 25 years from the paths of virtue, to entice her by means of a marriage promise to have intercourse with the man making the promise and that the woman must have been of chaste character, the instructions were not open to the objection that the court in its preparatory statement omitted to state the elements of the offense. Carter v. State, 127 S. W. 215, 220, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 73.

An instruction defining the term "seduce" as an inducement of a woman on the part of a man to surrender her chastity by reason of some art, influence, or deception calculated to accomplish that object, and to include the yielding of her person to him as much as if it was expressly stated, is correct. Bost v. State, 144 S. W. 589, 596, 64 Tex. Cr. R. 464.

In a prosecution for seduction, an instruction that seduction means an enticement of a woman on the part of a man to surrender her chastity by means of some art, violence, promise, or deception calculated to accomplish that object, and to include the yielding of her person to him, as much as if it was expressly stated, was not open to the objection that it made a deception, influence, art, or other promise sufficient to constitute the offense, regardless of the character of the deception or promise, and because under the laws of Texas the offense of seduction consists of a woman surrendering her virtue by reason of a promise of marriage. Faulkner v. State, 109 S. W. 199, 201, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 258.

In an action by a woman for her own seduction, an instruction defining seduction as the act of inducing a woman of previous chaste character to depart from the path of virtue by the use of arts, persuasions, and wiles, inducing her to submit her person to the sexual embraces of the person accused, was correct. Greenman v. O'Riley, 108 N. W. 421, 423, 144 Mich. 534, 115 Am. St. Rep. 466.

"Seduction" may be defined to be the act of persuading or inducing a woman of previous chaste character to depart from the path of virtue by the use of any species of arts, persuasions, or wiles which are calculated to have and do have that effect, and result in her ultimately submitting her person to the sexual embraces of the person accused." People v. Smith, 92 N. W. 776, 777, 132 Mich. 58 (quoting and adopting definition in People v. Gibbs, 38 N. W. 257, 70 Mich. 425).

Debauch synonymous

Rev. St. 1889, § 3486, provided that any person who should, "under promise of marriage, seduce and debauch any unmarried female of good repute should be punished." This section was amended by Acts 1897, p. 106, entitled "An act to amend section 3486, chapter 47, article 2, of the Revised Statutes of Missouri of 1889, relating to the seduction of unmarried females under 18 years of age," and changed the section, so as to provide that any person who should, under promise of marriage, seduce or debauch any unmarried female, etc., should be punished. Held, that the words "seduce" and "debauch," though ordinarily not synonymous, were used in such section synonymously, and that the word "or" must be construed to mean "and," in order to bring the offense defined within the title, so that an instruction that the jury could convict, if they believed prosecutrix was either seduced "or" debauched by defendant under promise of marriage, was erroneous. State v. Long, 141 S. W. 1099, 1101, 238 Mo. 383.

Debauch distinguished

The word "seduce," when used alone, usually implies the offense of inducing an unmarried woman, under or by promise of marriage, to surrender her chastity; while the word "debauch" ordinarily imports the deflowering of a woman, whether with or without her consent, and, if with her consent, whether that consent was obtained by promise or persuasion, or followed from her own desires. State v. Long, 141 S. W. 1099, 1101, 238 Mo. 383.

As personal injury

See Personal Injury.

Consequent pregnancy not essential

To constitute "seduction," a child need not be begotten. Commonwealth v. Tobin, 130 S. W. 1116, 1119, 140 Ky. 261.

Previous chastity of female essential

Under Pen. Code 1879, arts. 814, 815, providing that one who shall, by promise to marry, seduce an unmarried female shall be punished, and declaring that the term "seduction" is used in its commonly understood sense, an unchaste woman cannot be seduced, and to seduce a woman she must be led from the path of virtue by a promise of marriage, and the carnal intercourse must occur by virtue of the marriage promise. A woman who has had intercourse with several persons, and who has become pregnant, which resulted in a miscarriage, is unchaste, and one who subsequently has intercourse with her in not guilty of seduction, within Pen. Code 1879, art. 814, defining and punishing seduction. Sim- mons v. State, 114 S. W. 841, 844, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 619.

Under Code 1906, § 1081, providing that any person who shall seduce and have illicit intercourse with any female under the age of 18 of previous chaste character shall be imprisoned, etc., intercourse with a female who is already unchaste is not seduction, since the same person cannot seduce a female more than once. Hatton v. State, 46 South. 708, 709, 92 Miss. 651.

Single man not essential

To constitute "seduction," accused need not be a single man. Commonwealth v. Tobin, 130 S. W. 1116, 1119, 140 Ky. 261.

Promise or persuasion

"Seduction" being the carnal knowledge by a man of an unmarried woman of previously chaste character, accomplished by means of some false promise, artifice, flattery, or deception, it is not sufficient that plaintiff alone show that defendant had sexual intercourse with her. Lauer v. Banning, 131 N. W. 783, 785, 152 Iowa, 99.

A female is "debauched" when, by arts and blandishments, she is deceived, corrupted, and drawn aside from the right path, and she is carnally known. Every illicit connection is not "seduction." It cannot be said that a female is drawn aside from the path of virtue unless she is honestly pursuing that path when approached. If her mind is corrupt and polluted by lewd thoughts, and she is ready to submit to improper embraces, as opportunity offers, from her own lustful propensity, and without any arts or blandishments of him with whom she has sexual intercourse, in such case she cannot be said to be seduced by the party with whom she has improper sexual relations. State v. Fogg, 105 S. W. 618, 623, 206 Mo. 696.

The word "seduce," as used in 2 Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 7066, punishing any one who shall "seduce" and debauch any unmarried female, is used in its ordinary legal meaning and implies the use of arts, persuasion, or wiles to overcome the resistance of the female who is not disposed of her own volition to step aside from the path of virtue. While promise of marriage is no doubt the most common method, any seductive arts or promises where the female involuntarily and reluctantly yields thereto are sufficient. State v. O'Hare, 79 Pac. 39, 40, 36 Wash. 516, 68 L. R. A. 107, 104 Am. St. Rep. 970.

Promise of marriage

To constitute "seduction," there must have been an act of intercourse induced by a promise of marriage. McLaurin v. State (Tex.) 146 S. W. 557, 558.

A woman who has carnal intercourse with a man under a conditional promise of marriage, the condition to happen in the future, predicated on a possible pregnancy, is not seduced within Pen. Code 1879, art. 814, defining and punishing seduction. Simmons v. State, 114 S. W. 841, 844, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 619.

Seduction means a withdrawal from the path of rectitude. It is a leading astray, and as applied to intercourse with a woman under a promise of marriage it implies that a woman of previous chaste character has been induced to consent to unlawful sexual relations by persuasion and the promise to marry. Clemons v. Seba, 111 S. W. 522, 131 Mo. App. 378.

Rev. Laws 1905, § 4931, provides that one who, under a promise of marriage, shall seduce and have sexual intercourse with an unmarried female of previous chaste character, shall be punished, etc. Held, that the mere fact of a promise of marriage, followed by sexual intercourse, is not sufficient to constitute seduction; but the prosecutrix must have been at the time an unmarried female of previous chaste character, and must have yielded her virtue by reason of the arts, persuasions, and promises of marriage of accused. State v. Preuss, 127 N. W. 438, 439, 112 Minn. 108.

"Seduction" means to lead away a female from the path of virtue, to entice or persuade her, by a promise of marriage, to surrender her virtue and have carnal intercourse with the man making such promise. To constitute the offense of seduction, it must appear that carnal intercourse with the female was accomplished by means of a promise to marry her, made prior to the illicit intercourse." Howe v. State, 102 S. W. 409, 410, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 174.

To constitute seduction, under Rev. St. 1909, § 4478, punishing any person who shall under or by promise of marriage seduce any unmarried female, the female must rely on the promise of marriage and submit to sexual intercourse because of such promise, which must be the inducement for her consent, and where a female consents on the man's conditional promise to marry her in the event of pregnancy there is no seduction. State v. Thomas, 132 S. W. 225, 227, 231 Mo. 41.

Under Code 1906, § 1372 (Ann. Code 1892, § 1298), defining seduction as the obtaining of carnal knowledge of a woman of previous chaste character through a false or feigned promise of marriage, etc., one guilty of that offense may not exempt himself from prosecution by an offer to marry the woman. Williams v. State, 45 South. 146, 147, 92 Miss. 70, 15 Ann. Cas. 1026.

Cr. Code, § 207, provides that any person over the age of 18 years, who, under promise of marriage, shall have illicit carnal intercourse with any female of good repute for chastity, shall be deemed guilty of "seduction." Held, that this did not make it necessary to prove that defendant had seduced his victim in the common-law meaning of that word; that the statute itself defines what shall be seduction; and that if defendant was over 18 years of age, and, under promise of marriage, had unlawful intercourse with a female of good impute for chastity, he was guilty of seduction without regard to whether the female so seduced was entitled to that good reputation. Russell v. State, 110 N. W. 380, 381, 382, 77 Neb. 519, 15 Ann. Cas. 222.

"To accomplish sexual intercourse with a virtuous woman pending a virtuous engagement to marry her may be 'seduction,' though consent be obtained without other persuasion than that which is implied (considering the past courtship and the present relations of the parties) in proposing the intercourse and repeating the promise of marriage." Of course, solicitations, even though they may include a promise to marry, whereby the woman in consideration of the promise surrenders her person, are not sufficient to make a case of "seduction." But a promise of marriage which a woman believes to be made in good faith and made as a climax to a long course of wooing, when the man has fully captured the heart of the woman, and she hearkens to the voice of love, and yields to her lover because she trusts him, implies persuasion of the strongest character. Indeed, we think that Providence, wisely intending to save the human race from moral wreck and ruin, has made the heart of woman a citadel of virtue invincible to the brutal forces of lust and capitulating only to the gentle promptings of confiding love. Woodard v. State, 63 S. E. 573, 574, 575, 5 Ga. App. 447.

An instruction on a trial for seduction defining "seduce" as to entice a woman to surrender her chastity by deception, and stating that seduction is not complete unless the female was at the time chaste, unmarried, and under 25 years of age, and was persuaded to surrender her chastity by reason of accused's promise to marry her, and that if accused had intercourse with prosecutrix by reason of his promise of marriage, and prosecutrix was then chaste and unmarried and under 25 years of age, he was guilty, but if she yielded by reason of her own passion he must be acquitted, is sufficient. Where, on a trial for seduction, there was no suggestion in the evidence that the intercourse was the result on prosecutrix's part of anything except the promise of marriage, unless the jury might attribute it to her own lust, and the court charged that if the intercourse was the result of her passion accused should be acquitted, the refusal to charge that, if the intercourse was induced on her part by any other motive than promise to marry, accused must be acquitted, was not erroneous. Hinman v. State, 127 S. W. 221, 223, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 29.

Sexual intercourse

The word "seduce," when used with reference to the conduct of a man towards a woman, is universally understood to mean an enticement of her on his part to the surrender of her chastity, by means of some art, influence, promise, or deception calculated to accomplish that object, and to include the yielding of her person to him. The word "seduction," used in reference to a man's conduct towards a female, ex vi termini implies sexual intercourse between them. Every one understands, when it is said of a man that he has "seduced" a particular female, that he has had such intercourse with her. Gessner v. Horne, 132 N. W. 431, 433, 22 N. D. 60.

SEE

The word "see," as used in a letter written by a seller to a third person, reciting that the seller would never have sold the property to the buyer, but for the assurance of the third person that the seller would get his money; that the seller never knew the buyer until introduced by the third person; that the third person stated that he would see that the seller was paid, and inquiring whether the third person would live up to what he had told the seller, indicates a collateral promise to pay the debt of another, rather than a direct promise to pay one's own debt. Halsted v. Pelletreau, 91 N. Y. Supp. 927, 928, 101 App. Div. 125.

SEE YOU PAID

See I Will See You Paid.

SEED

See Canary Seed; Grass Seed.

"The word 'seeds,' as found in paragraph 760 in the free list, is joined with 'plants, trees, shrubs, and vines,' the obvious intention being to encourage agriculture, horticulture, and arboriculture by facilitating seeding and transplanting, and the words being applicable to seeds used for seeding purposes—in common understanding, for propagation." Sonn v. Magone, 16 Sup. Ct. 67, 159 U. S. 417, 421, 40 L. Ed. 203.

Canary seed, which is botanically a grass seed, but is used principally as a bird seed, and which is not known commercially as grass seed, is not free of duty under the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 656, 30 Stat. 201, for "grass seeds * * * not specially provided for," but is dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 254, 30 Stat. 171, covering "seeds of all kinds not specially enumerated." Nordlinger v. United States, 127 F. 683, 684, 62 C. C. A. 409.

SEED COTTON

Acts 1896, p. 172, c. 156, § 16, imposes a tax on all "lint cotton" annually grown in a levee district, etc., and Acts 1904, p. 126, c. 90, § 5, makes it unlawful for any person to remove from the district any "cotton" grown therein without first paying the levee tax thereon, and declares that the levee board may recover from the person wrongfully removing such cotton a certain penalty tax on each bale or hundredweight of "seed cotton" so removed. Held, that the words "lint cotton" in the first act and "cotton" and "seed cotton" in the second act were limited to "lint cotton" ginned by ordinary gins, and did not include "linter" or "Grabbot" cotton, obtained by reginning cotton seed and hard locks of cotton and cotton mixed with hulls, bolls, and other substances which could not be removed by ordinary ginning. Board of Mississippi Levee Com'rs v. Refuge Cotton Oil Co., 44 South. 828, 829, 91 Miss. 480.

SEEDLINGS

The word "seedlings" includes all trees or plants grown from seed, irrespective of their age. United States v. American Express Co., 158 Fed. 808, 809, 86 C. C. A. 68.

SEEK

SEEKING TO DO BUSINESS

The phrase "seeking to do business," as used in an act creating a charter board, to which application must be made for permission to organize a domestic corporation, and to do business in the state as a foreign corporation, and which provides that other persons seeking to form a private corporation under any of the laws of this state, or any corporation organized under the laws of any other state, and "seeking to do business" in this state, shall make application to said board for permission to engage in the business as a foreign corporation, etc., means seeking to do further business as well as seeking to begin doing business. State ex rel. Coleman v. Western Union Tel. Co., 90 Pac. 299, 303, 75 Kan. 609.

SEEM

For a witness to testify that "it seems to me that he closed the door" is not subject to objection on the ground that it is opinionative; the use of the word "seems" merely stating the appearance of the incident to the witness. Mims v. State, 58 S. E. 499, 500, 2 Ga. App. 387.

SEEMING DANGER

Appearances calculated to produce in a reasonable mind, and really producing, conviction of impending peril to life or limb, is what is meant by "seeming danger." Rogers v. State, 62 Ala. 170, 174.

SEEPAGE

"Seepage" is water finding its way through the banks of a reservoir. Righter v. Jersey City Water Supply Co., 63 Atl. 6, 73 N. J. Law, 298.

Sess. Laws, 1889, p. 215, § 1, providing that all ditches constructed to utilize the waste, seepage, or spring waters of the state shall be governed by the same laws relating to priority of right to water in ditches constructed for the purpose of utilizing the water of running streams, if valid, is applicable only to appropriations of "waste, seepage, and spring waters" before they reach a natural stream, whether by natural surface flow or percolation, or by being artificially turned into the same; and the waters after reaching a natural stream become, in the absence of an intention by the owner to reclaim them, a part of the stream, and inure to the benefit of the appropriators of its waters. La Jara Creamery & Live Stock Ass'n v. Hansen, 83 Pac. 644, 645, 35 Colo. 105.

SEINE

Any species, see Any.

A "seine," as used in the rivers and lakes, is a long net, of sufficient width to extend from the surface of the water, usually to the bottom. It is strung on two lines of rope; one, the cork line, being provided with cork or wooden floats at short intervals, to make it float, the other, or lead line, provided with leaden weights to sink it and hold it down, generally upon the bed of the stream or water, thereby spreading the net from surface to bed. It is generally used by drawing it, and surrounding and inclosing the fish. Hilborn v. Smith, 111 N. W. 1082, 1083, 148 Mich. 474.

A "seine" is a kind of net, but a "trammel net" is not a "seine." Kirby's Dig. § 3600, forbids any person to place in the waters of the state any seine net, gill net, trammel net, etc., or by any such means to catch fish, and provides further that it shall not be unlawful to use a seine with meshes not less than four inches square, and that any person using a seine with meshes less than four inches in width upon conviction shall be fined not less than $25 nor more than $50. Held, that an indictment, charging that defendant unlawfully caught fish with a net and seine, was void for duplicity. Under Kirby's Dig. § 3600, forbidding any person to place in the waters of the state any seine, net, gill net, trammel net, etc., or to catch fish by any such means, and providing further that it shall be unlawful to use a seine with meshes not less than four inches square, it is unlawful to use a trammel net, though its meshes are not less than four inches in width; the exception applying only to seines. Rowe v. State, 103 S. W. 613, 614, 83 Ark. 244.

SEISED

Seised in fee simple, see Fee Simple.

The word "seised," in its technical sense, is not generally applied to personal property, but pertains to real property. Walker v. Peters, 124 S. W. 35, 37, 139 Mo. App. 681.

The word "seised," as used in an allegation in an action by an administrator for the conversion of goods, claimed to have been owned by intestate, that at the time of his death he was "seised and possessed" of the property, means possession and ownership. Grant v. Hathaway, 96 S. W. 417, 118 Mo. App. 604 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6396).

A judgment debtor who fraudulently conveyed property before rendition of the judgment is not, as to such property, "seised in law or equity," within Mansf. Dig. § 3001 (Ind. T. Ann. St. 1899, § 2116), making this a necessary condition to a sale thereof on execution. Parrott v. Crawford, 82 S. W. 688, 691, 5 Ind. T. 103.

A testator devised land to a nephew. Thereafter he made a parol gift of the land to him, and he entered into possession with the consent of testator, and remained in the undisturbed possession until the death of the testator a few months later. The testator made no change in the will. Held, that testator was not "seised" or "possessed" of the land at the time of his death, within Acts 1893, c. 174, imposing a tax on property passing by will. Bailey v. Henry, 143 S. W. 1124, 1128, 125 Tenn. 390.

Mansf. Dig. § 2591 (Ind. T. Ann. St. 1899, § 1879), provides that a widow shall be entitled, as part of her dower, absolutely in her own right, to one-third part of the personal estate, including cash on hand, etc., whereof the husband died seised or possessed. Held, that where a husband died in Indian Territory, the owner of insurance on his life, which belonged to his estate, he died "seised" of the proceeds of the policies, and his widow was entitled to be endowed of one-half of the proceeds thereof collected, or which might be collected by the executors, absolutely and in her own right; there being no children of the marriage, under the express provisions of Mansf. Dig. § 2592 (Ind. T. Ann. St. 1899, § 1880). Mansf. Dig. § 2591 (Ind. T. Ann. St. 1899, § 1879), provides that a widow shall be entitled, as part of her dower, absolutely in her own right, to one-third of the personal estate whereof the husband died seised or possessed. Held, that "seised," means "title" or "ownership," which carries with it the immediate right of possession. Burdett v. Burdett, 109 Pac. 922, 925, 926, 26 Okl. 416, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 964.

Legal estate imported

The term "seised" has always been construed in its common-law sense, as applicable to legal estates only, and the statute declaring that the wife must be seised of an estate of inheritance in the lands in order to entitle her husband to curtesy has been received as a declaration only of the common-law rule of dower. In re Grandjean's Estate, 110 N. W. 1108, 1109, 78 Neb. 349, 15 Ann. Cas. 577.

The word "seised" in the law of dower refers to legal title or a perfect equity equivalent thereto. Where an owner of land made a deed to secure an indebtedness, and took a bond for reconveyance upon payment of the debt, and died without having paid any part of the debt, or having obtained a reconveyance, his widow was not entitled to take dower either in the land as a whole or in the equity of redemption, at least not without first redeeming the property. Harris v. Powers, 58 S. E. 1038, 1041, 129 Ga. 74, 12 Ann. Cas. 475.

The contract vendor of land with a lien for the purchase price retains the legal title only as security, and is not thereafter "seised," within Code, § 2912, providing that all persons owning land not held by adverse possession shall be deemed seised thereof, the vendor's interest being personalty and descending as such; and hence a devisee would take nothing under a will giving him all the "land" of which testator died seised, testator having previously sold the land and the vendee having performed the conditions of the contract to the time of testator's death. In re Miller's Estate, 119 N. W. 977, 978, 142 Iowa, 563.

SEISED AND POSSESSED

An allegation that a person was "seised and possessed" of land, prima facie imports seisin in fact, not mere seisin in law. Bragg v. Wiseman, 47 S. E. 90, 91, 55 W. Va. 330.

SEISIN

See Actual Seisin; Covenant of Seisin; Instantaneous Seisin.

"Seisin" is a fixed right of enjoyment of the estate either immediately or at the termination of an intermediate estate. In re Prasser's Will, 121 N. W. 643, 645, 140 Wis. 92 (citing 1 Washb. Real Prop. [6th Ed.] § 116).

Freehold imported

"Seisin" is the possession of land under a claim, either express or implied by law, of an estate amounting at least to a freehold; ordinarily a possession in fee by one having or claiming a freehold interest. In re Grandjean's Estate, 110 N. W. 1108, 1109, 78 Neb. 349, 15 Ann. Cas. 577.

As ownership

Under the acts of descent in this country, the word "seisin" is equivalent to "ownership." North v. Graham, 85 N. E. 267, 270, 235 Ill. 178, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 624, 126 Am. St. Rep. 189 (citing Cook v. Hammond, 6 Fed. Cas. 399, 4 Mason, 467).

As possession

In the common law "seisin" signifies possession. Bragg v. Wiseman, 47 S. E. 90, 91, 55 W. Va. 330 (quoting Coke, Inst.).

"Seisin" means a claim of title accompanied with possession. Webb v. Wheeler,

A mere constructive possession is not "seisin" within the meaning of Kirby's Dig. § 5061, providing that no action for the recovery of lands sold for taxes shall be maintained against the purchaser unless plaintiff or his predecessor in interest was seised or possessed of the lands within two years next before the commencement of the action. Towson v. Denson, 86 S. W. 661, 665, 74 Ark. 302.

"Seisin" and 'possession,' as now understood, mean the same thing. To constitute seisin in fact, there must be an actual possession of the land; for a seisin in law there must be a right of immediate possession according to the nature of the interest, whether corporeal or incorporeal. 1 Wash. Real Prop. 62. Under this view there can be no seisin in law where there is not a present right of entry, and where the life tenant is in possession, there being no present right of entry in the remainderman or reverser, they are not constructively seised, and neither can maintain a suit as plaintiff for partition. The authorities generally sustain this view." Carlson v. Sullivan, 146 Fed. 476, 478, 77 C. C. A. 32 (quoting and adopting the definition in Savage v. Savage, 23 Pac. 890, 891, 19 Or. 112, 116, 20 Am. St. Rep. 795).

Legal title or estate imported

The term "seisin," as used in the statute under which a wife is entitled to dower of lands of which her husband dies "seised and possessed," means something more than the naked legal title, and to entitle her to dower he must have been beneficially seised at the time of his death. The naked legal title is not sufficient, but that title must be accompanied by a beneficial interest, and he must not hold the title merely as a conduit through whom the title is to be conveyed to the party having the beneficial interest. So a widow is not entitled to dower in land levied on and sold under execution against her husband before his death, though he died vested with the legal title; the sheriff having failed to make a deed to the purchaser. Rose v. Rose, 53 Tenn. [6 Heisk.] 533, 537, 538.

"The word 'seisin' is said to have a technical meaning when used in connection with the right to dower in the lands of the husband of which he was seised during coverture, and at common law to import a feudal investiture of title by actual possession, and with us it has the force of possession under some title or right to hold the same. It is either a seisin in deed or a seisin in law; the former being the actual possession of a freehold estate, and the latter the right to the immediate possession and enjoyment of a freehold estate. It applies only to the freehold estate or to the possession of the land of a freehold tenure. 'Seisin' in fact or in deed has also been defined to be possession with intent on the part of him who holds it to claim a freehold interest, and 'seisin' in law as the right of immediate possession according to the nature of the estate. A somewhat different and broader meaning is assigned to the word in the statutes of descent of North Carolina, where it is provided that every person in whom a 'seisin' is required by any of the rules, of descent shall be deemed to have been seised if he may have had any right, title, or interest in the inheritance." Redding v. Vogt, 53 S. E. 337, 338, 140 N. C. 562, 6 Ann. Cas. 312 (citing Washb. Real Prop., 33, 34; Early v. Early, 46 S. E. 503, 506, 134 N. C. 258).

SEISIN IN DEED

As seisin in fact, see Seisin in Fact.

Curtesy is supported by seisin of the wife, either in law, which is a right of immediate possession independent of actual or constructed possession, or "seisin in deed," which is actual possession. Majors v. Cryts, 144 S. W. 769, 240 Mo. 386.

SEISIN IN FACT

"'Seisin in fact' is called by Lord Coke 'seisin in deed,' and is often termed 'actual seisin.' It means a possession of the freehold actually by the pedis positio of oneself, or one's tenant, or by construction of law, as in case of a grant of lands from the commonwealth, by conveyance under the statute of uses, or by devise (supposing no adverse occupancy by some one else), in contradistinction to the 'seisin in law,' which exists in the heir after the descent of lands upon him before the actual entry by himself or his tenants." "Before the heir actually enters (or, in case of an incorporeal hereditament, before he actually enjoys it) by himself or his tenant for years, he is said to be seised in law. This sort of seisin for curtesy suffices only where actual seisin is impossible, e. g., in case of rent, where, after the right to it accrues to the wife, she dies before any day of payment." "In mere right of entry, or right of action, there is no curtesy for want of actual seisin." Where a warranty deed to defendant's wife, after the granting clause, excepted and reserved the rents and profits of the land during the grantor's natural life, and the grantor occupied the property until after the grantee's death, the grantee was never seised of an estate in possession so as to entitle her husband to curtesy in the property. Dozier v. Toalson, 79 S. W. 420, 421, 422, 180 Mo. 546, 103 Am. St. Rep. 586 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Minor, Inst. pp. 103, 108, 109).

SEISIN IN LAW

Curtesy is supported by seisin of the wife, either in law, which is a right of immediate possession independent of actual or constructed possession, or seisin in deed, which is actual possession. Majors v. Cryts, 144 S. W. 769, 240 Mo. 386.

"While the mere operation of the law of descent gives the heir seisin in law upon his ancestor's death, this does not enable him to transmit the inheritance to his heirs. He must have obtained an actual seisin or possession or seisin in deed as distinguished from seisin in law"—hence possibility of reverter cannot be granted. North v. Graham, 85 N. E. 267, 270, 235 Ill. 178, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 624, 126 Am. St. Rep. 189.

At common law "seisin in deed"—that is, actual possession—was necessary for curtesy. In Missouri the common law has been so modified as to make "seisin in law"—that is, a present right to possession—sufficient. Dozier v. Toalson, 79 S. W. 420, 421, 422, 180 Mo. 546, 103 Am. St. Rep. 586 (quoting and adopting definition in Minor, Inst., vol. 2, pp. 103, 108, 109).

SEIZED

SEIZED BY VIRTUE OF AN EXECUTION

The words "seized by virtue of an execution," in the chapter of the Constitution relating to executions, means such seizure, either actual or constructive, as the situation of the property permits. Smith v. Rogers, 73 S. W. 243, 244, 99 Mo. App. 252.

SEIZURE

See Constructive Seizure; District in Seizure.

For violation of law as civil action, see Civil Action—Case—Suit, Etc.

Const. 1890, § 23, which provides that the people shall be secure from unreasonable "seizure or search," is not violated by Laws 1910, c. 134, giving to the state or county a suit for penalties provided therein, which may be begun by attachment, since there is no search or seizure within the meaning of the provision; the statute merely affording a remedy by attachment for the collection of the penalty. State v. Marshall, 56 South. 792, 797, 100 Miss. 626.

A search ordinarily implies a quest by an officer of the law, and a "seizure" contemplates a forcible dispossession of the owner. A corporation charged with a violation of the anti-trust act of July 2, 1890, is entitled to immunity under Const. U. S. Amend. 4, from such an unreasonable search and "seizure" as the compulsory production before a grand jury, under a subpoena duces tecum, of all understandings, contracts, or correspondence between such corporation and six other companies, together with all reports and accounts rendered by such companies from the date of the organization of the corporation, as well as all letters received by that corporation since its organization, from more than one dozen different companies, situated in seven different states. Hale v. Henkel, 26 Sup. Ct. 370, 379, 201 U. S. 43, 50 L. Ed. 652.

An order issued under Laws 1906, p. 79, No. 75, directing a corporation to produce before a grand jury certain books and papers and proceedings for contempt for violating such order, were not an infringement of Const. art. 11, as a "seizure," because no tender was made to cover the fees and expenses for appearing in court with the books and documents. In re Consolidated Rendering Co., 66 Atl. 790, 794, 80 Vt. 55, 11 Ann. Cas. 1069, judgment affirmed Consolidated Rendering Co. v. State of Vermont, 28 Sup. Ct. 178, 207 U. S. 541, 52 L. Ed. 327.

Under Civil Damage Act (Code 1906, c. 32) § 26, providing that if a landlord's property be "seized or taken" for any fine, etc., by reason of his tenant's unlawful acts, such landlord may recover damages and costs, a "lien" upon a landlord's property, being defined as a hold or claim which one has upon the property of another as a security for some debt or charge, does not constitute a "seizure or taking" of his property within the meaning of the statute. Brown v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 74 S. E. 863, 869, 70 W. Va. 613.

Taking possession required

As ordinarily understood by lawyers, the "seizure" of property by "process of court" has reference to the taking possession thereof by an officer under attachment or execution or other appropriate writ or order of a court. Where plaintiff performed labor for deceased within 90 days of the appointment of an administrator upon his estate, which was found to be wholly insolvent, plaintiff was not entitled to any preference, under Code, § 4019, providing that, when the property of any person shall be seized upon by any process or placed in the hands of a receiver, trustee, or assignee, for the purpose of paying debts, the debts owing to employes for labor performed within 90 days past will have priority, the section not referring to administration; the term "seizure of property by process of court" referring to such writs as attachment, execution, and the like. Moss v. Williams, 133 N. W. 120, 152 Iowa, 686.

SELECT—SELECTION

Accept not synonymous

An allegation that defendant "selected" certain cattle sold did not constitute an allegation of a delivery and acceptance within the statute of frauds; the words "selected" and "accepted" not being synonymous. McMillan v. Heaps, 123 N. W. 1041, 85 Neb. 535.

Alternative implied

To "select" is to pick out or choose. It signifies a choice of one out of more than one. Petersburg School Dist. of Nelson County v. Peterson, 103 N. W. 756, 758, 14 N. D. 344.

A mortgage of a specified number of cattle on a certain farm is good, to the number specified, against a purchaser from the mortgagor, although there are more cattle of the same description on the farm, which fact is not disclosed by the mortgage, since the mortgagee is permitted, by what is called the doctrine of selection or election, to select the specified number from the whole number. Sparks v. Deposit Bank, 78 S. W. 171, 115 Ky. 461.

As identification

"The word 'selection' is not an apt word to describe the identification of certain lands according to evidence presented of their character." Brewer, J. Michigan Land & Lumber Co. v. Rust, 18 Sup. Ct. 208, 168 U. S. 589, 601, 42 L. Ed. 591.

Provide distinguished

Act March 15, 1906, p. 432, c. 248 (Code 1904, § 1433), defining the powers and duties of the state board of education, was amended so as to declare that such board should "select" text-books, school furniture, and educational appliances for the public schools of the state, etc. Two days after, at the same session, Code 1904, § 1458, was amended by Acts 1906, pp. 513, 515, c. 293, and re-enacted, subsection 10 of which declared that the school board of a city should have power, and that it should be its duty, to "provide" schoolhouses with proper furniture and appliances, and to care for and manage and control the school property of the city. Held, that such acts were in pari materia, and should be construed together, and that under them a city school board had only power to provide such school furniture for the public schools of the city as had been selected by the state board of education; the words "select" and "provide" in such provisions not being synonymous, "provide" being used in the sense of "to furnish or supply," while "select" means "chosen" or "picked out." Commonwealth v. School Board of City of Norfolk, 63 S. E. 1081, 1082, 109 Va. 346.

Homestead

As defined by Webster, the term "selected" means "to choose and take from a number; to take by preference from among others. In Sess. Laws 1896, p. 213, c. 71, § 11, providing that, "if the debtor be the head of a family, there shall be a further exemption of a homestead, to be selected by the judgment debtor, consisting of lands and appurtenances, which may be in one or more pieces in different localities," etc., not exceeding in value a certain sum, the term "selected" is not used in its general sense where the head of the family owns several parcels of real estate which are of less value than the limit of value fixed by the statute. He can make no selection within the strict meaning of that term, unless he should select less than the statute permits. So that where a judgment debtor owns real estate which does not exceed in value the amount of homestead exemption, the occupation and use of the real estate for the benefit of the family is a sufficient selection under the statute. Kimball v. Salisbury, 56 Pac. 973, 975, 19 Utah, 161 (citing Kimball v. Salisbury, 53 Pac. 1040, 17 Utah, 381; Beecher v. Baldy, 7 Mich. 488).

Lien land

Under the Forest Reservation Act, Act Cong. June 4, 1897, c. 2, 30 Stat. 11, providing that, whenever the United States reserves land for forest purposes, all those persons owning the land within the boundaries of such forest reservation, upon surrendering the same to the government, shall be entitled to select in lieu thereof an equal amount of other public vacant land open to settlement. "When a locator under the act files his selection in compliance with the rules and regulations of the land department, and accompanies it with proof that the lands of which he makes selection are vacant and open to settlement, and these facts are true, the Commissioner of the General Land Office has no arbitrary right to reject the selection, but must approve it, and upon such approval the right of the selector to the land takes effect by relation as of the date of his original selection. When such an approval is had by the commissioner, the locator becomes the full equitable owner in the land selected, but it by no means follows that until then he had acquired no interest or right in the land by virtue of his selection. On the contrary, we are satisfied that he did. He was possessed of the right under the act to acquire public land, had exercised that right to become the owner of the particular land on which he filed the "selection," and had done all that was required by him to do under the act in order to obtain a perfect title. Under these circumstances, if he acquired nothing more, he acquired at least an inchoate equitable right, a right which was capable of being enlarged into a complete title by the approval of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and was a right which the land department itself, in effect, recognizes may be sold and assigned after such selection is filed. Farnum v. Clarke, 84 Pac. 166-169, 148 Cal. 610.

SELECTMAN

As state officer, see State Officer.

SELF

Webster defined the word "self" as a person, as a distinct individual; a being as having a personality; and that self is united to certain personal pronouns and pronominal adjectives to express emphasis or distinction. As used in a description of a lot in a petition in an action to foreclose a lien of a special tax bill as "a certain lot bounded north by Sanders, south and east by self and west by Euclid avenue," it is impossible to tell to whom "self" refers, so that the petition is insufficient to give the court jurisdiction over the lot as described. Bell v. Johnson, 105 S. W. 1039, 1040, 207 Mo. 281.

SELF ANCHOR

The term "self anchors" was used in the specification of a patent to mean anchors capable of self-adjustment by having at all times free play, because not attached to their sockets nor moving with the bottom section to which the sockets were attached, thus sufficiently explaining the difference between the word "anchor" as commonly used and "self anchors" as used in the description of the patented apparatus. Cammeyer v. Newton, 94 U. S. 225, 233, 24 L. Ed. 72.

SELF-CONTAINING CONVERTIBLE CAR

A "self-contained" or "self-containing convertible car" is one which somewhere within it has the storage for the panels when removed from the sides, either by pushing them up or down or sidewise, or removing them from the sides entirely, so as to form the necessary openings. A convertible car (truly such) must have end entrances as usual in cars. Otherwise (unless it should be provided with a side door) the passengers would be boxed up and imprisoned—"shut in"—should it be converted into a closed car while they were inside, and would be prevented from entering at all when outside; that is, "shut out" when the car is being used as a closed car. O'Leary v. Utica & M. V. Ry. Co., 139 Fed. 330, 333.

SELF-CONTRADICTION

There must be a real inconsistency between two assertions of a witness in order to constitute "self-contradiction." It is not a mere difference of statement, nor is an absolute oppositeness essential. It is an inconsistency that is required, and the inconsistency is to be determined, not by individual words and phrases alone, but by the whole impression or effect of what has been said or done. Holder v. State, 104 S. W. 225, 235, 119 Tenn. 178 (citing Wigmore on Evidence, vol. 2, § 1040).

SELF-DEFENSE

See Justifiable Self-Defense.

"Self-defense" or self-preservation is a law of nature which accompanies a man from the cradle to the grave. He is born with the knowledge and it goes with him through life. It is a law of instinct which the lower animals possess to a greater or less extent. Courtney v. Kneib, 110 S. W. 665, 667, 131 Mo. App. 204.

"Self-defense" is extended to the defense of the person and of the domicile. Intentional homicide may not be justified completely beyond this scope." Reed v. State, 106 N. W. 649, 652, 75 Neb. 509 (citing Bish. New Cr. Law, vol. 1, § 867).

A person's right of self-defense does not depend on his belief, in the exercise of reasonable judgment, that it is necessary to use the force that he does. It is enough that it is in fact necessary, or that in the exercise of a reasonable judgment it appears to him to be necessary, though, as a matter of fact, it is not necessary. McKinney v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 82 S. W. 283, 284.

"Homicide in self-defense" is that committed to avoid immediate suffering, certain to result from waiting for the assistance of the law, and which cannot be otherwise escaped. State v. Watson (Del.) 82 Atl. 1086, 1087.

Homicide in "self-defense" occurs where one is assaulted on a sudden affray, and in defense of his person, where certain and immediate suffering will be the consequence of waiting for the assistance of the law and there is no other probable means of escape, he kills his assailant. State v. Blackburn (Del.) 75 Atl. 536, 539, 7 Pennewill, 479.

"Self-defense" exists where one is suddenly assaulted, and in the defense of his person, where an immediate and great bodily harm would be the apparent consequence of waiting for the assistance of the law and there is no other probable means of escape, he kills the assailant." State v. Lilliston, 54 S. E. 427, 428, 141 N. C. 857, 115 Am. St. Rep. 705 (citing 1 Whart. Cr. Law [9th Ed.] § 306).

No more force may be used than is necessary to repel or resist an assault, since, if greater force is used, the person assaulted becomes the aggressor. State v. Borrelli (Del.) 76 Atl. 605, 607, 1 Boyce, 349.

A person assaulted is justified in resisting, though neither the taking of life nor the infliction of serious bodily injury is threatened. Merely seeking a person for the purpose of provoking a difficulty does not deprive one of the right of "self-defense" if nothing is actually done to provoke a difficulty. Price v. State, 79 S. W. 540, 541, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 80.

The right of "self-defense" is founded upon necessity. A party who would invoke it must avoid the attack if he can do so without danger or peril to himself, and no threat to kill or inflict great bodily injury without an overt act indicating a design to carry the purpose into immediate effect will justify the taking of a human life; it being the duty of one threatened to so act that he will not precipitate the attack, and thus himself bring on the necessity for taking life which he could safely avoid. State v. Remington, 91 Pac. 473, 477, 50 Or. 99.

The essential elements of self-defense are that accused was free from all fault, that he did not say or do anything to provoke a difficulty, that there was a present impending peril to life or danger of great bodily harm, either real or so apparent as to create a bona fide belief of an existing necessity, and that there was no convenient or reasonable mode of escape by retreat or by declining the combat. Robinson v. State, 45 South. 916, 917, 155 Ala. 67; McBryde v. Same, 47 South. 302, 304, 156 Ala. 44.

The law gives to every man the right of "self-defense." This means that a man may defend his life and person from great bodily harm, he may repel force by force, and may resort to such force as under the circumstances surrounding him may reasonably seem necessary to repel the attack upon him even to the taking of the life of his assailant. The right of one to take the life of an assailant in self-defense can only be exercised to defend his own life or his person from great bodily harm. Danger of a battery alone will not be sufficient. State v. Gray, 79 Pac. 53, 54, 46 Or. 24.

"In repelling or resisting an assault no more force may be used than is necessary for the purpose, and, if the person assailed use in his defense greater force than is necessary for that purpose, he becomes the aggressor. * * * No one may take the life of another, even in the exercise of the right of 'self-defense,' unless there is no other available means of escape from death or great bodily harm." State v. Powell, 61 Atl. 966, 972, 5 Pennewill (Del.) 24.

Merely because a man is the physical inferior of another does not require him to submit to a public horse-whipping, and it is a necessary "self-defense" to resist, resent, and prevent such humiliating indignity, and, if not provided by nature with the means of such resistance, he may use a weapon for such purpose. State v. Bartlett, 71 S. W. 148, 152, 170 Mo. 658, 59 L. R. A. 756.

The law accords to every one the right to protect his person from assault and injury by opposing force to force, and he is not obliged to wait until he is struck by an impending blow; for, if a weapon be raised in order to shoot or strike, or the danger of other personal violence be imminent, the party in such imminent danger may protect himself by striking the first blow for the purpose of repelling and preventing the attempted injury. But the opposing force or measure of defense must not be unreasonably disproportionate to the requirements of the occasion. Although so much force as is reasonably necessary may be used, yet, if the violence used is greater than was necessary under the circumstances to repel the assault or avert the peril, the party using it is himself guilty; for the law recognizes the right of "self-defense" for the purpose of preventing, but not revenging, an injury to the person of the accused. State v. Wilson (Del.) 62 Atl. 227, 231, 5 Pennewill, 77.

"The right of 'self-defense' is based upon the broad ground of necessity which is evidenced by a real or apparent exhibition of force, superinducing a reasonable apprehension of imminent danger which justifies the use of force to repel the force, but without such necessity the right to resort thereto does not exist." On a prosecution for felonious assault, where the evidence showed that defendant went out of his way and began to strike the prosecuting witness, called him vile names, and drew his pistol, and that the latter arose, laid aside a knife with which he had been whittling, and, reaching for the weapon, followed defendant, who stepped backward and fired, it was not error to instruct that one cannot claim the benefit of the law of self-defense after he has intentionally put himself where he knows or believes he will have to invoke its aid; that circumstances justifying assault must be such as to render it unavoidable; and that, if defendant could have avoided any conflict, it was his duty to do so, and so render a resort to the law of self-defense unnecessary. State v. McCann, 72 Pac. 137, 139, 43 Or. 155 (citing and adopting State v. Morey, 35 Pac. 655, 36 Pac. 573, 25 Or. 241; State v. Smith, 71 Pac. 973, 43 Or. 109).

Mr. Bishop states the doctrine of "self-defense" as follows: "If the person assaulted, being himself without fault, reasonably apprehends death or great bodily harm to himself unless he kill the assailant, the killing is justifiable." There is another rule of law, well settled, applicable to homicides, and that is that whatever one may do for himself he may do for another. That is to say, a guest in the house may defend the house, or the occupant may assemble his neighbors for its defense. There is also a rule of law that, in cases of self-defense, the party is not required to know the real fact, but he may act upon a reasonable and well-founded appearance and apprehension, and, whenever a man exercises the right of self-defense, he is understood to act on the facts as they reasonably appeared to him, or as they would appear to a reasonable man, similarly situated; and if, without fault or carelessness on his part, he is misled concerning the facts, and defends himself according to what he reasonably supposes the facts to be, he is justifiable, though in truth the facts as they were reasonably supposed did not exist, and in fact he had no occasion for the extreme measure. Mr. Wharton has stated the law applicable to this case as follows: "A man may repel force by force in the defense of his person, habitation, or property against one or many who manifestly intend or endeavor, by violence or surprise, to commit a known felony on either. In such cases he is not obliged to retreat, but may pursue his adversary until he finds himself out of danger, and if, in the conflict between them, he happeneth to kill, such killing is justifiable." "The right of self-defense in such cases is founded on the law of nature, and is not one that can be superseded by any law of society, and where a known felony is attempted on a person, be it to rob or murder, the party assaulted may repel force by force, or even his servant attendant upon him or any other person present may interpose for the purpose of preventing the mischief, and, if death ensue, the party so interposing will be justified." Suell v. Derricott, 49 South. 895, 900, 161 Ala. 259, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 996, 18 Ann. Cas. 636.

"Self-defense" as it is justly called the primary law of nature, so it is not, neither can it be in fact, taken away by the law of society. In the English law, particularly, it is held an excuse for breaches of the peace, nay, even for homicide; but care must be taken that resistance does not exceed the bounds of mere defense and prevention, for then the defendant would become the aggressor. But the right of self-defense, though inalienable, is and should to some extent be subordinated to the rules of law regulating its proper exercise, and so the law has wisely provided. It may be divided into two general classes, to wit, perfect and imperfect right of self-defense. A perfect right of self-defense can only obtain and avail where the party pleading it acted from necessity, and was wholly free from wrong or blame in occasioning or producing the necessity which required his action. If, however, he was in the wrong—if he was himself violating the law—and on account of his own wrong was placed in a situation wherein it became necessary for him to defend himself against an attack made upon him which was superinduced or created by his own wrong, then the law justly limits his right of self-defense, and regulates it according to the magnitude of his own wrong. * * * But a person cannot avail himself of a necessity which he has knowingly and willfully brought upon himself." Where defendant, informed by his wife that decedent had insulted her, armed himself with a view of meeting decedent to abuse him, and on meeting decedent cursed and abused him, and decedent walked away from defendant, who continued to use vile epithets, and decedent turned on defendant with a knife, whereupon defendant began to shoot him, and continued while decedent was running away, defendant was not entitled to the perfect right of self-defense, and he was civilly liable for the killing to the wife and children of decedent. Gray v. Phillips, 117 S. W. 870, 873, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 148 (citing Reed v. State, 11 Tex. App. 511, 40 Am. Rep. 795; 1 Bish. Cr. L. 865).

On a prosecution for murder, it appeared that deceased, at the time of the killing, was accompanied by his uncle, and there was evidence tending to show a conversation between them before the killing showing a design against defendant. The court instructed that defendant, if he had reasonable cause to apprehend a design on the part of deceased to take his life, and that to avert such danger he shot, he should be acquitted on the ground of "self-defense," and in another instruction stated that any threats made by either the deceased or his uncle against defendant should be considered in arriving at a verdict. Held, that the instructions were not erroneous on the theory that they did not embrace the right of defendant to defend against both deceased and his uncle. State v. McCarver, 92 S. W. 684, 686, 194 Mo. 717.

A statement in an instruction that the claim of "self-defense" implies—presupposes—that deceased was intentionally killed, and that it is plain that, when one kills another in self-defense, he intends to do it, is not supported by any presumption of law, and is not true as a matter of fact. It is perfectly evident that one may kill another in self-defense yet without any intention or expectation that his assailant shall be killed. A blow with the fist, or any slight weapon, struck in self-defense, may result fatally, without any such intention or expectation upon the part of the one who strikes. It is not even true where a deadly weapon, such as a pistol, is used, though in such a case the evidence of an intention to kill is, of course, usually much stronger. Foley v. State, 72 Pac. 627, 629, 11 Wyo. 464.

In a prosecution for homicide, an instruction that if, at the time of the stabbing of deceased, defendant had good cause to believe that deceased, either alone or with others, was about to kill defendant or to do him great bodily harm, and that it was necessary to stab deceased to prevent such apprehended danger, the jury should acquit on the ground of "self-defense," was not objectionable as limiting defendant's right of "self-defense" to assaults made by deceased alone, and as leaving out of consideration defendant's right to use a weapon, if necessary, to protect himself from others acting in concert with deceased. State v. Price, 84 S. W. 920, 921, 186 Mo. 140.

In a prosecution for murder, the charge that a person has the same right to use such force as may be reasonably necessary to protect himself from great bodily harm as would be required to prevent his life being taken was properly given, as it did not attempt to define self-defense, but instructed only that the same force may be used to protect oneself from great bodily harm as may be used to protect one's life. Twitty v. State, 53 South. 308, 311, 312, 168 Ala. 59.

On a prosecution for murder, the court instructed that the law of "self-defense" is emphatically the law of necessity to which the party may have recourse under certain circumstances to prevent any reasonably apprehended great injury which he may have reasonable cause to believe is about to fall upon him, and that if defendant had reasonable cause to believe that deceased on a design to commit felony upon defendant or do him great bodily injury, and that there was reasonable cause to apprehend immediate danger of the consummation of the design, and defendant cut deceased and killed him to prevent the accomplishment of such design, the killing was justifiable. Held, that the instruction was not erroneous because of the use of the phrase "that the law of 'self-defense' is emphatically the law of necessity." State v. Maupin, 93 S. W. 379, 383, 196 Mo. 164.

In a prosecution for stabbing, the trial judge, in stating the contentions of the defendant to the jury, used the following language: "The defendant, on the other hand, claims that, while he cut the prosecutor, * * * it was done in self-defense, or under circumstances of justification. He claims that the prosecutor * * * made an attack on him with a large stick; that his life was in danger; that they fell, the prosecutor on top; that the prosecutor * * * continued to strike him after they were down; that it was under these circumstances that he cut the prosecutor, after the assault was made on him by the prosecutor * * * with this stick; that he cut the prosecutor, * * * therefore, in self-defense, and only so long as the prosecutor was on him and striking him," etc. Held, that the word "self-defense," especially as used in the context quoted above in the excerpt from the charge, was an apt word to convey the meaning that the assault defended against must be such as to endanger defendant's life or limb, whereas defendant's justification need not go to this extent; Pen. Code 1895, § 112, punishing persons guilty of stabbing except in self-defense "or other circumstances of justification." Edmondson v. State, 57 S. E. 947, 948, 1 Ga. App. 116, 118.

In a prosecution for homicide, an instruction that "the law of 'self-defense' is this: Wherever a party is without fault in bringing on the difficulty, and is attacked or assaulted by another, then the law gives him the right to take care of himself. He being without fault in bringing on the difficulty, he can use whatever amount of force is necessary for his complete self-protection. And where a man is without fault in bringing on the difficulty, and is assaulted or attacked by another under such circumstances as in the opinion of the jury who try the case would justify or warrant a man of ordinary reason and firmness in believing he was in actual danger of loss of life or of sustaining serious bodily harm, from which he has no provable means of escape, by retreat or otherwise, then under circumstances of that sort he has a right to defend himself, even to the extent of taking the life of his assailant," was correct. State v. Williams, 56 S. E. 783, 786, 76 S. C. 135.

In a prosecution for homicide, the evidence showed that it occurred upon a road on the lands of the defendant who was driving there with his wife, and that he was stopped by the decedent who was in liquor, and had a knife in his hand, and that the defendant got out of the vehicle and was behind it when he shot him. Upon the question of "self-defense," the judge charged that the right of self-defense does not exist until the one expecting to be attacked has used reasonable means to avoid the difficulty, and that if he has two paths, one leading to and the other away from the difficulty, he must, if necessary, take the one leading from the attack, in order to rely on the right of self-defense, and, if having two courses open, the one to and the other from the difficulty, his action in taking the one leading to the attack and placing him where he has to defend himself, destroys his right of self-defense. There was no showing that the attack was anticipated, nor any issue as to defendant's right to travel on the road. Held, that the charge was proper, and did not convey to the jury that a man should not go about his usual business or travel his customary road if he had reason to believe that it might result in an attack, the word "paths" being used figuratively, and not as to the defendant's right to be upon the road, this being made plain by a subsequent portion of the charge that, if the defendant drove upon the road and accepted or sought a threatened attack which he could reasonably have avoided, he could not plead self-defense. State v. Babb, 70 S. E. 309, 311, 88 S. C. 395.

On a trial for a homicide instructions on the subject of "self-defense," that if at the time defendant shot deceased he had reasonable cause to apprehend a design on the part of deceased to take his life or do him some great personal injury, and if there was reasonable cause for him to apprehend immediate danger of such design being accomplished, and if to avert such apprehended danger he shot deceased, and if at the time he had reasonable cause to believe and did believe it was necessary to shoot and kill in order to protect himself from such apprehended danger, the jury should acquit on the ground of self-defense, that it was not necessary that the danger should have been actual or real or impending or about to fall, but that all that was necessary was that accused had cause to believe and did believe these facts, but that, on the other hand, it was not enough that defendant should have so believed, but he must have had reasonable cause to believe, and whether or not he had reasonable cause was for the jury to determine under all the facts and circumstances given in evidence; that when a person has reasonable grounds to apprehend that some one is about to do him great bodily harm, and there is reasonable ground for believing the danger imminent that such design will be accomplished, he may act upon appearances and kill his assailant if necessary to avoid such apprehended danger, and the killing will be justifiable, although it afterwards turns out that the appearances were false and that there was in fact neither design to do him serious injury nor danger that it would be done; that, in passing upon the question whether accused had reasonable grounds for believing that there was imminent danger that deceased was about to kill him or do him some great bodily harm, the jury should determine the question from the standpoint of accused at the time he acted and under his surroundings at the particular instant of time and may also take into consideration threats, if any made by deceased against accused; that a person who has not wrongfully provoked an assault is under no obligation to retreat, but when wrongfully assailed may stand his ground and, if it reasonably appears necessary to protect himself from death or great personal injury, lawfully kill his assailant, and if deceased made an assault and attack upon accused, and accused had reasonable grounds to believe that he was in danger of being killed or receiving great bodily harm, he had a right to take such steps as to him under the circumstances reasonably seemed necessary to save his own life or save himself from great bodily harm even to the taking of deceased's life; that if accused at the time he shot deceased had reasonable cause to apprehend and did apprehend that deceased was about to kill him or do him great bodily harm and that danger of his doing either was imminent, and accused shot to avert such apprehended danger, the shooting was justifiable; that if accused acted in a moment of apparently impending danger from an assault by deceased it was not necessary for him to nicely measure the proper quantity of force necessary to repel the assault; and that the jury should not determine what they thought was necessary for accused to have done or not done; but that the question was what defendant might have reasonably believed was necessary for him to do under all the circumstances—fully covered the question of "self-defense," and the refusal of another instruction, that, if deceased made an assault or attack upon accused, accused was justified in acting upon the facts and circumstances as they reasonably appeared to him at the time, and if he honestly believed that he was in danger of losing his life or receiving great bodily harm at the hands of deceased he was justified in acting on such belief and taking such steps as seemed necessary to protect his own life or save himself from receiving great bodily harm, even if as a matter of fact he was mistaken in believing he was in such danger and as a matter of fact he was in no danger at all, was not error. State v. McMullin, 71 S. W. 221, 228, 170 Mo. 608.

Apprehension of danger

A reasonable apprehension of imminent danger to life or limb may give the right to act in "self-defense." State v. Clark, 77 Pac. 287, 290, 69 Kan. 576.

It is not sufficient that "circumstances are apparently dangerous to a reasonable man" to justify a person in shooting in "self-defense." Dawson v. State, 41 South. 803, 804, 148 Ala. 672.

To justify killing in "self-defense," the prisoner must have reasonably believed that he had no other means of escape from death or bodily harm. Commonwealth v. Johnson, 62 Atl. 1064, 213 Pa. 432 (quoting and adopting definition in Commonwealth v. Mitchka, 58 Atl. 474, 209 Pa. 274).

To maintain a plea of self-defense, there must be an actual physical attack or hostile demonstration of such a nature as to afford reasonable ground to believe that the design is to destroy life or inflict great bodily harm. State v. Halliday, 36 South. 753, 112 La. 846.

The law does not justify homicide upon the theory of "self-defense" unless two facts exist: (1) There must be reasonable ground to apprehend a design on the part of the person slain to do some great personal injury to the slayer; (2) there must be imminent danger of such design being accomplished. People v. Rodawald, 70 N. E. 1, 7, 177 N. Y. 408.

In charging on "self-defense" and, in that connection, on threats made by deceased against defendant, the criterion of apparent danger is as the situation is viewed from the standpoint of the defendant, and not as to the belief of danger by the jury. Adams v. State, 84 S. W. 231, 234, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 347.

If, in addition to unwarrantedly ejecting accused from decedent's house, accompanied by kicks, decedent made a movement to draw a pistol just before accused killed him, the killing was in "self-defense." Holcomb v. State, 113 S. W. 754, 756, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 486.

In order to justify a killing as committed in "self-defense," the danger must have existed, or have reasonably appeared to exist, at the very time defendant fired the fatal shot; defendant's belief that the danger was about to become imminent, or that it would become imminent in the future, being insufficient. People v. Taylor, 87 Pac. 215, 216, 217, 4 Cal. App. 31.

If a slayer, first attacked, had reasonable cause to believe, and did believe, he was in imminent danger of death or great bodily harm, and to avoid and prevent the same had no other reasonable means, the killing would be a justifiable act of "self-defense"; but if the attack was trifling, and manifested no purpose or intent to inflict serious injury, repelling it with a deadly weapon likely to produce death would not be justifiable. State v. Borrelli (Del.) 76 Atl. 605, 607, 1 Boyce, 349.

Where one is attacked by another and from the character of such attack has reasonable cause to believe, and does believe, that he is in imminent danger of death or great bodily harm, and has no reasonable means of avoiding or preventing his death or great bodily harm, other than by killing his assailant, and under such circumstances killed his assailant, the act is a justifiable act of "self-defense." State v. Tilghman, 63 Atl. 772, 774, 6 Pennewill (Del.) 54.

Where one is attacked, and from the character of such attack has reasonable cause to believe and does believe that he is in imminent danger of death or great bodily harm, and has no other reasonable means of avoiding or preventing death or great bodily harm, then the killing of the assailant is a justifiable act of "self-defense." State v. Cephus, 67 Atl. 150, 152, 6 Pennewill (Del.) 160.

An instruction, on a trial for homicide, that the right of "self-defense" is to be measured by what a reasonable person would have done under like circumstances, sufficiently conforms to Pen. Code, § 361, declaring that the circumstances to justify self-defense must be sufficient to excite the fears of a reasonable person. State v. Houk, 87 Pac. 175, 176, 34 Mont. 418.

The right to kill in "self-defense" is founded on necessity, real or apparent, and can only be resorted to when the circumstances are such as to warrant a reasonable belief in him assaulted that the killing is necessary to preserve life or to protect himself from great bodily harm. State v. Doherty, 98 Pac. 152, 154, 52 Or. 591.

Though the necessity for taking life is not actual, present, and urgent, the right of "self-defense" may be exercised if one assailed has reasonable ground to believe and in good faith does believe, from the conditions present, that death or the infliction of great bodily harm is imminent. State v. Miller, 74 Pac. 658, 660, 43 Or. 325.

To constitute "self-defense" "it is sufficient if the defendant honestly believed, without fault or carelessness on his part, that the danger was so urgent and pressing that the killing was necessary to save his own life, or prevent great bodily harm," and it is not essential that the killing should appear to the jury to have been necessary. Long v. State, 91 S. W. 26, 76 Ark. 493.

The law of "self-defense" is emphatically the law of necessity, to which a party may have recourse under certain circumstances to prevent any reasonably apprehended great personal injury which he may have reasonable grounds to believe is about to fall upon him. It is not necessary that the danger should be real or actual, or that it should be impending and immediately about to fall. State v. Tooker, 87 S. W. 487, 490, 188 Mo. 438.

"The whole matter of 'self-defense' is founded on necessity. There must be some real or apparent necessity for taking human life. The party must be actually in imminent danger or he must believe he is in imminent danger before he can strike. It is immaterial whether the danger was real or not if the party actually, honestly believed at the time that he was in danger of receiving serious bodily harm or suffering death at the hands of the party slain." State v. Miller, 53 S. E. 426, 428, 73 S. C. 277, 114 Am. St. Rep. 82.

In ordinary cases of one person killing another in "self-defense," it must appear to the defendant that the danger was so urgent and pressing that, in order to save his own life or prevent his receiving great bodily injury, the killing was necessary. And if it does so appear to him and he acts in good faith under such belief without fault or carelessness, he will be excused, though it should turn out that he was mistaken in the belief of danger. But to justify the defendant he must act with due circumspection, and if there was no such danger, and his belief in the existence thereof be imputable to his own fault or carelessness, he is not excused, however honest the belief may be. Hoard v. State, 95 S. W. 1002, 1004, 80 Ark. 87 (quoting and adopting definition in Smith v. State, 26 S. W. 712, 59 Ark. 137, 43 Am. St. Rep. 20; Magness v. State, 50 S. W. 554, 59 S. W. 529, 67 Ark. 594; Bish. New Cr. Law, § 305; Palmore v. State, 29 Ark. 248).

Where one is attacked by another with a deadly weapon, the party attacked may, if he does so honestly and in good faith, safely act in the light of his surroundings, and on the appearances to him at the time. Where, in a prosecution for homicide; accused relied on "self-defense," an instruction that the jury should say from the evidence whether it was necessary for accused to kill decedent to protect himself, in order to make the killing justified, was erroneous, since accused could defend himself against attack to the extent of killing decedent if it appeared to him at the time, acting as a reasonable man, that it was necessary to kill decedent to prevent injury to himself. Owens v. United States, 130 Fed. 279, 282, 64 C. C. A. 525.

The right of "self-defense" can be lawfully exercised only in a bona fide effort to preserve oneself from an impending danger. It is not necessary that the danger should in fact exist. It may be only apparent and not real; but a party, in order to avail himself of such right to defend under such circumstances, must not only honestly believe himself in immediate danger, but have reasonable ground for such belief. The employment in which a street car conductor was engaged at the time he was charged to have assaulted a passenger did not deprive him of the right of self-defense; he being entitled, if assaulted, to repel the assault and prevent injury to himself, provided his defense did not become offensive and exceed the bounds of prevention. Dallas Consol. Electric R. Co. v. Pettit, 105 S. W. 42, 44, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 354.

Where the killing was the culmination of decedent's hostile attitude towards accused, manifested by numerous insults and threats, which, in connection with the declarations and actions of decedent at the time of the killing, were reasonably calculated to induce accused to believe that he was in imminent danger, an instruction that if accused, in the exercise of a reasonable judgment, believed and had reasonable grounds to believe, from the facts proven, that decedent, just preceding the firing of the first shot by accused, was about to make an attack on him, and that by reason thereof he, in the exercise of reasonable judgment, believed and had grounds to believe that he was in danger of loss of life or great bodily harm, and that it was necessary, or believed by him in the exercise of reasonable judgment to be necessary, to kill decedent to avert such danger, accused should be acquitted on the ground of self-defense, was correct. Commonwealth v. Boyd (Ky.) 112 S. W. 605, 606.

In a prosecution for murder, an instruction that one may kill in self-defense when he should suppose from his situation and surroundings that he was in imminent danger was properly refused, for using the word "suppose," instead of "bona fide believe." Twitty v. State, 53 South. 308, 311, 312, 168 Ala. 59.

In a prosecution for murder, a charge that, to justify homicide on the ground of self-defense, an actual danger to the life or person of the party killing is not necessary, if there be an appearance of danger caused by the acts or demonstration of the party killed, so as to produce in the mind of the party slaying a reasonable expectation or fear of death, or serious bodily injury, was properly refused as not asserting that the "appearance of danger" was to life or great bodily harm, or that it was such as to reasonably impress a man that such danger existed. Twitty v. State, 53 South. 308, 311, 312, 168 Ala. 59.

In an instruction on "self-defense" authorizing acquittal of accused if he believed at the time of shooting deceased that either he or others were threatened with danger to their lives or great, serious bodily harm, the word "great" should have been omitted; it being sufficient if he apprehended serious bodily harm. Jones v. State, 71 S. W. 962, 963, 44 Tex. Cr. R. 405.

An instruction that if defendant was where he had a right to be, and deceased advanced upon him in a threatening manner or induced him to believe that he was in danger of life or limb, he need not retreat, but had a right to defend himself; that when a man is where he has a right to be, and deceased so acts as to induce in him a reasonable and fixed ground for apprehension that he is in danger of life or limb, he may at once use necessary force to prevent the threatened blow, even to the extent of taking life—was properly qualified by further instruction that, though defendant may have been where he had a right to be and deceased was advancing toward him in a threatening manner, still he would have no right to take the life of deceased, without warning him to desist from his attack, unless defendant was justified in believing that he had not time to give such warning. And the court also properly instructed that a man need not wait until the blow is actually struck before he has a right to act upon appearances and defend himself; that it is enough if he honestly believe, and has reason to believe from the attitude, conduct, and manner of the deceased, that he was in danger of his life or of great bodily harm. State v. Stockhammer, 75 Pac. 810, 811, 812, 34 Wash. 262.

In a prosecution for homicide, an instruction that if defendant's co-indicttee struck deceased with some weapon, causing his death, and at the time had good reason to believe, and did believe, from the conduct or appearance of deceased, that deceased was about to inflict upon him some great bodily harm, and struck him for the purpose of averting such apprehended danger, then such co-indicttee killed deceased in "self-defense," etc., and that in such case it is not necessary that the danger should have been real and about to fall, as all that is necessary is that such danger existed, and that, on the other hand, it was not enough that such co-indicttee believed in the existence of such danger, but he must have had good cause for so believing, was faulty, in saying that all that was necessary was that such danger existed; the law being that, whether the danger really existed or not, if he had good reason to believe and did believe, it to exist, he had the right to act on appearances, although it might thereafter have turned out that the appearances were false. State v. Darling, 100 S. W. 631, 634, 202 Mo. 150.

Duty to retreat

"Self-defense" does not justify a homicide unless the person guilty of killing retreated, if retreat were practicable, and did everything in his power, consistent with his safety, to avoid the danger and avert the necessity of killing his assailant. State v. Fraga, 97 S. W. 898, 900, 199 Mo. 127.

In a prosecution for murder, a charge stating when one may kill in self-defense was properly refused, where it failed to include the duty to retreat. Twitty v. State, 53 South. 308, 311, 312, 168 Ala. 59.

"A man may repel force by force in defense of his person, habitation, or property against one who manifestly intends or endeavors by violence and surprise to commit a known felony, such as murder, rape, robbery, arson, burglary, and the like, upon either. In these cases he is not obliged to retreat, but may pursue his adversary until he has secured himself from all danger, and, if he kill him in so doing, it will be justifiable 'self-defense.'" Such being the only justification of homicide, no one may take a human life directly or indirectly, as by setting a spring gun, to prevent a mere trespass, or a theft of property. State v. Marfaudille, 92 Pac. 939, 941, 48 Wash. 117 (citing Swifts' Dig. vol. 2, p. 283).

Defense of father by son

Where defendant gave evidence that the killing was in "self-defense" of himself and his son, an instruction limiting the defense to the killing being in his own self-defense is error. Thacker v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 71 S. W. 931, 932.

SELF-DESTRUCTION

See Involuntary Self-Destruction; Voluntary Self-Destruction.

See, also, Suicide.

A benefit certificate conditioned to be void if the member dies by self-destruction, whether sane or insane, is avoided if the member was conscious of the physical nature of his act when he inflicted the wounds on himself causing his death. Brown v. United Moderns, 87 S. W. 357, 358, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 343.

The phrase "self-destruction or suicide," as used in a certificate of membership in a benefit association declaring that the contract for benefits does not include assurance against self-destruction or suicide, whether the member be sane or insane, does not prevent a recovery on the certificate where the member's death was due to his voluntary taking of carbolic acid, not with intent to cause death, but to frighten his wife into giving him money. Courtemanche v. Supreme Court I. O. O. F., 98 N. W. 749, 750, 136 Mich. 30, 64 L. R. A. 608, 112 Am. St. Rep. 345.

SELF-EXECUTING

A constitutional provision is "self-executing" when it is complete without any legislation for its enforcement. Eau Claire Nat. Bank v. Benson, 82 N. W. 604, 606, 106 Wis. 624.

A constitutional provision is "self-executing" if it enacts a sufficient rule by means of which the right given may be enjoyed and protected. Stevens v. Benson, 91 Pac. 577, 578, 50 Or. 269.

A constitutional provision is self-executing when it prescribes a rule, the application of which puts it into operation. Acme Dairy Co. v. City of Astoria, 90 Pac. 153, 154, 49 Or. 520 (citing Cooley's Const. Lim. [5th Ed.] 100).

A constitutional provision is "self-executing" if it supplies a sufficient rule by means of which the right given may be enjoyed and protected or the duty imposed enforced. It is not self-executing when it merely indicates principles without laying down rules by means of which these principles may be given the force of law. Ex parte McNaught, 100 Pac. 27, 28, 1 Okl. Cr. 260; Griffin v. Rhoton, 107 S. W. 380, 384, 85 Ark. 89 (quoting from Jones v. Jarman, 34 Ark. 323, approving the definition by Judge Cooley); Robertson v. City of Staunton, 51 S. E. 178, 180, 104 Va. 73 (quoting and adopting definition in Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 121).

Const. art. 18, § 3, subds. "a," "b" (Bunn's Ed. §§ 413, 414), providing for a general election in cities of a board of freeholders to prepare and propose a charter for adoption by the said city, is self-executing, without additional legislation to put the same into force. State ex rel. Reardon v. Scales, 97 Pac. 584, 587, 21 Okl. 683.

SELF-INDUCTION AND RESISTANCE

The terms "self-induction and resistance" are used to signify means of hindering or delaying the current in circuits, as contradistinguished from "induction" proper, which consists in taking off, in part, the current of the circuit by placing a conductor in proximity to such circuit, and within its influence, which is thereupon transmitted over another line or circuit. Dayton Fan & Motor Co. v. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co., 118 Fed. 562, 568, 55 C. C. A. 390.

SELF-PRESERVATION

"Self-preservation" has been termed the first law of nature. It is of the most ancient origin; it antedates all constitutions and statutes made by man. It is the law under which we live, move, and have our being. It is a law governing all persons, natural and artificial. High and low, rich and poor, wise and foolish, old and young, are subject to its inexorable sway. Obedience to it is rewarded, while disobedience to it is inevitably punished. Out of its observance arises the doctrine of the survival of the fittest. It is an attribute of all corporations, from the state itself down to the least of its creatures. Upon it depends the police power of the state, which, in its broadest acceptation, means the general power of a government to preserve and promote public welfare by prohibiting all things hurtful to the comfort, safety, and welfare of society, and by establishing such rules as may be conducive of public benefit. Del Ponte v. Societa Italiana, Di M. S. Guglielmo Marconi, 60 Atl. 237, 239, 240, 27 R. I. 1, 70 L. R. A. 188, 114 Am. St. Rep. 17.

"We know of no more universal instinct than that of 'self-preservation'—none that so insistently urges to care against injury. It has its motives to exercise in the fear of pain, maiming and death." Baltimore, etc., R. Co.

Because the natural instinct of "self-preservation" generally prompts men to acts of care and caution when approaching or in the presence of danger, there is, in the absence of credible evidence of the actual fact in any instance, a presumption of the exercise of due care and caution; but, like other presumptions of fact arising from the ordinary or usual conduct of men, rather than from what is invariable or universal, this presumption is disputable, and cannot exist where it is incompatible with the conduct of the person to whom it is sought to apply it, which may be shown by the testimony of eye-witnesses to his movements, or by evidence of the physical surroundings and other conditions at the time. Wabash R. Co. v. De Tar, 141 Fed. 932, 934, 73 C. C. A. 166, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 352.

SELF-SUPPORTING IRON WALL

Walls consisting of an "outer frame of timber or studding upon which is nailed a sheathing of corrugated iron" is not a "self-supporting iron" wall within an ordinance requiring the walls of buildings within the fire limits, if of iron, to be self-supporting. Lane-Moore Lumber Co. v. City of Storm Lake, 130 N. W. 924, 928, 151 Iowa, 130.

SELL

See Grant, Bargain, and Sell.

Keep as meaning, see Keep.

See, also, Sale; Sold.

In common parlance "to sell" is often used as meaning to negotiate or arrange for a sale. Adams v. Carlton, 95 Pac. 390, 391, 77 Kan. 546 (citing Brown v. Gilpin, 90 Pac. 267, 75 Kan. 773).

The verb "sell" and the noun "sale" vary in meaning according to the different context in which they are used. Ordinarily a sale is an executed contract—a completed transaction, binding on seller and buyer alike. In contracts creating the relationship of principal and real estate broker, however, a different meaning is generally given by construction. The broker "sells" when he finds a purchaser ready, able, and willing to buy on the terms proposed by the principal. A contract for commissions on sales entitles the broker to the specified compensation whenever through his influence such a prospective purchaser has been brought to the principal, though by reason of some fault or disinclination of the latter the sale is never completed or is consummated on terms somewhat different from those originally proposed by the principal. A contract of sale binding both the seller and purchaser is a "sale" within the meaning of the rule applicable to such relations. Humphries & Jackson v. Smith, 63 S. E. 248, 249, 5 Ga. App. 340 (citing Hill & Moultrie v.

Wheeler, 58 S. E. 502, 2 Ga. App. 349; Rice v. Ware & Harper, 60 S. E. 301, 3 Ga. App. 579; Lindley v. Kelm, 34 Atl. 1073, 54 N. J. Eq. 423; Rice v. Mayo, 107 Mass. 550).

"Though the word 'sell' itself in transactions touching personal property usually has reference to a pecuniary or money consideration, yet courts have never hesitated to give the word a broader significance when the meaning of the law or of a private contract seemed to call for it, and the much more generally accepted definition of a sale is the exchange of an interest in real or personal property for money or its equivalent." Mansfield v. District Agr. Ass'n Number Six, 97 Pac. 150, 151, 154 Cal. 145 (citing and adopting Webst. Dict. Unab. and Stand. Dict. Borland v. Nevada Bank of San Francisco, 33 Pac. 737, 99 Cal. 89, 37 Am. St. Rep. 32; Howard v. Harris, 90 Mass. [8 Allen] 297; Western Massachusetts Ins. Co. v. Riker, 10 Mich. 279; Speigle v. Meredith, 4 Bliss, 120, 22 Fed. Cas. 910; Stokes v. Stokes, 6 South. 155, 66 Miss. 456; Thurmond v. Faith, 69 Ga. 833; Hughes v. Washington, 72 Ill. 84; People ex rel. Davis v. Middleton, 14 Cal. 540).

The expression "to sell" and the expression "to transfer property for a price in money" are convertible; and, as a consequence, it is no more possible to sell without transferring ownership than it is possible to sell without selling, or to transfer ownership without transferring ownership, or to do any other thing without doing it. When a sale is made under a suspensive condition, there is no sale until the condition has been fulfilled. There is merely a contract that there shall be a sale when the condition is fulfilled. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. St. Louis Cypress Co., 46 South. 193, 197, 121 La. 152.

In a written contract, whereby one party agreed to sell to the other property in process of growth or manufacture to be delivered in the future, the word "sell" will be construed as meaning "offers to sell" or "agrees to sell," and the contract will be deemed an option or an offer, unless it affirmatively appears that it has been accepted, which acceptance may be shown by proof that the one to whom the offer was made paid a portion of the price. Luke v. Livingston, 70 S. E. 596, 597, 9 Ga. App. 116.

An agreement "to sell" land binds the party to execute a proper deed of conveyance. Smith v. Haynes, 9 Me. [9 Greenl.] 128, 131.

In the absence of evidence to the contrary, to "sell" means to sell for cash, and an agent authorized to sell has no authority to receive other goods in part payment. Lindow v. Cohn, 90 Pac. 485, 486, 5 Cal. App. 388 (citing Taylor & Farley Organ Co. v. Starkey, 59 N. H. 142).

The word "sell" is included by implication in the words "execute and deliver," in a resolution by corporate directors authorizing the president and secretary to execute and deliver bonds to be issued, and the resolution authorizes a sale of the bonds. McCormick v. Unity Co., 87 N. E. 924, 926, 239 Ill. 306.

The use of the words "dispose" or "sell," or their derivatives, is not necessary to confer a power of disposal on the devisee of a life estate. Herring v. Williams, 69 S. E. 140, 142, 153 N. C. 231, 138 Am. St. Rep. 659.

That the words "sell" and "dispose," as used in a will, were synonymous, was indicated by the words "either at public or private sale" appearing after the direction for the executrix to "sell or dispose" of the property as she might think best. Rutledge v. Crampton, 43 South. 825, 826, 150 Ala. 275.

Selling a bank bill or piece of money is, in common parlance, passing the bill or money. State v. Harroun, 98 S. W. 467, 470, 199 Mo. 519 (citing State v. Watson, 65 Mo. 115).

Authority to a real estate agent to "sell" real estate does not authorize him to sign a written contract of sale. Brandrup v. Britten, 92 N. W. 453, 455, 11 N. D. 376 (citing Duffy v. Hobson, 40 Cal. 240-245, 6 Am. Rep. 617).

The employment of the word "sell" in the memoranda of the initiatory part of a contract which was the result of several conferences and conversations is not conclusive as a matter of law as to the nature of the contract. The word is often used interchangeably as indicating a present sale or a contract to "sell," and it has no peculiar significance which the court could declare as matter of law. Pacific Export Co. v. North Pac. Lumber Co., 80 Pac. 105, 109, 46 Or. 194.

To "sell" property is, according to the strict signification of the word, to transfer it from one to another in consideration of a price paid or agreed to be paid in current money. Since there must be a valuable consideration to constitute a sale, the words "to sell," as used in Pol. Code 1895, § 1548, providing that if a majority of the votes cast at any election held, as by this chapter provided, shall be against the sale of intoxicating liquors, it shall not be lawful for any person within the limits of the county "to sell" intoxicating liquors, considered by themselves, necessarily mean to transfer the liquor for valuable consideration. Howell v. State, 52 S. E. 649, 650, 124 Ga. 698.

Under the statute making it an offense to "sell" liquors to a minor, the word "sell" cannot be construed to mean something different from its ordinary legal import. State v. McNeal, 66 S. E. 512, 513, 66 W. Va. 411, 135 Am. St. Rep. 1038.

A saloon keeper who, while in a town in which the local option law was in force, received from a person there 50 cents, and agreed to forward to him there a pint of whisky, and who forwarded the same, was guilty of selling liquor in the local option town. McDermott v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 100 S. W. 830.

Under Pen. Code 1895, § 444, making it criminal for any person to sell any minor any spirituous intoxicating liquor, the word "sell" is not to be taken in its strict technical sense, for one of the elements of a sale is competent parties, and, a minor not being a competent party to obtain liquor, there can be no sale to him in the technical sense. Newsome v. State, 58 S. E. 71, 72, 1 Ga. App. 790.

The word "sell," as used in Rev. Codes, § 1506, making it unlawful for any person to sell liquors without having procured a license and given a bond, has its ordinary and common meaning, namely, to transfer title by valid agreement from one party to another for some consideration. Ada County v. Boise Commercial Club, 118 Pac. 1086, 1089, 20 Idaho, 421, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 101.

The word "sell," as used in an ordinance providing that license to sell spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors in the city shall be $500 per annum, etc., does not purport to relate to traffic in liquor by retail alone, but "its language is as broad and ample as is necessary to include both wholesale and retail transactions without tautology." Cofer v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 87 S. W. 264.

By merely delivering liquor to a minor, with notice that it is to be carried to an adult, a person does not "sell liquor" within a statute prohibiting sale of liquor to minors. Hence, where a minor purchases liquor, not for his own consumption, but for the use of another who sent him to buy it, whose money pays for it, to whom it is delivered, and to whom the sale may be lawfully made (the seller being so informed), it is not a "sale" to a minor within the meaning of said statute. In re MacRae, 106 N. W. 1020, 1021, 75 Neb. 757, 121 Am. St. Rep. 829 (citing Monaghan v. State, 6 South. 241, 66 Miss. 513, 4 L. R. A. 800).

Under Rev. Pol. Code, § 2838, making it unlawful for any person to engage in any business requiring the payment of a license under section 2834 without paying the license, which section requires a license for the business of selling intoxicating liquors, the offense of "engaging in the business without a license" is the same as that of "selling without a license." State v. Ely, 118 N. W. 687, 688, 22 S. D. 487, 18 Ann. Cas. 92.

As used in the Oleomargarine act of August 2, 1886, c. 840, 24 Stat. 210, providing that any person that "sells" vends, or furnishes oleomargarine for the use and consumption of others, except to his own family table, without compensation, who shall color such oleomargarine to look like butter, shall be held to be a manufacturer, the term "sell" implies sale for a consideration. Morris v. United States, 161 Fed. 672, 679, 88 C. C. A. 532.

The word "sell," in G. S. 1863, p. 396, § 39, cl. 6, giving the probate court power to authorize the executor to sell part of the estate, imports that the whole title is to be parted with, and not that the estate is to be incumbered. Brown v. Van Duzee, 44 Vt. 529, 531.

The words "sell, transfer or assign" as used in section 83, added to chapter 54 of the Code of 1899 by chapter 35, p. 93, Acts 1901, authorizing a corporation to sell, transfer, or assign corporate property, do not authorize the corporation to trade or barter away for anything other than money. The word "sell" usually applies to tangible property. It is a technical term applicable to the alienation of that kind of property and especially to personal property. "Transfer or assign" are applicable to choses in action, rights, and privileges, rather than tangible property, and are almost, if not quite, identical in meaning. None of these terms, except the word "sell," indicate what the nature of the consideration shall be. Neither "assign" nor "transfer" is broad enough to cover the consideration. They in no sense define the contract under which they pass title, but simply define the nature of the act by which the title passes. They are more limited than the word "sell," which necessarily involves a price or consideration; but they stop short of indicating whether the property may be disposed of by sale or barter, and hence do not confer a power to trade. Germer v. Triple-State Natural Gas & Oil Co., 54 S. E. 509, 519, 60 W. Va. 143.

The word "sells" is more apt in describing the passing of title of personal, than of real, property. When used in a contract relating to land, it is not decisive, since it may manifest an intent to convey the title to property named, whether real or personal; but, when the purpose of the transaction is stated, the word will ordinarily have no more effect upon the title than is necessary to accomplish the purpose. No transfer of title is effected by an instrument reciting that the party of the first part "sells" certain mining claims to the party of the second part for a specified consideration, and "upon the terms and consideration following," and which, in its subsequent provisions, authorizes the party of the second part to sell and negotiate the mines for any sum above $45,000, and retain out of the purchase price seven-eighths of the excess; the party of the first part agreeing to execute any conveyance thereafter necessary to convey a good title, and the party of the second part assuming no obligations except a general one by which both parties mutually agree to aid each other in the negotiation and sale. Such document is not a deed, but simply a power of attorney, and, as such, subject to revocation. Taylor v. Burns, 27 Sup. Ct. 40, 42, 203 U. S. 120, 51 L. Ed. 116.

The words "to sell" or "to make a sale," as used in a communication from the owner of real estate to a broker with respect to the sale thereof, are often used as meaning to negotiate or arrange for a sale. Brown v. Gilpin, 90 Pac. 267, 271, 75 Kan. 773.

The employment of a broker to sell lands—that is, to procure purchasers—does not of itself or prima facie confer authority to bind the owner to sell by a contract in writing, and such authority is not usually to be inferred from the use by the principal and agent in that connection of the terms "for sale" or "to sell" and the like; such words in that connection usually meaning no more than to negotiate a sale by finding a purchaser upon satisfactory terms. Stengel v. Sergeant, 68 Atl. 1106, 1110, 74 N. J. Eq. 20.

Though the expression "to sell" is sometimes used in the sense of an executed contract of sale, or an agreement to sell as defined by Civ. Code, § 1727, the expression, when used in a contract giving a real estate broker the exclusive right "to sell" real estate, has acquired a restrictive meaning, and standing alone the words "to sell" are not sufficient to authorize the broker to enter into a contract of sale binding the owner. Bacon v. Davis, 98 Pac. 71, 73, 9 Cal. App. 83.

According to the settled construction, the employment of a professional broker "to sell" or "close a bargain" concerning real estate merely authorizes him to find a purchaser at the specified price, and does not authorize him to execute a contract of sale in the name of his principal or to sign his principal's name to any contract of sale. Lichty v. Daggett, 121 N. W. 862, 867, 23 S. D. 380.

Defendant wrote certain brokers a letter, asking them to assist in selling certain real estate until a sale was made, continuing, "I hereby authorize you to sell same, and agree to pay you when it is sold, for your services," and to furnish the purchaser a good title and complete abstract. Held, that the words "to sell" did not authorize the brokers to make a binding contract of sale, but merely to find a purchaser, and the brokers had no authority to bind defendant by signing a contract of sale. Jones v. Howard, 84 N. E. 1041, 1042, 234 Ill. 404.

SELL AND CONVEY

The words "sell and convey," in a deed of real estate, mean, in the absence of appropriate expressions in the instrument itself limiting and restricting such general acceptance of the meaning of the words, a conveyance in fee. St. Louis Land & Building Ass'n v. Fueller, 81 S. W. 414, 417, 182 Mo. 93.

"Power to sell and convey" does not confer the power to mortgage. "A trust with power to sell out and out will not authorize a mortgage, and a trust for sale with nothing to negative the settlor's intention to convert the estate absolutely will not authorize the trustee to execute a mortgage." Stump v. Warfield, 65 Atl. 346, 348, 104 Md. 530, 118 Am. St. Rep. 434, 10 Ann. Cas. 249 (quoting Tyson v. Latrobe, 42 Md. 325; 2 Perry, Trusts, § 768).

SELL AND DISPOSE OF

The words "sell" and "dispose," as used in a power in a will authorizing the sale and disposition of property, are synonymous when accompanied by a further statement authorizing the sale or disposition to be made either at public or private sale, since such words limit the method of disposition to a conveyance. Rutledge v. Crampton, 43 South. 822, 826, 150 Ala. 275.

SELL, BARTER, OR LOAN

Ky. St. § 2557, provides that any person who shall "sell, barter, or loan," directly or indirectly, any intoxicating liquors in a local option district, shall be punished. Held, that the act was not intended to prevent the giving of spirituous liquors by one person to another, and where a physician gave whisky to the prosecuting witness for the witness' sick child, without an agreement that it should be returned, and the physician did not request its return, he was not guilty of violating the statute because the witness thereafter returned it. Commonwealth v. Abbott, 145 S. W. 373, 147 Ky. 686.

SELL, GIVE AWAY, OR OTHERWISE DISPOSE OF

See Otherwise Dispose of.

SELL IN PRINCIPAL'S NAME

To "sell in the principal's name," as used in a writing giving authority to brokers, implies the conclusion in the principal's name of the agreement negotiated by the brokers. Golden v. Claudel, 118 Pac. 77, 78, 85 Kan. 465.

SELL OR RETAIL

Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 2243 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1421), making it a misdemeanor to "sell or retail" intoxicating liquor on Sunday, prohibits the sale of intoxicating liquors on Sunday in any quantity, whether at wholesale or retail. State v. Wahl, 119 S. W. 453, 454, 137 Mo. App. 651.

SELL SHORT

See Short.

SELLER

One assisting in procuring money from certain persons to pay the charges on whisky shipped to a third person, C. O. D., and aiding one of such persons to get his share of the whisky, is not a "seller" of liquor in violation of the local option law. Hiltebrand v. State, 91 S. W. 587, 588, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 342.

SELLER'S LIEN

A "seller's lien" on chattels for the price exists at common law, without any express agreement, and is an implied part of every contract for the sale of personal property, being defined as the right to retain possession of the chattels until the price is paid, and continuing until delivery, unless divested by an agreement, express or implied, or is waived by a sale on credit, except when the purchaser becomes insolvent before payment, when the lien revives, provided the rights of bona fide third purchasers have not intervened. Willis v. Glenwood Cotton Mills, 200 Fed. 301, 305.

SELLING AGENT

See, also, Salesman.

A "selling agent," "factor," or "commission merchant" is one who sells goods which another person has delivered to him for that purpose and receives compensation for his services by a commission or otherwise. Omnien v. Talcott, 188 Fed. 401, 403, 112 C. C. A. 239.

SELLING AT RETAIL

See Retail.

SELLING BY SAMPLE

See, also, Sale by Sample.

The words "selling by sample," as used in Ky. St. 1903, § 4218, which provides that "agents for selling by sample" shall not be considered as peddlers, mean taking orders for future delivery, as the commercial traveler does. Commonwealth v. Standard Oil Co., 112 S. W. 902, 903, 129 Ky. 744.

SELLING FOR FUTURE DELIVERY

"Selling for future delivery" has a well-defined meaning on the board of trade and in the business world, and means that he has any day during some specified month in the future in which to make such delivery. John Miller Co. v. Klovstad, 105 N. W. 164, 165, 14 N. D. 435.

SELLING TO ARRIVE

"Selling to arrive" has a well-defined meaning on the board of trade and in the business world, and means that the vendor had 14 days in which to make delivery of the warehouse receipts. John Miller Co. v. Klovstad, 105 N. W. 164, 165, 14 N. D. 435.

SELLING VALUE

The "selling value" of an article is often equivalent to its actual value. Where defendant refused to accept stoves manufactured for him by plaintiff, and plaintiff elected to treat the stoves as his own and sued for damages, it appearing that the stoves were of an unusual make, so that they had no market value, the reasonable value of the stoves at the time and place of delivery under the contract should be ascertained by evidence as to the sales of the stoves actually made by the seller, the frequency of the sales, and the testimony of expert witnesses familiar with the stove trade. In such case an instruction on the measure of damages, authorizing the jury to award the plaintiff the "reasonable selling value," was not erroneous. St. Louis Steel Range Co. v. Kline-Drummond Mercantile Co., 96 S. W. 1040, 1043, 120 Mo. App. 438.

SEMAPHORE

A "semaphore" is a mechanical device for displaying signals to convey information to a distant point. The etymological definition of the word is "sign bearer." The railroad "semaphore" consists of a mast 25 feet or more in height surrounded by a movable platform, with an iron rod to which is secured a lantern with convex lenses on four sides. On the two opposite sides the glass is red, and on the other two opposite sides it is green. This lantern is used for night signals, while a board target or arm attached to the same platform is used for the day signal. The red light exhibited by the lantern at night indicates danger and the green light indicates safety. The horizontal position of the board target is the day signal for danger, and a vertical position of it is the signal for safety. A cable is stretched from the "semaphore" to the station of the watchman or "semaphore" tender, and the lantern and target are both operated by a windlass and lever. Tillson v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 67 Atl. 407, 409, 102 Me. 463.

Near the scene of the collision between two railroad trains causing the damages sued for was what is known as a "semaphore" used to denote when the railroad track was clear or otherwise. When the arm stood horizontally to the upright on which it was placed, it indicated that the track was not clear, and when it was depressed it indicated the contrary. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., 71 S. W. 1081, 1082, 98 Mo. App. 214.

SEMICONVERTIBLE CAR

A semiconvertible car is one where the lower panel is not removable; that is, it forms an integral part of the car. It may be higher or lower, but the construction is such that in a semiconvertible car the side of it is not open to the floor when the movable panels are removed so as to make an open car. O'Leary v. Utica & M. V. Ry. Co., 139 Fed. 330, 333.

SEMINARY

See Religious Seminary; Theological or Religious Seminary.

SEMI WEEKLY

A newspaper issued every day of the week, except Sunday, is a "daily newspaper," within a statute requiring notice of foreclosure sales to be published in daily newspapers; the term "daily newspaper" being employed in such statute in contradistinction to the term "weekly," "semiweekly" or "tri-weekly" newspaper. Wilson v. Petzold, 76 S. W. 1093, 116 Ky. 873.

SEND

"Sending a telephone message" means usually that the persons in communication be afforded the means of talking to each other. Defendant telephone company and plaintiff telephone company contracted to connect their lines by extending them to a point midway between two cities, in one of which defendant maintained an exchange, and in the other of which plaintiff maintained an exchange; and it was provided that each company should have the right to send messages over the extended lines between the two cities, and, for more than eight years after the extension was made, messages originating elsewhere than in the two cities were received and passed over such lines. Held, that in view of the situation, and the practical construction given the contract by the parties, it should be construed as calling for the transmission of messages, irrespective of whether they originated in either of the two mentioned cities. Campbellsville Tel. Co. v. Lebanon, L. & L. Tel. Co., 80 S. W. 1114, 1116, 118 Ky. 277.

The constitution of a benefit society, which provides that printed notices of assessment "shall be made and sent," as the society may provide, and that the official organ of the society, appearing on the first day of each month, shall be an official notice of assessment to each member, requires that a notice of assessment be sent to a member, and publishing a notice of assessment in the official newspaper, does not amount to sending a notice. Grand Legion of Illinois Select Knights of America v. Beaty, 79 N. E. 565, 567, 224 Ill. 346, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1124, 8 Ann. Cas. 160.

Mailing

Testimony that witness "sent" her address to another is not sufficient to show that she did this by letter duly mailed, so as to raise the presumption of its receipt and consequent knowledge of the address. Ward v. Morr Transfer & Storage Co., 95 S. W. 964, 965, 119 Mo. App. 83.

SEND BY MAIL

An official recital by an officer that he had "sent a written notice by mail" imports that he affixed the usual stamp, thus prepaying the postage (that being his official duty), as well as that he deposited the document in the post office receptacle. Cutting v. Harrington, 71 Atl. 374, 377, 104 Me. 96, 129 Am. St. Rep. 373.

SEND ON YOUR PAPER

Where a bank, to a telegraphic inquiry, "Will you pay T's check on you, $22,000," replied by telegram, "T. is good, send on your paper," its answer cannot be construed as a mere statement that T. was good for the amount mentioned, but it amounted to a promise to pay the check; the words "send on your paper" inviting action on the part of the person addressed and not constituting a mere expression of opinion. First Nat. Bank of Atchison v. Commercial Sav. Bank, 87 Pac. 746, 749, 74 Kan. 606, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1148, 118 Am. St. Rep. 340, 11 Ann. Cas. 281 (citing North Atchison Bank v. Garretson, 51 Fed. 168, 2 C. C. A. 145).

SEND OUT

The words "send out," in Acts 1907, p. 18, c. 11, known as the "Full Crew Act" § 3, declaring that any railroad doing business in the state who shall "send out" on its road, or cause to be sent out, any train not manned in accordance with sections 1 and 2 of the act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, did not limit the act to trains originating within the state, but such words were used in the sense of "operate" or "run over its road," so that the act was applicable to all trains while being operated within the state, though they originated in another state and passed through Indiana to points beyond. Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. State, 87 N. E. 1034, 1039, 172 Ind. 147.

SENILE DEMENTIA

As applied to testamentary capacity, the term "senile dementia" is merely inability from old age, and, as the words indicate, it is that diminution and weakness of the mental faculties which result from old age. Graham v. Deuterman, 91 N. E. 61, 62, 244 Ill. 124.

"Senile dementia" is a "progressive condition attendant in some cases upon advancing age, and a condition which, if existing, affords opportunity for the exercise of influence by way of direction and suggestion which does not attend, to such degree, at least, most forms of dementia," and to one who is afflicted with it no test can well be applied to determine lucidity and disposing power at any particular time or during any particular interval. Hibbard v. Baker, 104 N. W. 399, 400, 141 Mich. 124.

"That 'senile dementia' differs greatly both in process and progress of decay is freely admitted by all writers on the subject. Medical observers say that it cannot be described by any positive characters; that, in its gradual advance to incompetency, it embraces a wide range of infirmity, varying from simple lapse of memory to complete inability to recognize persons or things; 'that often the mental infirmity of the aged is by no means as serious as might be supposed at first sight, and that, to use a figure of speech, the mind may be superficially rotted while it is sound at the core.' It is generally said that one of the surest symptoms of mental decay is the loss of memory, and especially in respect of names and dates; but it is fully recognized in the authorities that, while an old person may appear oblivious in such matters, his mental grasp of the relations he sustains to others, and more especially to the immediate members of his family, and to others who would be the natural objects of his bounty, and of his own interest and affairs, his capacity and solid understanding may still remain firm. Failure of memory is not alone enough to create testamentary incapacity, unless it extends so far as to be inconsistent with the 'sound and disposing mind and memory' requisite for all wills. 'Great age alone does not constitute testamentary disqualification,' and 'there is no presumption against a will because made by a man of advanced age, nor can incapacity be inferred from an enfeebled condition of mind or body.' The law wisely sustains wills made by persons of impaired mental and bodily powers, provided it appears that the will is the uninfluenced act of the testator, and he has the requisite intelligence to comprehend the condition and extent of his property and remember the persons who would ordinarily be his beneficiaries. In an English case it was held that, though mental power be reduced in old persons below the ordinary standard, yet, if the testamentary act is understood and appreciated in its different bearings, if the mental faculties retain enough strength to comprehend the transaction entered upon, the power to make a will remains. In other words, to constitute 'senile dementia,' there must be such a failure of the mind as to deprive the testator of intelligent action. Such is the rule of our own cases, and the rule established by the great weight of authority." Gates v. Cole, 115 N. W. 236, 237, 238, 137 Iowa, 613 (citing Townsend v. Townsend, 105 N. W. 110, 128 Iowa, 621; Fothergill v. Fothergill, 105 N. W. 377, 129 Iowa, 93; Perkins v. Perkins, 90 N. W. 55, 116 Iowa, 253; Lingle v. Lingle, 96 N. W. 708, 121 Iowa, 133).

SENIOR

The suffixes "Jr." or "Sr." are no part of a man's name and, except in a few instances, may be disregarded. Ross v. Berry, 124 Pac. 342, 343, 17 N. M. 48.

The affixes "Sr." and "Jr." do not form part of a name, but are descriptive merely; hence in legal contemplation their presence or absence is immaterial. State v. Lewis, 83 Atl. 692, 693, 83 N. J. Law, 161; Windom v. State, 72 S. W. 193, 194, 44 Tex. Cr. R. 514.

The word "senior," added to the name of a person referred to in an indictment, is mere matter of description, constituting no part of the name, and need not be proved when proof of the name is necessary. State v. Simpson, 76 N. E. 544-546, 1005, 166 Ind. 211 (citing Allen v. State, 52 Ind. 486; Geraghty v. State, 11 N. E. 1, 110 Ind. 103).

The addition of the word "junior" or "senior" to a name is mere matter of description and not a part thereof, so that the fact that the suit was brought by plaintiff as administratrix of C. G. "Jr.," deceased, and judgment was rendered against the administratrix under that name, while the assignment of errors omitted "Jr." from decedent's name, was not ground for dismissal of the appeal. Guthell v. Dow, 97 N. E. 426, 177 Ind. 149.

SENIOR TEACHER

The position of senior teacher, within the rules of the board of education of the city of New York, relating to additional compensation for teachers acting as senior teachers in charge of schools, is not an independent position, within Laws 1897, p. 399, c. 378, § 1103, and Laws 1901, p. 472, c. 466, § 1090, providing for appointments to positions on the teaching staff; but the position is that of a regular teacher who, under the direction of the principal of the school, is performing special duties—the word "senior," as applied to a teacher, not relating to the age or period of service, but to particular duties which such teacher is called on to perform. Dildine v. Board of Education of City of New York, 117 N. Y. Supp. 578, 133 App. Div. 261.

SENSUALITY

"Lewdness" is synonymous with "impurity," "unchastity," "licentiousness," "sensuality." Janison v. State, 94 S. W. 675, 678, 117 Tenn. 58 (citing Cent. Dict.).

SENTENCE

See Cumulative Sentence; Successive Sentences; Suspended Sentence; Suspension of Sentence.

Mitigation of sentence, see Mitigate—Mitigation.

See, also, Punishment.

In Penal Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 40), § 1692, relating to rescue, the terms "commitment," "conviction," and "sentence" relate to a case where an officer or another holds a prisoner under lawful custody after he has been judicially held under a commitment, conviction, or sentence for misdemeanor. People v. Marks, 135 N. Y. Supp. 523, 525, 75 Misc. Rep. 404.

"The date fixed by a 'sentence' for the punishment to commence is directory merely, and forms no part of the sentence itself; hence, if from any cause it is not carried into effect at the period named, the party may be brought before the court again upon motion, and a new period be prescribed." The time fixed for executing a judgment and sentence or for the commencement of its execution is not one of its essential elements, and, strictly speaking, is not a part of the "judgment and sentence." The essential part of the judgment is the punishment, and the amount thereof, without reference to the time when it shall be executed. Except in cases where the defendant has been convicted of two or more offenses before judgment on either, the order of the court in reference to the time when the sentence shall be executed is not material. The judgment is the penalty of the law, as declared by the court, while the direction with respect to the time of carrying it into effect is in the nature of an award of execution. Where the penalty is imprisonment, the sentence of the law is to be satisfied only by the actual suffering of the imprisonment imposed, unless remitted by death or by some legal authority. The expiration of time without imprisonment is in no sense an execution of "sentence." Ex parte Eldridge, 106 Pac. 980, 981, 3 Okl. Cr. 499, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 625, 139 Am. St. Rep. 967 (quoting and adopting definitions in Ridley v. State, 106 Pac. 553, 3 Okl. Cr. 350, 26 L. R. A. [N. S.] 110, and In re Collins, 97 Pac. 188, 8 Cal. App. 367).

Conviction distinguished

Revisal 1908, §§ 5416a-5416q, establishing the Stonewall Jackson Training and Industrial School for delinquent, etc., children, is not unconstitutional as amounting to a deprivation of liberty within the declaration of rights, the restraint being of parental nature and not as a punishment for crime, though only persons under 16 years of age, who have been "convicted" of a criminal offense, can be admitted, and "sentence" of such persons is required; the word "convicted" referring to a verdict of guilty, and the word "sentence" being broad enough to include any judgment of a criminal court, though in its ordinary acceptation it refers to a judgment of imprisonment. Ex parte Watson, 72 S. E. 1049, 1054, 157 N. C. 340.

SENTENCE SUSPENDED

The words "sentence suspended" amount to a declaration that no punishment ought to be inflicted. Blazier v. Keffer, 75 Atl. 439, 440, 79 N. J. Law, 252.

SENTIMENTS

The word "sentiments," as used in the constitutional provision that any person may speak, write, or publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that liberty, is used in the sense of thoughts, ideas, opinions. Pavesich v. New England Life Ins. Co., 50 S. E. 68, 73, 122 Ga. 190, 69 L. R. A. 101, 106 Am. St. Rep. 104, 2 Ann. Cas. 561.

SEPARABLE

SEPARABLE CONTRACT

Generally, a contract which by its terms, nature, and purpose contemplates that each and all of its parts and the consideration shall be common each to the other and interdependent, is entire, while a contract which is in its nature and purpose susceptible of division and apportionment is, generally, separable, and the question whether a contract is entire or separable is largely one of intention to be determined from the language and the subject-matter of the agreement. Quarton v. American Law Book Co., 121 N. W. 1009, 1015, 143 Iowa, 517, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1.

SEPARABLE CONTROVERSY

See, also, Severable Controversy.

Under Judicial Code, § 24, authorizing removal of certain causes to federal courts where there is a controversy wholly between citizens of different states which can be fully determined as between them notwithstanding the presence of other parties, a "separable controversy" does not exist so as to authorize removal, unless the whole subject-matter of the suit is capable of being fully determined as between citizens of different states, and complete relief afforded as to the separate cause of action without the presence of others originally made parties. In re Silvie's River, 199 Fed. 495, 502.

For a case to present a "separable controversy" within the statute relative to the removal of causes to the federal court, "it must be capable of separation into parts, so that, in one of the parts, a controversy will be presented with citizens of one or more states on one side, and the citizens of other states on the other, which can be fully determined without the presence of any of the other parties to the suit as it has been begun. But the language quoted, and other language which resembles it, is not to be taken as declaring that a controversy is separable merely because the given plaintiff could have prosecuted his cause of action against the defendant seeking to remove without the joinder of any other defendant. Though a separable controversy exists so as to authorize the removal of a cause, notwithstanding the joinder of a defendant whose citizenship is the same as that of the plaintiff, with a non-citizen defendant, when the case is one capable of separation into parts, so that in one of the parts a controversy will be presented with citizens of one or more states on one side and citizens of another state on the other, which can be fully determined without the presence of any of the other parties to the suit as begun, or where two or more causes of action are united in one suit, and there can be a removal of the whole suit on the petition of one or more of the defendants interested in the controversy which, if it had been sued on alone, would be removable, the controversy does not necessarily become separable merely because the plaintiff could have prosecuted its cause of action against the defendant seeking to remove without the joinder of any other defendant." Regis v. United Drug Co., 180 Fed. 201, 204 (citing Fraser v. Jennison, 1 Sup. Ct. 171, 174, 106 U. S. 191, 194, 27 L. Ed. 131; Geer v. Mathieson Alkali Works, 23 Sup. Ct. 807, 809, 190 U. S. 428, 432, 47 L. Ed. 1122; Alabama Great Southern Ry. Co. v. Thompson, 26 Sup. Ct. 161, 200 U. S. 206, 50 L. Ed. 441, 4 Ann. Cas. 1147).

To constitute a "separable controversy" "the action must be one in which the whole subject-matter of the suit can be determined between the parties to the 'separable controversy,' without the presence of the other parties to the suit." Moon, Rem. of C. § 140. The question whether the controversy in an action by a citizen of the state against another citizen of the state and a citizen of a sister state is separable, so as to authorize the latter to remove the cause to the federal court on the ground of diversity of citizenship, must be determined by the complaint, and the petition for removal cannot be considered. A suit by a citizen of the state against a foreign and a domestic railroad company for damages for interference with his easements in streets on which his property abuts caused by the operation of trains thereon pursuant to an agreement between the companies, and for an injunction to prevent further interference, presents a controversy which is not separable, and the foreign company is not entitled to remove the cause to the federal court on the ground of diversity of citizenship within Removal Act (Act Cong. Aug. 13, 1888). Staton v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 56 S. E. 794, 144 N. C. 135 (citing Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Dixon, 21 Sup. Ct. 67, 179 U. S. 131, 45 L. Ed. 121; Powers v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 18 Sup. Ct. 264, 169 U. S. 92, 42 L. Ed. 673; Bellaire v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 13 Sup. Ct. 16, 146 U. S. 117, 36 L. Ed. 910; Kohl v. United States, 91 U. S. 367, 23 L. Ed. 449; Winchester v. Loud, 2 Sup. Ct. 311, 108 U. S. 130, 27 L. Ed. 677; Black, Dillon, Rem. of C., § 146; Pirie v. Tredt, 5 Sup. Ct. 1034, 1161, 115 U. S. 41, 29 L. Ed. 331; Sloane v. Anderson, 6 Sup. Ct. 730, 117 U. S. 275, 29 L. Ed. 899; Little v. Gilles, 7 Sup. Ct. 32, 118 U. S. 596, 30 L. Ed. 269; Torrence v. Shedd, 12 Sup. Ct. 726, 144 U. S. 527, 36 L. Ed. 528).

In order that a "separable controversy" exist, the whole subject-matter of the suit must be capable of being finally determined as between the parties on each side, and complete relief afforded as to the separate cause of action, without the presence of other parties originally brought in. In a condemnation proceeding instituted by a railroad company, under Rev. St. Wis. 1898, § 1845 et seq., by the filing of a petition in a circuit court of the state against numerous property owners, upon which the statute provides for a hearing as to petitioner's right to condemn, and, if such right is sustained, for the appointment of a commission, which, on request of the company or the owner, shall appraise any piece of the property described, from which appraisal an appeal may be taken to the court, and tried to a jury as in ordinary law actions, there is a single controversy only presented as to the right to condemn, to be determined between the petitioner, on one side, and all of the parties joined as defendants, on the other; and the mere fact that a defendant is the owner of part of the lands sought to be taken in severalty does not create a "separable controversy" between him and the petitioner, which entitles him to remove the proceedings into a federal court on the ground of diversity of citizenship. Perkins v. Lake Superior & S. E. Ry. Co., 140 Fed. 906, 910 (citing Torrence v. Shedd, 12 Sup. Ct. 726, 144 U. S. 527, 530, 36 L. Ed. 528; Miller v. Clifford, 133 Fed. 880, 67 C. C. A. 52; Hanrick v. Hanrick, 14 Sup. Ct. 835, 153 U. S. 192, 38 L. Ed. 885; Geer v. Mathieson Alkali Works, 23 Sup. Ct. 807, 190 U. S. 428, 47 L. Ed. 1122; Fraser v. Jennison, 1 Sup. Ct. 171, 106 U. S. 194, 27 L. Ed. 131).

Under Act March 3, 1875, c. 137, § 2, 18 Stat. 470, providing that the party removing a cause must show, not only that he is a citizen of another state, but that it is "a controversy which is wholly between citizens of different states and which can be fully determined as between them," and that he is "actually" interested in such controversy, the "separable controversy" must be "such that complete relief may be afforded the parties (of diverse citizenship) interested therein without the presence of any of the resident defendants." Under the statutes of New Jersey, which make both owner and mortgagee indispensable parties to a suit to condemn land for public use, the cause is not removable by the owner on the ground of diversity of citizenship where the mortgagee is a citizen, since the cause is not a "separable controversy" contemplated by the federal statutes. Fishblatt v. Atlantic City, 174 Fed. 196, 198.

The question whether there is no "separable controversy" in a suit in equity, within the meaning of the removal statute (Act March 3, 1887, c. 373, 24 Stat. 552, § 2, as corrected by Act Aug. 13, 1888, c. 866, 25 Stat. 433), providing that such controversy must be one "wholly between citizens of different states" and must be such as "can be fully determined as between them," is to be determined from the allegations of the bill alone, which, for the purpose of a motion to remand, are taken as confessed, and independent of any allegations in the petition for removal or of answers filed after removal. Elkins v. Howell, 140 Fed. 157, 158.

Where a bill against numerous defendants for the foreclosure of a mortgage alleged that certain property nominally owned by a defendant other than the mortgagor was within complainant's mortgage, under a clause covering after-acquired property, in which claim some, but not all, of the defendants were interested, such claim created a "separable controversy," which rendered the cause removable by the defendant claiming ownership of the property; the requisite diversity of citizenship being shown between the parties interested therein. New England Water Works Co. v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 136 Fed. 521, 525, 69 C. C. A. 297.

Where the declaration in an action in a state court against several defendants states a cause of action for a joint tort, the action cannot be held to be one involving a "separable controversy" for the purposes of removal. Heffelfinger v. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co., 140 Fed. 75, 76.

Where a petition in a state court in an action for injuries to a servant against the master and a servant alleged concurring acts of negligence of a master and the servant, and the servant was of the same citizenship as plaintiff, the case did not present a "separable controversy" between plaintiff and the master, and was not therefore removable to the federal court. Roberts v. Shelby Steel Tube Co., 131 Fed. 729, 65 C. C. A. 589.

A case in which plaintiff, in good faith, has elected to sue jointly in tort a foreign corporation and its servants whose misconduct caused the injury complained of, does not—even though such joinder may be improper—present a "separable controversy" between plaintiff and the corporation, which, under the act of March 3, 1875, as amended, can be removed from a state to a federal Circuit Court without regard to the citizenship of the individual defendants. Alabama G. S. Ry. Co. v. Thompson, 26 Sup. Ct. 161, 166, 200 U. S. 206, 50 L. Ed. 441, 4 Ann. Cas. 1147.

In a suit for an undivided half interest in a single tract of land alleged to be wrongfully withheld by the two defendants, there is no "separable controversy," so as to allow removal to the federal Circuit Court, though the citizenship of plaintiffs and of only one of defendants is diverse. Knight v. Litcher & Moore Lumber Co., 136 Fed. 404, 406, 69 C. C. A. 248 (citing Moon, Removal of Causes, 406, § 143, and cases cited in note 3).

An action to recover damages for a death from negligence, in which plaintiff has, in good faith, exercised his right under the state laws to proceed jointly against a railway company and its employé whose negligence caused the accident, cannot be converted into a "separable controversy" for the purpose of removal to a federal Circuit Court because of diversity of citizenship between the plaintiff and the railway company. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Bohon, 28 Sup. Ct. 166, 168, 200 U. S. 221, 50 L. Ed. 448, 4 Ann. Cas. 1152.

Where the petition in an action against a railroad company and an engineer of one of its trains for negligently causing the death of plaintiff's intestate is based on the Iowa statute giving a right of action for wrongful death, which has never been construed by the courts of the state to create a joint liability in such cases, and alleges acts of negligence on the part of the railroad company with which its codefendant had no concern, and which are essential to make out a cause of action under the state law, a "separable controversy" is disclosed, and the cause is removable on petition of the railroad company showing diversity of citizenship, and alleging that the joinder of defendants was for the fraudulent purpose of preventing a removal. Henry v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 132 Fed. 715.

In a suit in equity brought in a state court on behalf of all of the creditors of an insolvent bank in Colorado against a number of stockholders to enforce their double liability under the Colorado statute, by requiring them each to pay the full amount of such liability to a master, to be applied pro rata, together with such sums as may be collected from other stockholders, on the debts of the bank—the remainder, if any, to be returned to defendants—there is no separable controversy with a single defendant which entitles him to remove the cause into a federal court. Miller v. Clifford, 133 Fed. 880, 886, 67 C. C. A. 52, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 49.

Where, in an action for death of a passenger, plaintiff joined the railroad company, a nonresident corporation, with certain of its employes, operating the colliding trains which caused the accident, who were of the same citizenship as plaintiff, but the only negligence averred was that of the servants in control of the trains, the corporation's liability being based wholly on the fact that the acts of the servants were within the scope of their employments, and bound the company, the complaint did not charge a joint tort, and hence the corporation was entitled to remove the cause to the federal court. Sessions v. Southern Pac. Co., 134 Fed. 313, 315.

Though, in a suit against two or more defendants, one of whom is a nonresident, there may be charges of concurrent negligence against all, yet, if there be also a distinct charge of negligence against the nonresident defendant alone, sufficient in and of itself to constitute a cause of action, the case is one involving a "separable controversy" between citizens of different states, and is therefore removable to the federal courts. Where a complaint against a nonresident railway company and certain of its employes in charge of the train by which deceased was killed, who were of the same citizenship as plaintiff, alleged that, in violation of the rules of the railway company, "defendants negligently, willfully, and maliciously, by their joint, concurrent acts," gave certain box cars a high, unusual, and dangerous rate of speed, uncoupled them from the engine, turned a switch, and permitted them to roll down a steep grade over a crossing, by which plaintiff's intestate was knocked down and killed, and also charged defendants jointly with negligence in maintaining such steep grade and closely adjoining switch at such place, in not providing a switchman at the crossing, in not providing a brakeman in charge of the cars, and in that the railway company's employes were incompetent, and that they were retained in its employ with knowledge that they were accustomed to violate its rules, such acts of negligence were not joint, but the complaint alleged a "separable controversy," entitling the railway company to remove the cause to the federal courts. McIntyre v. Southern Ry. Co., 131 Fed. 985, 986, 988.

The petition alleged that plaintiff's deceased husband became a passenger on defendant's train, and that the conductor carelessly and negligently signaled the train to move before decedent had time to board it, knowing that he was in the act of boarding it and was in a place of danger; that while the train was standing at the platform, such conductor, also a defendant, negligently signaled for the train to start while there was a large freight truck within six inches of the edge of the platform, in front of the passenger coach, from which the station agent had not had time to remove all the freight, and that the position of the truck when the conductor signaled the train to start made it dangerous for passengers boarding the train; that while decedent was standing on the lower step of the coach the conductor told him in a loud voice to get off and took hold of him and pulled him backwards and forwards, causing him to sway on the step and strike the freight truck and rebound and strike it again, and that on account of the joint negligence of the conductor and the railroad company deceased was caused to lose his balance upon the step and fall under the train. Rev. St. 1899, § 2864 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1637; Rev. St. 1909, § 5425), provides that when any one dies from any injury resulting from the negligence of an employe while running or managing any train, etc., the owner of the railroad shall forfeit $5,000. Rev. St. 1899, § 2865 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1644; Rev. St. 1909, § 5426) imposes a liability generally for death by wrongful act or neglect, and Rev. St. 1899, § 2866 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1646; Rev. St. 1909, § 5427), provides that damages accruing under the preceding sections may be recovered by the same parties and in the same manner as provided in section 2864, and the jury shall give such damages, not exceeding $5,000, as they deem just. Held, that the petition alleged a cause of action based on the joint negligence of the railroad company and the conductor, and hence one under sections 2865 and 2866, and not under section 2864, so that there was no "separable controversy" so as to authorize the transfer of the case to the federal court. State ex rel. Iba v. Mosman, 133 S. W. 38, 44, 231 Mo. 474.

Separate and distinct controversy distinguished

There is a clear distinction between controversies which are merely "separable," within the meaning of the removal statute, and those which are wholly "separate and distinct," and only joined in one suit by express statutory permission, as in case of proceedings for condemnation of a railroad right of way in which as permitted by statute owners of different tracts of land are joined in the same proceeding, and in such a case a removal of the cause by the owner or owners of one tract does not carry with it the proceedings as against other owners. Deepwater Ry. Co. v. Western Pochontas Coal & Lumber Co., 152 Fed. 824, 830 (citing Barney v. Latham, 103 U. S. 214, 26 L. Ed. 514).

SEPARATE

SEPARATE BALLOT

Primary Election Law (Laws 1907, p. 157, c. 109), § 13, provides that party candidates for United States Senator shall be nominated in the manner provided for candidates for state offices, that the candidate receiving the highest number of votes at the primary shall be the nominee at the succeeding session of the Legislature, but that, if no candidate shall receive 40 per cent. of all the votes of his party for United States Senator, then the two candidates of each party who receive the highest number of votes at the primary shall be placed upon a separate ballot, to be voted for at the general election following, that such ballot shall be prepared in the same manner as the general election ballot, that the candidates of each party shall be placed upon such ballot under their proper party heading, and that the name of each candidate shall be placed upon such ballot in the same manner as the candidate for state offices, and shall be voted for in the same manner. Held, that the word "separate" does not mean separate from the general ballot, but means separate as to each political party, so that the candidates for United States Senator of each political party are to be placed on separate party ballots. State v. Blaisdell, 118 N. W. 141, 147, 18 N. D. 55, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 465, 138 Am. St. Rep. 741.

SEPARATE CAUSES

Separate trials under one indictment against several defendants are "separate causes" within the meaning of Rev. St. § 828, prescribing the docket fees which the clerk of a federal court may charge in a cause. United States v. Keatley, 27 Sup. Ct. 404, 405, 204 U. S. 562, 51 L. Ed. 618.

SEPARATE CONSUMER

Where a tenant and a subtenant occupied a store building divided by a partition, and each used water separately from the other, each was a "separate consumer" within the meaning of an ordinance providing for the installation of a water meter by the water company for the water consumed by each when demanded by any consumer, and the water company was not required in such case to furnish a meter for their joint use. Nogales Water Co. v. Neumann, 100 Pac. 794, 795, 12 Ariz. 306.

SEPARATE CONTRACT

Contract distinguished, see Contract.

SEPARATE CONTROVERSY

There is a clear distinction between controversies which are merely "separable," within the meaning of the removal statute, and those which are wholly "separate and distinct," and only joined in one suit by express statutory permission, as in case of proceedings for condemnation of a railroad right of way in which, as permitted by statute, owners of different tracts of land are joined in the same proceeding, and in such a case a removal of the cause by the owner or owners of one tract does not carry with it the proceedings as against other owners. Deepwater Ry. Co. v. Western Pochontas Coal & Lumber Co., 152 Fed. 824, 830 (citing Barney v. Latham, 103 U. S. 214, 26 L. Ed. 514).

SEPARATE ELECTION

Though the submission of a change in county boundaries is made at a general election, it is, in a strict legal sense, a "separate election," held in connection with and as a part of the general election. State v. Blaisdell, 119 N. W. 360, 364, 18 N. D. 31.

SEPARATE ESTATE

The "married woman's separate estate" was one of the remedial measures proposed and enacted in the Constitution to eradicate the evils of the common law under which marriage was a spoliation of the woman and investiture of the man with her personal property. Section 6 of the Constitution authorized the Legislature to provide for the protection of the rights of women acquiring and possessing property, real, personal, and mixed, separate and apart from the husband and for their equal rights in the possession of their children. Cross v. Benson, 75 Pac. 558, 560, 68 Kan. 495, 64 L. R. A. 560.

The term "separate estate," as used in Rev. St. 1845, c. 109, § 1, conferring on a married woman power to make a valid will as to her separate estate, does not include an estate acquired from her husband, except where it was settled upon her by him before marriage or after marriage in pursuance of an antenuptial contract providing for such settlement. Thompson v. Minnich, 81 N. E. 336, 339, 227 Ill. 430 (citing 2 Kent, Comm. 173).

The term "separate estate," as used in Acts 1897-98, p. 519, c. 490, amending Code 1887, § 492 (Code 1904, p. 252), providing that if the property is the "separate" property of a person over 21 years of age, or a married woman, it shall be listed and taxed to the trustee, if any, and if there is no trustee, to the owner thereof, imports separate ownership by the persons designated in contradistinction to an equitable "separate estate" or the legal "separate estate" of a married woman under our statute. Selden v. Brooke, 52 S. E. 632, 633, 104 Va. 832.

Earnings

Where a widow, suing the administrator of her deceased husband for household furniture, showed that she had conducted business in her own name without interference from her husband, and that the furniture was bought by her with funds earned in the business there was evidence that the property was her separate estate within Civ. Code, §§ 158, 159, authorizing a husband to relinquish to the wife his interest in her earnings. Larson v. Larson, 115 Pac. 340, 342, 15 Cal. App. 531.

The presumption as to the character of property arising from the fact that a married woman engages in business is overcome by the fact that the property was purchased with funds derived from moneys owned by her before her marriage or acquired afterward by gift or bequest constituting her separate estate within Civ. Code, § 162, and hence the property is her separate property. Oldershaw v. Matteson & Williamson Mfg. Co., 125 Pac. 263, 265, 19 Cal. App. 179.

Insurance

The laws of an insurance society, in which plaintiff's deceased husband was insured, provided that no policy should be written except to blood relatives, the affianced wife or husband or a person dependent on the insured, and that in the event of the death of one or more of the beneficiaries, and in the absence of a further disposition, etc., the benefit should be paid to deceased's heirs, in accordance with the laws of the state where the deceased died. Held that, where a widow took the proceeds of her husband's insurance in such society because she was his sole heir, such fund was not a part of her separate estate "at the time of the death of her husband," within Ann. Code 1892, § 4499, providing for the distribution of the husband's estate in case the widow elected not to take under his will. O'Reilly v. Laughlin, 45 South. 19, 21, 92 Miss. 1.

Spendthrift trust distinguished

Testator's will provided that a share of his estate should be held in trust for a daughter, a married woman, to "her sole and separate use" during her life, so that she might enjoy the net income free from the control of any husband, that she should have power to dispose of the principal fund by will, and that, in default of such will, it should go to her heirs. Held, that neither the principal nor the income of the fund could be subjected to the claim of her attorneys for services in advising her in relation to the management of the fund, the fund being in possession of the court, and neither the principal nor income being a "separate estate," but the will created a mere "spendthrift trust." Castree v. Shotwell, 68 Atl. 774, 775, 73 N. J. Eq. 590.

SEPARATE EXAMINATION

As private

"Private" and "separate" mean substantially the same thing. The word "separate," when used in a certificate of acknowledgment, imports that the acknowledgment of the grantor was taken by a private examination. Timber v. Desparois, 101 N. W. 879, 881, 18 S. D. 587.

SEPARATE GENERAL VERDICT

The expression "separate general verdict," as used in the Code, authorizing the court in its discretion to direct the jury to find a separate general verdict, means that the verdict is separate as to the particular issue, as distinguished from any other issue in the case, and general as to the particular issue, and it was intended to apply in cases where there is more than one issue; and hence, where there was only one issue before the jury, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by refusing to submit interrogatories for a separate general verdict. Jones & Co. v. Moore (Ky.) 99 S. W. 286, 287.

SEPARATE LABOR

"Separate labor," as used in Rev. St. 1899, § 4340, entitling a wife to the wages of her separate labor as her sole and separate property, is not the labor expended by her for the performance of her household duties, but labor entirely disconnected with those duties, and performed for the purpose of earning money wages. Kroner v. St. Louis Transit Co., 80 S. W. 915, 916, 107 Mo. App. 41.

The phrase "separate labor," in Ann. St. 1906, p. 2382, cutting off the husband's rights to certain of the wife's property, including her separate labor, is not to be construed to refer only to services performed by the wife for a stranger, but to mean labor other than domestic service, and for which she would be entitled to receive compensation; and where a family consisted of the husband, wife, and a grown daughter, who lived over a grocery store conducted by the husband, and the wife had performed the work of a clerk in the store, injuries to the wife, which deprived her of her ability to perform the duties of the clerk, was an injury to her for which she alone could maintain an action. Kirkpatrick v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 107 S. W. 1025, 1026, 129 Mo. App. 524.

SEPARATE OFFENSE

Rev. Pol. Code, § 2834, requires every person engaged in selling liquors to annually pay certain sums for license. Section 2837 requires the county treasurer to deliver to the person making the payment a receipt and notice which shall be at all times displayed in the room where the business is carried on. Section 2839 requires a bond of the liquor seller. Section 2838 makes it a misdemeanor to engage in business requiring a license under section 2834 without having paid the license, and without having the receipt and notice posted up, and provides that each violation of any provision of the article shall be construed to be a "separate and complete offense." Held, that an indictment charging defendant with engaging in selling liquors without having paid the required license, and without having the receipt and notice posted, charges only one offense within Rev. Code Cr. Proc. § 224, providing that an indictment must charge but one offense, and section 272, making it a ground of demurrer where more than one offense was charged. State v. Mudie, 115 N. W. 107, 108, 22 S. D. 41.

Each mailing or taking from the post office of a letter pursuant to a scheme to defraud constitutes a "separate offense," under Rev. St. § 5480, which provides that if any person, having devised or intended to devise any scheme or artifice to defraud, to be effected by correspondence, shall in and for executing such scheme or artifice, or attempting to do so, place or cause to be placed any letter in any post office, or shall take or receive any such therefrom, he shall, on conviction, be punished, etc. Francis v. United States, 152 Fed. 155, 156, 81 C. C. A. 407 (citing In re Henry, 8 Sup. Ct. 142, 123 U. S. 373, 31 L. Ed. 174; In re De Bara, 21 Sup. Ct. 112, 179 U. S. 320, 45 L. Ed. 207).

Where a crime constitutes a continuing offense, each day during which it is continued constitutes a "separate offense," and will support a separate prosecution, provided the information or indictment alleges such specific day, and the state confines its proof to the date alleged. When an appeal is taken to this court, it is the duty of counsel for appellant in his brief to point out the specific alleged error upon which he relies, and to make the best argument he can to show that the trial court erred in the matter complained of, and that by this error his client was deprived of a substantial right, to his injury. When a defendant is clearly proven to be guilty, this court will not reverse a conviction upon any technicality or exception which did not affect the substantial rights of the defendant. This court is not required to prepare written opinions in misdemeanor cases, unless in its judgment this should be done. See Session Laws 1910, c. 13. It is our custom in misdemeanor cases, when we find that no substantial error has been committed in the trial of a cause and that the evidence clearly shows that the appellant is guilty, to affirm a conviction in an oral opinion. This court has never made any distinction as to circumstantial evidence, or in its application of the principles of law, between misdemeanor and felony cases, or between classes of misdemeanor cases. Except in cases where time is of the essence of an offense, it may be alleged in the information or indictment, and proven upon the trial, at any time prior to the institution of the prosecution, and the state is not bound by the date alleged in the information or indictment. Ostendorf v. State, 128 Pac. 143, 145, 146, 8 Okl. Cr. 360.

SEPARATE PROPERTY

Control of separate property, see Control.

The term "separate property of a married woman," at the time of the adoption of Pub. Acts 1880, p. 525, c. 57, providing that the taxable estate of married women other than separate property shall be set in the lists of their husbands, had an established meaning, and was such estate only, whether real or personal, as was settled on her for her separate use, without any control over it on the part of her husband. Union School Dist. v. Bishop, 58 Atl. 13, 14, 76 Conn. 695, 66 L. R. A. 989.

Civ. Code, §§ 162, 163, define the separate property of the spouses as that owned by them, respectively, before marriage, and that acquired afterwards by gift, bequest, devise, or descent, and section 164 declares that all other property acquired after marriage by a husband or wife or both is community property. This section was amended in 1889 (St. 1889, p. 328, c. 219) by the addition of a provision that, whenever any property is conveyed to a married woman by an instrument in writing, the presumption is that the title vests in her as her separate property. Held that, prior to the amendment, the presumption was that the property conveyed to either husband or wife after marriage by a conveyance other than a deed of gift vested the title in the community. Nilson v. Sarment, 96 Pac. 315, 316, 153 Cal. 524, 126 Am. St. Rep. 91.

The "separate property of the wife" is defined by Civ. Code, § 162, as being all property owned by her before marriage, and that acquired afterwards by gift, bequest, devise, or descent, with the rents, issues, and profits therefrom, but does not include property conveyed to the husband for a consideration paid out of community funds and later conveyed by the husband to the wife for a nominal consideration in fraud of his creditors. Bekins v. Dieterle, 91 Pac. 173, 174, 5 Cal. App. 690.

Cause of action for personal injuries

Under Acts 1902, No. 68, damages resulting from personal injuries to the wife are her "separate property," recoverable by herself alone. Cartwright v. Puissigur, 51 South. 692, 693, 125 La. 700.

SEPARATE PUBLIC EMOLUMENTS OR PRIVILEGES

"Separate public emoluments or privileges" which the Legislature is forbidden by the Constitution to bestow on any man or set of men, refer mainly to political privileges, and were intended to prevent any infringement of the great principle of equality of political rights. The section may likewise be extended to prohibit the granting of any privileges to any set of men, to which all others in the same circumstances would not be entitled. A statute giving the remedy of attachment to particular classes of creditors is not within the prohibition. Peck v. Critchlow, 8 Miss. (7 How.) 243, 247.

SEPARATE REPORT

Under Greater New York Charter (Laws 1906, c. 658, § 985), relating to acquisition of land for streets, etc., and providing that the commissioners of estimate and assessment may, when authorized by a majority vote of all members of the board of estimate and apportionment, make and file a preliminary abstract of their estimate of damages, embracing either the entire lands or successive sections thereof, and ascertain and estimate the compensation to be made thereon, and make a separate report with reference thereto, and providing that such separate and partial report shall be made in the same form and manner, and such proceedings shall be had in respect thereto, as in respect to the report of the commissioners relative to the entire lands to be taken, and that in such cases the final partial abstract and report as to awards, and the final abstract and report as to assessment for benefits, shall be made up and filed and brought on for confirmation at the same time and place, where the board of estimate and apportionment authorizes the commissioners to make a "separate or partial report" of the awards, a report embracing all of the awards to be made may be confirmed before the local assessment is before the court for confirmation. In re West 162d St., 109 N. Y. Supp. 950, 953, 125 App. Div. 485.

SEPARATE RIDER

The word "separate," as used in Rev. St. c. 49, § 4, providing for riders to be attached to policies, "on separate slips or riders" was used to express the idea of something separate from or not physically a part of the policy; something originally distinct, apart from the policy, to be attached thereto. Rolfe v. Patrons' Androscoggin Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 76 Atl. 879, 106 Me. 345.

SEPARATE USE

The word "separate," as used in a trust for the benefit of a woman, has a fixed meaning and excludes marital rights. A devise to a niece, "to and for her separate use," creates a separate trust for her benefit, though the word "sole" is not used. Wilson v. Bryn Mawr Trust Co., 73 Atl. 1070, 1071, 225 Pa. 139.

SEPARATELY

"Separately," as applied to facts set out in findings, refers to pleadable or pleaded facts, each being required to be covered by a finding confined thereto. Calumet Service Co. v. City of Chilton, 135 N. W. 131, 136, 148 Wis. 334.

The words "separately printed," in a claim covering a printing machine, whereby numerals type and pointer type may be "separately printed" on a ticket, mean independently printed. Wilson v. Calculagraph Co., 144 Fed. 91, 99, 75 C. C. A. 249.

SEPARATION

See Legal Separation; Voluntary Separation.

Of races as within police power, see Police Power.

As desertion

If a wife leaves her husband because of his adultery, even if it be committed elsewhere than at their dwelling, the separation thus created is constructive desertion by him for the purpose of enabling her to compel him to support her; that is, it amounts to the abandonment or "separation" (whatever the difference) by him from her without justifiable cause, within Divorce Act (P. L. 1907, p. 482) § 26. Suydam v. Suydam, 80 Atl. 1057, 1058, 79 N. J. Eq. 144.

As divorce

"Separation from bed and board" and "divorce" are not convertible terms under our law. They are kept distinct and separate in the Code and in all our legislation. Divorce includes separation from bed and board, but the converse is not true; separation from bed and board does not include divorce. The broad distinction between the two is that divorce puts an end to the marriage, whereas separation from bed and board does not. Connell v. Connella, 38 South. 690, 114 La. 950.

"The words 'separation from bed and board' are the substantial equivalent of the ancient divorce a mensa et thoro, sometimes designated a 'limited divorce,' in contradisinction from divorce a vinculo, otherwise denominated an 'absolute divorce.'" Sellman v. Sellman, 100 N. Y. Supp. 770, 771, 52 Misc. Rep. 9.

The common law granted no divorce which dissolved the marital tie between the parties; the divorces awarded by the ecclesiastical courts being merely what are known in this country as "separations." Wilson v. Hinman, 75 N. E. 236, 237, 182 N. Y. 408, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 232, 108 Am. St. Rep. 820.

SEPARATION OF JURY

There is a marked difference between a separation of the jury during the progress of the trial and a separation after final submission of the case. Where, after a criminal case has been submitted to a jury, which was in charge of a bailiff directed to keep them together until they had agreed or been discharged, the bailiff divided the jurors into three groups at night, and put them into three rooms, each on a different floor or story of the hotel, where they were kept locked up for eight or nine hours, such act constituted a "separation of the jury," prohibited by Pen. Code Cal. §§ 1128, 1136, which vitiated their verdict. People v. Adams, 76 Pac. 954, 143 Cal. 208, 66 L. R. A. 247, 101 Am. St. Rep. 92.

On a criminal trial, the jury was impaneled just at noon, and, before any witness had been sworn, was taken in charge by the sheriff. One of the jurors, in leaving the courthouse, became separated from the rest; he being ignorant of what was required of him. Immediately upon discovering his absence, the sheriff and balance of the jury hunted him up. Held, that this was a "separation of the jury," within the contemplation of the statute inhibiting the same, and constituted reversible error. Neal v. State, 99 S. W. 1012, 1013, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 583.

SEPTIC TANK

A "septic tank" is any tank or receptacle which permits the ingress and egress of flowing material, and the formation of a pool of such material therein and retention of such pool secluded from light and air and agitation until the anaerobic bacteria have sufficiently developed to convert the solids into fluids. Cameron Septic Tank Co. v. Village of Saratoga Springs, 151 Fed. 242, 249.

"The fundamental condition which characterizes the 'septic tank,' and which differentiates it from the ordinary settling tank, is that the sewage shall remain in the tank for a considerable period of time in order that the bacteria of putrefaction may manifest their destructive activity, and so accomplish their work of decomposition and liquefaction. The second essential condition which marks the septic tank is that the contents of the tank must either be practically cut off from all contact with the atmosphere, or the surface of the sewage must remain quiescent for a sufficient length of time to permit the accumulation of a thick scum on the top, which operates to exclude the air and light. In other words, the tank must be built either airtight, or so constructed with respect to its inlet and outlet pipes that the brown scum may be allowed to form on the exposed top surface. The necessary absence of air from the tank is due to the fact that the bacteria of putrefaction are destroyed by oxygen." American Sewage Disposal Co. v. Pawtucket, 138 Fed. 811, 816, 71 C. C. A. 177.

SEQUESTER

P. S. 496, subd. 6, exempts from taxation real and personal estate sequestered or used for public, pious, or charitable uses. Plaintiff, a Methodist evangelist, acquired full title to two lots of land, one of which he set apart and used exclusively for camp meeting purposes, under the auspices of no particular denomination, but open to persons of such denominations as he wished to have there, and on which, with the aid of voluntary contributions of labor and money, he erected cottages, a boarding hall, preacher's stand and seats, a dormitory for preachers, several church tents, and a barn, and during camp meeting, as an incident thereto and without profit, he charged for the use of cottages, including board, for meals, and for feed and shelter of horses, the income from which was used for carrying on the camp meetings. From the other tract, not connected with the camp ground, he sold timber in payment of a note for money borrowed for improvements upon the camp ground. Held, that the word "sequester" meant to set apart, to put aside, to separate, and that a "camp meeting" meant a religious gathering, held usually by Methodists, for conducting a series of religious services in the open air or in a tent, lasting for several days, during which those present lodged in tents or temporary houses; and that the lot not connected with the camp ground was taxable, but that the camp meeting ground and its improvements were exempt; the charges for board, etc., not operating to deprive the property of such exemption. Johnson v. Jones, 83 Atl. 1085, 1086, 86 Vt. 167.

SEQUESTRATE

SEQUESTRATION

"A 'sequestration' is in the nature of a deposit, and is so treated in the old law, as well as in the Civil Codes of France and Louisiana. * * * One of the first rules relating to a deposit is that the depositary cannot use the thing deposited. * * * A sequestration, if gratuitous, is subject to all the rules which apply to a deposit." Baldwin v. Black, 7 Sup. Ct. 326, 119 U. S. 643, 649, 30 L. Ed. 530 (Bradley, J., dissenting).

SERIOUS BODILY HARM OR INJURY

The word "serious" has no fixed or technical meaning in the law, but is rather general and indeterminate in its signification, and, when applied to an assault, may include one made with intent to kill or to inflict great bodily harm, or one committed without such intent. State v. Rowe, 71 S. E. 332, 336, 155 N. C. 436.

A petition alleging that plaintiff received "serious, painful and permanent bodily injuries," and endured great physical pain and mental anguish; that her head, face, neck, shoulders, arm, eye, and breast were burned; that she was rendered unconscious for a long time; that her nervous system was severely shocked, etc.—is sufficient to include an injury to her hearing; the quoted clause being a general averment not restricted by the particular injuries subsequently alleged. Southern Telegraph & Telephone Co. v. Evans, 116 S. W. 418, 421, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 63.

In a prosecution for aggravated assault and battery, an instruction that by the term "serious bodily injury" is meant such injury as gives rise to apprehension—an injury which is attended with danger—was proper. Bagley v. State (Tex.) 150 S. W. 773, 774; Shelton v. Same, 150 S. W. 940, 941.

"Serious bodily injury" means such an injury as to give rise to apprehension; an injury which is attended with danger. Thus where one was confined to his bed, because of his injury, for two or three days, and entirely recovered in eight or nine days, there was not such "serious bodily injury" as to justify conviction of aggravated assault. Head v. State, 107 S. W. 829, 830, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 488 (citing Webst. Dict.; George v. State, 17 S. W. 351, 21 Tex. App. 315).

Evidence of a blow on the head with the butt end of a billiard cue about 2½ feet long, and weighing about a pound, in the hands of a man weighing 190 pounds, cutting the scalp to the bone, shows a serious wound, requiring a charge on serious bodily injury, in a prosecution for assault with intent to murder. The word "serious" means an injury that is grave, not trivial, not slight, and it does not mean an injury that might eventuate in death, or probably cause death. Housley v. State, 116 S. W. 816, 817, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 372 (citing Bruce v. State, 51 S. W. 954, 41 Tex. Cr. R. 27).

The words "serious bodily injury" are words of ordinary significance, and should not be defined by a charge, as they would be as well understood by any jury of ordinary intelligence as any language by which they might be defined. Thomas v. State, 116 S. W. 600, 602, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 293.

A charge that accused might defend himself against unlawful attack, reasonably threatening injury to his person, by the use of all necessary and reasonable force, but no more than circumstances reasonably indicated to be necessary, that homicide is justified by law when committed in defense of one's person against unlawful and violent attack, made so as to produce a reasonable expectation of death or some serious bodily injury, that a reasonable apprehension of death or great bodily harm would excuse accused in using all necessary force to protect his life or person, and that it was not necessary that there should be actual danger, provided he acted upon a reasonable apprehension or appearance of danger, as it appeared to him from his standpoint at the time, was not misleading in the use of the term "great bodily harm" as well as the statutory phrase "serious bodily injury," the terms as used being identical in meaning. Ward v. State, 126 S. W. 1145, 1147, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 62.

The words "mortal injuries," as used in an indictment for murder, alleging that defendant inflicted certain mortal injuries, must be taken as the equivalent of "serious bodily injuries," as used in Cr. Code Ariz. § 215, providing that an aggravated assault is committed when a serious bodily injury is inflicted upon the person assaulted, and such indictment justifies a conviction for an aggravated assault. Mapula v. Territory, 80 Pac. 389, 391, 9 Ariz. 199.

"Serious personal injury," justifying passion so as to reduce homicide from murder to voluntary manslaughter, means an injury greater than a provocation by mere words and less than a felony. Harris v. State, 58 S. E. 680, 681, 2 Ga. App. 487.

The words "serious injury," as used in Pen. Code 1895, § 72, making it justifiable homicide to kill a person who forcibly attacks or invades the property or habitation of another after the failure of persuasion, remonstrance, or other gentle measures, providing such killing be absolutely necessary to prevent such attack and invasion, and that a "serious injury was intended or might accrue to the person, property or family of the person killing," are not limited to a felony. Though no exact definition of the words has been made, they clearly do not authorize the taking of human life because of every mere trespass upon property, or because of mere insulting words. Freeney v. State, 59 S. E. 788, 792, 129 Ga. 759.

In instructing the jury on the law of voluntary manslaughter, it was error to charge that a "serious personal injury," referred to in Pen. Code 1895, § 65, meant "an injury which may deprive of life, and which must be prevented by resistance of a like sort." Smarrs v. State, 61 S. E. 914, 916, 131 Ga. 21.

The term "serious personal injury," as used in Pen. Code 1895, § 65, defining "voluntary manslaughter," and providing that to constitute it there must be some actual assault upon the person killing, or an attempt by the person killed to commit a "serious personal injury" upon the person killing, etc., does not necessarily contemplate an injury that will deprive of life. Burley v. State, 60 S. E. 1006, 1008, 130 Ga. 343.

SERIOUS DISEASE

An instruction using the words "serious disease," instead of "serious illness," is not objectionable as misleading; both expressions having practically the same meaning. Modern Order of Praetorians v. Hollmig (Tex.) 103 S. W. 474, 476.

Where a life policy provides that it shall be void if the insured has been attended by a physician for any "serious disease or complaint," such a disease must be one entailing permanent or material impairment of health; and, notwithstanding proof that insured prior to the application had malaria, congestion of the kidneys, and endometritis, a finding that she had not been attended by a physician for any serious illness is not ground for reversal, where there is no testimony that any of the diseases named might reasonably be expected to result in a permanent impairment of the health of the insured. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Little, 149 S. W. 998, 999, 149 Ky. 717.

SERIOUS ILLNESS

An instruction using the words "serious disease," instead of "serious illness" is not objectionable as misleading; both expressions having practically the same meaning. Modern Order of Praetorians v. Hollmig (Tex.) 103 S. W. 474, 476.

The word "serious," used with reference to physical condition for rejecting any life insurance, is not generally used to signify dangerous, but rather to define a grave, important, or weighty, trouble. French v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 115 N. W. 869, 875, 135 Wis. 259, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1011.

The term "serious illness," as used in an application for life insurance, means such illness as permanently or materially impairs, or is likely so to do, the health of the applicant. Eminent Household of Columbian Woodmen v. Prater, 103 Pac. 558, 560, 24 Okl. 214, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 917, 20 Ann. Cas. 287.

"A 'serious illness,' which will avoid an insurance certificate for the misrepresentation of the insured that he had never been affected by such an illness, must be one which permanently impairs the constitution and renders the risk more hazardous." Daniel v. Modern Woodmen of America, 118 S. W. 211, 213, 53 Tex. Civ. App. 570 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 May, Ins., § 296).

Insured applied for insurance October 10, 1906, and in his application warranted that he had not had any serious illness or disease, except diseases incident to childhood. It was proved that in 1901 he was so ill that his physicians expected him to die. He suffered from acute pains in the abdomen, and was for some time in a state of collapse, was attended by two physicians and a trained nurse, and recovered after five or six weeks. This sickness followed a chronic stomach trouble with which on several occasions he had been ill. Held, that such sickness was a "serious illness," and constituted a breach of warranty. Equitable Life Assur. Society of United States v. Kelper, 165 Fed. 595, 600, 91 C. C. A. 433, reversing Kelper v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of United States, 159 Fed. 206.

SERIOUS SICKNESS

"Serious sickness," justifying cancellation of a contract of employment, must be sickness for a long period, sufficient to substantially interfere with the interests of the employer, a malady lasting or likely to last for such length of time as it would be unreasonable to require the employer to wait for the restoration of his servant's health. Thus, where defendant employed plaintiff for three months as a millinery trimmer, he was not justified in discharging her because of a temporary illness incapacitating her for a day and a half. Gaynor v. Jonas, 93 N. Y. Supp. 287, 288, 104 App. Div. 35.

SERIOUSLY

An instruction that the conductor of a railroad train is not justified in expelling a passenger of known bad and turbulent character, "so long as such person is not guilty of conduct seriously annoying or dangerous to other passengers," is erroneous, since the word "seriously" is to be construed as qualifying the words "annoying" and "dangerous," and a passenger does not have to be in serious danger before the duty of the conductor to protect him arises, and, if the word is to be considered as qualifying the word "annoying" only, it is still of doubtful propriety. Hillman v. Georgia R. & Banking Co., 56 S. E. 68-70, 126 Ga. 814, 8 Ann. Cas. 222.

SERVANT

See Competent Servant; Domestic Servant—Domestics; Fellow Servant; Superior Servant Rule.

A "servant" is one employed by another and subject to the control of his employer.

Messmer v. Bell & Coggeshall Co., 117 S. W. 346, 348, 133 Ky. 19, 19 Ann. Cas. 1; Tipton v. State, 43 South. 684, 686, 53 Fla. 69.

A "servant" is a person who works for wages, whose labor is directed and controlled by the employer, either in person or by an intermediate agent. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Parsons (Tex.) 109 S. W. 240, 247 (citing Jensen v. Barbour, 39 Pac. 906, 15 Mont. 582).

A "servant" is one employed to render personal services to his employer, otherwise than in the pursuit of an independent calling, and who remains under the control of the master. The relation of master and servant exists when the master not only has the right to select his servant, but has power to remove and discharge him with or without cause, and to direct what work shall be done and the manner of doing it. McColligan v. Pennsylvania K. Co., 63 Atl. 792, 793, 214 Pa. 229, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 544, 112 Am. St. Rep. 739.

The test by which to determine whether a person is acting as the "servant" of another is to ascertain whether, at the time when the injury was inflicted, he was subject to such person's orders and control and was liable to discharge by him for disobedience of orders or misconduct. Indiana Iron Co. v. Cray, 48 N. E. 803, 807, 19 Ind. App. 565; United States Board & Paper Co. v. Landers (Ind.) 92 N. E. 203, 204.

In strictness, a "servant" is one who, for a consideration, engages in the service of another and undertakes to observe his directions, and the relation does not depend on whether the master was to pay anything, or whether the service was permanent; the right to control the action of the servant, which implies the power to discharge, being the essential element. Kiser v. Suppe, 112 S. W. 1005, 1007, 133 Mo. App. 19.

Whether parties engaged in doing work for another are his "servants" depends upon the control and direction that he can rightfully exercise over them. If they are at his command, and bound to obey his orders and directions in regard to the work, and can be, at any time, discharged by him, then they are his "servants." Bentley, Shriver & Co. v. Edwards, 60 Atl. 283, 287, 100 Md. 652.

The relation of master and servant exists where the employer has power to direct the nature of the work and the manner of doing it, with power to employ and discharge, and a switch tender, employed and controlled by defendant, but one-third of whose wages was paid by plaintiff's company, which ran over defendant's tracks at the switches, was not a "servant" of plaintiff's company, nor was defendant its servant; the latter only having the right to complain to defendant as to the manner of performing his duties. Yeates v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 89 N. E. 338, 341, 241 Ill. 205.

The main function of a "servant" is to execute his master's orders. A "servant" represents his master in the performance of an operative or mechanical act of service, not resulting in the creation of a voluntary primary obligation, but which may result, intentionally or inadvertently, in the breach of an existing one. A servant performs acts not primarily intended or adapted to cause a change in the legal relations of third persons to his master. State v. Levine, 66 Atl. 529, 531, 79 Conn. 714, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 286 (citing Huffcutt, Agency, § 4).

The manager of a branch office of a broker in another city is not a "workman, clerk, or servant," within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, and his claim for wages is not entitled to priority on the bankruptcy of his employer. "Workmen" is possibly a wider phrase than "operative," and "servant" is undoubtedly wider than "house servant." In re Albert O. Brown & Co., 171 Fed. 281.

The terms "agent," "servant," or "clerk," as used in Gen. St. 1906, § 3311, denouncing embezzlement, contemplate one who has undertaken to transact some business or manage some affair for another by the authority and on the account of the latter and to render an account of it, or who is subject to the immediate direction and control of his master, so that a boy employed by the agent of an express company, whose salary was paid by the agent, is not a "servant," "clerk," or "agent" of the company, within the contemplation of the statute. Tipton v. State, 43 South. 684, 686, 53 Fla. 69 (quoting and adopting the definitions in 2 Bish. New Cr. Law, § 233; 1 Clark, Cr. Law, p. 274).

Civ. Code, § 2009, provides that a "servant" is one who is employed to render personal service to his employer, otherwise than in the pursuit of an independent calling, and who, in such service, remains entirely under the control and direction of the latter. Giacomini v. Pacific Lumber Co., 89 Pac. 1059, 1060, 5 Cal. App. 218.

Agent

One employed by a refining company to sell and distribute oil to customers, being paid by a commission on the amount of sales, is an agent or "servant" of the company, which is liable for acts of negligence in the conduct of the business on the part of the agent or others employed by him. Riggs v. Standard Oil Co., 130 Fed. 199, 201.

Civ. Code, § 2295, defines an agent as one who represents another in dealings with third persons. Section 2009 defines a "servant" as one employed to render personal services to his employer and who remains entirely under the control and direction of the latter. Held that, where defendant agreed to devote his entire time and attention to the interests and business of plaintiff, a real estate broker, defendant's compensation to be a specified percentage of commissions, the relation between the parties was that of master and servant and not that of principal and agent. Sumner v. Nevin, 87 Pac. 1105, 1106, 4 Cal. App. 347.

Rev. St. 1899, § 2586, provides that eight hours shall constitute a day's labor for all "coal miners and laborers," etc. Section 2587 declares that the word "day," in all contracts between any owner, lessee, or operator of any mine with any such miner or laborer, shall mean eight hours, and section 2589 declares that any owner, lessee, or operator, his or its agent, employé, or servants violating any of the provisions of the chapter shall be fined, etc. Held, that the words "employé" or "servants," used in section 2589, should be construed to mean employé or servants of the mine owner occupying positions of "agents," and not to include miners and laborers, so that a miner was not subject to punishment under the penal provision for working more than eight hours a day. State v. Thompson, 87 Pac. 433, 434, 15 Wyo. 136 (citing Lewis' Suth. Stat. Con. [2d Ed.] § 521).

Child

Defendant owned an automobile which his daughter, about 19, was accustomed to drive when she desired, asking permission when defendant was at home, but sometimes taking it without permission when he was not. While driving the automobile for her own pleasure, with personal friends, defendant's daughter collided with plaintiff and injured him. It did not appear that she was actually employed by defendant to operate the machine. Held, that defendant's daughter was not his "servant" in driving the automobile so as to render him liable for the injury. Doran v. Thomsen, 71 Atl. 296, 297, 76 N. J. Law, 754, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 335, 131 Am. St. Rep. 677.

Employé—synonymous

The word "employé," used in Pen. Code 1895, art. 199, which makes the proprietor of any place of public amusement, or the agent or employé of any such person, who shall permit it to be opened for the purpose of public amusement on Sunday subject to fine, is synonymous with servant, a "servant" being a person employed to labor for the pleasure or interest of another, or as a legal term, one employed to render service or assistance in some trade or vocation, but without authority to act as agent, in place of his employer; and, while an "agent," in the broadest sense of the word, may be construed to have the same power of authority as his principal, no such inference can be drawn from the term "employé"; and by the use of such terms it was intended to include any subordinate, though without the authority of his principal or the proprietor, who, in any way, acted together with the proprietor in the commission of the offense. Oliver v. State (Tex.) 144 S. W. 604, 616.

The word "servant" in a legal sense has a broad significance, embracing all persons of whatever rank or position who are in the employ and subject to direction or control of another in any department of labor or business, and is ordinarily synonymous with "employé." Texas Life Ins. Co. v. Roberts, 119 S. W. 926, 929, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 217.

As family servant

The word "servant," as used in Civ. Code 1895, § 3817, making every person liable for the torts committed by his servant by his command or in the scope of his business, can have no other meaning than a domestic servant, and no other duties than those which appertain to such servant; and it is not necessary, in an action in justice court, to allege special facts showing the servant to be a domestic servant and to set forth the duties of such servant with particularity. Patterson v. Sams, 59 S. E. 18, 2 Ga. App. 755 (citing Lockett v. Pittman, 72 Ga. 817).

The word "servant," as used in Civ. Code 1895, § 3817, providing that every person shall be liable for torts committed by his wife and for torts committed by his child or servant by his command, etc., is not restricted to mere domestic servants, for a corporation, under this definition, might not have a single servant. A domestic servant, according to Webster's International Dictionary, as well as Bouvier's Law Dictionary, is a house servant; a household assistant; one who lives in the family of another. The term "domestic servant" does not extend to workmen and laborers out of doors. Toole Furniture Co. v. Ellis, 63 S. E. 55, 57, 5 Ga. App. 271.

Independent contractor distinguished

"Although, in a general sense, every person who enters into a contract may be called a 'contractor,' yet the word, for want of a better one, has come to be used with special reference to a person who, in the pursuit of an independent business, undertakes to do a specific piece of work for other persons, using his own means and methods, without submitting himself to their control in respect to all its details; the true test of a 'contractor' appearing to be that he renders the service in the course of an independent occupation, representing the will of his employer only as to the result of his work, and not as to the means by which it is accomplished." Counts averred, in the alternative, that the negligence complained of was that of the "agent or contractor" of defendant, and on demurrer the court held that the complaint did not allege that the acts were the acts of the servants or agents of the defendant, so as to fix the liability on it, saying that a distinction is clearly drawn between a "servant" and a "contractor," as, in the general acceptance of the term, a "servant" is not a "contractor," nor is a "contractor" a "servant." Caldwell v. Atlanta, B. & A. R. Co., 49 South. 674, 161 Ala. 395 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, pp. 1534, 1535).

One who agrees to furnish or pay for labor for the benefit of another is a "contractor," not a "servant" or laborer, within the terms of the Georgia Labor Contract Act Aug. 15, 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 90). Coleman v. State, 65 S. E. 46, 6 Ga. App. 398 (citing Johnson v. State, 54 S. E. 184, 125 Ga. 243).

A "servant" is one who is employed by another and is subject to the control of his employer, while an "independent contractor" is one who is independent of his employer in the doing of his work, and may work when and how he prefers. The right to control the conduct of another implies the power to discharge him from the service or employment for disobedience; and, accordingly, the power to discharge has been regarded as the test by which to determine whether the relation of master and servant exists. In determining whether the relation is that of master and servant or that of proprietor and independent contractor, the courts have sometimes taken into consideration the manner of payment; whether payment was to be made by the day, week, month, etc., with a reservation of the power to discharge; or whether there was to be a payment by the piece or by the entire job. But the mode of payment is not a decisive test by which to determine this question. The test lies in the question whether the contract reserves to the proprietor the power of control over the employé. One employed by defendants to squeeze boxes for them in their factory with their machinery as and when directed by their foreman and paid by the box, with the right to hire and pay his own assistant, was not an independent contractor, and for his negligence in operating the box machine, whereby his assistant was injured, defendants were liable. Messmer v. Bell & Coggeshall Co., 117 S. W. 346, 348, 133 Ky. 19, 19 Ann. Cas. 1 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Thomp. Neg. §§ 579, 629).

"The true test * * * by which to determine whether one who renders service to another does so as a contractor or not is to ascertain whether he renders the service in the course of an independent occupation, representing the will of his employer only as to the result of the work, and not as to the means by which it is accomplished." Hence, where plaintiff, an experienced paper hanger and painter, contracted to do certain decorating for defendant at a specified price, to be paid on completion of the work, plaintiff to furnish all the materials and appliances and employ his own help, he was an "independent contractor," and not a "servant" of defendant. Southwestern Telegraph & Telephone Co. v. Paris, 87 S. W. 724, 725, 39 Tex.

Civ. App. 424 (quoting and approving Cunningham v. International R. Co., 51 Tex. 503, 32 Am. Rep. 632).

Where the operator of a cornsheller employed the owner of a traction engine to assist in shelling corn and to furnish power for the work at a specific sum per day for the use of the engines and for his services, the owner being subject to the orders of the operator and liable to be discharged at any time, the owner was not an "independent contractor," but was the "servant" of the operator, for whose acts the operator was liable. Steger v. Barrett (Tex.) 124 S. W. 174, 176.

One who undertook to construct a building for defendant was not an independent contractor, but defendant was his master, liable for his negligence and that of his employes; the contract reserving to defendant the right to direct "the manner in which the work shall be carried out"; requiring defendant to furnish important portions of the material for constructing the appliances and facilities for carrying on the work; declaring all purchases and prices of materials and supplies subject to its approval; and reserving to it the right to select, control, and discharge the labor employed, and fix the prices paid the same. Beal v. Champion Fibre Co., 69 S. E. 834, 835, 154 N. C. 147.

An "independent contractor" is one who contracts to do a specific piece of work furnishing his own assistants and executing the work either entirely with his own ideas or in accordance with a plan previously given to him by the person for whom the work is done, without being subject to the orders of the latter as to the details of the work; but, where the one for whom the work is done personally interferes with or undertakes to control the work, the relationship of independent contractor is destroyed, and the relationship of master and servant exists. Madisonville, H. & E. R. Co. v. Owen, 143 S. W. 421, 423, 147 Ky. 1.

When a person lets out work to another, reserving no control over the work or workmen, the relation of contractor and contractee exists, and not that of master and servant, and the contractee is not liable for the negligent execution of the work by the contractor. Laffery v. United States Gypsum Co., 111 Pac. 498, 500, 83 Kan. 349, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 930, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 590.

"One who contracts to do a specific piece of work, furnishing his own assistants and executing the work entirely in accordance with his own ideas, or in accordance with a plan previously given to him by the person for whom the work is done, without being subject to the orders of the latter in respect to the details of the work, is clearly a contractor and not a 'servant.'" One having a contract with a railroad company to handle for it the fuel necessary to meet its needs at a large number of stations on the company's road in several states and territories at a monthly compensation, he to furnish the labor, the company having no control over his employes unless the work is not done to its satisfaction, is an independent contractor. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Dickens, 103 S. W. 750, 753, 7 Ind. T. 16 (quoting and adopting the definition in Shear. & R. Neg. § 165).

Defendants, the occupants of a store, contracted with T., an awning manufacturer, to put defendants' awning in proper condition, agreeing to pay what it was reasonably worth. Defendants did not undertake to direct how the work was to be done, and during the performance of the work plaintiff, a pedestrian, was injured by the fall of an awning roller. Held, that T. was an independent contractor, and not defendants' "servant." McHarge v. M. M. Newcomer & Co., 100 S. W. 700, 701, 117 Tenn. 595, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 298 (citing Powell v. Virginia Const. Co., 13 S. W. 691, 88 Tenn. 697, 17 Am. St. Rep. 925; Thomp. Neg. §§ 621, 622; Bennett v. Truebody, 6 Pac. 329, 66 Cal. 509, 56 Am. Rep. 117).

The mere retention by the owners of the right to inspect work as it progressed for the purpose of determining whether such work complied with the plans and specifications does not operate to create the relation of master and servant between such owners and those engaged upon such work. Vacker v. Yeager, 151 Ill. App. 144, 153.

A written contract between defendant hotel company and one D. provided that D. and five men should be employed by defendant, D. to be head porter, at a certain salary, and to comply with all instructions given him by defendant's manager. Held, that D. was a "servant," and not an independent contractor, and that defendant was liable to one injured through the negligence of D. or of a porter employed by him. Pearson v. M. M. Potter Co., 101 Pac. 681, 682, 10 Cal. App. 245.

If an employé submits himself to his employer's directions, both as to details of the work and the means by which it is performed, he is a "servant," and not an independent contractor, but if he contracts to do work, furnishing his own means, and doing it according to his own ideas, pursuant to an original plan of his employer, without being subject to the latter's direction as to details, he is an independent contractor, and where plaintiff and his sons were employed to draw pillars in a coal mine at a certain amount per ton, which was the same way the other employes were paid, and worked under the same rules and control as the others, he was a servant, and not an "independent contractor." Allen v. Bear Creek Coal Co., 115 Pac. 673, 679, 43 Mont. 269.

The owner of a factory agreed to run it entirely for the manufacture of defendant's work for a specified time, to keep it in repair, to pay all expenses, to do the work as directed by defendant, and defendant agreed to repay to the owner all expenses for supplies, etc., but it was not agreed that defendant should hire, pay, or discharge employes. It was provided that the owner should follow defendant's directions as to the number of men employed, what work they should do, and the rate of wages to be paid. Held, that the relation of master and "servant" did not exist between the owner and defendant, but the owner was an independent contractor. Kirby v. Lackawanna Steel Co., 95 N. Y. Supp. 833, 835, 109 App. Div. 334.

One employed under an entire contract for a gross sum, to do a specified thing, and who is not subject to the direction of his employer, is not a "servant," within Civ. Code § 1476, defining a "servant" as one who is employed to render personal service to his employer, otherwise than in the pursuit of an independent calling, and who in such service remains entirely under the control and direction of the latter, who is called his master. Cockran v. Rice, 128 N. W. 583, 585, 26 S. D. 393, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 570.

"One who contracts to do a specific piece of work, furnishing his own assistants, and executing the work entirely in accordance with his own ideas, or in accordance with a plan previously given to him by the person for whom the work is done, without being subject to the orders of the latter in respect to the details of the work, is clearly a contractor and not a 'servant.'" Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Dickens, 103 S. W. 750, 753, 7 Ind. T. 16 (quoting and adopting the definition in Shear. & R. Neg. § 165).

If a contractor submits himself to the direction of his employer as to the details of the work, fulfilling his wishes, not merely as to the result, but also as to the means by which that result is to be attained, the contractor becomes a "servant" as to that work. In most instances the distinction is easily observed. Thus one who contracts to do a specific piece of work, furnishing his own assistants, and executing the work either entirely according to his own ideas, or in accordance with a plan previously given to him by the person for whom the work is done, and without being subject to the orders of the latter in respect to the details of the work, is clearly a contractor and not a servant. The fact that such an employé is paid by the day, or that, in all the work, he consults and defers to the wishes of his employer, makes no difference, although an express contract to pay by the job is always strong evidence that the relation of master and servant does not exist. Where the superintendent of an electric power company engaged a carpenter to do work upon a substation, and directed him to get another carpenter to help him, and the former understood that they were to be paid by the hour, and the officers of the company pointed out the work to be done and furnished the material and the general plans, and the carpenters submitted themselves to the control of the company in all details of the work, and did not use their own means or methods except so far as they contributed their special knowledge and experience as carpenters, they were "servants," and not independent contractors. Poor v. Madison River Power Co., 99 Pac. 947, 953, 38 Mont. 341 (citing Shear. & R. Neg. §§ 164, 165; Jensen v. Barbour, 39 Pac. 906, 15 Mont. 582).

In determining whether the relation between a proprietor and one doing work for him is that of master and servant, or proprietor and independent contractor, while the court may take into consideration the manner of payment, whether by the day, week, month, etc., with a reservation of the right to discharge, or whether there was to be payment by the piece or entire job, yet the mode of payment is not a decisive test by which to determine the question. The test lies in whether or not the contract reserves to the proprietor the power of control over the employé. The mere fact that the work being performed by an employé at the time he was injured was done by the piece or job, as by payment of a stated price per ton for shoveling coal into an engine tender, does not deprive him of the character of an employé, where he was a mere "servant" carrying out his employer's will and instructions. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Bennett, 128 Pac. 705, 706, 36 Okl. 358.

The term "contractor," in the law of master and servant, does not include one who, though having some experience in breaking horses, but was not engaged in such business as a vocation, as the result of a casual solicitation of employment, agreed to take a horse and drive it during the daytime, returning it to the owner's stable at night. Mullich v. Bocker, 97 S. W. 549, 551, 119 Mo. App. 332.

Laborer—synonymous

Code 1907, § 6849, provides that one who entices, decoys, or persuades any apprentice or servant to leave the service or employment of his master shall be fined a certain sum, etc. Section 6850 provides that one who knowingly interferes with, hires, employs, entices away, or induces to leave the service of another, any laborer or servant, who has contracted in writing to serve such other for a given time, before the expiration of the time contracted for, shall be fined, etc. Held, construing the sections so as to permit each to operate, that section 6849 applies to employes of a cotton mill and not merely to menial servants; the word "servant" being synonymous with "laborer" as so used.

Abingdon Mills v. Grogan, 52 South. 596, 598, 187 Ala. 146.

Manager, foreman, or superintendent of corporation

A foreman in a manufacturing corporation, although he may not perform any manual labor, is a "servant" of the corporation, within Rev. St. 1878, § 1769, relating to the liability of stockholders for debts of the corporation owing to clerks, servants, and laborers for services performed. Sleeper v. Goodwin, 31 N. W. 335, 341, 67 Wis. 577.

Acts 1903, c. 237, regulates the operation of mines, and requires the employment of a certificated mine foreman under penalty, and confers on such foreman control of the mine with reference to the duties specified in the act, independent of the mine owner, securing the faithful discharge of such duties by the imposition of penalties. Held, that the relation of master and servant did not exist between the mine owner and his certificated foreman with reference to the duties imposed on such foreman by the statute, and that the master was therefore not liable for injuries to a miner, caused by the foreman's negligence in the performance of such duties. Sale Creek Coal & Coke Co. v. Priddy, 96 S. W. 610, 612, 117 Tenn. 168, 10 Ann. Cas. 745.

Musician

"A 'servant' is one who is employed to render personal services to his employer otherwise than in the pursuit of an independent calling, and in any such service remains entirely under the control and direction of the latter." Thus musicians, employed at regular wages to play in a theater or other place, are "servants," within the meaning of Bankruptcy Act, and entitled to priority of payment from the estate of the employer in bankruptcy for their wages earned within three months. In re Caldwell, 164 Fed. 515, 516.

Nurse

The wages of a sick nurse are prescribed by Civ. Code 1870, art. 3534, in one year; she being a "servant" within such section. Succession of Dolsen, 56 South. 514, 515, 129 La. 577.

A trained nurse, performing her usual duties and exercising the skill which is the result of training in that profession, does not come within the definition of a "servant," but rather is one who renders personal services to an employer in the pursuit of an independent calling, and the employer is not liable as master for her acts. Parkes v. Seasongood, 152 Fed. 583, 584, 585.

Physician

The term "servant" is not "restricted to persons engaged in menial or even domestic service. It is applicable to any relation in which, with reference to the matter out of which an alleged wrong has sprung, the person sought to be charged had the right to control the action of the person doing the alleged wrong; and this right to control is the conclusive test by which to determine whether the relation of master and servant exists." The relation of master and servant subsists between an accident insurance company and its medical adviser in the exercise of the right of examination of injured persons entitled to indemnity. Tompkins v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 44 S. E. 439, 444, 53 W. Va. 479 (quoting and adopting definition in Thomp. Neg. § 578).

Public officer distinguished

Municipal tree wardens, for whose appointment provision is made by St. 1910, c. 363, and by Rev. Laws, c. 53, §§ 12, 13, as amended by St. 1908, c. 296, §§ 2, 3, are public officers, and not "servants" or "agents," within Rev. Laws, c. 171, § 2, as amended by St. 1907, c. 375, which authorizes recovery for negligent death caused by a person or corporation or their "agents or servants." Donohue v. City of Newburyport, 98 N. E. 1081, 1082, 211 Mass. 561, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 742.

"* * * An officer appointed or elected by a municipal corporation, in obedience to law, to perform a public service in which the corporation has no particular interest, and from which it derives no special benefit or advantage in its corporate capacity, is not regarded as a 'servant' or 'agent' for whose negligence or want of skill in the performance of his duties a municipal corporation is held liable, although the service is one which the corporation is bound to see performed in pursuance of a duty imposed by law for the general welfare." Under Laws 1893, p. 25, c. 29, § 3, as amended by Laws 1897, p. 59, c. 67, § 1, giving the highway agent of a town, under direction of the selectmen, charge of the construction and repair of highways within the town and empowering him to employ men and teams, the highway agent and selectmen are public officers of the state, and not private agents of the town, so far as their duties in connection with the construction and repair of highways are concerned. Under that statute, a laborer employed by the highway agent or selectmen to work upon the highway does not become the "servant" of the town in such sense as to impose upon it the duties of a master towards him, although it is required by statute to pay him his wages, and although it has power to employ him under Pub. St. 1901, c. 40, § 3, authorizing towns to make any contracts necessary for the transaction of public business. O'Brien v. Town of Derry, 60 Atl. 843, 847, 73 N. H. 198 (quoting and adopting the definition in Wakefield v. Town of Newport, 62 N. H. 624, 625).

"The distinction is plainly taken between a person acting as a 'servant' or 'employé,' who does not discharge independent duties but acts by the direction of others, and an 'officer' empowered to act in the discharge of a duty or legal authority in official life." Where a fireman, wrongfully discharged from the fire department of the city of New York pending reinstatement, accepted a position as sergeant at arms to the council of the municipal assembly, he was a mere "employee" of the city, and not an "officer," within New York City Charter (Laws 1897, p. 543, c. 378, § 1549), prohibiting "municipal officers" from holding two offices. Padden v. New York, 92 N. Y. Supp. 926, 928, 45 Misc. Rep. 517 (quoting and adopting definition in Olmstead v. City of New York, 42 N. Y. Super. Ct. 481, and citing People ex rel. Gilchrist v. Murray, 73 N. Y. 535).

Railroad conductor

It was not error to modify a charge that if the jury believed that plaintiff purchased a ticket to a certain station, but remained on the train and did not get off there, and did not communicate his intention to get off at a place further on, to the conductor, and if the conductor did not know that plaintiff intended to leave the train when he did, they should find for defendant, by substituting "defendant's servants" for the word "conductor," where first used, and "such servant" for "conductor" where it later appeared; there being no substantial difference between the words; "servants" including "conductor." Cornell v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 128 S. W. 1021, 1024, 143 Mo. App. 598.

Wife

Ordinarily the relation of master and servant involves such a right of control as implies a right to discharge from the service or employment for disobedience. For the purpose of charging the defendant, as a master, with injury of the plaintiff through negligent use of the defendant's property by a third person, it is not enough that such third person was at the time in possession of the property with the assent of the defendant; but he must have been in the employment or service of the defendant, and under his control therein. Where the wife is engaged in the use of her husband's personal property in the performance of her duty as a wife, in domestic service for herself and her family, including her husband, not in his presence, he is not liable for a personal injury inflicted by her, not by his direction, but by her trespass through her negligent use of such property. In her conduct in the management of the affairs within her proper domestic sphere, while she is performing her duties as wife, much the same as at common law, she acts with a discretion which does not belong to one standing in the relation of a "servant," and is liable for her torts therein as if sole, and her husband is not liable. And so a complaint alleging that P., as the servant of A., was driving his team, that P., who was A.'s wife, was so driving as his servant, that she, as such servant, she being the wife of A., so negligently drove it that it struck plaintiff, does not show that P. was in the service of A. so as to make him liable. Radke v. Schlundt, 65 N. E. 770, 771, 773, 774, 30 Ind. App. 213.

SERVE

The word "serve," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 210, declaring that the persons whose names are returned as provided in the preceding section for selecting jurors shall be regular jurors and shall serve for one year, refers to the time during which they may be drawn for actual jury service, and has no reference to the life of the grand jury drawn from their number. Halsey v. Superior Court, of City and County of San Francisco, 91 Pac. 987, 990, 152 Cal. 71.

SERVED

See Duly Served; Personally Served.

A sheriff's return of a writ "served" does not necessarily mean a legal service, and is not conclusive as to time and place of service, which may by affidavit be shown to be illegal. Chapman v. Cumming, 17 N. J. Law, 11.

Rev. St. 1898, § 3049, requiring that the notice of appeal be "served" on the clerk of the lower court, does not require that the notice be directed to such clerk. In re Geith's Estate, 109 N. W. 552, 554, 129 Wis. 498.

In an action on a liquor dealer's bond for damages for the sale of liquor to plaintiff's husband after notice not to sell, an allegation that M., a constable, served the notice on defendant was sufficient, though it did not state that he delivered it to him; it being in the language of the statute, and service by delivery being what was meant by the word "served." Birkman v. Fahrenthold, 114 S. W. 428, 431, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 335.

A statute relating to elections, which provides that, on a petition to strike from the list of voters the name of any fictitious person, etc., summons shall be "served" at his place of residence, means that the summons shall be left at his place of residence. Carter v. Applegarth, 62 Atl. 710, 711, 712, 102 Md. 341.

Civ. Code 1895, § 5381, which requires a writ of scire facias to "be 'served' by the sheriff of the county in which the party to be notified may reside, twenty days before the sitting of the court," contemplates personal service. Service by leaving a copy at the most notorious place of abode of the defendant is not sufficient. Atwood v. Hirsch Bros., 51 S. E. 742, 123 Ga. 734.

As including appearance

Acts 1902 (P. L. p. 503, § 4, par. 1) confers jurisdiction to grant a divorce where either of the parties resides within the state at the time of the adultery charged and at the time of filing the bill; but paragraph 7 confers jurisdiction in all cases except desertion, when either of the parties is a resident of the state at the time of the filing of the bill, and the defendant is served with process within the state. Section 6 provides for like process and procedure, as in cases under the chancery act, which (Revision 1902 [P. L. p. 511, § 6]) declares that a written appearance by a solicitor shall have the same force and effect as if defendant had been originally served with process by an officer. Held, that the phrase "served with process within the state," in section 7, included an appearance by a solicitor, so that, where a nonresident wife filed a bill in New Jersey for a divorce against her husband for adultery, he was entitled to a divorce on a cross-bill for her adultery committed while both parties were residents of another state. Storms v. Storms, 64 Atl. 700, 702, 71 N. J. Eq. 549.

In Civil War

Midshipmen at the Naval Academy during the Civil War, being liable to be called into active service, and in some instances having been actually called into service, must be deemed officers of the Navy "who served during the Civil War" within the intent of Navy Personnel Act March 3, 1899, c. 413, § 11, 30 Stat. 1007, and entitled to be retired with the rank of the next higher grade. Jasper v. United States, 40 Ct. Cl. 76, 77.

SERVING

Under a city ordinance, providing for compensation of police officers "serving as patrolmen" at $100 per month, the word "serving" did not require actual rendition of services during the continuance of the term, as a condition to drawing of salary, being equivalent to the phrase "for services as patrolmen." Peterson v. City of Butte, 120 Pac. 483, 484, 44 Mont. 401, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 538.

That one is in the actual "service" of another implies compensation. Wilkes v. Buffalo, R. & P. R. Co., 65 Atl. 787, 789, 216 Pa. 355.

Where defendant agreed to pay for plaintiff's "services" in caring for, harvesting, and warehousing certain hops, the term "services" was not limited to plaintiff's personal labor, but included expenditures necessary in harvesting the crop. Meyer v. Livesley, 107 Pac. 476, 478, 56 Or. 383.

Of carrier

The railroad commission may require a railroad company to maintain an agent at the depot to enable the public to transact business with him; the word "service" as used in the act including the maintenance of a station agent. State v. Corvallis & E. R. Co., 117 Pac. 980, 986, 59 Or. 450.

In a statute making any common carrier, who shall receive from any person a greater or less compensation for any "service rendered" in the transportation of passengers or property than it charges or receives from any other person for doing a like service, guilty of unjust discrimination, the term "service rendered" refers to the physical service of carriage. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. International Coal Min. Co., 173 Fed. 1, 3, 97 C. C. A. 383.

Of employé

"The distinctive characteristics prescribed by the statute as essential to be found concurring and common to two or more employés in order to constitute them fellow servants are: First. They must be 'engaged in the common service.' As here used, 'service' means the thing or work being performed for the employer at the time of the accident, and out of which it grew, and 'common' means that which pertains equally to the employés sought to be held fellow servants, and therefore 'common service' means the particular thing or work being performed for the employer at the time of the accident, and out of which it grew, jointly, by the employés sought to be held fellow servants. The members of a crew running a train, though each be in the performance of different acts in reference thereto, are all 'engaged in the common service,' for they are jointly performing the thing or work of managing the train for the employer; but they would not be 'engaged in the common service' with the members of a crew running another train for the employer over the same road, for one crew would be jointly performing the thing or work of managing one train, while the other would be jointly performing the thing or work of managing the other train." Meyers v. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. Co., 104 Pac. 736, 742, 36 Utah. 307, 21 Ann. Cas. 1229 (quoting and adopting definition in Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Warner, 35 S. W. 364, 89 Tex. 475).

Of military officer

An army officer is not discharged from "service" by his retirement, or out of the service, within Acts Feb. 27, 1877, c. 69, 19 Stat. 244, May 26, 1900, c. 586, 31 Stat. 210, and March 2, 1901, c. 803, 31 Stat. 902. United States v. Gillmore, 189 Fed. 761, 763.

Of officer

Under Bal. Ann. Codes & St. § 7218, providing that if any officer, whose fees are stated by law, shall corruptly exact any "greater fees for any services" than by law are stated, the expression "greater fees for any services" means services actually rendered by the officer in the line of his official duties, and cannot cover a payment to a coroner for not holding an inquest. State v. Wainwright, 97 Pac. 51, 52, 50 Wash. 225.

Burns' Ann. St. 1901, §§ 7945, 8194, make it the duty of the sheriff to keep the jail and take care of the prisoners therein. Section 6426 (Acts 1895, p. 322, c. 145, § 21) provides that sheriffs shall be entitled to receive for their "services" the "compensation" specified in the act and no other "compensation." Section 6444 (Acts 1895, p. 325, c. 145, § 89) provides a sheriff's "salary." Section 6540 (Acts 1895, p. 358, c. 145, § 136) provides that nothing in the act shall be so construed as to allow the salary and also the fees required to be taxed, except as otherwise provided. Sections 6530, 6532 (Acts 1895, pp. 355, 356, c. 145, §§ 124-126), require the sheriff to turn over to the county treasurer fees collected, which, in a measure, shall determine his salary. Section 6528 (Acts 1895, p. 352, c. 145, § 122) provides for the taxation by the sheriff, on account of "services" performed by him, of the fees provided by law, which shall belong to the county. In the itemization following, he is authorized to tax for every person committed to jail, to be paid by the county, 25 cents; for discharging each person from jail, to be paid by the county, 25 cents. Held that, while such provision of section 6528 was practically a re-enactment of a former provision, construed to give the sheriff such sums as his own, and while mileage and the cost of boarding prisoners, probably intended to be given to the sheriff personally, were other items included in such section, yet, in view of the abolishment of the fee system by the act of 1895, the word "services" in such section must be held to include the admission and discharge of a prisoner so as to bring such item within those belonging to the county. Starr v. Board of Com'rs of Delaware County, 79 N. E. 390, 392, 40 Ind. App. 7.

Of wife

"The term 'service,' as used at common law in relation to the labor performed and aid rendered by a wife, does not properly represent the dignity of the wife's work as a member in the matrimonial partnership in Texas. She no more owes service to the husband than he to her. Her duties are those of the wife and are not to be valued as that of a servant or hireling." San Antonio & A. P. Ry. Co. v. Jackson, 85 S. W. 445, 446, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 201 (quoting and adopting definition in Gainesville, H. & W. Ry. Co. v. Lacey, 24 S. W. 269, 86 Tex. 244).

In an action for the death of plaintiff's wife, owing to defendant's negligence, testimony of the husband that he considered a certain sum the reasonable value of his wife's domestic services was not objectionable on the ground that it was irrelevant, hearsay, and had no tendency to prove any fact in issue, and that there was no evidence that the witness had any knowledge of the fact. "The term 'service,' as used at common law in relation to the labor performed and aid rendered by a wife, does not properly represent the dignity of the wife's work as a member of the matrimonial partnership in Texas. She no more owes service to the husband than he to her. Her duties are those of a wife, and are not to be valued as that of a servant or hireling. The fruits of her labor belong to the community, as does that of the husband, and the same rules that apply to the one under like circumstances apply to the other. The husband usually follows a pursuit which makes a return in money, and the value of his labor can be ascertained by a comparison with that of other men in like employment with like ability. The wife's labor, while equally valuable in the community, does not command a price in the market, and therefore cannot be proved by experts, as can that of the husband." Chicago, R. I. & G. R. Co. v. Groner, 95 S. W. 1118, 1120, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 264 (quoting and adopting definition in Gainesville, H. & W. Ry. Co. v. Lacy, 24 S. W. 269, 86 Tex. 244).

In an action by a husband for loss of the services of his wife through personal injury, the word "services" ordinarily signifies wifely services such as are due from her, and includes the idea of her society. Indianapolis & M. Rapid Transit Co. v. Reeder, 85 N. E. 1042, 1043, 42 Ind. App. 520.

The word "services," in the rule allowing a husband to sue for personal injuries to his wife, included any pecuniary injury suffered from the loss of her aid, society, and companionship; and, while the damages from the loss of services, society, and companionship are not susceptible of direct proof, yet, when the facts are shown, the assessment of compensation must be left to the sound discretion of the jury. Indianapolis Traction & Terminal Co. v. Menze, 88 N. E. 929, 930, 173 Ind. 31.

"The term 'services,' when employed to indicate the ground on which the husband is allowed to maintain an action, is used in a peculiar sense, and fails to express to the common mind the exact legal idea intended by it. Whatever may have been the case formerly, or may now be the case in some states of society, service, in the sense of labor or assistance, such as a servant might perform or render, is not always given by or expected from the wife; and, if an action were to put distinctly in issue the loss of such services, it might, perhaps, be shown in the most serious cases that there was really no loss at all. But it could not be reasonable that the wrongdoer should escape responsibility because the family he has wronged were in such circumstances, moved in such circles, and were subject to such claims, by reason of public position or otherwise, that physical labor by the wife was neither expected nor desired. The word 'service' has come to us in this connection from the times in which the action originated, and it implies whatever aid, assistance, comfort, and society the wife would be expected to render to or bestow upon her husband, under the circumstances and in the condition in which they may be placed, whatever those may be." Womach v. City of St. Joseph, 100 S. W. 443, 448, 201 Mo. 467, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 140 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Cooley, Torts [3d Ed.] p. 470).

SERVICE (In Practice)

See Direct Service; Inadequate Service; Personal Service; Personally Served.

The "service of a subpoena" is but the delivery of a paper to a party, and there is no element of trespass or force in it. It does not disturb the possession of property. Hale v. Henkel, 26 Sup. Ct. 370, 381, 201 U. S. 43, 50 L. Ed. 652.

The word "service," as used with reference to summonses and other legal processes, means the reading thereof to the person to be served, or the delivery to such person of the original or a copy thereof, and the phrase "service of a notice," without qualification, means a personal service of a written notice. Clemmons v. State, 113 Pac. 238, 239, 5 Okl. Cr. 119. Wherever a statute requires notice to be served in a legal proceeding, a written notice capable of legal service, of proof and return, and of being filed is intended, especially where service and proof thereof are jurisdictional. The expression "service of notice," without qualification of any kind, means a personal service of a written notice. The word "service," when used with reference to summonses, notices, and other legal processes, means the reading of the same to the person to be served or the delivery of the original or a copy thereof. Ensley v. State, 109 Pac. 250, 252, 4 Okl. Cr. 49.

"When notice is required by a statute, and no manner of 'service' is pointed out, personal service is meant." Dalton v. St. Louis, M. & S. E. R. Co., 87 S. W. 610, 612, 113 Mo. App. 71.

Service by mail

Under Rev. Code Civ. Proc., § 554, providing that "service by mail" may be made where the person making the service and person on whom it is to be made reside in different places, between which there is a regular communication by mail, the service is completed from the time the paper to be served is deposited in the post office, properly addressed and stamped, though never received. Griffin v. Board of County Com'rs of Walworth County, 104 N. W. 1117, 1119, 20 S. D. 142.

The test in determining whether "service by mail" suffices is whether or not the paper actually came into the hands of the person to be served. If by reason of the presence of a return card on the envelope, or by reason of shortage of postage, the papers do not actually come into the possession of the party on whom it is sought to serve them, there is not service; but, if such causes do not in fact prevent the actual receipt of the papers, they become immaterial defects and do not invalidate the service. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 797, authorizing service of papers in an action by mail by depositing them postpaid in the post office, a counterclaim sent by mail, not fully prepaid, to plaintiff's attorneys, who paid the postage due without objection, and after learning the nature of the package returned it to defendant, was legally served. Appeal Printing Co. v. Sherman, 91 N. Y. Supp. 178, 179, 99 App. Div. 533.

Service by telephone

Under Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 515, declaring that a subpoena is served by reading the same in the hearing of a witness, etc., reading a subpoena to a witness by telephone is not a valid "service." Ex parte Terrell (Tex.) 95 S. W. 536, 537.

SERVICE BRAKE

What is known as the "service brake" differs from the emergency brake only in degree. If the full force of air is turned upon the brake, that is an "emergency brake." In ordinary cases less than the full force is turned on, and that is the "service brake." In other words, there is only one set of brakes, and the difference consists in the amount of air pressure which is applied. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Dean's Adm'r, 59 S. E. 369, 391, 107 Va. 505.

SERVICE CONNECTED WITH TRANSPORTATION

Interstate Commerce Act (Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, § 15, 24 Stat. 384, as amended by Act June 18, 1910, c. 309, § 12, 36 Stat. 551) provides that if the owner of property transported under the act directly or indirectly renders any service connected with the transportation, or furnishes any instrumentality used therein, the charge and allowance therefor shall be no more than is just and reasonable, and the commission may, after hearing on a complaint, or on its own initiative, determine what is a reasonable charge, etc. Held, that cartage of sugar from refinery to cars did not constitute "transportation," nor a "service connected with transportation," within such act, for which the carrier was justified in making an allowance under section 15; and that such allowance constituted an illegal rebate. American Sugar Refining Co. v. Delaware, L. & W. Ry. Co., 200 Fed. 652, 656.

SERVICE IN SWITCHING

Employment as fireman on a railway yard switching engine is "service in switching cars," within a life policy provision exempting insurer from liability on insured entering such service. Diseker v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of United States, 60 S. E. 153, 154, 87 S. C. 187.

SERVICE PIPE

The term "service pipe" or wires, as used in Laws 1890, c. 566, p. 1148, § 65, providing that no corporation shall be compelled to lay service pipes or wires through frozen ground, or such as shall otherwise present serious obstacles to laying the same, means the connection from the street main or wire to the house, and usually the expense of laying that is borne by both the company and the owner in proportions agreed upon by them. Moore v. Champlain Electric Co., 85 N. Y. Supp. 37, 39, 88 App. Div. 289.

SERVICE STOP

An "emergency brake" on a train is adapted and used in instances of emergency, as its name implies, while a "service stop" is used in ordinary cases where a stoppage of the train can be accomplished by a gradual application of the brakes. Benedict v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., 78 S. W. 60, 61, 104 Mo. App. 218.

SERVICES ACTUALLY RENDERED

Where one appears on the pay rolls of the city of New Orleans and receives pay for services rendered the city by another, acting on his behalf, he does not violate Act 155 of 1888, which provides "that any person who shall knowingly permit his name to be carried on the pay rolls of any state, parish, municipal or other political corporation, as employé, and receive salary, or pay for the services not actually rendered" shall be guilty of a crime, as the services have been "actually rendered," and the act is violated only when the services are "not actually rendered." State v. Farrell, 57 South. 898, 130 Law 228.

SERVIENT ESTATE OR TENEMENT

When one part of an estate is dependent for enjoyment by some use in the nature of an easement in the other part, and the owner conveys either part without express provision on the subject, the part so dependent, thence called the "dominant estate," carries or reserves with it an easement of such use in the other, thence called the "servient estate." Cherry v. Brizzolara, 116 S. W. 668, 671, 89 Ark. 309, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 508.

SERVILE LABOR

As used in Gen. St. 1894, § 6514, providing that it is a defense to a prosecution for doing "servile labor" on the first day of the week that the defendant uniformly keeps another day as holy, on which he does not labor, the term "servile labor" is infelicitous. By no construction, however, can it be perverted into a definition which would apply to a groceryman, publicly selling his wares, to be defined as a servile laborer. State v. Weiss, 105 N. W. 1127, 1128, 97 Minn. 125, 7 Ann. Cas. 932.

SERVITUDE

See Additional Servitude; Continuous Servitude; Involuntary Servitude; Personal Servitude; Urban Servitude. Discontinuous servitude, see Discontinuous Easement.

The "servitude" of the civil law has a much wider signification than the easement of the common law, comprehending many rights which in the latter fall under the division of profits à prendre. The owner of an entire tract of land, or of two or more adjoining parcels, may so employ a part thereof as to create a seeming servitude in favor of another portion to which the use becomes appurtenant. Such use is tantamount to an easement at will, so long as the unity of ownership continues, and is described as a "quasi easement." German Savings & Loan Society v. Gordon, 102 Pac. 736, 737, 54 Or. 147, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 331 (citing Kleffer v. Imhoff, 26 Pa. 438, 442).

SESAME OIL

The provision for "sesame oil" in the Tariff Act held to include ground sesame seed in the form of pulp, from which the oil has not been removed, the article being known commercially as sesame oil. It is immaterial that there is another and more refined product known and dealt in under the same name. F. Zaloom & Sons v. United States, 140 Fed. 31, 32.

SESSION

See Annual Session; Church Sessions; First Regular Session; In Session; Joint Session; Last Session; Next Session; Special Session.

Under County Law, Laws 1892, p. 1750, c. 686, § 23, providing that each supervisor shall receive $4 per day for attending sessions of the board, and mileage for once going and returning between his residence and the place of meeting for each regular and special session, and section 10 (page 1745), providing that the board shall meet annually, may hold special meetings, and may adjourn from time to time, the terms "annual meeting" and "regular session" are synonymous, and a "regular" or "special" session is measured by its actual duration; each day not being a session, within section 23, so as to entitle the supervisors to mileage for each day's actual attendance at sessions of their boards. Wallace v. Jones, 107 N. Y. Supp. 288, 290, 122 App. Div. 497.

The meaning of the word "session" largely depends upon the connection in which the word is used, and may mean one thing in one section or paragraph of a law and something else in another. Under a city charter declaring that the city council shall meet upon a stated time in each year, and continue in "session" 120 days, and no longer in each year, with the provision that the council may arrange its sittings so that the same may be held continuously or otherwise, the council may continue in session for 120 days, and no longer, in each year, but it does not prohibit the council from continuing the consideration, during the second year of the two-year term for which its members are elected, of an ordinance introduced and partly disposed of during the first year. Bond v. Mayor, etc., of Baltimore, 74 Atl. 14, 17, 111 Md. 364.

Of court

"The term 'session,' when applied to courts, means the whole term. In legal construction, the whole term is construed as but one day, and that day is always referred to the first day or commencement of the term." Cresap v. Cresap, 46 S. E. 582, 583, 54 W. Va. 581 (quoting Dew v. Judges of Sweet Spring District Court, 3 Hen. & M. [13 Va.] 27, 3 Am. Dec. 639).

"Session," as applied to courts, means an entire term, and, in legal construction, the whole term is construed as a single day. Risher v. Wheeling Roofing & Cornice Co., 49 S. E. 1016, 1018, 57 W. Va. 149 (citing Dunn's Ex'rs v. Renick, 22 S. E. 66, 40 W. Va. 349; Dew v. Judges of Sweet Spring District Court, 3 Hen. & M. [13 Va.] 27, 3 Am. Dec. 639).

A court is defined as "the persons officially assembled under authority of law at the appropriate time and place for the administration of justice," while the word "term," when used with reference to a court, signifies the space of time during which the court holds a session. A "session" signifies the time during the term when the court sits for the transaction of business; therefore there is a clear distinction between "the adjournment of court" and the "adjournment of the term." Parrott v. Wolcott, 106 N. W. 607, 608, 75 Neb. 530 (citing Webst. Dict.; Black, Law Dict.).

Same—As synonymous with term

The word "session" is defined as "the time, period, or term during which a court, council, Legislature, etc., meets daily for business, or the space of time between the first meeting and the prorogation or adjournment; thus a session of Parliament is opened with a speech from the throne and closed by prorogation. The session of a judicial court is called a "term." So where plaintiff filed an affidavit for an appeal without bond, as required by Rev. St. 1895, art. 1401, whereupon the court made an order certifying that plaintiff, by presenting such affidavit "within term time," has made proof of his inability to pay the costs of appeal or give security therefor, and is permitted to prosecute his appeal on said affidavit in lieu of a cost bond on appeal, and such certificate was dated May 12, 1904, and showed that the term of court began March 7th and ended May 14, 1904, it was held that such certificate sufficiently showed that the proof on which it was issued was made while the court was actually in session. Emerson v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. of Texas, 82 S. W. 1060, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 110 (citing Webst. Int. Dict.).

The word "session" does not have a single, fixed, and definite meaning, but is variously used in statutes and constitutions. In Rev. St. § 1038, providing that any District Court may, by order entered on its minutes, remit any indictment pending thereon "to the next session of the Circuit Court for the same district," and thereon the proceedings in such case shall be the same in the Circuit Court as if such indictment had been originally found and presented therein, the word "session" is used as meaning an actual sitting of the court for transaction of business, and not in the sense of "term," and the Circuit Court has jurisdiction to proceed with a case so remitted at the then current term. United States v. Dietrich, 126 Fed. 659, 660.

In the act of the Legislature of 1909, entitled "An act providing for holding county court at the town of Prague, in Lincoln county," the words "term" and "session" are used interchangeably. Rakowski v. Wagoner, 103 Pac. 632, 633, 24 Okl. 282.

Local Option Law (Laws 1905, p. 47, c. 2) § 10, provides that the county court 11 days after election, or as soon thereafter as practicable, shall hold a "special session," and, if a majority of the votes are for prohibition, the court shall immediately make an order declaring the result of the vote and absolutely prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors, etc. Held, that the court, by announcing the result of the election at a special session called during general term, did not invalidate the proceedings, the words "special session," as used in the act, not being synonymous with "special term" (the word "term" signifying "the space of time during which the court holds a session"), and the word "session," as used, referring to a temporary sitting of the court, for the transaction of special business assigned to them, which may occur either during a general or special term; and, if all members are present for such purpose, it is immaterial as to how it was called, or when, providing the time prescribed by the act for such special sitting has elapsed. State v. Edmunds, 104 Pac. 430, 432, 55 Or. 236 (quoting and adopting definition in Bouv. Law Dict.).

The word "term," as used in Acts 1878, No. 30, p. 56, § 1, means the session during which the court is actually open, as distinguished from the "continuous session" of ten months provided for by Const. art. 117. State v. Vicknair, 43 South. 635, 637, 118 La. 963.

Laws 1905, p. 47, §§ 10, 11 (L. O. L. §§ 4929, 4930), provides for the holding of local option elections and the making of returns to the county court, and then declares that the court, on the 11th day after the election, or as soon thereafter as practicable, shall hold a special "session," and if the majority of the votes in the county as a whole, or in any subdivision thereof, etc., are for prohibition, the court shall make an order declaring the result and absolutely prohibiting the sale of liquor, etc. Held, that the word "session," as applied to the court, while usually referring to an actual sitting and transaction of business, yet, as used in such provision, might be construed to mean the legislative appointment of a term of the county court for the special purposes of the act. State v. Maddock, 115 Pac. 426, 428, 58 Or. 542.

SESSION LAWS

Under Const. art. 19, § 2, providing that proposed constitutional amendments shall be published with the "Session Laws," and that the Secretary of State shall "also" cause the amendments to be published in newspapers for four successive weeks previous to the next general election, the publication for four weeks previous to the next general election relates only to newspapers and not to Session Laws, since the word "also" is used in the sense of "besides," and "further," and means "in like manner," and since the "Session Laws" is not a serial publication or one that is made at a fixed period or at regularly recurring intervals, but is published only once as a permanent memorial for its designated contents. Pearce v. People, 127 Pac. 224, 226, 53 Colo. 399.

SET

Precious stones

In the provision of the Tariff Act for "diamonds and other precious stones advanced in condition or value from their natural state by cleaving, splitting, cutting, or other process, and not set," the word "set" has a well-known and well-defined trade meaning in connection with precious stones, which will not include the insertion of an agate bearing in a scale. The provision is intended to cover only precious stones intended for jewelry purposes, and not such as are fitted for use as bearings. Smith v. Computing Scale Co., 147 Fed. 890, 891 (citing Erhardt v. Hahn, 55 Fed. 273, 5 C. C. A. 99; Hahn v. United States, 100 Fed. 635, 40 C. C. A. 622; Hahn v. United States, 121 Fed. 152).

Tool

A "set" or "snap" is a tool used to receive the blows of the sledge in riveting the plates of metal beams. The ordinary rule of the nonliability of an employer for injury sustained by an adult employé of ordinary discretion through the voluntary use of a defective tool, when the facts and the danger were within the comprehension of any ordinarily intelligent and prudent man, and were as completely within the knowledge and appreciation of the servant as of the master, is here applied to the case of a man who lost an eye by being struck by a sliver of steel from a "set" or "snap" used to receive the blows of the sledge in riveting I-beams. Gillaspie v. United Iron Works Co., 90 Pac. 760, 761, 76 Kan. 70.

SET APART

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1468, providing that, when property is "set apart" to the use of the family of a decedent, one-half shall belong to the widow and the remainder to the children, and also providing for an allowance for the family, which by section 1467 is made a charge against the estate, a widow, to whom a family allowance has been paid, is not accountable to the children after their majority for shares not expended for their support; section 1468 applying to tangible property, such as exempt property or a homestead, and not to a family allowance. Bell v. Bell, 83 Pac. 814, 2 Cal. App. 338.

SET ASIDE

Dividend

Text-writers, in using the terms "set aside," "set apart," and "actually set apart," with reference to dividends, proceed on the theory that the act of declaring a dividend, operating, as it does, as an actual severance of the dividend from the stock and corpus of the corporate property, is ipso facto, in and of itself, the setting apart, setting aside, and segregating such dividend in the sense that it creates an immediate right of the stockholder to demand and recover the same when due. The doctrine is that by the mere declaration the dividend becomes immediately separated and segregated from the stock and exists independently of it; that the right thereto becomes at once immediately fixed and absolute in the stockholder, and from thenceforth the right of each individual stockholder is changed from that of partner and part owner of the corporate property to a status absolutely adverse to every other stockholder and to the corporation itself, in so far as his pro rata proportion of the dividend is concerned. McLaren v. Crescent Planing Mill Co., 93 S. W. 819, 822, 117 Mo. App. 40.

SET FIRE TO

Revisal 1905, § 3346, which provides that if any person shall "set fire to any woods" on his own property, without notice to adjoining landowners, and without taking effectual care to extinguish the fire before it reach adjoining lands, he is liable in an action to any one injured, refers to setting fires upon woodland, and does not apply unless the firing is voluntary or intentional; and hence has no application to the case of a manufacturing company, burning off its right of way, where straw, tree tops, etc., had accumulated, and negligently allowing the fire to escape to land of an adjoining owner. Mizzell v. Branning Mfg. Co., 73 S. E. 802, 803, 158 N. C. 265.

SET FOR HEARING

Within chancery practice rule 28, providing that a dismissal of the bill, caused by complainant "after the cause is set down to be heard," is a bar to another suit for the same matter, a cause being at issue, as it is when answer is filed, stands on the docket to be called and heard as a matter of course at the next term, and if it then "comes on to be heard," and is continued to the next term, this is a "setting down to be heard" at the next term. Boon v. Riley, 54 South. 997, 998, 171 Ala. 657.

SET FOR TRIAL

A stipulation filed in court, signed by the counsel of the parties, agreeing that the cause should be "set down for trial" for a certain day of a certain term, means a trial on the merits, and is an unlimited appearance by the defendant, waiving a right to plead to the jurisdiction. Markey v. Louisiana & M. R. R. Co., 84 S. W. 61, 64, 185 Mo. 348.

SET FORTH

See Substantially as Set Forth.

In section 5086, Rev. St., providing that a copy of the account may be set forth in an action founded upon an account, the term "set forth" means placing or putting a copy in the proper place. Buffalo Forge Co. v. Cleveland Steam Fitting & Supply Co., 92 N. E. 238, 240, 82 Ohio St. 199.

SET MY HAND AND SEAL

See My Hand and Seal.

SET OFF

As separate

The term "set off," as used in a statute requiring that the return of an officer on an execution shall state that the appraisers appraised and "set off" the premises, means to separate or assign for the purpose of satisfying the execution and officer's fees so far as an appraised value of the land will go, and a return which adopts the return of the appraiser, but which does not follow the directions specifically of the statute, is sufficient. Brackett v. McKenney, 55 Me. 504, 506.

SET-OFF

See, also, Counterclaim; Recoupment.

A "set-off" is not technically a matter of defense and does not sound in damages, but is a money demand by defendant against plaintiff, arising on contract and constituting a debt independent of and unconnected with the cause of action set forth in the complaint. J. S. Wood & Bro. v. M. E. Jones & Son, 73 S. E. 1099, 1100, 10 Ga. App. 735; Krausse v. Greenfield, 123 Pac. 392, 394, 61 Or. 502.

A "set-off" is a final demand arising from an independent transaction, liquidated or unliquidated, not sounding in damages, subsisting between the parties at the commencement of the suit. Theo. Poull & Co. v. Foy-Hays Const. Co., 48 South. 785, 786, 159 Ala. 453.

A "set-off" is in the nature of a cross-demand and, being incomplete at the impetration of the writ, is not available to the defendant. Pocono Spring Water Ice Co. v. American Ice Co., 64 Atl. 398, 400, 214 Pa. 640.

"A 'set-off' is a counter demand, generally of a liquidated debt, growing out of an independent transaction for which an action might be maintained by the defendant against the plaintiff." "A 'set-off' means a cross-claim for which an action might be maintained against the plaintiff and is very different from a mere right to a deduction from or reduction of his demand on account of some matter connected therewith, and which may be given in evidence under the general issue, such as payment on account, etc." Sawyer v. Van Deren, 66 Atl. 396, 398, 74 N. J. Law, 673 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Saund. Pl. & Ev. 786).

A "set-off" is a counter demand, generally of a liquidated debt, growing out of an independent transaction for which an action might be maintained by the defendant against plaintiff, exhibited by the defendant to counterbalance the plaintiff's recovery either in part or in whole, and, as the case may be, to recover a judgment in his own favor for the balance. A set-off is not cognizable in admiralty except so far as it relates to the particular transaction which is the subject of the action and goes to reduce or overcome libellant's demand. Hastorf v. Degnon-M'Lean Contracting Co., 128 Fed. 982, 983.

Whether a claim is of a nature connoted by the term "set-off," and whether, as to its liquidated or unliquidated character, capable of being the subject of set-off, is to be determined by applying the test, Will an action of indebitatus assumpsit lie thereon? If so, it is liquidated within the legal meaning of the word "set-off." Links v. Mariowe, 84 Atl. 1056, 1057, 83 N. J. Law, 389.

Unliquidated damages for breach of contract cannot be a "set-off" within the meaning of the statute providing that, in actions against joint obligors, any debt or demand due from plaintiff to defendant, or to all the obligors in the contract sued on may be set off against the demand of plaintiff; a set-off being a debt. National Handle Co. v. Huffman, 120 S. W. 690, 692, 140 Mo. App. 634.

"The right of set-off does not attach to the debt itself, nor depend upon the mutual-ity of the debts in their origin as an inherent quality belonging to such debts, but upon the situation and rights of the parties between whom it is sought to be enforced. It is a privilege attaching to the remedy only." Wabash R. Co. v. Bowring, 77 S. W. 106, 108, 103 Mo. App. 158 (citing Greene v. Darling [U. S.] 10 Fed. Cas. 1144; Waterman, Set-Off, § 17). "The right of set-off is not an equity which the original debtor may, at all events, assert against the assignor or assignee of the debt, whether he has or has not notice of its existence. There is no such equity to have debts set off against each other which attaches to the debts themselves and travels with them into whatsoever hands they may come, though it is doubtless true that where there are mutual subsisting debts, and either an express or implied agreement of stoppage pro tanto or mutual credit, the court of equity will enforce it against his assignee with notice." Wolcott v. Sullivan [N. Y.] 1 Edw. Ch. 399. A plaintiff's right to have his judgment against defendant set off against defendant's judgment against plaintiff is not affected by defendant's equitable assignment of half of his judgment, plaintiff not assenting thereto, or by the assignment of all of it, the assignee taking with knowledge of plaintiff's prior judgment. Wabash R. Co. v. Bowring, 77 S. W. 106, 108, 103 Mo. App. 158.

A "set-off" filed in an action is, by the express provisions of Rev. St. 1899, § 4499, an independent action brought by defendant against the plaintiff, and the dismissal or discontinuance of plaintiff's action does not affect the set-off, but defendant may, notwithstanding such discontinuance or dismissal of the plaintiff's action, prosecute his set-off to final judgment. Cornell v. King, 94 S. W. 822, 823, 118 Mo. App. 191.

Answer distinguished

See Answer.

As cross claim or action

The plea of "set-off" is a cross-action, and after it is filed defendant is entitled to prove his case and have judgment against plaintiff, if authorized by the evidence, which right plaintiff cannot defeat by dismissing his case. Handley v. McKee, 70 S. E. 94, 95, 8 Ga. App. 570; E. E. Forbes Piano Co. v. Hixon, 68 S. E. 487, 8 Ga. App. 51.

As cause of action upon a contract, judgment, or award

In an action in the nature of express assumpsit, the claim of the holder of the legal title of land against the holder of the equitable title for taxes paid, being purely a statutory claim, is not a proper subject of set-off, under a statute defining a "set-off" as a cause of action arising upon a contract, judgment, or award in favor of a defendant against a plaintiff. Montgomery v. Montgomery, 78 S. W. 465, 119 Ky. 761.

A "set-off" is a cause of action arising upon a contract, judgment, or award in favor of a defendant against a plaintiff, or against him and another; and it cannot be pleaded except in an action on a contract, judgment, or award. Civ. Code Prac. § 96. A claim of a judgment debtor against the judgment creditor, which arose before the assignment of the judgment, is a lawful set-off against the judgment in the hands of the assignee. Clark v. Raison, 104 S. W. 342, 343, 126 Ky. 486. See, also, Snowden v. Snowden (Ky.) 96 S. W. 922, 923.

A "set-off" may be pleaded in an action founded on a contract, and must be, as declared by Code Civ. Proc. § 104, a cause of action arising upon contract, or ascertained by the decision of the court. In an action to recover a sum subscribed by defendant to aid plaintiff in holding a street fair in a city, defendant answered, and alleged that he paid to plaintiff a certain sum for the privilege of operating his usual place of business in the city, and for the purpose of feet frontage, which plaintiff unlawfully forced him to pay under threats of prosecution; that, when defendant paid said amount to plaintiff, plaintiff expressly agreed that no further saloons or other places for the sale of intoxicating liquors, other than those established, would be allowed to do business in such neighborhood; that the midway of said street fair was situated near the place of business of defendant, which fact was held out as an inducement for him to pay said amount to the plaintiff, as plaintiff then told him no intoxicating liquors would be sold therein; that plaintiff breached his agreement, thereby damaging defendant in a specified sum, for which amount he asked judgment. The contract or transaction set forth in the answer was wholly different from that set forth in the petition, and was in no way connected therewith, but the cause of action which defendant pleaded was one arising upon contract, and, though for unliquidated damages, was a proper subject of set-off.

Mullins v. South Omaha Street Fair Ass'n, 99 N. W. 521, 522, 5 Neb. (Unof.) 572.

As demand arising out of an independent transaction

A "set-off" to the whole or part of plaintiff's claim is a distinct cause of action, which may be made, and, if sustained, affords a legal reason why a defendant should not be called upon to pay the demand sued on, and is not in the nature of a defense thereto. Tilton v. Goodwin, 66 N. E. 802, 803, 183 Mass. 236.

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, §§ 352, 353, authorizing a defendant to set forth in his answer a set-off, in actions for a money demand on contract, and providing that the set-off must consist of matter arising out of debt, duty, or contract, a "set-off" may embrace matter which is not germane to the action, but which constitutes an independent cause of action, subject to the qualification that the demands must be mutual. Wainwright v. P. H. & F. M. Roots Co., 97 N. E. 8, 12, 176 Ind. 682.

A "set-off," which was unknown to the common law, but is permitted by Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 353, requiring a set-off to consist of matter arising out of debt, duty, or contract held by defendant when the suit was commenced, etc., is a counterdemand growing out of an independent transaction for which defendant may sue plaintiff, and pleaded by defendant to counterbalance plaintiff's recovery in whole or in part and to recover judgment in his own favor, but a set-off is not an answer in its ordinary meaning as a statement of a defense to plaintiff's cause of action, for it impliedly admits the cause of action. Duffy v. England, 96 N. E. 704, 707, 176 Ind. 575.

Under Gen. St. 1902, § 612, the term "counterclaim" refers to all manner of permissible counter demands, more particularly those so connected with the matter in controversy under the original complaint that its consideration is necessary for the full determination of the rights of the parties, or, if it is of a wholly independent character, is a claim upon the plaintiff by way of set-off, and not a claim against a codefendant; and the term "set-off" embraces equitable set-off. Downing v. Wilcox, 80 Atl. 288, 289, 84 Conn. 437.

As applicable only to mutual demands, debts, and credits

"Set-offs" must be mutual demands, and one partner cannot make use of a partnership demand as a set-off against a demand against himself individually. Western Coal & Min. Co. v. Hollenbeck, 80 S. W. 145, 146, 72 Ark. 44.

A "set-off" obtains between persons occupying the relation of debtor and creditor and between whom there exist mutual demands. Mutuality is essential to the validity of a set-off, and, in order that one demand may be set off against another, both must mutually exist between the same parties. Accordingly, it is settled that a bank can claim no lien upon the deposit of one partner, made on his separate account, in order to apply it on a debt due from the firm; nor can the joint and several note of three persons be paid out of the individual deposit of one, unless he be the principal and the others sureties, or unless it becomes necessary in order to do complete equity or avoid irremediable injustice. O'Grady v. Stotts City Bank, 80 S. W. 696, 697, 106 Mo. App. 366.

A mutual account implies a reciprocity of dealing between the parties to the account, and is made up of matters of set-off wherein each party has a right of action against the other; and a "set-off" can be pleaded only when the right of action is against the plaintiff in the same capacity as that in which he is prosecuting his claim; and an individual obligation is not a matter of set-off to a partnership claim or to a claim by the plaintiff in a representative capacity; nor can a partnership debt be a set-off to a claim by one of the members of the partnership; and, on a general payment on an open account between them, the account would not for that reason have been rendered mutual, since the mere payment of money upon an account does not have that effect, but operates simply as a reduction pro tanto of the claim. Flynn v. Seale, 84 Pac. 263-265, 2 Cal. App. 665.

The right to have the debt of the legatee or distributee charged to him in the adjustment of the legacy or the distributive share is inaccurately called a right of "set-off" or of "retainer," since the right rests not so much upon any rule of set-off or of retainer, as upon the broad principles of equity. Oxsheer v. Nave, 40 S. W. 7, 9, 90 Tex. 568, 37 L. R. A. 98.

The mutual accounts between a bankrupt and his bank of deposit are closed by operation of law at the time the petition in bankruptcy is filed, and no right of "set-off," under Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 8a, 30 Stat. 565, exists in the bank as to deposits made after that time, even though neither party knew of the filing of the petition when the deposit was made. In re Michaelis & Lindeman, 196 Fed. 718, 719.

An answer, in a suit to confirm a tax title, which alleges that the sale was void because the purchaser at the tax sale was the clerk who made the sale and executed the deed, is not a "counterclaim" or "set-off" within Kirby's Dig. § 6108, and a reply is unnecessary to require defendant to prove the allegations thereof. Senter v. Greer, 142 S. W. 178, 101 Ark. 301.

Recoupment distinguished

As defined by Civ. Code, § 3757, a "set-off" is distinguishable from recoupment in that a set-off includes all mutual debts and liabilities, while recoupment is confined to the contract on which plaintiff sues. Weaver v. Roberson, 67 S. E. 662, 666, 134 Ga. 149.

"Recoupment" goes to show that the amount claimed is not due the plaintiff, while "set-off" is a defense which goes, not to the justice of the plaintiff's demand, but sets up a demand against the plaintiff to counterbalance his in whole or in part. It does not attack or deny plaintiff's claim, but admits it. As set-off does not go to show that the amount claimed by plaintiff is not due or owing by the defendant, it is not available as defense by affidavits of illegality to the foreclosure of a chattel mortgage. Arnold v. Carter, 54 S. E. 177, 179, 125 Ga. 319.

Recoupment is distinguished from "set-off" in these particulars: First, it arises out of matters connected with the transaction or contract in which the plaintiff's cause of action is founded; second, it matters not whether it be liquidated or not; third, it is not dependent on any statutory regulation, but is controlled by the principles of the common law. Hayes v. Sildell Liquor Co., 55 South. 356, 358, 99 Miss. 583.

In an action for the price of a stock of millinery goods, a plea termed by the defendant a plea of "recoupment," claiming a sum had and received by plaintiff, which the defendant offers as a set-off against the demands of the plaintiff, and claims judgment for the excess, was not demurrable, being good as a "set-off," though not as a plea of recoupment. Thomas v. Thomas, 41 South. 141, 142, 146 Ala. 533.

As statutory right

"Set-off" did not exist at common law, but is founded on Stat. 2 George II, c. 24, § 4, which provided that, where there were mutual debts between the parties, one debt might be set against the other. United Transportation & Lighterage Co. v. New York & Baltimore Transp. Line, 180 Fed. 902, 904.

The right of "set-off" is a creation of statute, applicable even where there are different contracts. American Bridge Co. of New York v. City of Boston, 88 N. E. 1089, 1090, 202 Mass. 374.

"A 'set-off' is a creation of statute. It is an independent claim, which the statute allows the defendant to consolidate with the plaintiff's action by pleading it, if he chooses, subject to substantially the same defenses as if he had sued upon it separately." Downes v. Worch, 65 Atl. 603, 28 R. I. 99 (quoting and adopting the definition in Goldthwait v. Day, 21 N. E. 359, 149 Mass. 185).

Gaming device or table

The operation of a table, with a "take-off" slot in the center covered by cloth, in a room in a hotel, by defendant and another, who divided their winnings and the "take-off" and permitted divers persons to play upon it for money or property, was a "setting up and keeping of a gaming table," within Rev. St. 1899, § 2194 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1404), as amended by Acts 1901, p. 130, prohibiting the setting up and keeping of gaming tables or devices. State v. Hall, 128 S. W. 745, 747, 228 Mo. 456.

SET UPON

In an instruction that if a passenger was "set upon" by the conductor, etc., "set upon" can only mean "assault," and inescapably implies unwarranted attack. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Williams, 39 South. 489, 490, 87 Miss. 344.

SETTLE—SETTLEMENT

See Actual Settlement; At Settlement; Direct Settlement; During Progress of Settlement; Family Settlement; Final Settlement; Legal Settlement; Monthly Settlement; Power to Audit, Adjust, and Settle; Practically Settles; Reversed and Settled; Social Settlement; Voluntary Settlement.

Offer of settlement distinguished from admission, see Admission.

The word "settle" is defined by Webster to mean "to liquidate; to balance; to close up." Abe Block & Co. v. Largent (Tex.) 135 S. W. 1078, 1080.

The word "settle" has a double meaning and denotes an adjustment and payment. City of Longview v. Capps (Tex.) 123 S. W. 160, 162 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, pp. 6446-6450).

The term "settlement" does not necessarily mean payment or satisfaction, though it may mean that; it frequently meaning adjustment, arrangement. Beall v. Hudson County Water Co., 185 Fed. 179, 182.

A promise by a debtor to pay a debt when her father's estate is settled, if constituting an acknowledgment of the debt to avoid the defense of limitations, is conditional on the settlement of the estate, and mere proof that the debtor has received from her father's estate a sum sufficient to pay the debt, in the absence of evidence of the amount of the bequest to her, is not proof of performance of the condition, and the defense of limitations is not avoided; the word "settlement" involving a finality, and to "settle" a debt meaning to discharge it. Francis v. Rycroft, 132 N. Y. Supp. 14, 16, 148 App. Div. 65.

An assignment of claim against a corporation to the contesting stockholders, or their representatives, for a cash consideration, was a "settlement," within the meaning of a covenant between the claimant and another, having a claim against the corporation, that any settlement which might be made of the assigned claim should include the other claim. Negley v. Simpson, 26 Atl. 1014, 55 N. J. Law, 396.

The word "settled," in a statement by an agent of plaintiff to defendant's attorneys that the case was "settled" and all over, does not necessarily mean that the claim had been adjusted, but means that the claim would not be prosecuted further. A matter is frequently spoken of as "settled" when the meaning is simply that it would not be pressed any further and is no longer ground for controversy. Where affidavits in support of defendant's motion for new trial, in an action in which no answer had been filed, alleged that defendant had employed an attorney to file an answer, but that the answer was not filed because the papers in the case were lost, and that, on the day before the trial, plaintiff's agent told defendant's attorney that the case was "settled," and that defendant's attorney did not know that the papers had been found or the case set for trial, and the answer tendered with the affidavits showed a good defense, the defendant was entitled to a new trial. Head v. Ayer & Lord Tie Co. (Ky.) 70 S. W. 55, 56.

The report made and recorded by commissioners appointed by the fiscal court pursuant to St. 1903, § 4146, to make a "settlement" with the sheriff, which was made in the absence of the sheriff, and after he had absconded, cannot be treated as a "settlement" binding on the sheriff and his sureties. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. Logan County, 84 S. W. 341, 344, 119 Ky. 428.

As adjust

The varied meaning of the word "settlement" has doubtless created some confusion in the minds of many in construing the word as employed in a statute regulating and fixing fees of county clerks for making settlement of each account with the county. Among other meanings, the word "settlement" means an adjustment of accounts, and also the payment of a debt. As here used, it means an adjustment of accounts, the meaning of which presupposes some work or labor of the clerk made a duty by law for him to perform. Greene County v. Light, 77 S. W. 915, 916, 72 Ark. 41.

Where plaintiff, who was a member of a trade exchange, and another member thereof, executed, bought, and sold notes, which provided that the sale was subject to the rules of the exchange, by which plaintiff agreed to deliver wheat on a certain date, and the buyer, on plaintiff's refusal to deliver on that date, without consulting plaintiff, retained a part of the money deposited by him as security for delivery, as damages for plaintiff's breach of contract, on the basis of the value of wheat as fixed by the exchange on the day of delivery, but plaintiff claimed that the price fixed was fictitiously created by the buyer and others by cornering the wheat market, and instituted suits to establish his claim, there was no "settlement" between the parties so as to require plaintiff to surrender the contracts with the buyer under an alleged implied rule of the trade exchange requiring the parties to surrender contracts upon a "settlement"; that term implying an accounting and adjustment and a liquidation in regard to accounts and involving the idea of mutuality. Albers v. Merchants' Exchange of St. Louis, 120 S. W. 139, 142, 140 Mo. App. 446 (quoting and adopting definition in Stand. Dict.).

A showing that plaintiff having a cause of action against defendant and another railroad company for personal injury "settled" an action against the other company does not show such release of liability as discharges defendant, as the word was evidently used in the colloquial sense to indicate that he had adjusted his difference with the other company; the term being loosely used to describe all sorts of compromises, as well as technical discharges and releases. Walsh v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 97 N. E. 408, 410, 204 N. Y. 58, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1137.

As agree to pay

A letter written by defendant to plaintiff with reference to a proposed settlement of their differences, requesting a meeting "to settle" the same, did not constitute such a written acknowledgment of the indebtedness as to start limitations anew; the words "to settle" not being equivalent to an agreement to pay, it not being an unqualified acknowledgment. Parker v. Carter, 120 S. W. 836-839, 91 Ark. 162, 134 Am. St. Rep. 60.

Court's approval required

While a cross-bill cannot be maintained in a suit after it has been "settled," a tenant in common, who has been impleaded in a suit between the cotenants to establish the interest of each and obtain partition, and whose interest is admitted by the pleadings, cannot be deprived of the right to file a cross-bill therein at any time it may become necessary to protect his interest in the property by a settlement between his cotenants. Ulman v. Jaeger's Adm'r, 155 Fed. 1011, 1015.

As discontinuance

The marking of a cause "settled" is equivalent to a discontinuance of the action.

Pomeranz v. Marcus, 87 N. Y. Supp. 941, 93 App. Div. 552.

Fixed conviction or purpose implied

Refusal of a requested charge that, if, after considering all the evidence, the minds of the jury remain in an unsettled state on the issue, the verdict must be for defendant is not erroneous; the word "settle" implying that the mental state, to which it is applied has become fixed, permanent, and not subject to change. Robinson v. Crotwell, 57 South. 23, 175 Ala. 194.

In an instruction that one is competent to make a will when he has "will, mind, and memory to sufficiently understand that he is selecting the person or persons whom he wishes to have his property, and to know his property and the natural objects of his bounty, and his duties to them and the persons upon whom his property is bestowed by the testamentary paper which he signs, and to make such disposition in accordance with a then settled purpose of his own," the words "settled purpose of his own" sufficiently indicate that testator must have had a fixed purpose. Bramel v. Bramel, 39 S. W. 520, 522, 101 Ky. 64.

As limitation

"In conveyancing, 'settlement' is the limitation of real or personal property or the enjoyment thereof to several persons in succession, prescribing the mode of holding, enjoying, and disposing of it." Phinlzy v. Wallace, 71 S. E. 896, 901, 136 Ga. 520.

Mutual consent implied

The word "settle" implies a mutual adjustment of accounts between different parties, and an agreement upon the balance. Thus, where it is shown that defendant and his daughter had figured the accounts constituting defendant's claim, but it does not appear that plaintiffs were either present or had in any manner been consulted, or that the matter was talked over with them, no settlement is shown. Phipps v. Willis, 96 Pac. 866, 869, 870, 53 Or. 190, 18 Ann. Cas. 119 (citing Baxter v. State, 9 Wis. 38; Jackson v. Ely, 49 N. E. 792, 57 Ohio St. 450).

There is not a "settlement or recovery," within an agreement of a plaintiff with his retiring attorney to pay him a certain sum, in case of a settlement or recovery of the claims sued on, where the defendant in the action, not acknowledging the validity of the claim, made a certain payment merely for the purpose of terminating the litigation and disposing of the annoyance from its prosecution. Randel v. Vanderbilt, 78 N. Y. S. 124, 75 App. Div. 313.

As pay

The brother of an embezzler of a certain sum from a bank inclosed his note in a letter to the bank, stating that the note was in settlement of the brother's indebtedness.

Held that, while the word "settlement" may mean the ascertainment or adjustment of a disputed account, it means payment when used in connection with an ascertained debt or liability, and was so used in the letter, and hence there was a consideration for the note. Lomax v. Colorado Nat. Bank, 104 Pac. 85, 87, 46 Colo. 230.

A letter by the maker of a past-due note, in response to a request for payment, which recites that property has not been turned over, that as soon as it is turned over he intends to "settle," and which expresses regret in not being able to do so at the present time, is evidence of a new promise to pay the note; the word "settle" meaning to adjust, to liquidate, to pay, as to settle a bill. Mowry v. Saunders, 80 Atl. 421, 425, 33 R. I. 45, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1344.

A guaranty provided that if the debtor should fail to pay any notes when due, given in "payment" of the debt, the guarantors would make good the amounts which might be due the creditor in accordance with his contract with the debtor. Thereafter the creditor sent a letter acknowledging the receipt of two notes, and continuing, "Inclosed please find statement in settlement." The statement set forth the amount due and credited the debtor with receipt of two notes. To the statement was added, "Settled as above." Held, that it was incumbent on the guarantors to establish the fact that the words "in settlement" in the letter and statement were used in a different sense than the word "payment" in the guaranty. Providence Mach. Co. v. Browning, 52 S. E. 117, 120, 72 S. C. 424.

In a suit to enforce a judgment, the word "settled," as used in an allegation in the answer that the judgment had "long since been settled, and should be released and marked satisfied," is to be construed as meaning payment and satisfaction and such settlement as would extinguish the judgment. Lilly v. Cox, 56 S. E. 900, 901, 61 W. Va. 547 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, pp. 6446, 6447).

The word "settlement," as used in a receipt for payment of annual life insurance premiums, means payment in full. Hoar v. Union Mut. Life Ins. Co., 103 N. Y. Supp. 1059, 1064, 118 App. Div. 416 (citing Stewart v. Union Mut. Life Ins. Co., 49 N. E. 876, 155 N. Y. 257, 42 L. R. A. 147).

Bill of exceptions or case

"Settlement" of a bill of exceptions means an agreement upon the bill between the trial judge and appellant. Tapla v. Williams, 54 South. 613, 614, 172 Ala. 18.

The phrase "settled, allowed, and signed," in a certificate to a case-made, reciting that the case-made contains all the suggestions of amendments and is "by me settled, allowed, and signed," imports examination and consideration by the judge, and includes the judicial operation of the mind of the judge, by which he determines that the statements in the case-made are true. Hill v. Territory, 79 Pac. 757, 759, 15 Okl. 212.

Separate property

Where a life insurance policy was payable to insured's wife, for her sole use and benefit, if she survived until time of payment, her interest in the policy was "settled" upon her as separate property, within a statute permitting married women to dispose of their separate estate, settled upon them for their separate use, and hence a pledge of her interest therein was enforceable. Troendle v. Highleyman, 113 S. W. 812, 814.

SETTLED ACCOUNT

See Account Stated.

SETTLED ESTATE

"The meaning of a 'settled estate,' whether in legal or popular language, contradistinguished from an estate in fee simple, is understood to be one in which the powers of alienation, of devising, and of transmission, according to the ordinary rules of descent, are restrained by the limitations of the settlement. It would be a perversion of language to apply the term 'settled' to an estate taken out of settlement, and brought back to the condition of a fee simple." Phinlzy v. Wallace, 71 S. E. 896, 901, 136 Ga. 520 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.).

SETTLEMENT (In Poor Laws)

As to paupers the word "settlement" is used exclusively in relation to dispensing public charity. City of Augusta v. City of Waterville, 76 Atl. 707, 709, 106 Me. 394 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6451).

One acquired a "settlement," within the Poor Law, in a town where he had resided for a year without requiring support, though, for six years prior to his removal to such town, he had resided and supported himself without public aid in another town. In re Kelly, 95 N. Y. Supp. 53, 56, 46 Misc. Rep. 548.

The poor law (Laws 1896, p. 136, c. 225) defines a "poor person" as one unable to maintain himself. Section 40 provides that every person of full age, who is a resident of a town for one year, and the members of his family, who have not gained a separate settlement, are deemed settled in such town, and shall so remain until he shall have gained a like settlement in some other town, or shall remove from the state and remain therefrom a year. A wife, with her children, went to S., February 13, 1907, from A., where she had resided for more than five years. Her husband, also a resident of A. for five years preceding September 11, 1906, left his family there on that date and went to another state. February 5, 1907, he met his wife at S., and she returned to A., and got her children and belongings, and went to S. as stated, where she resided with her husband until May 23d, when he left her without support and she applied to S., two days later, for assistance, which was given her. When her husband left her at A., she was unable to maintain herself and children, and applied for public assistance, which she received on November 3 and December 5, 1906, and January 4, 1907; the orders received by her being for necessities and paid by A. Held, that the wife had a "settlement" in A., and was a "poor person" there when she went to S., and that the city of A. remained and was liable for the support furnished by the city of S. Onondaga County v. City of Amsterdam, 117 N. Y. Supp. 1121, 1123, 64 Misc. Rep. 181.

SETTLEMENT (Public Lands)

The "settlement" or "improvement" upon land with a view to receiving water for agricultural purposes, as provided for in section 5, art. 15, of the Constitution, means an actual settlement or an actual improvement thereon, and a constructive settlement will not meet the purpose or requirements of the Constitution. Mellen v. Great Western Beet Sugar Co., 122 Pac. 30, 32, 21 Idaho, 353, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 621.

The word "settle," in Act Cong. May 2, 1890, c. 182, § 20, 26 Stat. 91, creating the territory of Oklahoma, and providing that all persons who shall "settle" on land in the territory under the provisions of the homestead laws and of the act shall be required to select the same in square form, and no person who shall at the time be seised in fee simple of 160 acres of land in any state or territory shall be entitled to enter land in the territory, as applied to the initiation of a right to public lands, has a well-defined and settled meaning, and he who "settles" on public land, under the provisions of the homestead law, must select the same in square form, and he who is seised in fee simple of 160 acres of land in any state or territory shall not be qualified to enter land in the territory. Gourley v. Countryman, 90 Pac. 427, 430, 18 Okl. 220.

Where an application to purchase several sections of school land had written below the description the words "settlement" is on No. 4," it was not sufficient to indicate that that was the applicant's home section, and that he was residing thereon at the time of application. Goethal v. Read, 81 S. W. 592, 594, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 461.

To "settle" upon land means to fix one's place of residence thereon. An unmarried man who went on school land for the purpose of making it his home, taking with him all his household goods and means of living, and treating his covered wagon as his place of abode until he constructed a house, was an actual settler. Smith v. Florence, 96 S. W. 1096, 1097, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 557 (quoting and adopting definition in Bratton v. Cross, 22 Kan. 673).

SETTLER

See Actual Settler.

The word "settlers," in the regulations of the General Land Office authorized by Rev. St. § 2478, is defined to be persons who have attached themselves permanently to the soil. An indictment which charges accused with having feloniously and falsely made, forged, and uttered a certain affidavit purporting to be the affidavit of a person named, a pretended "settler" on unsurveyed public lands, and which sets out the affidavit in which it is stated that affiant is such "settler," has made improvements, and then charges that it was so made by accused with intent to file the same in the office of a surveyor general of the United States to be used as a basis for letting a contract for surveying said lands described therein, and with a further intent that it should be transmitted to the General Land Office for the purpose of obtaining the approval of and payment for said survey, charges an offense of forging a writing for the purpose of obtaining or enabling others to obtain money from the United States. Meldrum v. United States, 151 Fed. 177, 180, 80 C. C. A. 545, 10 Ann. Cas. 324.

A "settler" upon land is one who resides thereon. An unmarried man who went on school land for the purpose of making it his home, taking with him all his household goods and means of living, and treating his covered wagon as his place of abode until he constructed a house, was an actual settler. Smith v. Florence, 96 S. W. 1096, 1097, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 557 (quoting and adopting definition in Bratton v. Cross, 22 Kan. 673).

SETTLING OF DIFFERENCES

An intention to "settle by the payment of differences," "betting on future prices," or "closing up without delivery by the payment of differences" is equivalent to and means an intention by one who has sold for future delivery to buy on the same board for the same delivery, and to offset the purchase against the sale and receive or pay the difference. Carson v. Milwaukee Produce Co., 113 N. W. 393, 395, 133 Wis. 85.

SEVERABLE CONTRACT

See Entire Contract.

A "severable contract" is one in its nature and purpose susceptible of division and apportionment, having two or more parts in respect to matters and things contemplated and embraced by it, not necessarily dependent upon each other, nor is it intended by the parties that they shall be. Cantwell v. Crawley, 86 S. W. 251, 254, 188 Mo. 44 (quoting and adopting definition in Wooten v. Walters, 14 S. E. 734, 736, 110 N. C. 251); Packard &

Field v. Byrd, 51 S. E. 678, 679, 73 S. C. 1; Sterling v. Gregory, 85 Pac. 305, 306, 149 Cal. 117 (quoting and adopting the definition in Wooten v. Walters, 14 S. E. 734, 736, 110 N. C. 251).

The question whether a contract is entire or severable is primarily one of intent, but, as a general rule, where the part to be performed by one party consists of several distinct items and the price to be paid is apportioned to each item according to the value thereof, and not as a part of a round sum, the contract will be regarded as "severable." Barlow Mfg. Co. v. Stone, 86 N. E. 306, 307, 200 Mass. 158.

A "severable contract" is one, the consideration of which is, by its terms, susceptible of division and apportionment. There is, in such contract, no entirety of consideration on either side constituting a condition of the agreement, and neither party can claim more than equivalent for the actual consideration on his part. Bradford & Carson v. Montgomery Furniture Co., 92 S. W. 1104, 1109, 115 Tenn. 610, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 979.

A contract to furnish brick required by a contractor to construct sidewalks for a city, the price to be paid monthly for those furnished during the month, as they were used, is "severable," and the failure of the purchaser to pay an installment does not release the seller from the contract. Iowa Brick Mfg. Co. v. Herrick, 102 N. W. 787, 788, 126 Iowa, 721 (citing and following Myer & Dostal v. Wheeler & Co., 21 N. W. 692, 65 Iowa, 390; Osgood v. Bauder & Co., 39 N. W. 887, 75 Iowa, 550, 1 L. R. A. 655; Hansen & Linehan v. Consumers' Steam Heating Co., 34 N. W. 495, 73 Iowa, 77).

In case of a contract naturally and accurately severable, such as a contract for the sale of a bill of goods at certain prices for each article, courts incline to hold the contract "severable," and to grant a recovery for that portion of the goods actually delivered, less damages for the nondelivery of any portion not delivered; but, if it appears by express terms or necessary implication that the intent was to make payment of the consideration depend on delivery of all the articles, the contract will be held "entire," though the consideration may be measured by units and be actually severable. Contracts for the sale of goods naturally severable, like the sale of a quantity of gloves of different kinds at fixed prices, will not be held entire, in absence of express or implied provision to that effect, or persuasive circumstances showing such is the intent. The entirety of a contract of sale is a question of intent, which severability of the subject-matter and measurement of consideration by units may assist in determining, but not necessarily determine. National Knitting Co. v. Bouton & Germain Co., 123 N. W. 624, 625, 141 Wis. 63.

SEVERABLE CONTROVERSY

Plaintiff corporation instituted suit against defendant railroad company, a non-citizen, and against the railroad company's engineer, a citizen of the same state as plaintiff, alleging the burning of plaintiff's warehouse by the joint negligence of the railroad company and the engineer, and that the fire was caused by the engineer's operation of an engine equipped with an improper spark arrester, also alleging that the engineer was negligent in handling the engine at the time and place alleged, so as to cause a great and unnecessary amount of sparks to be emitted. Held, that the engineer was not a necessary party to the determination of the controversy between plaintiff and the railroad company, the substantial defendant, since, if the locomotive had been equipped with a proper spark arrester, no conduct of the engineer could have caused the emission of sufficient sparks to cause a fire; and hence the controversy between plaintiff and the railroad company was "severable" and removable to the federal courts. Bainbridge Grocery Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 182 Fed. 276, 279.

SEVERAL

According to Webster, the word "several" means "separate," "distinct." Commonwealth v. Jones (Ky.) 84 S. W. 305, 307.

As each

Power given by Const. art. 3, § 5, to the "several" counties to assess and impose taxes for county purposes, permits the authorization of a single county by a special act. Kroegel v. Whyte, 56 South. 498, 499, 62 Fla. 527.

As more than one

"Several" is defined as being of an indefinite number, more than one or two, yet not large, divers. Black v. Brooks (Tex.) 129 S. W. 177, 178.

The word "several," when used to express time by the hour, as in the phrase "several hours before" an event, does not mean a fractional part of an hour, but means an uncertain number of hours, not less than two. Western Union Tel. Co. v. De Andrea, 100 S. W. 977, 979, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 395.

As more than two

The word "several" means more than two, but not very many. Lunt v. Post Printing & Publishing Co., 110 Pac. 203, 204, 48 Colo. 316, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 60, 21 Ann. Cas. 492.

One who alleges that slanderous words were spoken in the presence of "divers" persons, must prove that the words were spoken in the presence of at least three persons; the word "divers" meaning "several," which means any number more than two. Day v. Becker (Tex.) 145 S. W. 1197, 1199.

As respective

'Under a will providing that, in case of failure of all the objects of the several trusts created by the will, then all the then remaining property in the several trusts shall vest in and be distributed to the persons who, for the time being, shall be entitled to the same under the intestate law, the word "several" means "respective," so that, as each trust shall respectively fail in its object, the trust fund to which it applies shall go to the next of kin of testatrix at the time of the failure. Brown v. Hawkins, 59 Atl. 78, 79, 26 R. I. 400.

SEVERAL OBLIGATION

"A 'several obligation' is one by which one individual, or, if there be more, several individuals, bind themselves separately to perform the engagement." United States v. Green, 136 Fed. 618, 647 (quoting 2 Bouv. Law Dict.).

SEVERALLY

See Jointly and Severally.

As respectively

The power to call a term was conferred originally upon the justices of the Supreme Court, not acting collectively or together, but "severally"; that is, upon each individual acting as circuit judge in his respective district, and in reference to the court over which he had authority to preside, and not in respect to the circuit court of some other district of which he was not primarily ex officio the judge. "Severally" has been construed to be equivalent in meaning to "respectively." Hanley v. City of Medford, 108 Pac. 188, 192, 56 Or. 171.

SEVERALTY

Share and share alike as creating tenancy in severalty, see Share and Share Alike.

SEVERANCE FROM FREEHOLD

See Malicious Severance from Freehold.

SEVERE

See Very Severe.

The expression of a nonexpert witness that the jerk or jolt of a train was "severe" has no probative value. Hawk v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 108 S. W. 1119, 1121, 130 Mo. App. 658 (citing and adopting Guffey v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 53 Mo. App. 462; Hedrick v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 93 S. W. 268, 195 Mo. 104, 6 Ann. Cas. 793); Young v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. (Mo.) 84 S. W. 175, 177.

SEVERE ILLNESS OR SICKNESS

Whether attacks of biliousness and indigestion constitute a "severe illness," within the meaning of an interrogatory, in an application for life insurance, is a question for the jury and not for the court. Col-lins v. Catholic Order of Foresters, 88 N. E. 87, 89, 43 Ind. App. 549.

SEW

The term "sewed," as a method of book-binding, contemplates the folding and placing of one "signature" (a sheet of paper to be folded into 4, 8, or 16 pages) on another until the back is completed, then the cutting of grooves in the back in which cords are inserted, and the sewing of each signature to such cords. State v. Young, 110 N. W. 202, 294, 134 Iowa, 505, 13 Ann. Cas. 345.

SEWAGE

A city constructed an underground tile drain that collected surface water and drainage from houses, which ran from the drain into an open ditch and thence into a gully near the corner of plaintiff's residence property, which was low ground. The water in plaintiff's well, which was within 16 feet of the gully, was affected by the condition of the water in the ditch. Held, that water is "sewage," and the city may be enjoined from discharging it into the gully, although the water in plaintiff's well at its best is not good. Ulmen v. Town of Mt. Angel, 112 Pac. 529, 530, 57 Or. 547, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 140.

Whatever may be the true and definite meaning of the word "sewage," if it has one, either generally or when ascertained from its use in any given connection, it was held that dyestuff and feculent matter from open water-closets washed into a river by the surface drainage do not constitute "sewage," within Revisal 1905, § 3051, prohibiting the discharge of sewage into any stream from which a public drinking supply is taken. City of Durham v. Eno Cotton Mills, 57 S. E. 465, 466, 144 N. C. 705, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1163.

SEWER

See New Sewer; Public Sewer; Storm Sewer.

A "sewer" is defined to mean a large and generally, though not always, underground passage (or conduit) for fluid and feculent matter from a house or houses to some other locality, usually the place of discharge, and also to mean a closed or covered waterway for conveying and discharging filth, refuse, and foul matter, liquid or solid, while ditches are drains which are or may be open and so arranged as to take away surface water. City of Durham v. Eno Cotton Mills, 57 S. E. 465, 466, 144 N. C. 705, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1163 (citing State Board of Health v. City of Jersey City, 35 Atl. 835, 55 N. J. Eq. 116; 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6457 et seq.). See, also, Mound City Land & Stock Co. v. Miller,

SEXUAL CRIMES

The term "sexual crimes" includes the crime of rape. Cecil v. Territory, 82 Pac. 654, 655, 16 Okl. 197, 8 Ann. Cas. 457.

SEXUAL INTERCOURSE

As crime, see Crime.

Refusal of as cruelty, see Cruelty.

See, also, Unlawful Intercourse.

In an action for breach of promise of marriage, where seduction was not pleaded, an instruction not to consider as an element of damages the "result" of any "sexual relations" between the parties was not objectionable as only excluding the result of "sexual intercourse," viz., conception and birth of an illegitimate child; but as "sexual relations" is not synonymous with "sexual intercourse," but the latter may be regarded as a result of the former, the instruction excluded all consideration of "sexual intercourse." Herriman v. Layman, 92 N. W. 710, 711, 118 Iowa, 590.

SHAD FISH

Any shad fish, see Any.

SHADE TREES

Oak and hickory trees standing on the border of a public highway and on the land of an owner abutting on the highway are "shade trees" within Ky. St. 1903, § 1257, punishing the cutting down of shade trees. Russellville Home Tel. Co. v. Commonwealth, 109 S. W. 340, 33 Ky. Law Rep. 132.

SHADOWGRAPH

A "shadowgraph" is a silhouette taken by the photographic process. Frankel v. German Tyrolean Alps Co., 97 S. W. 961, 962, 121 Mo. App. 51.

SHADOWING

See Rough Shadowing.

SHAFT

See Line Shaft; Main Shaft.

As mine shaft

A shaft in process of completion is not within the meaning of the term "shaft," as used in the miner's act, prescribing certain equipment for every mine shaft. Cox v. Mount Olive & Staunton Coal Co., 127 Ill. App. 24, 25.

In an action under the mining act (Hurd's Rev. St. 1908, c. 93), for the death of an employé by defendant's violation of section 4 in failing to have flanges on the drum of a hoisting engine used in sinking an air shaft, special findings that death was caused during the construction work preparatory to opening a coal mine, and that the shaft was not in use in connection with the mining of coal or for ventilating in coal mine or for an escapement shaft, do not bring defendant's property within section 34, defining "mine" and "coal mine" as all parts of the property of a mining plant which contribute directly or indirectly to the mining of coal, and defining "shaft" as any opening which is or may be used for ventilation or escapement, or for hoisting men in connection with mining, and are therefore so inconsistent with a general verdict for plaintiff that judgment for defendant is proper. Moore v. Dering Coal Co., 89 N. E. 674, 675, 242 Ill. 84.

As part of bone

Technical words, such as the word "shaft," used as referring to a part of a human bone, are to be interpreted as usually understood by persons in the profession or business to which they relate. Peterson v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 101 N. W. 289, 290, 125 Iowa, 562, 67 L. R. A. 631.

As part of machine

The word "shaft" is defined as an axle, mandrel, arbor, or other long and usually cylindrical bar, especially if rotating, and subject to torsional stress; a lengthy shafting. Cole v. North American Lead Co., 112 S. W. 753, 754, 130 Mo. App. 253; Id., 144 S. W. 855, 240 Mo. 397.

The word "shaft," as used in connection with or applied to factories, is a revolving bar to convey the force which is generated by some prime mover to the different working machines, and a "line or main shaft" is a bar of considerable length, and usually bearing a number of pulleys by which power is transmitted to countershafts. Hohenstein-Hartmetz Furniture Co. v. Matthews, 92 N. E. 196, 199, 46 Ind. App. 616.

Same—Conveyor

A conveyor, consisting of a long, cylindrical, rotating rod, to which flanges are attached, is a "shafting" or machinery, within the factory act (Acts 1899, p. 234, c. 142, § 9; Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7087i), providing that all "shafting" and machinery shall be guarded. United States Cement Co. v. Cooper (Ind.) 82 N. E. 981, 983.

Same—Countershaft

Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 8029, providing that "all vats, pans, saws, planers, cogs, gearing, belting, shafting, set screws and machinery of every description" shall be properly guarded, includes countershafts under the general term "shafting." Hohenstein-Hartmetz Furniture Co. v. Matthews, 92 N. E. 196, 198, 46 Ind. App. 616.

Same—Knives

The knives of the head of a machine used to surface different sized moldings are not within St. 1898, § 1636j, requiring the guarding of "shafting and gearing," and the statute does not require the master to guard such knives. Kruck v. Wilbur Lumber Co., 133 N. W. 1117, 1119, 148 Wis. 76.

Rev. St. 1899, § 6433, requiring the belting, shafting, gearing, and drums in all manufacturing establishments, when so placed as to be dangerous to employes while engaged in their ordinary duties, to be safely guarded, when possible, does not apply to the working parts of a machine, but only to the parts used to transmit power, such as shafting, etc.; hence the rotating cylinder or axle on which the knives of a planing machine are fixed is not "shafting," so as to require it to be guarded; that term ordinarily meaning a system of rods or shafts, usually cylindrical, used for communicating power from an engine to machines, sometimes being different in meaning from "shaft," which may mean any axle or other long and usually cylindrical bar, especially if rotating. Cole v. North American Lead Co., 144 S. W. 855, 240 Mo. 397; Id., 112 S. W. 753, 130 Mo. App. 253.

Same—Pulley

Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 8029, requiring shafting to be properly guarded, applies to pulleys running on the "shafts." Hohenstein-Hartmetz Furniture Co. v. Matthews, 92 N. E. 196, 198, 46 Ind. App. 616.

Same—Set screw

A set screw, by which a circular knife is attached to a shaft in a paper mill, is a part of the shafting, within the meaning of St. 1898, § 1636j, providing that all shafting, etc., so located as to be dangerous to employes in the discharge of their duties shall be securely guarded or fenced by the owner or manager thereof. Van de Bogart v. Marinette & Menominee Paper Co., 112 N. W. 443, 447, 132 Wis. 367.

SHALE

As mineral, see Mineral.

SHALL*As permissive or mandatory

May construed as shall, see May.

Shall as permissive or mandatory when used in statutes, see Shall (In Statutes as Permissive or Mandatory).

In a contract providing that, if the parties are unable to agree as to the amount due, the same shall be referred to arbitrators, the word "shall" does not mean that a submission to arbitration would be a condition precedent to action on the contract. Adams v. Haigler, 51 S. E. 638, 640, 123 Ga. 659.

Complainant owned a coal yard, through which defendant operated a switch track. The railroad claimed to own the rails and ties, and, complainant refusing to concede that such was the fact, negotiations were entered into for the execution of a contract, in which complainant should concede to the railroad company a right of way and its ownership of the track, in consideration of which the railroad company should maintain the track and afford complainant service. Complainant having refused to route all possible traffic over defendant's road, further negotiations resulted in a contract by which, in consideration of a dollar paid by the railroad company, complainant admitted that it was the lawful owner of the track, agreeing that defendant, its successors and assigns, "shall and may have the right" to maintain and operate the side track until complainant, his heirs and assigns, shall serve on the railway company 60 days' notice to remove the same. This contract was signed only by complainant and certain trustees under a mortgage deed to the property, and not by the railroad company. Held, that the words "shall and may" as so used should not be construed as implying an absolute obligation on the part of the railway company, and that complainant was not entitled to restrain the railroad company from refusing to maintain the track. Brown v. Southern Ry. Co., 187 Fed. 481, 484, 109 C. C. A. 333.

As indicating future, present, or past

Rev. Laws, c. 80, § 6, providing that all persons who are absent from the commonwealth for ten consecutive years "shall" lose their settlements, is not retroactive. The use of the word "shall" in the clause in question is in contrast with the words "are hereby defeated and declared to be lost," found in the earlier clause of the section which deals with past settlements. In other words, so far as language goes, the two clauses are not similar, but are in contrast with each other, and there is nothing to take this section out of the general rule that, even in a pauper settlement act, the word "shall" prima facie refers to the future. City of Lawrence v. Town of Methuen, 73 N. E. 860, 187 Mass. 592 (citing City of Worcester v. Inhabitants of Barre, 138 Mass. 101).

Act July 1, 1905 (Laws 1905, p. 320) § 3, providing that no person, unless previously registered or licensed to practice dentistry, "shall begin" the practice of dentistry without obtaining a license, is applicable to one who continued, after the act took effect, the illegal practice of dentistry previously begun. Kettles v. People, 77 N. E. 472, 473, 221 Ill. 221.

SHALL (In Statutes as Permissive or Mandatory)

Generally the word "shall" is mandatory in its legal acceptance. Mau v. Stoner, 83 Pac. 218, 219, 14 Wyo. 183.

The word "may," in every act imposing a duty, means "shall." State ex rel. Purdin v. Gault, 105 Pac. 242, 243, 56 Wash. 140.

"Shall" ought undoubtedly to be construed as meaning "must," for the purpose of sustaining or enforcing an existing right; but it need not be for creating a new one." West Wisconsin R. Co. v. Foley, 94 U. S. 100, 103, 24 L. Ed. 71.

"The word 'shall' may be held to be merely directory when no advantage is lost, when no right is destroyed, when no benefit is sacrificed, either to the public or the individual, by giving it that construction. But, if any right to any one depends upon giving the word an imperative construction, the presumption is that the word was used in reference to such right or benefit. But, where no right or benefit to any one depends upon the imperative use of the word, it may be held to be directory merely." Montgomery v. Henry, 39 South. 507, 509, 144 Ala. 629, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 656, 6 Ann. Cas. 965 (quoting and adopting definition in Wheeler v. City of Chicago, 24 Ill. 105, 76 Am. Dec. 736; Hickok v. Thayer, 49 Vt. 372).

Words like "may," "must," "shall," etc., are constantly used in statutes without intending that they shall be taken literally, and in their construction the object evidently designed to be reached limits and controls the literal import of the terms and phrases employed. Fields v. United States, 27 App. D. C. 433, 440.

The mandatory word "shall" may often be treated as merely permissive, when necessary to sustain a statute or accomplish its purpose. People ex rel. Barone v. Fox, 129 N. Y. Supp. 646, 144 App. Div. 611.

Statutes which, when literally construed, are mandatory may be held directory, and vice versa, so that the word "shall" or "must" may under some circumstances be construed as "may." In re Chadbourne's Estate, 114 Pac. 1012, 1014, 15 Cal. App. 363 (citing In re Ballentine's Estate, 45 Cal. 699; Hayes v. Los Angeles County, 33 Pac. 766, 99 Cal. 74; Suth. St. Const. 634; Wallace v. Feely [N. Y.] 61 How. Prac. 225; Merrill v. Shaw, 5 Minn. 148 [Gil. 113]; In re Thurber's Estate, 56 N.

E. 631, 162 N. Y. 244; Stone v. Pratt, 35 N. Y. Supp. 519, 90 Hun, 39; First Nat. Bank of Seneca v. Lyman, 53 Pac. 125, 59 Kan. 410; Cooke v. Spears, 2 Cal. 409, 56 Am. Dec. 348; People ex rel. Chipperfield v. Sanitary Dist. of Chicago, 56 N. E. 953, 184 Ill. 597).

The presumption is that the word "shall" in a statute is used in an imperative, and not in a directory, sense. If a different interpretation is sought, it must rest upon something in the character of the legislation or in the context which will justify a different meaning. Haythorn v. Van Keuren & Son, 74 Atl. 502, 504, 79 N. J. Law, 101; Board of Finance of School City of Aurora v. People's Nat. Bank of Lawrenceburg, 89 N. E. 904, 905, 44 Ind. App. 578.

The word "shall," as generally used in statutes, is mandatory, but since the intention of an act will prevail over the literal sense of its terms, the word as used in Act June 21, 1895 (Laws 1895, p. 113, § 20), providing that a loan association may be reorganized at a meeting of its stockholders for that purpose, and that "notice of such a meeting shall be given," etc., is merely directory: the essential object of the law being that the reorganization should not take place without the assent of the stockholders. Holmes v. Royal Loan Ass'n, 107 S. W. 1005, 1007, 128 Mo. App. 329.

Levee Act, § 17b (Hurd's Rev. St. 1909, c. 42), in so far as it declares that a jury impaneled to spread an assessment of benefits by drainage improvements shall return a verdict which "shall" produce the total sum of the estimated cost of the proposed work, is not unconstitutional as requiring the jury to assess an arbitrary sum, regardless of benefits, since the word "shall" should be construed as though used in the sense of "may," rendering the statute directory only. Spring Creek Drainage Dist. v. Elgin, J. & E. R. Co., 94 N. E. 529, 542, 249 Ill. 260.

Under Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 32, § 3, relative to the organization of corporations, and providing that notice of the first meeting of subscribers to capital stock, for the purpose of electing directors, etc., shall be given by depositing in the post office a written or printed notice addressed to each subscriber, at least 10 days before the time fixed for the meeting, and section 4 requiring a copy of the notice to be included in the report made to the Secretary of State, the failure to give such notice, where all the subscribers to stock waived it in writing, did not render the organization of the corporation defective, so as to bring the board of directors within section 18, declaring that if directors of any corporation assume to exercise corporate powers, or use the name of the corporation, without complying with the act, they shall be personally liable for all debts incurred by them in the name of the corporation. The mere fact that the word "shall" is used in the statute in providing for the notice does not render the provision mandatory. J. W. Butler Paper Co. v. Cleveland, 77 N. E. 99, 100, 220 Ill. 128, 110 Am. St. Rep. 230.

The word "shall," in Tenement House Act N. Y. (Laws 1901, p. 902, c. 334, § 56), is mandatory in every instance, and denotes that the house shall be maintained in all respects according to the mandate. People ex rel. Ungrich v. Crain, 95 N. Y. Supp. 906, 908, 47 Misc. Rep. 281.

In an act providing for the establishment of drainage districts, the word "shall" can properly be read as "may." Sisson v. Board of Sup'rs of Buena Vista County, 104 N. W. 454, 461, 128 Iowa, 442, 70 L. R. A. 440.

In Rev. St. 1909, § 7109, providing that fraternal beneficiary associations, doing business on a lodge system, shall pay death benefits to the families, heirs, blood relatives, affianced husband or affianced wife of, or to persons dependent on, the member, the word "shall" was not intended in a mandatory sense so as to require beneficial associations to include all the classes of beneficiaries specified; and hence such an association was authorized to limit the payment of its benefits to blood relatives and members of the family of the insured, and to persons dependent on him. State ex rel. v. Knights of Father Matthew, 144 S. W. 896, 164 Mo. App. 361.

In Code Supp. 1910, p. 619, providing that, in the case of benefit societies, payment of death benefits shall be to families, heirs, blood relatives, affianced husband or wife, or to persons dependent on the member, as may be designated by him, or to such other beneficiaries as may be permitted by the laws of the state in which the society is chartered, etc., the word "shall" should be construed "may," so that the statute did not extend the class of persons capable of receiving benefits under the charter of an association, providing that benefits should be paid to the nearest relative, or such other dependent of the member as might be designated according to the society's by-laws, etc. Pettus v. Hendricks, 74 S. E. 191, 193, 113 Va. 326 (citing Words and Phrases, "shall").

The word "shall," as used in a statute providing that certain offices shall be declared vacant on the failure of the official to file a bond within a month after his election, will be construed to mean "may." In re Supervisor of Nether Providence Tp., 64 Atl. 443, 444, 215 Pa. 119.

Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7087e, provides that it shall be the duty of factory owners to inclose elevator shafts and install automatic trapdoors, if, in the opinion of the chief inspector, safety requires it, and declares that the inspector shall inspect the cable, gearing, or other apparatus of elevators in the establishments and require that the same be kept in safe condition with proper safety devices.

Held, that such section, in so far as it provides for the installation of safety devices, is not mandatory because the word "shall" is used, and a factory owner is not bound to install safety devices on elevators, unless required to do so by the inspector. Reliance Mfg. Co. v. Langley, 82 N. E. 114, 116, 41 Ind. App. 175.

Rev. St. 1898, § 1952, provides that life insurance companies whose members are entitled to share in the surplus cumulations "may" make distribution thereof annually or once in two, three, four, or five years, and in determining the amount of surplus to be distributed there "shall" be reserved an amount equal to the net value of the outstanding policies. The section is the same as Laws 1870, p. 107, c. 59, § 14, the purpose of which, as appears from instructions to the legislative committee which reported the bill, was to afford proper "protection to policy holders" by safeguard against insolvency of insurance companies by requiring the cumulation of the reserve fund. Held, that the use of the word "shall" in the section in relation to the reserve fund is imperative, while "may" in relation to distribution of the surplus is permissive, and having been so construed by the state officials and insurance companies for more than 30 years, the license of an insurance company will not be revoked for deferring the distribution of the surplus more than five years. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Host, 102 N. W. 579-583, 584, 124 Wis. 657, 4 Ann. Cas. 413.

Judicial duties and proceedings

The provision of Code, § 242, that the record of the proceedings of the district court "shall be signed by the judge," is directory only. Donnelly v. Smith, 103 N. W. 776, 777, 128 Iowa, 257.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 4422, providing that the judge "shall" allow a reasonable fee to the attorney bringing suit, there is no discretion in the matter except as to the amount of fees to be given. Whitsett v. Wamack, 69 S. W. 24, 25, 95 Mo. App. 296.

The Legislature, by using the term "shall grant a change of judge" in Sess. Laws 1907-08, c. 68, art. 1, § 10, p. 592, instead of the term "may on application of either party, change the place of trial to some county where such objection does not exist," in view of the construction of the word "may" in the case of Kansas Pacific Ry. v. Reynolds, 8 Kan. 630, did not render the statute in that respect any more mandatory, and there can be no special significance in the use of the word "shall" instead of the word "may." State ex rel. Smith v. Brown, 103 Pac. 762, 765, 24 Okl. 433.

"Shall," as used in Gen. St. 1902, § 237, providing that, when any person having property shall be found incapable of managing his affairs, the court of probate shall appoint a conservator of such person, etc., does not exclude a reasonable discretion on the part of the court of probate or of the superior court on appeal in the appointment of such conservators. Appeal of Wentz, 56 Atl. 625, 626, 76 Conn. 405.

Act No. 56, p. 135, of 1904, provides that, in cases appealed to the wrong courts, the judges "shall have the right" to transfer the appeals to the proper tribunals, instead of dismissing them. If the lawmakers had intended that the transfers, in such cases, should be obligatory, they would no doubt have so expressed themselves. As the law reads, it lies within the sound discretion of the court to which the appeal is taken to transfer or dismiss it. In the instant case, the latter is found to be the proper course to pursue. Samuel Israelite Baptist Church v. Thomas, 41 South. 564, 565, 117 La. 253.

In Code 1904, § 2544, providing that a person interested in a testator's estate may within two years proceed by bill in equity to impeach or establish the will, on which bill a trial by jury shall be ordered, the word "shall" should be construed in the sense of "may," and hence the section did not prevent a waiver of trial by jury by the parties. Meade v. Meade, 69 S. E. 330, 331, 111 Va. 451.

Kirby's Dig. § 2256, provides that upon an indictment being found, if the defendant is not in custody or on bail, the court shall forthwith make an order for process to be issued thereon, designating whether for arrest or summons, and if for arrest, and the offense is bailable, the bail shall be fixed. Preceding sections provide that process on an indictment consists of writs for arresting or summoning the defendant, and that a process of arrest may be issued by the clerk upon the order of the court. Subsequent sections prescribe the form of bench warrant and the summons, and that the summons shall only be issued on indictments for misdemeanor, where the court has not ordered a bench warrant. Section 2264 provides that the court may order a bench warrant to be issued on any indictment. Section 7817 provides that all proceedings under the Code and its provisions shall be liberally construed. Held, that the language in section 2256 "the court shall forthwith make an order for process to be issued thereon" is not mandatory upon the circuit court, but is directory merely. State v. Grace, 136 S. W. 670, 98 Ark. 505.

Code Civ. Proc. § 134, as amended March 19, 1907 (St. p. 681, c. 358, § 1), provides that no court other than the Supreme Court "must" be open on any of the holidays mentioned in section 10, except to give instructions to juries on their request, to receive a verdict or discharge a jury, or for the exercise of the powers of a magistrate in a criminal action, and that injunctions and writs of prohibition may be issued on any day.

Previous to the amendment of 1907 the section read no court "shall" be open nor shall any judicial business be transacted, etc., provided that the Supreme Court and the superior courts shall always be open for the transaction of business, and that injunctions and writs of prohibition may be issued on any day. Among the holidays mentioned in section 10 is any day appointed by the Governor for a holiday. Section 133 provides that courts of justice may be held and judicial business transacted on any day except as provided in section 134. Section 135 provides that, if any day mentioned in section 134 happens to be the day appointed for the holding of a court or to which it is adjourned, it shall be deemed appointed for or adjourned to the next day. Held, that section 134 as amended March 19, 1907, still means what it has always meant, that the superior court shall not on a legal holiday transact any judicial business outside of the constitutional and statutory exceptions, notwithstanding the substitution of the word "must" for "shall"; and hence a sentence pronounced on a day appointed by the Governor as a legal holiday was void. Ex parte Smith, 93 Pac. 191, 193, 194, 152 Cal. 566.

The words "shall" and "may," as used in the Utah Constitution, providing that certain officers "shall be conservators of the peace, and may hold preliminary examinations," are used advisably, and each is to be understood in its usual and ordinary sense, and a statute conferring jurisdiction on other officers to act as committing magistrates is not in conflict with the Constitution. State v. Shockley, 80 Pac. 865, 868, 29 Utah, 25, 110 Am. St. Rep. 639 (quoting and adopting 8 Cyc. 586).

Rev. St. 1898, § 4222, subd. 5, requiring, as a condition precedent to an action for injuries, that a notice of the injuries, etc., "shall" be served on one claimed to be responsible in the manner required for service of summons in courts of record, is mandatory, and service on the claim agent of the railroad company is insufficient; the word "shall" not meaning "may." Smith v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 102 N. W. 336, 337, 124 Wis. 120.

In Gen. St. 1894, § 7181, providing that the court shall not excuse from service, upon either the grand or petit jury, any person duly drawn and summoned, except upon the ground that the person seeking to be excused is either physically or mentally unable or unfit, in the opinion of the court, to attend or serve as a juror, or by reason of serious sickness of some immediate member of the family of the person so summoned, the word "shall" is to be construed as if it were permissive rather than mandatory, as there are many reasons why a juror may be excused by authority of the court in cases not mentioned. State v. Strait, 102 N. W. 913, 914, 915, 94 Minn. 384.

The word "shall," as used in Acts 1903, p. 341, c. 193, § 8, providing that the Supreme and Appellate Courts shall carefully consider and weigh the evidence in all cases not now or hereafter triable by jury, is used in the sense of "may." Parkison v. Thompson, 73 N. E. 109, 111, 164 Ind. 609, 3 Ann. Cas. 677.

Administration Act (1 Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896, p. 269, c. 3) § 1, providing that, when a will has been duly proved, the county court "shall" issue letters testamentary thereon to the executor named in the will, is mandatory when the person named as executor accepts the trust, gives bonds to discharge the same, and is legally competent. Clark v. Patterson, 73 N. E. 806, 808, 214 Ill. 533, 105 Am. St. Rep. 127.

The word "shall," as used in Act No. 108, p. 155, of 1898, providing that appeals in criminal cases shall be taken by motion, either verbally or in writing, in open court within three days after sentence has been pronounced, is not used to give discretion, but to require, peremptorily, that all appeals shall be taken three days after sentence. The statute adopted a positive and absolute rule in which public interest is concerned and which cannot be waived under any of the defining powers given to the prosecution. State v. Vicknair, 43 South. 635, 637, 118 La. 963 (citing State v. Moore, 26 South. 1001, 52 La. Ann. 606).

Rev. St. 1899, § 1264, providing that, in proceedings to condemn land, the owners of all such parcels as lie within the county or circuit shall be made parties defendant, providing that it shall not be necessary to make any persons parties defendant unless they are either in actual possession of the premises to be affected or have a title appearing of record, is mandatory, and not to be construed as merely directory, in order to harmonize with section 1267, providing that any number of owners resident in the same county or circuit may be joined in one petition. The word "necessary" indicates that the lawmakers intended "shall be" to mean an imperative command. Kansas City Interurban R. Co. v. Davis, 95 S. W. 881, 884, 197 Mo. 669, 114 Am. St. Rep. 790.

The phrase "shall not be made," in Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 4624, providing that an order to revive an action in the names of the representatives or successors of the plaintiff may be made forthwith, but shall not be made without the consent of the defendant after the expiration of one year from the time the order might have been made, is peremptorily prohibitive. It imposes an absolute prohibition against the granting of an order after the lapse of one year after the time when it might have been made. At the expiration of that time the right ceases to exist. Glazier v. Heneybuss, 91 Pac. 872, 874, 19 Okl. 316.

Legislative duties

Const. art. 2, § 20, declaring that "the style of the laws of this state shall be," etc., is mandatory, and must be complied with; the word "shall" being equivalent to "must." State ex rel. v. Burrow, 104 S. W. 526, 529, 119 Tenn. 376, 14 Ann. Cas. 809.

The word "shall," in Const. art. 2, § 18, providing that every bill shall be read once on three different days, and passed each time in the House where it originated, before transmission to the other, that no bill shall become a law until it shall have been read and passed on three different days, until it shall have received on its final passage in each House the assent of a majority of all the members to which that House shall be entitled under the Constitution, until it shall have been signed by the respective speakers in open session, to be noted on the journals, and until it shall have received the approval of the Governor, or passed without it, as otherwise provided for, is the equivalent of the word "must," making the provision mandatory, but the provision that the fact of the signature of the Speaker of the respective Houses shall be noted on the journals is directory only. Therefore an act bearing the signature of the Speakers of the House and Senate and approved by the Governor will be treated as properly passed, though the journal of the House does not show that it was signed by the Speaker in open session. Home Tel. Co. v. City of Nashville, 101 S. W. 770, 773, 118 Tenn. 1, 11 Ann. Cas. 824.

Official duties

Where a charter of a city confers power on it to be exercised for the public good, the exercise of the power is imperative, and the words "the council shall have power to" mean duty and obligation. Cavender v. City of Charleston, 59 S. E. 732, 734, 62 W. Va. 654.

The word "shall" should be construed to mean "may" in Comp. Laws, § 479, as amended by St. 1895, p. 35, c. 37, providing that the commissioners, on the presentation of a petition for the vacation of a public road, shall within 30 days thereafter vacate the road. State ex rel. Dangberg v. Board of Com'rs of Douglas County, 77 Pac. 984, 986, 27 Nev. 469.

The word "shall" is frequently construed as not mandatory when the provision in which it is found does not confer a private right and the public interest does not demand such construction. Rev. St. art. 3387, relative to local option elections, which provides that the clerk of court shall post five copies of the order of election at different places at least 12 days prior to the day of election, although mandatory in terms, does not invalidate an election because of a mere failure to post one of the notices until nine days prior to the day of election. Norman v. Thompson, 72 S. W. 64, 66, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 537 (quoting Davis v. State, 12 S. W. 957, 962, 75 Tex. 420).

Denver City Charter, art. 7, § 31, providing that the city council shall pass an assessing ordinance after recommendations of the council for improvements have been reviewed by the board of public works, is to be construed as meaning that the council "may" pass such an ordinance. City of Denver v. Londoner, 80 Pac. 117, 121, 33 Colo. 104 (citing Board of County Com'rs of Pueblo v. Smith, 45 Pac. 357, 22 Colo. 534).

The word "shall," when used in a statute, is presumed to have been used in its imperative sense. As used in Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 7541 (Acts 1907, p. 391, c. 222, § 21), providing that, when two or more banks propose to become depositories, the board of finance shall impartially select as many of such banks as tender satisfactory security, etc., it is imperative, and the act gives the board no discretion in the selection of the banks or trust companies. Board of Finance of the School City of Aurora v. People's Nat. Bank of Lawrenceburg, 89 N. E. 904, 905, 44 Ind. App. 578.

A statute providing that a treasurer "shall" "give bond with sufficient securities to be approved by the Legislature" is directory as to such approval, and its nonobservance cannot affect the validity of the instrument. State v. Sooy, 38 N. J. Law, 327, 334.

In Civ. Code 1910, § 387, providing that the proper officers shall cause courthouses, bridges, etc., to be built or repaired by letting out the contract therefor to the lowest bidder, the word "shall" is not to be construed as "may," but the statute is mandatory. Garrison v. Perkins, 74 S. E. 541, 547, 137 Ga. 744.

Act 1907, c. 209, §§ 24, 25, providing that a special court for the trial of misdemeanors is established to be known as the "recorder's court of Rocky Mount," and providing that it shall be presided over by a recorder, who shall be a resident and qualified voter of the city, and "shall" be elected by the aldermen of the city at a certain meeting, was one concerning the public interest, and hence the word "shall" was not to be construed as equivalent to "may," but that the act was mandatory and imposed an absolute duty on the board to elect a recorder to preside over such court. Battle v. City of Rocky Mount, 72 S. E. 354, 355, 156 N. C. 329.

In Act May 13, 1901 (P. L. 191), authorizing the taking of abutments and other property of a bridge company in the building of a free bridge by two counties, the provision that if the commissioners of the counties shall neglect to act on the petition of property owners and taxpayers in the city, borough, or township in which the bridge was located, which petition shall set forth fully all the facts supported by the affidavit of five of the property owners and taxpayers, the court of common pleas on hearing "shall" issue a mandamus to the commissioners means that the court in each of the counties shall have jurisdiction over the commissioners in its own county, that the commissioners are first authorized to use their discretion as to whether a bridge shall be built, but that this discretion is expressly subject to review by the common pleas of the respective counties; and if, on review, the court decides that the commissioners should exercise their authority, it can compel action by mandamus; the word "shall" in the statute being construed as "may." Lewisburg Bridge Co. v. Union and Northumberland Counties, 81 Atl. 324, 329, 232 Pa. 255.

The power to determine whether or not a quo warranto proceeding shall be instituted is vested in the Attorney General or prosecuting attorneys by the statute providing that, in case any person usurps any office, the Attorney General or prosecuting attorneys "shall" exhibit an information in the nature of a quo warranto, and the officers have discretion whether to proceed or not; the word "shall" not being mandatory. Black, State ex inf. Dorian ex rel. v. Taylor, 106 S. W. 1023, 1026, 208 Mo. 442.

Const. 1901, § 222, authorizes the Legislature to pass general laws authorizing cities and towns to issue bonds, but forbids bonds to be issued unless first authorized by a majority vote by a ballot of the qualified electors, and provides a form of ballot to be used, declaring that the ballot "shall" contain the words, etc. Held, that such provision, in so far as it prescribed the form of ballot, was mandatory, and that a failure to use the form prescribed invalidated the election. Coleman v. Town of Eutaw, 47 South. 703, 704, 157 Ala. 327.

Code, § 1530, provides that the board of county supervisors of each county have charge of the collection of the county road fund and the expenditure thereof, but that so much of the fund as arises from property within any city shall be expended on the streets of the city or on the roads adjacent thereto under the direction of the city council. Held, that the part of the road fund collected within a city must be expended on the roads in and about the city as directed by the city council, since the word "shall," when addressed to public officers, is mandatory. City of Newton v. Board of Sup'rs of Jasper County, 112 N. W. 167, 168, 135 Iowa, 27, 124 Am. St. Rep. 256.

SHALL BE CONTRACTED

See Contract.

SHALL BE INDISPENSABLE

Under St. 1903, § 3212, providing that, for the execution of a contract by the board of education of a city, the concurrence of a majority of its members "shall be indispensable, and, on a call for the yeas or nays, to be entered of record," the vote must in all cases be on call of the yeas and nays, and not merely where so demanded by a member. Board of Education of City of Newport v. Newport Nat. Bank, 90 S. W. 569, 571, 121 Ky. 775.

SHALL BE INTENDED TO BE OR SHALL BE CARRIED

New York Building Code, § 22, provides that, whenever an excavation shall be intended to be or shall be carried to the depth of more than 10 feet below the curb, the person or persons causing such excavation to be made shall preserve from injury and support the walls of adjacent buildings. Held, that the words "shall be carried," in addition to the words "shall be intended," indicate a legislative intention not to exempt an owner merely because his excavation was not intended to be more than 10 feet, if in fact it should be carried below that depth; and hence the fact that specifications for defendant's building only required a 10-foot excavation did not relieve defendant from liability for injuries caused to the wall of plaintiff's adjoining building by the act of an independent contractor in excavating to a greater depth. Rosenstock v. Laue, 122 N. Y. Supp. 525, 67 Misc. Rep. 251.

SHALL BE LAWFUL

The words "it shall be lawful" import a discretion. It is only where the subject-matter imperatively requires it that they can receive a different construction. People ex rel. Comstock v. City of Syracuse, 12 N. Y. Supp. 890, 894, 59 Hun, 258.

The words "it shall be lawful" are peremptory, when used in a statute, where the public or an individual has a right de jure, that the powers conferred by the act should be exercised. Graham v. City of Tusculumbia, 42 South. 400, 402, 146 Ala. 449 (quoting and adopting Tarver v. Commissioners' Court of Tallapoosa County, 17 Ala. 527).

Where permissive words, such as "it shall be lawful," are used in a statute in respect to courts and officers, such words will be regarded as imperative in cases where the public or individuals have a right to demand the exercise of the power conferred. Ex parte Young, 95 S. W. 98, 102, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 536 (citing Lewis' Southerland, Stat. Cons. § 636; Tarver v. Commissioners' Court of Tallapoosa County, 17 Ala. 527; Mitchell v. Duncan, 7 Fla. 13; David v. Levy, 119 Ala. 241, 24 South. 589; Smith's Petition, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 465).

SHALL HAVE

Laws 1907, p. 1682, c. 721, § 1, subd. 3, amending Laws 1896, p. 795, c. 908, which repeals Laws 1880, p. 402, c. 269, provides that when a tax shall have been levied and collected in any school district on a property assessment valuation ascertained from the town assessment roll, which assessment shall have been adjudged by order of the court to have been erroneous, the trustees of the school district shall audit and cause to be paid to the person paying the tax the amount paid by him in excess of what the tax would have been in case the assessment had been made as adjudged, together with interest from the date of the payment. The act further provides that where the certiorari, on which the excessiveness of the tax was adjudged, was issued pursuant to Laws 1880, p. 402, c. 269, and such tax shall not have been already refunded, the application for audit and allowance must be within three years from the passage of the act, and that, when the writ of certiorari was issued under the provisions "of this act," the application must be made within three years, after the entry of the final order adjudging the assessment to be erroneous. Held, that though the phrase "shall have been," as used in the clause, "when a tax shall have been levied and collected," is a future perfect tense, and contemplates an event completed in the future without reference to the past, and though the act amends a general law, still it clearly indicates a legislative intent that it should be retrospective, as well as prospective, as appears from the provision which expressly authorizes the presentation of claims based upon a reduction made pursuant to a certiorari issued under the act of 1880, which reduction must have been made previous to the repeal of the act by the act of 1896. People ex rel. Eckerson v. Town Board of Education, etc., of Haverstraw, 110 N. Y. Supp. 769, 771, 126 App. Div. 414.

Rev. St. 1899, § 2868, repealed by Laws 1905, p. 138 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1652), provides that if any action under chapter 17 (pages 1637-1658), relating to damages for torts, shall have been commenced within one year after the cause of action shall accrue and plaintiff suffer a nonsuit, etc., he may commence a new action within one year after the nonsuit, etc. Held, that the phrase "shall have been commenced" includes pending as well as future actions, especially in view of section 4160 (page 2252), requiring that words and phrases shall be taken in their ordinary sense, and, where a death action was commenced within a year after the death and before section 2868 took effect, and a nonsuit was suffered after it was in force, plaintiff could recommence suit within a year after the nonsuit. Clark v. Kansas City, St. L. & C. R. Co., 118 S. W. 40, 44, 219 Mo. 524.

The phrase "shall have testified," as used in a statute providing that no person shall testify for himself as to any verbal statement of, or any transaction with, one who is dead, unless the decedent or representative of an interest in the estate shall have testified against such person with reference thereto, means has previously testified, so that defendant's testimony as to verbal statements of or transactions with her father prior to his death to prove her title to property in controversy was not rendered competent by the subsequent testimony of defendant's sister as to other declarations made by decedent in defendant's absence. Foley v. Dillon (Ky.) 105 S. W. 461, 463.

SHALL STAND SUSPENDED

See Suspend—Suspension.

SHAM

"Sham," the adjective, is defined as false, counterfeit, pretended, feigned, unreal; and the noun is given the primary meaning of that which deceives expectation, any trick or fraudulent device that disappoints, a make-believe, imposition, humbug. Williams v. Territory, 108 Pac. 243, 245, 13 Ariz. 27, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1032.

SHAM ANSWER

A sham answer is one that is false and untrue; the word "sham" being construed by the courts as synonymous with "false." State ex rel. Engelhard v. Weber, 105 N. W. 490, 492, 96 Minn. 422, 113 Am. St. Rep. 630.

A "sham" answer is one good in form but false in fact, and not pleaded in good faith. Continental Building & Loan Ass'n v. Boggess, 78 Pac. 245, 247, 145 Cal. 30 (citing And. Law Dict.); White v. Calhoun, 94 N. E. 743, 83 Ohio St. 401.

A "sham answer" is one which is false, and which the court is authorized to strike out by Code Civ. Proc. § 538. Arnold v. Arnold, 119 N. Y. Supp. 451, 134 App. Div. 758.

SHAM PLEADING

A "sham pleading" is one which is manifestly false in fact. Oregonian Ry. Co. v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co., 22 Fed. 245, 248.

When a pleading is attacked by motion and affidavit as being "sham," and upon examination is found to be a declaration wholly at variance to the experience of all men, the court would be justified in declaring it to be a sham and fictitious plea, and order that it be stricken from the records for that reason. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Bradford, 88 Pac. 1050, 1052, 18 Okl. 154.

SHAMELESSNESS

"Pruriency" is an elastic term. Matter and conduct which some good people deem prurient other good people deem chaste. There is no fixed standard of pruriency. It is largely a matter of education and taste. And the same is true in respect of 'scandal' and 'shamelessness.'" Hence where a critic published of a book and its author that they were a "scandal" and "shameless," and that the author was "prurient," under circumstances that would not justify the charges beyond question, it was for the jury to say whether the inferences drawn by the critic from the facts were reasonably possible, and therefore permissible. MacDonald v. Sun Printing & Publishing Ass'n, 92 N. Y. Supp. 87, 40, 45 Misc. Rep. 441.

SHANTY

As business office, see Business Office.

A double-boxed, stripped house, about 30 by 15 feet, with an ell attachment, and four or five appurtenant buildings, such as a smokehouse, two or more privies, and an old stable or woodhouse, are "shanties," within the meaning of a covenant in a deed to a railroad company not to erect shanties on the land conveyed. Grubbs & Kirk v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 123 S. W. 1195.

SHAPE

See Sheared Shape.

Construing Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, pars. 135, 137, 193, 30 Stat. 161, 167, which paragraphs provide, respectively, for "steel in all forms and shapes," for articles made from wire, and for manufacturers of steel, held, that steel wool is dutiable under the first of these provisions, rather than either of the other two. The word "shape," as used in the statute, has a technical meaning, and is applied to certain standard structural steel material, such as tees, angle bars, bulbs, etc. United States v. Buehne Steel Wool Co., 154 Fed. 93, 94.

SHARE

See Bank Shares; Distributive Share; Equal Shares; Just Share; Legal Share.

"Share" is one of the whole number of equal parts into which the capital stock of a trading company or corporation is or may be divided, as shares in a bank or shares in a railway. Continental Securities Co. v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 165 Fed. 945, 963.

"Many of the English, and nearly all the American, cases * * * consider a 'share' of an estate, consisting of both realty and personalty, given over on a contingency to the 'survivor,' as clear evidence that the testator did not intend an indefinite failure of issue." Abbott v. Essex Co., 59 U. S. (18 How.) 202, 216, 15 L. Ed. 352.

When used to mark out an inheritance in an estate, the words "the share" do not import that there is something more, to be otherwise and elsewhere pointed out, but indicate totality. Jones v. Gane, 91 N. E. 129, 130, 205 Mass. 37.

Where a grantor by deed of trust provided that at her death one-fourth of her estate should go to each of three children, and the other one-fourth should go to the trustee for the benefit of the fourth child during his life and at his death to his children free of the trust, and the deed of trust made advancements to each child a charge on his "share," advancements to the fourth child were a charge only on his equitable life estate, and not on the "share" of his children. Jacob Tome Institute v. Shipley, 62 Atl. 1042, 1044, 102 Md. 642.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 2944, providing that, when the husband shall die leaving a child or children or other descendants, the widow, if she has a child or children by such husband living, may, in lieu of dower of the one-third part of the lands for life, elect to be endowed absolutely in a share of such lands equal to the "share of a child" of such deceased husband, the "share of a child" referred to means its share in the real estate, not its interest in the personalty, and the widow's exercise of her election to take a child's portion does not affect her right to the bounty provided by section 107, when it is applied for in the time prescribed by section 108. Hill v. Evans, 91 S. W. 1022, 1023, 114 Mo. App. 715.

Where a testator bequeathed legacies to each of his two nieces and to his sister, which legacies were to be held in trust during their lifetime, with the provision that, in case of the death of either without issue, then the share of such decedent should go over, the word "share" had reference to the principal of the trust, and disposed of it. In re Hoffman's Will, 94 N. E. 990, 201 N. Y. 247.

Part synonymous

The words "share" and "part," as used in a bequest of a store business, reciting that "the 'share' or part so belonging to my estate to be taken by my executors hereinafter named as part of its general assets" are to be treated as synonymous and refer to testator's "share" of the existing stock in trade, and the word "share" does not refer to future profits. Oram v. Peirce, 67 Atl. 1053, 1054, 73 N. J. Eq. 391.

SHARE AND SHARE ALIKE

A will giving property to testatrix's children for their lives, "with remainder to the child or children of any child as may leave issue upon their death, share and share alike," gave each of testatrix's children a life estate, his part going to his children on his death; the words "share and share alike" qualifying the estate given the children, and not the remainder to the grandchildren.

White v. White, 150 S. W. 388, 389, 150 Ky. 283.

As per capita

Testator provided by will that, on the death of either of his daughters after decease of testator's wife, the trustee under the will should pay over a proportion of the principal of a fund for their benefit, "equal to the proportion of the income thereof which such daughter so dying shall at her decease be entitled to receive, to her lawful issue, share and share alike; and in case of either or both dying without such issue living at her decease, then to my then heirs at law, in either and all cases to have and to hold to them, their heirs and assigns to their own use and behoof forever." The provision was one of several provisions contained in the ninth clause, in which testator provided for the disposition of the remainder in the shares given for life to his three children. Each of such shares was to go to the issue of the life tenant after his decease. There were four paragraphs providing for different contingencies as to the order of decease, etc.; all indicating a scheme that issue should take by right of representation. In two paragraphs it was expressly provided that the issue were to take by representation, while in two others, without any apparent reason for making a distinction, those words did not appear. Held, that the provisions and scheme of the will indicate that testator intended, if one of his children should die, leaving several children and also grandchildren, who were children of one of the living children, that they should take per stirpes and not per capita. The term "share and share alike" in such will does not necessarily mean that each of such issue shall have an equal share with every other, but such direction is satisfied if all such issue share in a division which is equal as between living children and the issue of deceased children, taking per stirpes. Coates v. Burton, 77 N. E. 311, 312, 191 Mass. 180 (citing Hall v. Hall, 2 N. E. 700, 140 Mass. 267).

As creating tenancy in common

Testatrix disposed of the whole of the income of her residuary estate in aliquot parts, bequeathing to a brother and his son one-fourth each for life, and the remaining two-fourths, to three beneficiaries, "share and share alike" (that is, one-third of two-fourths for each during all their life), and on the decease of her brother "his one-fourth to go" to her nephew, "making his share of the income two-fourths for life," and on the nephew's decease testatrix directed the principal of her estate to be divided one-half to the heirs of her nephew and the other to a certain friend, or his heirs and assigns. Held, that on the death of one of the three beneficiaries of the two-fourths interest in the income, a contention by the survivors that they took deceased's share, because they were survivors of a class to whom the portion was given as an entirety during their joint lives, was untenable, in view of the direct provisions of the will disclosing an intention to make them tenants in common. Colville v. Kinsman (N. J.) 60 Atl. 939, 962.

As creating tenancy in severalty

In a deed of trust providing that if a husband and wife, the beneficiaries, shall both die leaving issue of their marriage, "then in trust to convey said separate property to the said issue living at the time of the death of the survivor of them share and share alike," the use of the words "to convey" and "share and share alike" indicates an intention that there should be distribution among the children, and also conveyances to them by the trustee in severalty. Jones v. Rountree, 76 S. E. 55, 56, 138 Ga. 757.

The phrase "share and share alike," in a will providing that testator's wife and two children should each have one-third of the proceeds of certain property to be paid in semiannual installments, but that no part of the principal should be paid to either of the children, and, if the wife died before the children, then her shares should be added and counted as belonging to the two children. Share and share alike is wholly inconsistent with a joint tenancy with a right of survivorship, and, upon the death of one of the children, the whole income could not go to the other. Kellogg v. Burnett, 69 Atl. 196, 197, 74 N. J. Eq. 304 (citing Stoutenburgh v. Moore, 37 N. J. Eq. 63; Stoutenburgh v. Stoutenburgh, 38 N. J. Eq. 281; Woolston v. Beck, 34 N. J. Eq. 74).

Though the words "share and share alike," in a residuary clause giving a legacy to children who naturally form a class by reason of their relation to each other, tend toward a construction thereof as intending a gift to the individuals and not to them as a whole, they are not in any event conclusive, and do not overcome a general intent not to be intestate. Where a clause in a will read: "I give and bequeath the balance of my real estate and personal property to my heirs as follows to the eight children of my nephew A. W. H. eight shares to the eight children to my niece F. F. eight shares and my said niece one share and to G. A. H. son or my grand nephew A. H. one share, making eighteen shares share and share alike"—one of the niece's children having predeceased the testator, leaving no children, the eight shares of the residuum given to her children should be divided equally among the seven surviving. Smith v. Haynes, 89 N. E. 158, 159, 202 Mass. 531.

SHARE CAPITAL

The words "share capital" may mean either the capital subscribed, the share capital, or the capital paid in the actual assets with which the company does business, and in 1904, p. 275, providing that the directors of a corporation shall not divide, withdraw, or pay to the stockholders any part of the capital stock, etc., they seem to be used in both senses; and, when the Legislature forbids the dividing, withdrawing, or paying to the stockholders any part of the capital stock, it means the capital actually invested; when it forbids the reduction of the capital stock, it means the share capital subscribed or the authorized capital. Goodnow v. American Writing Paper Co., 69 Atl. 1014, 1016, 73 N. J. Eq. 692.

SHARE EQUALLY

See Equally Divided.

SHARE OF STOCK

A "share of stock" is a proportional part of certain rights in the management and profits of a corporation during its existence and in the assets on dissolution. Markle v. Burgess, 95 N. E. 308, 309, 176 Ind. 25 (citing 1 Cook, Corp. § 12).

A "share" of the capital stock of a corporation is the interest or right which the owner has in the management of the corporation, in its surplus profits, and, upon dissolution, in all of its assets remaining after the payment of its debts. Lipscomb's Adm'r v. Condon, 49 S. E. 392-395, 56 W. Va. 416, 67 L. R. A. 670, 107 Am. St. Rep. 938 (citing Clark Corp. 1141).

"A 'share of stock' is an incorporeal intangible thing. It is a right to a certain proportion of the capital stock of a corporation—never realized except upon the dissolution and winding up of the corporation—with the right to receive in the meantime such profits as may be made and declared in the shape of dividends." Mann v. German American Inv. Co., 97 N. W. 600, 604, 70 Neb. 454 (quoting definition in Neiler v. Kelley, 69 Pa. 403).

"Share of stock," strictly speaking, is a right to participate in a certain proportion in the immunities and benefits of the corporation; to vote in the choice of their officers, and the management of their concerns; to share in the dividends of profits; and to receive an aliquot part of the proceeds of the capital on winding up and terminating the active existence and operations of the corporations. Alphin v. Wade, 116 S. W. 667, 668, 80 Ark. 354 (quoting and adopting definition in Fisher v. President, etc., of Essex Bank, 71 Mass. 373, 378 [5 Gray]).

A "share" of capital stock is the right to partake, according to the amount put into the fund, of the surplus profits, and, upon dissolution of the corporation, of the fund remaining after payment of debts; the right to participate in the profits or in a final distribution of the corporate property pro rata.

Within Rev. St. 1898, § 1751, providing that capital stock of a corporation divided into shares shall be deemed personalty, and that certificates thereof may be transferred by indorsement and delivery, and section 1753 (Laws 1899, c. 193, § 1) providing that no corporation shall issue any stock or certificate of stock except in consideration of money, etc., received, equal to the par value thereof, and that all stock issued contrary to such provision shall be void, the words "issue any stock" and "all stocks issued" refer to certificates of stock or "shares," as distinguished from the stock itself, so that stockholders for less than par might have equitable relief against promoters who had defrauded the corporation. Pietsch v. Krause, 93 N. W. 9, 11, 116 Wis. 344 (quoting and adopting Burrall v. Bushwick R. Co., 75 N. Y. 211; Field v. Pierce, 102 Mass. 261; Van Brocklen v. Smeallie, 35 N. E. 415, 140 N. Y. 78).

Capital stock distinguished

The term "shares of capital stock," as used in Rev. St. U. S. § 5219, is not the same as the term "capital stock," which means the actual money or property paid in and possessed by the corporation, and there is no authority under the statutes of the United States nor the revenue laws of Idaho to tax the capital stock of national banks. Weiser Nat. Bank v. Jeffreys, 95 Pac. 23, 25, 14 Idaho, 659.

"Shares of stock" represent the right of the holder to vote at corporate meetings and to receive his portion of dividends and the residue of the property of the corporation upon its dissolution. Capital stock and shares of capital stock represent different property rights, one belonging to the corporation and the other to the shareholders, and both may be taxed without violation of any established principle of law. Judy v. Beckwith, 114 N. W. 565, 569, 137 Iowa, 24, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 142, 15 Ann. Cas. 890.

Certificate thereof distinguished

"Shares of stock" in a corporation are the aliquot parts of the corporation's capital, and merely give to the owner the right to a share of the profits of the corporation while a going concern and in its assets in case of dissolution. They give the owners no right in the property of the company as such, and the share certificates are a mere symbol or evidence of property, standing on the same footing as other muniments of title. Prenall v. Stockyards Nat. Bank (Tex.) 151 S. W. 873, 876.

Generally speaking, a "share of stock" in a corporation "may be defined as a right which its owner has in the management, profits, and ultimate assets of the corporation. The right which a shareholder in a corporation has, by reason of his ownership of shares, is a right to participate according to the amount of his stock in the surplus profits of the corporation on division, and ultimately on its dissolution, in the assets remaining after payment of its debts." Shares of stock represent an interest in the earnings and property of the corporation. A certificate is not stock itself, but only a convenient representation of it, as one may be a stockholder without having a certificate issued to him. A share of stock may represent an interest in either real or personal property. A non-resident owner of the shares of stock in a domestic corporation has an interest in the property of the corporation which is subject to the collateral inheritance tax. In re Culver's Estate, 123 N. W. 743, 744, 745, 145 Iowa, 1, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 384 (citing Cook, Corp. [2d Ed.] § 5; Faxton v. McCosh, 12 Iowa, 527; Commonwealth v. Standard Oil Co., 101 Pa. 148; Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 679, 24 L. Ed. 558; Judy v. Beckwith, 114 N. W. 565, 137 Iowa, 24, 15 L. R. A. [N. S.] 142, 15 Ann. Cas. 890).

A "share certificate" is merely the paper representative of an incorporeal right, and stands on a footing similar to that of other muniments of title. It is not in itself property, but is merely the symbol or paper evidence of property; hence the proprietary right may exist without a certificate, the certificate being nothing more than evidence of its existence and of title to the share in the holder, it may be assigned without a certificate. Code 1899, c. 106, § 9, giving the plaintiff, in an attachment proceeding, a lien on the personal property of the debtor from the time of the levying of the attachment or serving a copy thereof on the garnishee, on all the personal property, choses in action, and other securities of the defendant in the hands of the garnishee, and on any real estate of the debtor levied on by virtue thereof, from the suing out of the same, includes shares of corporation stock in the terms "personal property, choses in action, and other securities." Lipscomb's Adm'r v. Condon, 49 S. E. 392-395, 56 W. Va. 416, 67 L. R. A. 670, 107 Am. St. Rep. 938 (citing 10 Cyc. 588; Cecil Nat. Bank v. Watsontown Bank, 105 U. S. 217, 222, 26 L. Ed. 1039; Crumlish's Adm'r v. Shenandoah Val. R. Co., 22 S. E. 90, 40 W. Va. 627; Pacific Nat. Bank v. Eaton, 141 U. S. 227, 234, 11 Sup. Ct. 984, 35 L. Ed. 702; *First Nat. Bank of Davenport v. Stock certificate synonymous

The term "stock certificates" and the term "shares of stock" may be treated as synonymous. Newman v. Mercantile Trust Co., 88 S. W. 2, 11, 189 Mo. 423.

As property or evidence thereof

See, also, Personal Property; Property.

"Shares of stock" in a corporation are the property of the holder thereof, separate and distinct from the property of the corporation itself, and, in the absence of any more specific definition by the Legislature, would be held to be subject to taxation as personal property. Hasely v. Ensley, 82 N. E. 809, 810, 40 Ind. App. 598.

"Shares of stock" were not subject to attachment or levy at common law; they were considered neither a specific chattel nor a debt. "They have more resemblance to choses in action, being merely evidence of property." Fowler v. Dickson (Del.) 74 Atl. 601, 604, 1 Boyce, 113 (quoting Howe v. Starkweather, 17 Mass. 240, 243).

"A 'share of stock' may be defined as a right which its owner has in the management, profits, and ultimate assets of the corporation." Cook, Stock & Stockh., § 5. "With reference more particularly to the essential nature of shares of stock, it has been well settled that such property is personalty, and not realty. It is said that a share of stock is not real estate; has nothing to give it the character of real estate; is not land, nor a hereditament, nor an interest in either of them." Id. § 6. "It is now a well-established principle that the shares of the capital stock of corporations are personal property. And this applies equally to all corporations, including those whose property consists of real estate, although attempts were formerly made to give to the stock of those companies the character of an interest in real estate. Sales of stock are therefore excluded from the provisions of the statute of frauds regulating conveyances of real estate or interests in real estate." Beach, Priv. Corp. § 612. "A stockholder has no legal title to the corporation, property, or to any separate part thereof, until a division is made on the winding up or dissolution of the corporation; and prior to that time he has no right to take any of the corporate property for his own purpose." "The assets of a private corporation, whether consisting of real estate or personal property, belong to the corporate body, and the stockholders are not in any sense the owners thereof. We think this proposition so well established that the citation of authorities in support of it is unnecessary." Hence a mere stockholder of a corporation owning land is not within the exception of Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 61, § 25, giving the owners of farm lands, etc., the right to hunt and kill on their farms. Cummings v. People, 71 N. E. 1031, 1033, 1034, 211 Ill. 392.

SHAREHOLDER

See Preference Shareholder.

See, also, Stockholder.

A "shareholder" is one who holds or owns a share or shares in a joint-stock or incorporated company in a common fund or in some property, as a shareholder in a railway, mining, or banking company. Continental Securities Co. v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 165 Fed. 945, 963.

The holder of preferred stock is a "shareholder" in the corporation. He is not a corporation creditor, and has no rights as such. Grover v. Cavanagh, 82 N. E. 104, 107, 40 Ind. App. 340.

A general statute imposing liability on "shareholders" includes married women. Dickinson v. Traphagan, 41 South. 272, 147 Ala. 442 (citing 10 Cyc. p. 682, § 11; In re Reciprocity Bank, 22 N. Y. 9; Dreisbach v. Price, 19 Atl. 569, 133 Pa. 560).

Where defendant's son-in-law, promoting a consolidation of corporations, was financially embarrassed, and procured a loan on the note of the new corporation, secured by bonds underwritten or guaranteed by defendant under an agreement providing that a block of stock in the new corporation should be placed in his hands as security for the son-in-law's performance of his agreement to procure other parties to underwrite the loan so as to take up defendant's obligation, but the stock was in fact issued directly to defendant as a stockholder, and resignations of the officers of the corporation were placed in his hands, but he refused to act as a stockholder, and did not act upon the resignations, defendant was a "pledgee," and not a "shareholder," and was not subject to a stockholder's liability. Colonial Trust Co. v. McMillan, 87 S. W. 933, 940, 188 Mo. 547, 107 Am. St. Rep. 335.

SHAREJOBBER

An individual, who makes it his continuous occupation or life business to buy and sell securities is called a "stockjobber" or "sharejobber." Vanderbilt University v. Cheney, 94 S. W. 90, 93, 116 Tenn. 259.

SHAVE

As used in Acts 1901, p. 219, c. 128, § 4, providing for a privilege tax for shaving notes, accounts, judgments, or other evidences of indebtedness, the word "shave" means simply the buying of such paper at a discount, without reference to the question whether any such paper was created for the purpose of being discounted. Trentham v. Moore, 76 S. W. 904, 905, 111 Tenn. 346.

SHAWL

SHE

That a magistrate, in an order fixing bail, in two instances used the pronoun "he" for the pronoun "she" did not affect the magistrate's jurisdiction previously exercised in deciding that the evidence was sufficient to satisfy him that a crime had been committed and that there was sufficient cause to believe that defendants had committed it, and to issue a commitment thereon. People ex rel. Wilson v. Warden of City Prison, 107 N. Y. Supp. 1103, 1104, 123 App. Div. 288.

SHEARED SHAPE

In construing the provision for "sheared shapes" found in paragraph 135, Schedule C, § 1, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, 30 Stat. 161, held, that the quoted phrase was intended to cover something not in general stock, but sheared to a particular or given shape, and that certain sheets of metal, cut according to a sketch, and for a special purpose, to a specific shape, varying very slightly from a rectangle, are within such terms. SHEEP DIP

Sheep wash synonymous, see Sheep Wash.

Thymo-Cresol, a sheep dip which is used also as a disinfectant, and otherwise, is, by reason of such other uses, excluded from the provision for "sheep dip, not including compounds or preparations that can be used for other purposes," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 657, 30 Stat. 201. Shallus v. Stone, 150 Fed. 605.

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 657, 30 Stat. 201, providing for "sheep dips," except "compounds or preparations that can be used for other purposes," the application of this exception is not to be determined by the rule of chief or predominant use of an article as sheep dip; and Cannon's dip, a preparation advertised as fit for various other purposes, and presumably having commercial value for such purposes, is not covered by the paragraph. Moody v. Patterson, 153 Fed. 830.

SHEEPSKINS

Cabretta skins are "sheepskins," within the meaning of the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 664, 30 Stat. 201, relating to raw skins "except sheepskins with the wool on," and the growth thereon is subject to duty, as provided in paragraph 360 (Schedule K, § 1, 30 Stat. 183), for "wools on the skin." Lawrence Johnson & Co. v. United States, 140 Fed. 116.

SHEEP WASH

"Sheep wash" is synonymous with "sheep dip," which is a substance used to destroy parasites, vermin, etc., and cure the sores which affect the skin of sheep; a thick fluid known as "Thymo-Cresol," which is a compound of coal tar. Shallus v. Stone, 150 Fed. 605.

See Iron Sheets.

A piece of steel 15 feet long, 4 feet 2 inches wide, 6½ inches thick, and weighing over 6 tons, with a geometrical design engraved on one side, a completed article ready for use in the manufacture of glass, is a "slab" and not a "sheet" or plate, and hence is not dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 135, 30 Stat. 161, as a "sheet" or plate, but under paragraph 193 as "steel in all forms and shapes not specially provided for in this act." *Theo. The term "sheets * * * commercially known as tin plates," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 134, 30 Stat. 160, means rectangular sheets, and does not include small disks. Shallus v. United States, 162 Fed. 653, 655, 89 C. C. A. 445.

In construing Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 185, 30 Stat. 166, relating to nickel, nickel oxide, and nickel alloy, "in pigs, ingots, bars, or sheets," held (1) that only nickel in one of the forms enumerated is included; (2) that the provision for "sheets," therefore, does not include anodes consisting of nickel plates about 12 inches long, 6½ inches wide, and less than a half inch thick, a "sheet" being broad, thin, and expanded; and (3) that such anodes are dutiable as manufactures of nickel under paragraph 193, 30 Stat. 167. *Hermann Boker & Co. v. SHEET STEEL IN STRIPS

The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 137, 30 Stat. 161, for "sheet steel in strips," does not include long, narrow, thin, cold-rolled steel strips, because they are not sheet steel, nor stripped from sheet steel, nor commercially known as sheet steel in strips. Hermann Boker & Co. v. United States, 154 Fed. 174; United States v. Hermann Boker & Co., 158 Fed. 396, 86 C. C. A. 32.

SHELL*SHELL-BAND

A "hub-band" is an iron ferrule attached to the ends of a vehicle hub for the protection of the ends, and shielding the nut which holds the wheel on the axle. "Shell-bands" are thin metal cylinders, intended to be placed around the outer end of the hub-band for the purpose of ornamentation and also to keep out moisture and prevent rusting of the iron parts. The use of such "shell-bands" is very old, and there are many patents, some for the hub-band and shell and some for the band alone and many for metal shells, differing mainly in the mode of holding the "shell-band" in place. In some cases it is secured by brazing or soldering, in others by self-securing devices, such as spurs, spring clips, interlocking lugs, screw threads, bayonet locks, etc., and in others by screws or rivets. The Higgin patent for a shell having an annular groove for gripping the band and holding the shell in place is void for want of utility and also for lack of invention. Higgin Mfg. Co. v. Murdock, 132 Fed. 810, 812, 65 C. C. A. 466.

SHELLEY'S CASE

See Rule in Shelley's Case.

Issue as within rule, see Issue (Descendants).

SHERIFF

Deputy sheriff as officer, see Officer.

The words "the sheriff," in Code Civ. Proc. § 1362, directing that execution must be directed to the sheriff, means the sheriff of the county to which the execution is issued. Fisher v. Young, 85 N. Y. Supp. 115, 117, 41 Misc. Rep. 552.

The sheriff referred to in Gen. Stat. 1901, § 4946, relating to sales made subject to redemption, providing that, if defendant in execution failed to redeem, the sheriff must at the end of the redemption period execute a deed to the person who is entitled to the certificate of purchase, is the person holding the office of "sheriff" at the time the certificate is produced and the deed demanded. Armstead v. Jones, 80 Pac. 58, 58, 71 Kan. 142 (citing Conger v. Converse, 9 Iowa, 554).

A "sheriff" is a public officer. His emoluments consist of fees fixed by law for the performance of his official duties. Among these duties are serving process, collecting judgments, boarding prisoners, taking convicts to the penitentiary, and other like duties, for many of which the fees receivable depend upon whether a judgment is recovered by the plaintiff or a conviction secured by the territory, because of the manifest impropriety of service by a sheriff as a juror. The sheriff has power to appoint deputies entitled to receive a percentage of the fees of the sheriff's office. Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. Okl. 1903, § 3308, which disqualifies sheriffs from performing jury service, applies as well to deputies as to the principal sheriff. Robinson v. Oklahoma, 148 Fed. 830, 831, 78 C. C. A. 520.

A "sheriff" is a public officer, a mere creature of law created by the sovereign power in the state for public purposes connected with the execution of the law and the administration of justice, as the agent of the body politic, to give effect to its sovereignty and carry into effect its will. His office is a mere civil institution, established for public political purposes, and may be regulated or changed by society. The mere creature of the law, he holds not by contract, and his duties change with the law. He is the mere agent of the public, under a naked authority to perform duties prescribed to him by law, the expression of the public will for the public benefit, and all that can be claimed to be granted to him is the mere authority to be such agent. Ex parte Corliss, 114 N. W. 962, 982, 16 N. D. 470.

As a generic term

An undersheriff is a person who "holds and exercises the office of a sheriff," within the meaning of Gen. St. 1895, p. 3118, § 36, which provides that no person shall exercise any other civil office during the time that he holds and exercises the office of a sheriff. Westcott v. Briant, 73 Atl. 66, 67, 78 N. J. Law, 228.

The words "sheriff, deputy, or coroner," as used in Rem. & Bal. Code, § 4003, providing "that no sheriff, deputy sheriff, or coroner shall be liable for neglecting or refusing to serve any civil process, unless his legal fees and an indemnity bond, if he requires one, are first tendered to him," are used in a generic sense, and are intended to apply to all officers charged with the duty of serving process requiring the seizure of property, and hence include a constable serving an execution issued out of a justice court. Canfield-Caulkins Implement Co. v. Cowden, 127 Pac. 216, 217, 70 Wash. 587.

SHIFT—SHIFTING

One is not guilty of practicing a "shift" or device to evade the Local Option Law (Laws 1907, p. 302) § 12, making it an offense to sell intoxicating liquors in antisaloon territory, within section 13, declaring the practicing of such a shift or device to be a selling, where a person from "dry" territory arranged with him in "wet" territory that he might telephone orders from dry territory and have them filled, and subsequently telephoned such an order, which was filled by delivery to an express company in wet territory. People v. Young, 86 N. E. 589, 591, 237 Ill. 196.

An ordinance prohibiting a railroad running through the city from "shifting" cars—that is, cutting out and putting in cars in the making up of a train—within certain four blocks in the heart of the city, except between 6:30 and 8:30 a. m. and between 4:30 and 6:30 p. m., or from allowing any car to stand for longer than five minutes within such space, is a valid reasonable exercise of the police power. (Per an equally divided court.) Atlantic Coast Line R. R. v. City of Goldsboro, 71 S. E. 514, 516, 517, 155 N. C. 356.

SHIFT BOSS

The word "shift-boss," as used in Rev. Codes, § 5248, making the operator of a mine liable for injuries caused by the negligence of a shift-boss, is formed by uniting the words "shift" and "boss." The word "shift" means a set of workmen working in turn with other sets, or the time during which a particular set of men work; and the noun "boss" means a master workman or superintendent, a director or manager, one who oversees or gives direction. So the compound word as used in the act means a master workman who directs the work of a set of men engaged on a particular shift. Johnson v. Butte & Superior Copper Co., 108 Pac. 1057, 1060, 41 Mont. 158.

SHIFTER

See Proper Belt Shifter; Slate Shifter.

SHIFTING RISK

Under "floating policies" or "shifting risks," "the property insured is the property of a class and kind described, in the place described which the insured may have on hand at the time of the fire, whether it is or is not identical in items with that which he had on hand at the time the insurance was written." Bloch v. American Ins. Co., 112 N. W. 45, 48, 132 Wis. 150.

SHIMS

"Shims" are metallic wedges of different thickness, employed to raise to the legal standard drawbars, which originally constructed of standard height, have become lowered as the natural effect of proper use. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Taylor, 28 Sup. Ct. 616, 620, 210 U. S. 281, 52 L. Ed. 1061.

SHIP

See Ex-Ship.

The term "ships," used in a broad sense, includes all navigable structures intended for transportation. Fredericks v. James Rees & Sons Co., 135 Fed. 730, 733, 68 C. C. A. 368 (citing Cope v. Vallette Dry-Dock Co., 7 Sup. Ct. 336, 119 U. S. 625, 30 L. Ed. 501).

The term "ship or vessel" cannot be construed to include a dry dock, a floating bridge, a meetinghouse moored to a wharf, a lighted buoy, or a steamboat which has been dismantled and fitted up as a hotel. Gonzales v. United States, 42 Ct. Cl. 299, 311.

Civ. Code, § 3060, providing that debts of at least $50 contracted for the benefit of ships are liens, construed in connection with Code Civ. Proc. § 813, giving a lien for materials and services furnished for the construction of vessels, contemplates an existing completed vessel, and refers only to such debts as are contracted for the benefit of a completed vessel, and section 813 gives a lien for construction work, regardless of the amount. Everything originally done in making a vessel complete and ready for use as an instrument of commerce or navigation is construction work, and a structure becomes a "ship" within the maritime law only when construction work has been fully completed. Jensen v. Dorr, 116 Pac. 553, 554, 159 Cal. 742.

Equipment and supplies

The word "vessel," as used in Chinese Exclusion Act May 6, 1882, c. 126, § 10, 22 Stat. 61, providing that "every vessel whose master shall knowingly violate any provisions of this act shall be liable to seizure and condemnation," etc., is broad enough to include the vessel's tackle, apparel, furniture, and "appurtenances." A chronometer supplied on account of the owners of a schooner as a necessary part of her equipment for a special service, although not in general a necessary part of her equipment, is to be regarded as "appurtenant" to the "ship," and as included in the term "vessel." The Frolic, 148 Fed. 921, 922 (citing Abbott, Merchant Ships & Seamen [14th Ed.] pp. 33, 34, 280; Richardson v. Clark, 15 Me. 421; The Witch Queen, 3 Sawy. 201, 30 Fed. Cas. 396).

Indispensable instruments, without which the ship cannot execute its mission and perform its functions, may be included under the term "ship." A traveling derrick upon a scow belonging to her owner, and the use of which was indispensable to enable her to perform the duties in which she was engaged at the time of the commission of a negligent act, is a part of her apparel, tackle, and furniture to be appraised as a part of her in proceedings for limitation of liability on account of such act. The Buffalo, 148 Fed. 331, 332.

As merchandise

See Merchandise.

Rigging and furniture

A "ship," although afloat, is not a "ship," if her original construction, rigging, and furnishing remain incomplete. Bowers Hydraulic Dredging Co. v. Federal Contracting Co., 148 Fed. 290, 292 (citing McRae v. Bowers Dredging Co., 86 Fed. 344, 346).

SHIP (Verb)

One who delivers game birds to a carrier for transportation to a point out of the state violates Code, § 2555, providing that no person shall ship any game birds out of the state, though they were taken from the carrier by the state authorities while in the state; the word "ship" meaning delivery to a carrier for the purposes of being transported. State v. Carson, 126 N. W. 698, 699, 147 Iowa, 561, 140 Am. St. Rep. 330.

SHIP CANAL

See Line of Ship Canal.

As county purpose, see County Purpose.

SHIP CHANNEL

The question, "What did the Legislature mean by the use of the term 'ship channel'?" in the grant of the lands lying between high tide and ship channel, is a question of local law, and where the Supreme Court of the state determines it as comprising waters left free to navigation and the definite natural boundary of such navigable waters as the line of low tide, its decision will be followed by the United States Circuit Court. Southern Pac. Co. v. Western Pac. Ry. Co., 144 Fed. 160, 185.

SHIP TO

An order by defendant to "ship to" him, at a specified place and over a route named, 50 cars of coal of a certain grade and price, f. o. b. mines, to be shipped during a week named, did not indicate an intention that defendant should control the coal in transit; and hence the fact that the shipper shipped the coal in his own name did not necessarily, as a matter of law, disclose an intent to retain title after delivery of the coal to the carrier. Hoffman v. Gosline, 172 Fed. 113, 116, 96 C. C. A. 318.

SHIPMENT

See Closed Shipment; Contract for through Shipment; Port of Shipment; Sales or Shipments.

Where a buyer, in letters to the seller, referred to coal as bought for "prompt shipment," it was apparent that he meant "prompt delivery." Pittsburgh & Ohio Min.

Co. v. Scully, 108 N. W. 503, 504, 145 Mich. 229.

Where plaintiff's assignor purchased from defendants 300 tons of English ferromanganese iron by a written order providing for "shipment," 100 tons each in September, October, and November, and defendants immediately contracted with an English concern to ship the ore, their contract with plaintiff providing for "shipments," as distinguished from "deliveries," in September, October, and November, their contract with the English sellers requiring deliveries in New Orleans in October, November, and December, the word "shipment," as used in the contract of sale, did not mean "delivery," and, that shipment of 100 tons having been made in September, there was no breach of contract by failure to deliver such amount in that month. Southern Steel & Iron Co. v. Hickman, Williams & Co., 190 Fed. 888, 890.

The word "shipment," used in joint congressional resolution of March 14, 1912, providing that whenever the President shall find in any American country conditions of domestic violence, which are promoted by munitions of war from the United States, and shall make proclamation thereof, it shall be unlawful to export any shipment of such material, means the actual export of materials declared to be unlawful. United States v. Chavez, 199 Fed. 518, 521.

SHIPPING BUSINESS

The words "doing a shipping business," as used in the statute declaring that flour mills doing a shipping business are public warehouses, refer to milling concerns engaged in shipping grain to terminal points. The statute does not include concerns engaged solely in the manufacture of flour, and an officer of such a concern is not guilty of larceny for neglect to deliver wheat delivered to it. Ex parte Bellamy, 114 N. W. 376, 377, 17 N. D. 140.

SHIPSIDE

A railroad company issued to plaintiff a bill of lading for shipment of cotton to plaintiff at a certain point "shipside." The ordinary signification of the word "shipside" in such a contract is a direction to deliver the cotton at some wharf accessible to the railroad's track. R. A. Lee & Co. v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 48 S. E. 809, 810, 136 N. C. 533.

SHIPS' RIGGING AND APPAREL

"A 'ship's launch' is comprised in the rigging and apparel of the ship, because it is absolutely necessary for the navigation." Dennis v. Home Ins. Co., 136 Fed. 481, 482 (quoting Emerigon, Ins. 1850 [Boston Ed.] 144).

SHIPS' TACKLE, APPAREL, AND FURNITURE

An engine placed on a gas launch to furnish her motive power, and which was essential to her equipment, became a part of her "tackle, apparel, and furniture," and subject to liens against her for repairs or supplies, notwithstanding a reservation of title in the seller until payment of the purchase price, of which reservation those furnishing the repairs and supplies were not chargeable with knowledge or notice. The Hope, 191 Fed. 243, 245.

SHIPPER'S PASS—SHIPPER'S TICKET

A "shipper's pass" or "shipper's ticket" is a pass entitling a shipper of stock to accompany them to market, and is designed to enable the shipper to properly care for the stock and not to relieve the carrier from any liability. McCully v. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co., 110 S. W. 711, 720, 212 Mo. 1 (dissenting opinion of Woodson, J.).

SHIRE

The word "county" signifies the same as "shire"; county being derived from the French, and shire from the Saxon. Both these words signify a circuit or portion of the realm into which the whole land is divided for the better government thereof and the more easy administration of justice. State ex rel. Milton v. Dickenson, 33 South. 514, 519, 44 Fla. 623, 60 L. R. A. 539, 1 Ann. Cas. 122 (dissenting opinion, citing 1 Bouv. Law Dict. [Rawle's Rev.] p. 450).

SHOCK

To "shock" is to cause to tremble; to recoil; to stun. The phrase "shock the conscience" means causing the moral sense to be stunned; to recoil. Mangold v. Bacon, 141 S. W. 650-656, 237 Mo. 496.

The word "shock" may mean the collision or concussion of two physical bodies, or it may mean simply a surprised or disgusted state of the emotions, which momentarily disappears. The Century Dictionary defines the word used pathologically as a condition of profound prostration of voluntary and involuntary functions, of acute onset, caused by trauma, surgical operation, or excessive emotional disturbance (mental shock). Pankopf v. Hinkley, 123 N. W. 625, 626, 141 Wis. 146, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1159.

SHOCK OF HAY

A "stack" of hay is a large pile gathered after the hay has been seasoned, as distinguished from a "cock" or "shock," which is a small pile into which hay is gathered after being mowed, and thus permitted to remain until seasoned. People v. Doyle, 110 Pac. 458, 459, 13 Cal. App. 611.

SHOE

The "shoe" of a clincher tire is the outer cover which attaches to the rim and serves to protect and retain the inner tube on the rim. Boston Woven Hose & Rubber Co. v. Pennsylvania Rubber Co., 156 Fed. 787, 788.

SHOOT—SHOOTING

See Did Shoot.

Shooting as accidental means of death, see Accident—Accidental.

To strike with anything shot; to hit with a missile; often to kill or wound with a firearm; followed by a word denoting the person or thing hit, as an object. State ex rel. Kotilinc v. Swenson, 99 N. W. 1114, 1115, 18 S. D. 196.

The word "shoot," as used in an information charging that accused did shoot, etc., with intent to kill, necessarily implies the existence of a weapon, a load, its discharge, and the act of discharging. Deen v. State, 122 Pac. 941, 942, 7 Okl. Cr. 150.

The word "shoot" means to let fly, or cause to be driven, with force, as an arrow, bullet, or other missile, from a bow, sling, gun, or the like; to discharge. Flowers v. State, 111 Pac. 675, 676, 4 Okl. Cr. 320.

"The crime of 'shooting' is limited to the 'intention to kill.'" State v. Fairbanks, 39 South. 443, 444, 115 La. 457.

A person is guilty of the offense of "shooting" at another, when, without justification, he shoots at another without the intent of committing murder. Fallon v. State, 63 S. E. 806, 807, 5 Ga. App. 659.

"Shooting" at an officer without killing him to prevent an illegal arrest is prima facie not an assault with intent to murder, but the crime of shooting at another defined by Pen. Code 1895, § 113, or assault and battery. Jenkins v. State, 59 S. E. 435, 437, 3 Ga. App. 146.

The offense of "shooting in sudden affray or in sudden heat and passion" is completely defined by Ky. St. § 1242, providing that, if any person shall in sudden affray or in sudden heat and passion, without malice and not in self-defense, shoot at another, he shall be punished as therein provided. If the Legislature had intended that this definition should be qualified by the expression "and under circumstances reasonably calculated to incite his passion beyond his power of self-control," it would have included it within that section, and, not having done so, it was error to so qualify the definition in an instruction. Hardin v. Commonwealth, 71 S. W. 862, 114 Ky. 722.

Kill synonyms

"The word 'shoot' is synonymous with 'kill,' and is frequently, perhaps usually, em-played in that sense." Bader v. New Amsterdam Casualty Co., 112 N. W. 1065, 1066, 102 Minn. 186, 120 Am. St. Rep. 613.

SHOOTER

In blasting rocks, etc., one in charge of the dynamite is called a "shooter," and it is his duty to place the dynamite in holes previously prepared for the purpose at stated times during the day. Kopf v. Monroe Stone Co., 95 N. W. 72, 77, 133 Mich. 286.

In coal mining, it is the business of "shovelers" and "shooters" to bore holes in the face of the coal, which holes are loaded with powder, and the coal blown down by the explosion of the powder, after which the shovelers remove it by loading it into cars. It is also the duty of these shovelers and "shooters" to pull down any loose, overhanging slate, and to carry it out of the room, so that it will be out of the way. It is their duty to observe whether the slate is about to fall, or in danger of falling, and this they do by tapping it with picks or shovels, judging by the sound as to whether there is any immediate danger of its falling. If there is it is their duty to pull down the slate so as to prevent its falling on the miner operating the machine. Smith's Adm'r v. North Jellico Coal Co., 114 S. W. 785, 131 Ky. 196, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1266.

SHOOTING AT RANDOM

Shooting at a target upon or along a public highway is not a "shooting at random" on a public highway. Callahan v. Commonwealth, 99 S. W. 296, 124 Ky. 445.

SHOOTING COAL

By the phrase to "shoot the coal on the solid," in relation to coal mining, is meant blasting the coal by putting holes straight into the wall or face of the coal and using therein large charges of dynamite or powder. When the coal is cut under before blasting, a much smaller charge is required to blow it down, which is called "shooting on the free." Andricus' Adm'r v. Pineville Coal Co., 90 S. W. 233, 234, 121 Ky. 724.

SHOOTING CRAPS

The vernacular descriptive of the game of craps is "shooting craps." The word "shooting," as applied to the game of craps, is synonymous with the word "playing." Indeed, the word "playing," as used in the statute relating to gaming, is simply a generic term. To shoot craps is to play craps. To roll tenpins is to play tenpins. Sims v. State, 57 S. E. 1029, 1 Ga. App. 776.

SHOOTING WITH INTENT TO KILL

"Maiming is not a necessary element of the crime of shooting with intent to kill. In stating the facts constituting the last-mentioned crime, it is in no case necessary to show maiming. Maiming may, and often does, result from shooting, but it is a disinct offense, under no circumstances forming part of the consummated crime of 'shooting with intent to kill.'" State v. Mattison, 100 N. W. 1091, 1093, 13 N. D. 391.

SHOP

See Bucket Shop; Closed Shop; Dram-shop; Grogshop; Junkshop; Open Shop; Repair Shop; Tippling House or Shop; Working in a Shop; Work-shop.

Although a room kept open by a common victualer merely as a dining room is not a "shop," within the meaning of a statute prohibiting the keeping open of shops on Sunday, it was not error to refuse a ruling that, if one keeping open such a dining room on Sunday sold cigars in the course of business, she had not violated the law, since, if one of the purposes in keeping open the shop was the sale of cigars, she was guilty, and the question of such purpose was for the jury. Commonwealth v. Graham, 56 N. E. 829, 830, 176 Mass. 5.

Where intoxicating liquors are kept in a dwelling house and sales are made therein, it may properly be regarded as a "shop" or place of public resort within Laws 1907, p. 363, c. 173, § 8, providing that no warrant shall be issued to search a private residence occupied as such unless it or some part of it is used as a store, shop, hotel, or boarding house, or unless such residence is a place of public resort. State v. Madison, 122 N. W. 647, 650, 23 S. D. 584.

Where, on a trial for burglary, it appeared that accused and a third person went to the building of a company, broke into it, and took some tools, and the witnesses spoke of the building as a "shop," the court properly charged that the building was a shop within the statute punishing one breaking into and entering any shop with intent to commit larceny; the building being a shop within the "common and approved usage of language." Comp. Laws, § 50. People v. Wycoff, 114 N. W. 242, 150 Mich. 449.

Store synonymous

A "store" is defined as any place where goods are sold, either by wholesale or retail, and the word "shop" could have no broader meaning in Rev. St. c. 6, § 14, excepting from the general rule that personal property is taxable only at the residence of the owner, all personal property employed in trade, in the erection of buildings, or vessels, or in the mechanic arts, which was to be taxed in the town where so employed, provided the owner, his servant, subcontractor, or agent occupied any store, shop, mill, etc., for the purposes of such employment. A cotton broker engaged in buying and selling cotton, who occupied a desk and desk room in an office, kept his account books and papers there, but made no sales and kept no goods except samples, the sales being made by taking the samples and exhibiting them to purchasers at their places of business, did not occupy a store or "shop," within the meaning of the statute. Martin v. City of Portland, 17 Atl. 72, 73, 81 Me. 293.

SHOP CARD

Cards placed on crippled cars showing that they were injured, and their destination, were called "shop cards." Shuster v. Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. (Del.) 62 Atl. 689, 690, 6 Pennewill, 4.

SHOP COST

Plaintiff, a bridge building company, and defendant entered into agreements whereby plaintiff turned over to defendant certain uncompleted contracts. Plaintiff guaranteed that the contracts so turned over would net defendant a clear profit of not less than 15 per cent. of the "shop cost" of performing the contracts. It was stipulated that the term "shop cost" should include labor, material, and general shop expenses, f. o. b. cars at plaintiff's works. Before entering into the agreements, plaintiff had works of its own in Connecticut, and had begun to establish works in Pennsylvania. By the agreements these works were to be turned over to defendant. Before the agreements, plaintiff, in order to perform the uncompleted contracts, had made contracts with third persons having works of their own to furnish materials to be sent directly to the places where the uncompleted contracts were to be performed. The defendant claimed that under the head of "shop cost," as used in these three contracts, "shipments of structural iron and steel work direct from mills to sites of erection, and also all subcontracts for carrying out the transferred contracts, should be included in determining the amount of shop cost of the contracts transferred to the defendant, and that the expression 'f. o. b. cars at works of the party of the first part' was to be considered as a provision that freight was not to be included in shop cost." The trial court overruled this claim, and held in effect that "shop cost," as used in these three contracts, meant shop cost only at the works of the plaintiff in this state and in Pennsylvania, and not at the works of other parties. We think this ruling was correct. Berlin Iron Bridge Co. v. American Bridge Co., 55 Atl. 573, 577, 76 Conn. 1.

SHOP DRAWING

The phrase "detailed drawings," as used in a contract under which a party furnished steelwork for a building, meant a plan showing the position of each column, beam, etc., and not "punching sheets" or "shop drawings." New York Architectural Terra Cotta Co. v. Williams, 92 N. Y. Supp. 808, 809, 102 App. Div. 1.

SHOPKEEPER

The "keeper of a fruit stand," from which fruit was sold on Sunday, was a "shopkeeper" engaged in selling merchandise on Sunday, within Code 1906, § 1367, providing that a merchant, shopkeeper, or other person shall not keep open his store on Sunday for the purpose of dispensing of any wares or merchandise. City of Gulfport v. Stratakos, 43 South. 812, 90 Miss. 489, 13 Ann. Cas. 855.

A "shopkeeper" is one who keeps a shop for the sale of goods, a trader who sells goods in a shop or by retail, as distinguished from a merchant who sells by wholesale. State v. Cohen, 63 Atl. 928, 929, 73 N. H. 543.

SHORE

See Running The Shore; Seashore.

A "shore" is defined to be land on the margin of the sea or a lake or river; that space of land which is alternately covered and left dry by the rising and falling of the tide; the space between high and low water marks. The "shore" and soil under the water and "riparian rights" are entirely distinct and separate subjects, and neither includes the other. "Riparian rights" are appurtenant to the upland and not to the shore and bed of the river. A statute entitled "An act granting to the city of Mobile the riparian rights to the river front," and giving the city of Mobile the "shore and soil" under the Mobile river within the city limits, is violative of the Constitution declaring that each law shall embrace but one subject which shall be described in the title. Mobile Dry-Docks Co. v. City of Mobile, 40 South. 205, 207, 208, 209, 146 Ala. 198, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 822, 9 Ann. Cas. 1229.

Beach synonyms

An ordinance prohibiting the removal of stone, sand, or earth from the beach, or from the water within 300 feet of high-water mark along a navigable lake between the northern and southern city limits, does not assume to prohibit interference above high-water mark, but prevents such removal from the beach, or from the water within 300 feet of high-water mark along the shore of the lake; the word, "beach" being synonymous with "shore," and meaning that portion of the shore or lake between ordinary high and low water mark. C. Beck Co. v. City of Milwaukee, 120 N. W. 293, 296, 139 Wis. 340, 131 Am. St. Rep. 1061.

Harbor distinguished

A statute incorporating a township and fixing its boundaries as "on the southeast by New York Harbor," etc., fixes the boundaries of the township so as to include lands under the water of the harbor to the boundary line of the state, since a harbor is a recess in the coast line of a body of water in which ships can be sheltered, and it may extend to a line inside of which vessels may find protection, and the word has a more extended meaning than "shore," which when applied to a tide water bay usually means the part between ordinary high and low water marks. Leary v. Jersey City, 189 Fed. 419, 428.

As land between high and low water

"Shore" is the space between high and low water mark. Southern Pac. Co. v. Western Pac. Ry. Co., 144 Fed. 160, 199 (citing Dutton v. Strong, 1 Black, 23, 17 L. Ed. 29; Dana v. Jackson St. Wharf Co., 31 Cal. 118, 89 Am. Dec. 164).

The "shore" of navigable water is the ground lying between ordinary high-water and low-water mark. Dalton v. Hazelet, 182 Fed. 561, 572, 105 C. C. A. 99.

Section 1 of the Wharf Act of 1851 defined "shore" as the land between the limits of ordinary high and low water. Attorney-General v. Central R. Co. of New Jersey, 59 Atl. 348, 353, 68 N. J. Eq. 198.

The word "shore," as used in conveyancing when applied to tidal waters, both in the common and civil law, means the space between high and low water marks. Potomac Dredging Co. of Baltimore City v. Smoot, 69 Atl. 507, 509, 108 Md. 54.

The "shores of a navigable river" are the spaces between high and low water marks, and the bed of a river includes the shores. Tideland is that daily covered and uncovered by water by the ordinary ebb and flow of normal tides. State ex rel. Ellis v. Gerbing, 47 South. 353, 356, 56 Fla. 603, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 337.

The margin of the bed of a river which lies between high and low water mark is called the "beach" or "shore," which is actually a part of the bed of the river, and, when the river is at its full flow, whether caused by the tide or by the natural increase of waters by rains, floods, and the like, filling its natural bed to its highest reach of flow, it marks its high-water, while its lessened range of flow by summer heats shows its low-water, mark. Sun Dial Ranch v. May Land Co., 119 Pac. 758, 762, 61 Or. 205.

The word "shore" is of doubtful meaning, when used as a boundary, as it means in one case the sea side and in another case the land side of the "shore." The meaning to be attached to the word, when used in a deed, must depend upon the instrument in which it occurs, taken as a whole, and upon surrounding circumstances. It does not include the space between high and low water mark, if the word is used in its technical sense. Haskell v. Friend, 81 N. E. 962, 963, 196 Mass. 198 (citing Storer v. Freeman, 6 Mass. 435, 4 Am. Dec. 155).

The "shore" of a stream is in law "the space between ordinary high-water mark and low-water mark" (quoting and approving definition in Century Dict.). The old distinction between "shore" and "bank," as found in tide water, is not applicable to fresh water, and, though the terms have often been used interchangeably, neither term has been used to designate the top of an accretion 50 or 60 feet above the ordinary water line in a fresh water river, and when the subject under discussion was the division of accretions beginning at the bank or shore, and while the word "bank" might be properly used to designate such an accretion along a river, the word "shore" could hardly be so used. The term "shore" does not mean the meander line, as the meander line is frequently run on the top of the bank. City of Peoria v. Central Nat. Bank, 79 N. E. 296, 299, 224 Ill. 43 (citing Kehr v. Snyder, 2 N. E. 68, 69, 114 Ill. 313, 316, 55 Am. Rep. 866; Child v. Starr [N. Y.] 4 Hill, 369; Jones on Real Property, § 488; Freeman v. Bellegarde, 41 Pac. 289, 108 Cal. 179, 49 Am. St. Rep. 76; Gould, Wat. [3d Ed.] § 41, note 2; Dutton v. Strong, 66 U. S. [1 Black] 23, 17 L. Ed. 29; Stone v. City of Augusta, 46 Me. 127; Lacy v. Green, 84 Pa. 514; Handly's Lessee v. Anthony, 18 U. S. [5 Wheat.] 376, 5 L. Ed. 113).

As low-water mark

The word "shore," as contained in a statute defining the boundary of a county, is the edge of the water at low-water mark; and, using the word in its strict sense, it should be applied to a strip of land fronting on tide water between high and low water marks. People v. Kyser, 138 N. Y. Supp. 801, 802, 78 Misc. Rep. 68 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6496).

SHORE LAND

Laws 1897, p. 230, c. 89, § 4, defines "shore lands" to be those bordering on the shores of navigable lakes or rivers below the line of ordinary high-water mark and not subject to tidal overflow. Van Siclen v. Muir, 89 Pac. 188, 189, 46 Wash. 38.

Laws 1897, p. 230, c. 89, § 4, defines "shore lands" as lands bordering on the shores of navigable waters below the line of ordinary high water and not subject to tidal flow. In a suit by an owner of uplands bordering on navigable waters for the removal of obstructions in front of the lands, it appeared that the state had not established harbor lines, and the obstructions consisted of piles driven below the line of low water and a boathouse. It did not appear whether the water was of sufficient depth for ordinary navigation. Held, that the owner could not maintain the suit based on his preference right to purchase the shore lands in front of the uplands. Muir v. Johnson, 94 Pac. 899, 49 Wash. 66.

SHORE LINE

"Shore line" does not mean the meander line, as the meander line is frequently run on the top of the bank, often many feet above the usual water line reached by the river during ordinary seasons. This term has usually been used to mean, in natural fresh water rivers, low-water mark, and grants bounded by the shore extended to that line, making the water's edge at low water the boundary. City of Peoria v. Central Nat. Bank, 79 N. E. 296, 299, 300, 224 Ill. 43 (citing Child v. Starr [N. Y.] 4 Hill, 369; Jones, Real Prop. § 488; Freeman v. Bellegarde, 41 Pac. 289, 108 Cal. 179, 49 Am. St. Rep. 76; Gould, Wat. [3d Ed.] § 41, note 2; Dutton v. Strong, 66 U. S. [1 Black] 23, 17 L. Ed. 29; Stone v. City of Augusta, 46 Me. 127; Lacy v. Green, 84 Pa. 514; Handly's Lessee v. Anthony, 18 U. S. [5 Wheat.] 376, 5 L. Ed. 113).

SHORE OR WATER FRONT

The expression "shores or water fronts," as used in a lease describing a privilege granted as certain riparian or other rights, to wit, the exclusive privilege of taking, by dredging or otherwise, all sand and gravel that the lessee may desire to take along the entire "shores or water fronts" of a certain farm, were words of description which must, in the absence of qualifying expressions, be taken to refer to the then existing condition of the property, and cannot be enlarged, by mere implication or construction, to mean every receding shore whose recession would be caused by the lessee's own action exercised at his volition to the detriment of the lessor, and the lessee's rights were limited to the excavation of sand and gravel between high and low water marks, and the lessee was not authorized to remove fast land from any part of the farm bordering on the stream. Potomac Dredging Co. of Baltimore City v. Smoot, 69 Atl. 507, 509, 108 Md. 54.

SHORT

An authority to brokers to sell stock "short" is authority to sell on plaintiff's account stock which he did not have, and which the brokers would be compelled to borrow for him. Armstrong v. Bickel, 66 Atl. 326, 327, 217 Pa. 173.

"Short sale" is usually applied to sales of stocks and bonds where the seller has not the stock he assumes to sell, but borrows it and expects to replace it when the market value has declined. Such sales are perfectly valid, provided the parties contemplate an actual purchase or actual sale by or through the broker and not a mere settlement by a payment of differences. Hurd v. Taylor, 73 N. E. 977, 181 N. Y. 231.

A sale of stock "short" by a broker on his own account does not necessarily imply a conversion by the broker of stock purchased for a customer; a short sale being of that which the vendor has not at the time, but which he expects to acquire subsequently for delivery at a lower price. Lamprecht v. State, 95 N. E. 656, 659, 84 Ohio St. 32.

The statement that one is "short" in his account does not necessarily impute to him the crime of larceny after trust, where, according to the meaning of the statement and the language accompanying it, the offense would not be complete unless there was a refusal to pay for or deliver the property which it might be inferred had been appropriated; the word "short" not of itself implying a crime, but being a term of common use in the stock and produce markets, implying that one has less of a commodity than may be necessary to meet obligations, and not implying that the commodity cannot or will not be supplied upon demand. Whitley v. Newman, 70 S. E. 686, 690, 9 Ga. App. 89.

SHORT FORM

The term "short form," as used in Acts 1898, p. 92, in referring to the "short form" of bills of exceptions in that act, as contrasted with bringing up the case "in the usual form," refers to excepting to the judgment, decree, or verdict, segregating a certain ruling, assigning error on it, and bringing it up as a necessarily controlling ruling in the brief mode set out in the statute. The "usual form" referred to means some form or methods for bringing cases to the reviewing court, which were usual before the enactment of the statute. Lyndon v. Georgia R. & Electric Co., 58 S. E. 1047-1050, 129 Ga. 353.

The so-called "short form decision" was authorized by that part of section 1022 of the Code of Civil Procedure of New York which permitted a court or referee to "file a decision stating concisely the grounds upon which the issues have been decided." Miller v. New York & N. S. R. Co., 75 N. E. 1111, 1112, 183 N. Y. 123.

SHORT PRICE

Tobacco in bond is sold in two ways: At the long price, which denotes that the duty does not come in question, but that the goods are sold at a flat price, without reference to duty; and "short price" is that the merchandise and the duties are separated. Friend v. Rosenwald, 108 N. Y. Supp. 701, 702, 124 App. Div. 226.

SHORT RATES

See Usual Short Rate.

SHORT TIME

An instruction that if you believe from the evidence that the conductor of defendant requested of plaintiff his fare or ticket a short time after leaving the depot in Ocala, as testified by witnesses of defendant, and that he thereafter again requested the plaintiff to produce his ticket or pay his fare, and that he failed to do so, whereupon he was required to leave the train, you will find for the defendant is faulty, since a "short time" after leaving the depot in Ocala might mean one second, five minutes, or more, being a relative term, and might be either a reasonable time or not, and so the word "thereafter" might mean immediately or any subsequent time after the first demand. Seaboard Air Line R. v. Scarborough, 42 South. 706, 712, 52 Fla. 425.

Code 1907, § 7347, requires prosecutions for misdemeanors to be commenced within 12 months after their commission. Accused was indicted for a misdemeanor in illegally selling whisky. The prosecuting witness testified that he purchased the whisky "a short time before" the grand jury returned the indictment. Held that, in view of the connection in which the expression was used, "a short time" must be held to be less than 12 months, and hence the prosecution was not barred. Wilson v. State, 56 South. 114, 115, 2 Ala. App. 203.

SHORTAGE

Reference to a "shortage" in one's accounts does not necessarily impute larceny. Whitley v. Newman, 70 S. E. 686, 690, 9 Ga. App. 89.

Under a contract providing for the sale of coal from a designated mine, and that if there should be "a shortage of cars," the shipment should be divided in fair proportion with other orders, the term "shortage of cars" means that the car supply at the mine from which the coal is produced is short. Phillips v. Pilling, 64 Atl. 396, 398, 215 Pa. 64.

SHORTHAND

As writing, see Write—Writing.

SHORTLY

In a contract for the sale of personal property to be delivered "shortly," it is the duty of the seller to tender delivery within a reasonable time, and, if he tenders delivery after such time, the buyer may reject. Cincinnati Glass & China Co. v. Stephens, 60 S. E. 360, 361, 3 Ga. App. 766.

SHOT

See Missed Shot; Pop Shots; Slung Shot; Spring Shot.

SHOT GUN

As deadly weapon, see Deadly Weapon.

SHOT GUN CARRIAGE

Where the saw carriage, used in a mill, moved back and forth upon a track past the saw by means of steam power applied directly to the piston attached to the carriage, and the steam was applied by means of a lever operated by a head sawyer, and this lever was equipped with a device which, when used, held the lever when not in use, so as to prevent the admission of steam into the piston, it was of the kind commonly known as a "shot gun" or "steam feed" carriage. Eldner v. Three Lakes Lumber Co., 88 Pac. 326, 45 Wash. 323.

SHOULD

Where a contract for construction work for a railroad stipulated that the railroad would pay a specified sum for the work, with the option of paying the same in its bonds and stocks authorized by the Railroad Commission, and, in case the Commission "should not authorize an amount of bonds and stocks" equal to such sum, the contractor would accept in full satisfaction such an amount as the Commission authorized, etc., the contractor could demand no more stocks and bonds than the Commission authorized, provided the Commission was justified in refusing to authorize a further issue, and the amount authorized must then be received by the contractor in full satisfaction, the word "should" in the quoted phrase evidently meaning such an amount as the Commission elected to authorize. United States & Mexican Trust Co. v. Delaware Western Construction Co. (Tex.) 112 S. W. 447, 458.

Command implied

The word "should," as used in Laws 1901, p. 387, c. 106, § 3, providing that, on proof of certain facts to the county court, it shall be determined whether territory should be disconnected from a city, does not authorize the court to do as it pleases; the statute is mandatory. Town of Edgewater v. Liebhadt, 76 Pac. 366, 367, 32 Colo. 307.

Duty and obligation implied

The word "should," as used in instructions, may convey to the jury the sense of duty and obligation. State v. Connor, 87 Pac. 703, 74 Kan. 898.

As must

The words "there should be," as used in a rule providing that there should be at least one telegraph office between those at which opposing trains received meeting orders, do not mean that "there must be." It is a reasonable inference from the adoption of the phrase "there should be" that while, under ordinary circumstances, there should be an intervening office, yet the circumstances may be such at times as to justify the sending of a meeting order to stations between which there is no telegraph office. Wallace v. Boston & M. R. R., 57 Atl. 913, 917, 72 N. H. 504.

As ought

In a prosecution for homicide, an instruction that the jury need not believe the testimony of the accused, and should not do so, if after fairly and impartially considering all the evidence, they believe that accused willfully and knowingly testified falsely to any material matter, is erroneous because improperly directing the jury to disregard defendant's testimony; the word "should" being equivalent to "ought to." People v. Barkas, 99 N. E. 698, 702, 255 Ill. 516.

An instruction that, when a criminal charge is to be proved on circumstantial evidence, the proof ought to be not only consistent with the prisoner's guilt, but inconsistent with any other rational conclusion, is not erroneous in failing to make that condition mandatory; the word "ought" meaning to be bound in duty or by moral obligation, to be necessary or becoming, and to be synonymous with "should." State v. Blaine, 124 Pac. 516, 517, 45 Mont. 482.

As would

An instruction that the care required of a person approaching a railroad crossing is such as an ordinarily prudent person "would exercise" was equivalent to such as an ordinarily prudent person "should exercise," the words "would" and "should" in that connection being synonymous. Southern Ry. Co. v. King, 160 Fed. 332, 336, 87 C. C. A. 284.

SHOULD THEY LEAVE ISSUE

Where a will directed that the income of testator's residuary estate be divided equally between his son and daughter, for their sole and individual benefit and use, and at their decease, should they leave issue, to descend in fee to such issue, or, in case only one of them left issue, then the whole in fee to such issue, but, should neither child leave issue, then to testator's heirs at law in his line, at which time the trust created should cease, on the death of the daughter leaving issue, the trust as to one-half of the property terminated, and that half descended to her issue per stirpes; and a son of the daughter, who died before his mother, did not take a vested interest in the trust estate, which descended to his mother on his death, since his interest depended, not only on the contingency that his mother should leave issue at her death, but also that he should survive her; "the words 'should they leave issue' meaning if they respectively leave issue. * * * " Gardner v. Savage, 65 N. E. 851, 852, 182 Mass. 521.

SHOULDER

"A 'shoulder' is a prominent or projecting part below the top." Hence a bottle, the neck of which is merely in the shape of an inverted cone and which flares into the bottle, has no "shoulder" within the meaning of the term when used to designate a ridge on the neck of the bottle on which was fastened a sealing device. Imperial Bottle Cap & Machine Co. v. Crown Cork & Seal Co. of Baltimore City, 139 Fed. 312, 324, 71 C. C. A. 442 (quoting and adopting the definition in Cent. Dict.).

SHOVEL CAR

As car, see Car.

SHOVELER

In coal mining, it is the business of "shovelers" and "shooters" to bore holes in the face of the coal, which holes are loaded with powder, and the coal blown down by the explosion of the powder, after which the shovelers would remove it by loading it into cars. It is also the duty of these "shovelers" and shooters to pull down any loose, overhanging slate, and to carry it out of the room so that it will be out of the way. It is their duty to observe whether the slate is about to fall, or in danger of falling, and this they do by tapping it with picks or shovels, judging by the sound as to whether there is any immediate danger of its falling. If there is, it is their duty to pull down the slate so as to prevent its falling on the miner operating the machine. Smith's Adm'r v. North Jellico Coal Co., 114 S. W. 785, 131 Ky. 196, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1266.

SHOVING THE Y

The expression "shoving the Y," used with relation to making up a train, meant that an engine would be attached to the cars standing on the Y, so as to move and connect them with the train to be made up. McGuire v. Quincy, O. & K. C. R. Co., 107 S. W. 411, 412, 128 Mo. App. 677.

SHOW

The mere fact that plaintiff urged B. to look at defendant's farm, concerning which he already had full knowledge, did not constitute a "showing" of the farm to B., within the provisions of a contract obligating defendant to pay commissions in case of a sale to any person to whom plaintiff had shown the land. Winthrop Land Co. v. Utley, 125 N. W. 164, 146 Iowa, 310.

A provision of the contract requiring plaintiff to furnish defendant a true report, showing the "substance encountered," should be construed only to require plaintiff to disclose the substance encountered by the kind of exploration and development adopted by the parties to test the same. Cleveland-Cliffs Iron Co. v. East Itasca Min. Co., 146 Fed. 232-235, 76 C. C. A. 598.

As prove

The term "show," as used in Street Opening Act, § 28, providing that the notice of intention to apply for a deed of land sold for delinquent assessments must be served on the owner; provided, if he cannot be found after due diligence, it may be posted, and that to warrant the execution of a deed on such constructive service due diligence must be shown, contemplates the making apparent or clear by evidence, and a mere statement that due diligence was used is insufficient. Hennessy v. Hall, 113 Pac. 350, 352, 14 Cal. App. 759 (citing Meadow Val. Min. Co. v. Dodds, 7 Nev. 143, 8 Am. Rep. 709; Coyle v. Commonwealth, 104 Pa. 117).

The language of the rule that an applicant for the issuance of a subpoena for production of books and papers must "show" that they are material implies something more than the mere allegation of affiant's belief that the books contain material entries, as facts must be shown on which the court can see, at least presumptively, that the books and papers contain material entries. In re Lee, 85 N. Y. Supp. 224, 227, 41 Misc. Rep. 642.

Under the Kansas statute providing that, before service can be made by publication, an affidavit must be filed stating that service cannot be made on the defendant or defendants within the state and showing that the case is one mentioned in the preceding section, the purpose of the statute is to require such a description of the cause of action as will enable the court to determine upon inspection whether the action mentioned in the affidavit is one in which service by publication may be given; that being the only significance of "show" as used in this act. Roberts v. Fagan, 92 Pac. 559, 560, 76 Kan. 536.

SHOWN

See Cause Shown.

There is no material difference between the expressions "shown by the defendant" and "established by the defendant." Wisstrom v. Redlick Bros., 92 Pac. 1048, 1050, 6 Cal. App. 671.

The words "shown" and "appear," as used in instructions in a criminal case, that "it must be shown beyond a reasonable doubt," or "it must appear beyond a reasonable doubt," are synonymous with the word "prove" or "proven," and do not exact a less degree of proof than would have been exacted if the word "prove" or "proven" had been used. State v. Crofford, 110 N. W. 921, 925, 133 Iowa, 478.

Ballots marked in a voting booth, either by the clerk of election or in his presence, are "shown to another person," within St. § 1474, and are illegal. Major v. Barker, 35 S. W. 543, 544, 99 Ky. 305.

In a prosecution for rape, the instruction that one accused of a crime "is presumed to be innocent until the contrary is shown and his guilt established by the evidence," was not defective in the use of the word "shown," which plainly meant "proved," nor because of the failure to repeat "beyond a reasonable doubt," as the jury was repeatedly told this in other portions of the charge. People v. Davenport, 110 Pac. 318, 320, 13 Cal. App. 632.

The court defined "contributory negligence," and charged that the burden was on defendant to show contributory negligence by a fair preponderance of the evidence, but if the evidence as a whole, by whomsoever produced, established contributory negligence, it would bar recovery. He further charged that it was a passenger's duty to use reasonable care in alighting; that she should not attempt to alight while the car was in motion, if dangerous to do so; and that if she did so she assumed any additional risk attendant on such attempt. The court also charged that if plaintiff attempted to alight while the car was in motion, and her injury was caused thereby, she could not recover. Held, that under such instructions the further charge that plaintiff was entitled to recover in a certain event, unless it had been "shown" that plaintiff was herself negligent, was not objectionable as implying that the proof of plaintiff's negligence must be such as to amount to a demonstration, instead of establishing the fact by a preponderance of the evidence. Indianapolis Traction & Terminal Co. v. Miller, 82 N. E. 113, 114, 40 Ind. App. 403.

SHOWCASE

As furniture, see Furniture.

SHOWERING

"Showering," as a manner of watering stock during transportation, is usually done by holding a pipe from an elevated tank with one end flattened, so that the water is thrown through the openings in the cars as they slowly pass, thereby sprinkling and cooling the animals within. The duty of "showering" was not imposed on a shipper by a clause in the freight contract, providing that the animals were to be "watered, fed, and cared for" by the shipper or his agent. Peck v. Chicago Great Western R. Co., 115 N. W. 1113, 1114, 138 Iowa, 187, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 883, 128 Am. St. Rep. 185.

SHOWS

See Common Show; Public Show.
Other shows, see Other.

The word "theater," as used in section 8369, Rev. Codes, making it a misdemeanor to keep open and maintain a theater on Sunday, means a theatrical performance or entertainment and does not include all shows, though a "show" includes a theatrical performance. State v. Penny, 111 Pac. 727, 730, 42 Mont. 118, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1155.

The term "shows," as used in Rev. Laws 1905, § 4981, which prohibits certain sports and other exercises and shows on the Sabbath Day, refers to out of door amusements, and a moving picture exhibition, designed to illustrate moral subjects, for the entertainment of the public, when conducted in an orderly manner within a building, is not within Rev. Laws 1905, § 4981. State v. Chamberlain, 127 N. W. 444, 445, 112 Minn. 52, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 335.

Pen. Code, § 265, prohibits all shooting, hunting, fishing, playing, horse racing, gaming, or other public sports, exercises, or shows, and all noise disturbing the peace of the day, on Sunday; and section 277 provides that the performance of any tragedy, comedy, opera, ballet, farce, negro minstrelsy, negro or other dancing, wrestling, boxing, sparring contest, trial of strength, or any part or parts therein, or any circus, equestrian or dramatic performance or exercise, or any performance or exercise of jugglers, acrobats, club performances, or rope dancers on Sunday, shall constitute a misdemeanor. Held, that section 265 relates only to public outdoor exhibitions, and that the word "shows," as there used, did not include a combination lecture and moving picture show, accompanied by musical selections, in a theater on Sunday. Keith & Proctor Amusement Co. v. Bingham, 108 N. Y. Supp. 205, 207. An exhibition of stereopticon pictures cast on a canvas on Sunday, and a lecture, consisting of the names and descriptions of the pictures, etc., did not constitute a violation of Pen. Code, § 265. People v. Lynch, 108 N. Y. Supp. 209. An exhibition of a stereopticon and pictures operated by an automatic slot machine device, together with certain other machines which, on the insertion of money in the slot, communicated certain musical selections to the operator, audible to him alone, did not constitute a violation of Pen. Code, § 265. People v. Flynn, 108 N. Y. Supp. 208. Where defendant owned a confectionery store, and operated a moving picture exhibition in a room adjoining, in which soda water, ice cream, etc., was served during the performance, it constituted a "show," the operation of which on Sunday is prohibited by the express provision of Pen. Code, § 265. Economopoulos v. Bingham, 109 N. Y. Supp. 728, 729. A moving picture exhibition is a "show," within Pen. Code, § 265. Gale v. Bingham, 110 N. Y. Supp. 12, 13.

A company giving an entertainment consisting of panoramic reproductions of battles of the Anglo-Boer war, with portrayal of military maneuvers, but with no circus rings, trapeze acting, wild beasts, or clowns, is assessable with a license tax, under Acts 1902-03, p. 205, c. 148, § 108, providing for the assessment of a license tax upon "theatrical performances, panoramas, etc.," and not under section 111, providing for a license tax upon "shows, circuses, and menageries." Boer War Spectacle v. Commonwealth, 60 S. E. 85, 86, 107 Va. 653.

SHUNT

See Electric Shunt.

A railroad car is "kicked" or "shunted" when it is set in motion by the engine and then detached to travel forward. Lang v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 91 S. W. 1012, 1013, 115 Mo. App. 489.

SHUT DOWN

The words "shut down," as commonly used in relation to manufacturing plants, refer to the stopping of the machinery and the mechanism in general by which the manufacture is effected, and is similar in significance to the word "idle." An occasional shipment or handling of shingles, the mere output of the plant, cannot be said to include the idea of activity in the movement of manufacturing appliances such as was evidently intended by the words in an insurance policy requiring notice to the company should the property be idle or "shut down" for more than 30 days at any one time. Such provision in the policy refers to more than the mere lack of occupancy, and where the machinery of a manufacturing plant was not running for over 30 days at one time without the insurer's consent, the mere fact that some work was being conducted on the premises would not save a forfeiture of the policy. Brehm Lumber Co. v. Svea Ins. Co., 79 Pac. 34, 35, 36 Wash. 520, 68 L. R. A. 109.

A fire policy on a sawmill and electric light plant, requiring that at all times when the property remained "idle or inoperative" a constant day and night watchman should be kept on duty, and that, if the property was idle or "shut down" for more than 30 days at a time, permission should be obtained and indorsed on the policy. Held, that the words "idle or inoperative" should be construed as synonymous with "shut down," to mean a cessation of operation from the ordinary running of the plant, and not merely the usual shutting down for the night, or over Sunday, or on a holiday; and hence the policy was not broken by the insured's failure to keep a watchman on duty while the plant was temporarily shut down over Sunday. Tillamook Lumbering Co. v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co., 175 Fed. 508, 510; Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. v. Tillamook Lumbering Co., 178 Fed. 161, 101 C. C. A. 481, 21 Ann. Cas. 844.

SHUTTLE GUARD

A "shuttle guard" is a device in general use in cotton mills. It prevents the shuttle from flying up, while the loom is in operation. No shuttle guards are ever used on the best and on the most modern types of looms used in the manufacture of hose and belting duck, but in place of the shuttle guard there is used what is called a "reed-cap," projecting above the race board of the shuttle, and occupying, with reference to the shuttle, the place of the shuttle guard. Vinson v. Willingham Cotton Mills, 58 S. E. 413, 2 Ga. App. 53.

SIC UTERE TUO UT ALIENUM NON LÆDAS

"Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas" is defined as meaning that "one cannot use his own property so as to injure the rights of others, nor can he use it in such a manner as to offend against public morality, health, or peace and good order." The Legislature may prohibit acts of commission and omission by an owner the result of which is to invade the rights of others or of the people. Laws 1908, p. 1221, c. 429, prohibiting pumping of mineral waters for the purpose of extracting the gas therein as a commodity, is valid. People v. New York Carbonic Acid Gas Co., 90 N. E. 441, 448, 196 N. Y. 421.

"Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas" is an old maxim which has a broad application. It does not mean that one must never use his own so as to do any injury to his neighbor or his property. Such a rule could not be enforced in civilized society. Persons living in organized communities must suffer some damage, annoyance, and inconvenience from each other. For these they are compensated by all the advantages of civilized society. If one lives in the city he must expect to suffer the dirt, smoke, noisome odors, noise, and confusion incident to city life." Where one operates a factory emitting foul or noisome smells and owns or controls all the land within the area traversed by them in sufficient strength to be nauseating or substantially discomforting, no one has just cause to complain. But to foist impure and disgusting odors upon others in their homes is a different matter, and, save in localities generally devoted to a business of a character to produce such or equally offensive smells, or unless by virtue of grant, license, estoppel, or prescription, is not to be tolerated. United States v. Luce, 141 Fed. 385, 415 (quoting and adopting definition in Campbell v. Seaman, 63 N. Y. 568, 20 Am. Rep. 567).

The maxim, "Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas," extends to all damages for which the law gives redress, but no further. Carroll v. Rye Tp., 101 N. W. 894, 897, 13 N. D. 458.

The maxim, "Sic utere," etc., as applied to nuisances, does not mean that one must not annoy, but that one must not injure. Peck v. Newburgh Light, Heat & Power Co., 116 N. Y. Supp. 433, 435, 132 App. Div. 82.

SICK

Where a complaint for personal injuries alleged that as an effect of the injury plaintiff was "thereby made sick," evidence that plaintiff suffered from pleurisy caused by the hurt, which developed into pneumonia, was admissible without any further allegations specifically defining the diseases or hurts received by plaintiff. Lauder v. Currier, 84 Pac. 217, 218, 3 Cal. App. 28.

SICK AND UNABLE TO WORK

Where the by-laws of a fraternal benefit society provide for the payment of sick benefits where a member is "sick and unable to work," sick benefits are payable where a member has not been restored to full health and is substantially unable to do such work as he was accustomed to do prior to his sickness. Plattdeutsche Grot Gilde von de Vereinigten Staaten von Nord Amerika v. Ross, 117 Ill. App. 247, 252.

SICKNESS

See During Last Sickness; Last Sickness; Serious Sickness.

"Sickness" is defined as the state of being sick or suffering from disease; a diseased condition of the system; a particular kind of disorder; and a disordered or enfeebled state of anything. Kane v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 132 N. W. 920, 921, 90 Neb. 112, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1145, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 764.

In an action for personal injuries, a charge to allow plaintiff compensation for any sickness, physical or mental pain, that he suffered, and for the reasonable value of any time he has lost was erroneous, because the term "sickness" embraces physical and mental pain and loss of time, and the charge was calculated to cause a finding for double damages. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Barnwell (Tex.), 133 S. W. 527, 528.

The terms "sickness" and "disease" do not mean a trifling illness, nor an occasional physical disturbance resulting from accidental causes not permanent in their effects nor a temporary illness which readily yields to professional treatment and leaves no permanent injury or disorder calculated to or having a tendency to shorten life. Logan v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. of New York, 50 S. E. 529, 533, 57 W. Va. 384 (citing Joyce Ins. § 1848).

Blindness

A railway night switchman becoming color blind is thereby disabled by sickness within the meaning of his employer's contract that it will pay him sick benefits for a limited time while he is disabled by sickness. Kane v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 132 N. W. 920, 921, 90 Neb. 112, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1145, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 764.

A bite by a dog, causing the eye to swell, so that plaintiff could not wear glasses, preventing him from working at his trade, was not "sickness," within a benefit society by-law. Villone v. Guardia Peticara, 114 N. Y. Supp. 801, 802, 62 Misc. Rep. 257.

SIDE

See Run Upon Either Side; Water Side.

The word "sides" does not always include the marginal parts of a surface. It may be used as to all of the bounding surfaces of a body or as excluding such parts as may be called top, bottom, edge, or end. Koerner v. Deuther, 143 Fed. 544, 545.

The somewhat comprehensive term "side" includes the ribs, shoulder, and hip. Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Partin, 76 S. W. 236, 237, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 173.

SIDE HEAD

The "sticker machine" is designed for the purpose of receiving strips of rough lumber at one end and turning it out at the other as a complete molding finished on all sides by a single operation. Such a machine consists usually of an iron table or platform, over which the material passes, about 8 feet in length, 3½ feet in height, and the same in width, open on the sides. At the south end is the countershaft, power pulley, and pulleys to operate the feed and knives. The operator stands at the south end, and feeds the unfinished strips into the machine through guides. It passes first through the feed rolls, immediately after which it is operated on by the first set of knives, fastened to what is called the "top head." There are four of these heads, called, respectively, the "top head," the two "side heads," and the "lower head." These heads are blocks of iron or steel, about 8 inches long and 4 inches square, on two corners of which are set knives. They are attached to a short shaft, on the other end of which is a pulley, on which is the belt running to the power pulley. The top head is necessarily above the table with its shaft and pulley. After passing the top head, the material passes along the guide, and is operated upon first by one side head and then by the other. These side heads are of the same construction as the top head, but they necessarily are in a vertical position, projecting above the table; the pulley being beneath. The material then passes to the under head, which with its pulleys is under the table, the knives being allowed to project slightly above the table through an opening therein, which may be made to vary in width from 2½ to 6 inches. The finished material then passes out at the rear of the machine. The power is applied to and removed from the feed rolls and heads by means of levers at the right of the operator at the south end of the machine, one lever operating the feed rolls and another the heads. Gardner v. Paine Lumber Co., 101 N. W. 700, 702, 123 Wis. 338.

SIDE LINES

"Public roads and highways, also railroads, are regarded as having three lines: The center line, which is usually the line surveyed when the road is laid out, and on each side of which the road is laid; the two "side lines," at equal distances from the center line, and between which lies the territory covered by the road. When, in a conveyance of real estate adjoining a highway, such highway is referred to as constituting a boundary, the center line will be held to be the boundary so referred to, unless the language used in so referring to it shows clearly that a side line, instead of the center, was intended." Couch v. Texas & P. Ry. Co., 107 S. W. 872, 873, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 188 (quoting and adopting definition in Maynard v. Weeks, 41 Vt. 617).

SIDE TRACK

As railroad, see Railroad—Railway.

As turnout, see Turnout.

The tracks in a yard may properly be termed "side tracks," and include the ground necessary for the convenient and safe movement of cars, and for loading and unloading them. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Patterson, 122 S. W. 467, 477, 122 Tenn. 1 (citing from the dissenting opinion of MacFarland, J., in State ex rel. Hayes v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 37 S. W. 532, 135 Mo. 618).

An approach to the Ohio River Bridge of the Illinois Central Railroad, consisting of the tracks leading to the bridge and the embankment and steel structure upon which they rest, used in connection with its charter lines to connect with the Mobile & Ohio Railroad, is not a branch or lateral line, but a switch or "side track" which it is empowered to acquire by section 1 of its charter (Acts Feb. 10, 1851, § 1; Priv. Laws 1851, p. 61) as needful to carry into effect its purposes, and falls within sections 18 and 22, imposing a tax on gross receipts and exempting its charter lines from other taxation. State Board of Equalization v. People ex rel. Alexander County, 82 N. E. 324, 334, 229 Ill. 430.

As used in decisions holding that when the train stops elsewhere than at a station—as at a water tank or upon a side track—when the stop is made for the purpose of the railroad alone, and the passenger leaves the car, he acts at his peril, and that his negligence will prevent a recovery, the term "side track" refers to a switch or side track other than one situated at a station, used in connection therewith, and for the transaction of the railway company's business at such station. Texas Midland R. R. Co. v. Ellison, 87 S. W. 213, 216, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 172.

SIDEWALK

"While the term 'street' in ordinary legal signification includes all parts of the way—the roadway, the gutters, and the sidewalk—yet the term 'sidewalk' has come to be generally used in this country for the purpose of designating a footway for passengers at the side of a street or road." Marion Trust Co. v. City of Indianapolis, 75 N. E. 834, 836, 37 Ind. App. 672.

While the word "sidewalk" is often used in a context which imports a paved way, a footway does not necessarily have to be entirely improved to be a sidewalk, which is the space left on the side of a street, and usually along its borders and inside of the curbing, for foot passengers. Asphalt &

Granitold Const. Co. v. Haeussler (Mo.) 80 S. W. 5, 7 (citing Knapp, Stout & Co. v. St. Louis Transfer Ry. Co., 28 S. W. 627, 126 Mo. 26; Challiss v. Parker, 11 Kan. 384).

A cinder sidewalk with a wooden curb and berm constructed on each side of the walk, the latter to be flush with the surface and six inches in width at the top, is a "sidewalk," with a statute dispensing with a public hearing in proceedings for constructing a "sidewalk." City of Chicago v. Bassett, 87 N. E. 384, 385, 238 Ill. 412.

While a street crossing may be considered in a sense as a part of the sidewalk, one passing over such crossing may more reasonably expect obstructions, and should exercise a greater degree of care than when on the sidewalk, strictly so called. City of Richmond v. Schonberger, 68 S. E. 284, 285, 111 Va. 168, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 180.

Where the sidewalk becomes unsuitable, another part of the street, between the curb and the lot line, made constant use of by the public for foot passage, is a sidewalk, within the usual meaning of the term; and an allegation in a complaint in a personal injury action that defendant city negligently permitted a wooden peg projecting above the surface of the ground and of planks laid thereon, "and in and about the middle of the traveled portion of said sidewalk," to remain there, was supported by proof that the peg was in the space between the sidewalk and the curb. Rea v. Sioux City, 103 N. W. 949, 950, 127 Iowa, 615.

Where a petition alleged that plaintiff's decedent was killed by an obstruction on the sidewalk on the west side of C. street in defendant city, and that the sidewalk was in a dangerous condition by reason of such obstruction, and had been so for a long time, and the proof showed that the obstruction was on the parkway between the paved walk and the curb, and not elsewhere, there was no fatal variance, since the word "sidewalk," in general, means that part of the street intended for pedestrians, and includes all the space between the building line and the curb; pedestrians being entitled, as of right, to use all such space unless specially restricted by ordinance. Woodson v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 123 S. W. 820, 824, 224 Mo. 685, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 931, 20 Ann. Cas. 1039.

Under Ky. St. § 3094 (Russell's St. § 1205), authorizing the general council of cities of the second class to control streets and sidewalks, and, under section 3096 (section 1207), to provide for the construction of sidewalks at the cost of the abutting property, an ordinance, requiring the construction of a sidewalk consisting of cement or artificial stone five feet wide and on each side thereof sodded ground five feet wide, is not void on the theory that the sodding is purely a matter of ornament, the cost of which could not be assessed against the abutting property; the word "sidewalk," as used in the statutes, meaning the space between the property line and the street curbing, and the sod being useful to prevent earth and other substances from being washed upon the cement walk. Holmes v. Heeter & Son, 142 S. W. 210, 211, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 935, 146 Ky. 52.

Approach to bridge

A highway at the approach to a bridge was 35 feet wide, with a stone walk used generally by pedestrians on one side and a cinder path separated from the main part of the highway by a gutter on the other side; such path having been constructed apparently for the use of bicyclists, though there was no showing of compliance with the law so as to relieve the highway commissioners from caring for that part of the approach. Held, that the path was not a "sidewalk" so as to defeat recovery from the town for injury to a bicyclist who, while riding upon it, collided with a pedestrian and was thrown down an unguarded embankment, on the ground that he was improperly on a sidewalk. Schell v. Town of German Flatts, 108 N. Y. Supp. 219, 220, 123 App. Div. 197.

As building

See Building (In Lien Laws).

As improvement of land

As part of the street

A "sidewalk" is a part of the street, and the duty to repair it is as obligatory on the city as the duty to keep the carriage-way in proper condition. Gillard v. City of Chester, 61 Atl. 929, 212 Pa. 338 (citing 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. [4th Ed.] §§ 1008, 1012).

A "sidewalk" is simply a part of the street, which the town authorities have set apart for the use of pedestrians. The abutting proprietor has no more right in the sidewalk than in the roadway. His rights are simply that the street, including roadway and sidewalk, shall not be closed or obstructed so as to impair ingress or egress to his lot by himself and those whom he invites there for trade or other purposes. Hester v. Durham Traction Co., 50 S. E. 711, 713, 138 N. C. 288, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 981 (citing City of Ottawa v. Spencer, 40 Ill. 217; City of Chicago v. O'Brien, 111 Ill. 532, 53 Am. Rep. 640).

"To constitute a sidewalk a portion of a public street by dedication, both dedication and acceptance must appear; but both these elements may be shown by implication. To bind the city, the acceptance must be made by the public authorities. If a formal acceptance be relied upon, this can be shown only by the minutes of the council. If implied acceptance be relied upon, it may be shown by proof that the street or walk was used or worked as a highway under the authority of the council. Mere use by the members of the public is not sufficient." Mayor and Council of Americus v. Johnson, 58 S. E. 518-520, 2 Ga. App. 378.

As street

See Street.

SIGHT

See Plain Sight.

SIGHT DRAFT AGAINST PAPERS

The phrase "sight draft against papers" in an order for apricots strongly suggested that the seller was to ship the fruit, and should be entitled to payment only on presentation of papers showing such shipment; in other words, upon presentation of shipping receipt or bill of lading. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 12, providing that usage is admissible only where necessary to explain the character of a contract and for that purpose, the usage of the trade was admissible to show that a sale of apricots "sight draft against papers" meant that the seller should ship the goods and receive payment only on presentation of shipping receipt or bill of lading showing shipment. Ellsworth v. Knowles, 97 Pac. 690, 691, 8 Cal. App. 630.

SIGN—SIGNATURE

See About to Sign; Countersign; Duly Signed.

Make signature, see Make.

Signed at the end, see End.

"Sign" means to write one's name on paper or to show or declare assent or attestation by some sign or mark. Attorney General ex rel. Cannon v. Clarke, 59 Atl. 395, 396, 26 R. I. 470 (quoting James v. Patten, 6 N. Y. 9, 55 Am. Dec. 376).

"In legal contemplation 'to sign' means to attach a name or cause it to be attached by any of the known methods or impressing a name on paper with the intention of signing it." Lamaster v. Wilkerson, 136 S. W. 217, 218, 143 Ky. 226 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6512).

Ordinarily to "sign" an instrument indicates the signing with one's own hand. Hansen v. Owens, 64 S. E. 800, 803, 132 Ga. 648.

A "signature" is whatever mark, symbol, or device one may choose to employ as representative of himself. Griffith v. Bonawitz, 103 N. W. 327, 329, 73 Neb. 622.

The "signature" evidences the agreement of the parties to be bound by the instrument, and it sounds somewhat inconsistent to speak of a written contract which must be proved to be an agreement at all, by a resort to parol evidence. Delaware Ins. Co. v. Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co., 55 S. E. 330, 334, 126 Ga. 380, 7 Ann. Cas. 1134.

Signature of the judge to orders allowing and settling bills of exceptions do not constitute a "signing" of the bills within Act

Cong. June 6, 1900, c. 786, § 223, 31 Stat. 366, providing that the statement of the exceptions when settled and allowed shall be signed by the judge and filed with the clerk, etc. Dalton v. Hazelet, 182 Fed. 561, 568, 105 C. C. A. 99.

A will is "signed" by testator, as required by Gen. Laws 1896, c. 203, § 13, where not signed by another by his express direction, where he, after being assisted to a bureau, on indicating that he would there sign, finds himself physically unable to do so alone, and another guides his hand while he signs it. Wood v. Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co., 61 Atl. 757, 758, 27 R. I. 295.

Where an information for forgery of a check described it as containing the word "signed" before the name of the drawer, and charged that the entire instrument so set out was false and forged, the information should be construed as alleging that the word "signed" was a portion of the original instrument, and hence the information did not show that the instrument set out therein was a mere copy, which could not have damaged the person receiving it. People v. Crane, 87 Pac. 239, 240, 4 Cal. App. 142.

Autograph synonymous

To sign, in the primary sense of that expression, means to make a mark, and the signature is the sign thus made. By long usage, however, signature has come ordinarily to be understood to mean the name of a person attached to something by himself, and therefore to be nearly synonymous with "autograph." This signification is derivative, however, and not inherent in the word itself. Cummings v. Landes, 117 N. W. 22, 23, 140 Iowa, 80.

Execution distinguished

See Execution.

In bookbinding

The term "signature," as used in bookbinding, means a sheet of paper to be folded into 4, 8, or 16 pages. State v. Young, 110 N. W. 292, 294, 134 Iowa, 505, 13 Ann. Cas. 345.

As requiring intent

A "signature" consists both of the act of writing one's name and of intention thereby to finally authenticate the instrument. Lee v. Vaughan's Seed Store, 141 S. W. 496, 498, 101 Ark. 68, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 352; Kirkpatrick v. Board of Canvassers, 44 S. E. 465, 468, 53 W. Va. 275.

A "signature" is said to consist of two parts—the act of writing the name, and the intention of thereby finally authenticating the instrument. This, however, relates to the signature of an individual to papers of a private nature, and, when its sufficiency is put to the test, he is estopped from denying that it is his signature by proof of the fact that he directed it to be written for him, and that it was done in his presence. From this proof the act and intent on his part are sufficiently made out. Walker v. Mobley (Tex.) 105 S. W. 61, 62 (citing 2 Greenl. Ev. 674).

Mark

Independent of statute, a signing by mark is a "written signature" and is the subject of expert testimony. Handwriting includes a mark made by a person unable to write and all writing done by a person able to write, whether his usual hand and signature or not. Ausmus v. People, 107 Pac. 204, 212, 47 Colo. 167, 19 Ann. Cas. 491 (citing Lawson, Exp. Ev. p. 296).

The word "signature" includes a mark, and the making of his mark by the testator in his will with the intention of authenticating it if he is unable to write is a signing thereof within the meaning of the statute relating to the execution of wills. In re Tierney's Estate, 114 N. W. 838, 839, 103 Minn. 286.

To "sign," in the primary sense of that expression, means to make a mark, and the signature is the sign thus made. By long usage, however, signature has come ordinarily to be understood to mean the name of a person attached to something by himself, and therefore to be nearly synonymous with "autograph." This signification is derivative, however, and not inherent in the word itself. Cummings v. Landes, 117 N. W. 22, 23, 140 Iowa, 80.

Kirby's Dig. § 7799, provides that the signature includes a mark when the person cannot write; his name being written near it, and witnessed by a person who writes his own name as witness. Section 3108 provides that, where a writing purporting to have been executed by one of the parties is referred to in and filed with a pleading, it may be read as genuine against such party, unless he denies its genuineness by affidavit before trial. Held, that a note signed by the maker's mark and witnessed was sufficient as against an unsworn answer denying its execution without the introduction of other evidence to show its execution. Hall v. Rea, 107 S. W. 1176, 1177, 85 Ark. 269.

A note executed by an illiterate promisor by his mark is sufficient, and need not be attested. Civ. Code 1896, § 1, defining "signature" or "subscription" as including mark when one cannot write, his name being written near it and witnessed by one who writes his own name as a witness, is inapplicable to the execution of notes; and a note is validly executed by one who cannot write his name by his affixing thereunto an X-mark between an initial of his own name and his surname, written by the payee, the name of witness, who also could not write his name, being written by the payee. McGowan v. Collins, 46 South. 228, 229, 154 Ala. 209.

"Signature" or subscription includes mark, when the person cannot write, his name being written near it, and witnessed by a person who writes his own name as a witness." Where a married woman acknowledges an instrument in due form, and at the time of such acknowledgment her name is affixed to such her instrument as follows, "Jennie X Glenn,"

mark

but her signature by mark is not witnessed by any person writing his name as a witness thereto, held, that by such acknowledgment she adopted and approved the signature as her own, and thereby acknowledged the execution of the same as her act, and the officer's certificate of her acknowledgment, attached thereto, is a sufficient witnessing of her signature by mark, and constitutes a compliance with Rev. St. 1887, § 16, which provides that "signature" or subscription includes mark, when the person cannot write; his name being written near it, and witnessed by a person who writes his own name as a witness. First Nat. Bank of Hailey v. Glenn, 77 Pac. 623, 626, 10 Idaho, 224, 109 Am. St. Rep. 204.

Under Statutory Construction Act N. Y. § 12 (Laws 1892, p. 1487, c. 677), providing that the term "signature" includes any memorandum, mark, or sign, written or placed upon any instrument or writing with intent to execute or authenticate such instrument or writing, a petition for the appointment of a

guardian ad litem, signed Ellen X Conroy,
mark

and a consent to the appointment signed simply by an "X," the instrument being duly acknowledged before a commissioner of deeds, was sufficient for the purpose of the prosecution of an action. Conroy v. Bigg, 109 N. Y. Supp. 914, 915.

Under sections 2965 and 6492 of Comp. Laws 1909, in order for one, who cannot write, to execute a written instrument by mark, the person who writes the name of the maker must also write his own name on the instrument as a witness to the signature, except in the case of a paper executed before a judicial officer; and when the name of the maker is written by one person, and a wholly different person writes his name as a witness, this does not constitute a "signature." Sims v. Hedges, 123 Pac. 155, 156, 32 Okl. 683.

Signature of part of name

The initials of the name of a district judge written beneath an order of appeal cannot be regarded as his official "signature" or as sufficient evidence of the granting of such order. Conery v. His Creditors, 40 South. 173, 174, 115 La. 807 (citing Origet v. United States, 125 U. S. 240, 8 Sup. Ct. 846, 31 L. Ed. 743).

Under the statute requiring a petition for an appropriation to aid in the construction of a railroad to be "signed" by 25 freeholders, the fact that many of the signers of such petition signed their Christian names by the initials only does not render the proceeding void. Good v. Burk, 77 N. E. 1080, 1082, 167 Ind. 462.

Signature written by another

Where the "signature" of the assessor to the oath required to be appended to the tax rolls was written by a clerk at his request, it was his signature, and as effective as if written by himself. Reed v. City of Cedar Rapids, 116 N. W. 140, 141, 138 Iowa, 366.

The "signature" of a contract to sell land by the vendor's agent was sufficient where the firm name under which he did business was typewritten and followed by his initials, written by himself. Degginger v. Martin, 92 Pac. 674, 675, 48 Wash. 1.

In the cases of private contracts, it is undoubtedly true that a person may have his name written by another in his presence and thereby bind himself. In those cases, however, the act of the party evidenced by his signature is the material and important thing, and the signature is intended only as a memorial of the act. Here the great office of the signature is identification of the paper. A "signature" is said to consist of two parts—the act of writing the name, and the intention of thereby finally authenticating the instrument. This, however, relates to the signature of an individual to papers of a private nature, and, when its sufficiency is put to the test, he is estopped from denying that it is his signature by proof of the fact that he directed it to be written for him, and that it was done in his presence. From this proof the act and intent on his part are sufficiently made out. Walker v. Mobley (Tex.) 105 S. W. 61, 62 (quoting and adopting definition in Kirkpatrick v. Board of Commissioners, 44 S. E. 465, 53 W. Va. 275, citing 2 Greenl. Ev. 674).

Place of signing

The word "subscribed," as used in section 74, c. 73, Comp. St. 1903 (Cobbey's Ann. St. 1903, § 10,258), relating to contracts between real estate brokers and landowners, is synonymous with the word "signed," and does not require the signature to be at the foot of the instrument. Myers v. Moore, 110 N. W. 989, 990, 78 Neb. 448 (citing In re Walker's Estate, 42 Pac. 815, 110 Cal. 387, 30 L. R. A. 460, 52 Am. St. Rep. 104; California Canneries Co. v. Scatena, 49 Pac. 462, 117 Cal. 447).

In neither ordinary nor legal language is the word "sign" or "signature" confined to the writing of the name at the bottom of the paper. Where a lease provided for renewal on notice to the lessor, and within the time specified a member of the lessee firm forwarded to the lessor by registered mail a letter inclosed in one of the firm's business envelopes, with the firm name and address in the corner, reciting a description of the lease, and stating that H. Graff & Co., as the lessee firm, "elects to avail itself of the renewal privilege and requests the continuance of the lease for a new term," such notice was sufficient, though no signature was subscribed thereto. Wiener v. H. Graff & Co., 95 Pac. 167, 169, 7 Cal. App. 580.

An injured employé gave a notice under the employer's liability act (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 31, §§ 200-204), which stated that the undersigned gave notice, etc., and, after stating the accident and its causes, demanded that $10,000 be paid to his attorney, whose name and address were given. The notice consisted of two typewritten pages and a cover, on which a printed form of verification had been filled out and signed by the claimant. Held, that the verification was properly a part of the notice, and hence that the notice, was "signed" within the meaning of the employer's liability act. Connor v. Acme Engineering & Contracting Co., 132 N. Y. Supp. 782, 783, 148 App. Div. 518.

Printed, stamped, or typewritten signature

A name merely printed in an instrument where, according to its purport, the name should be mentioned in the recitals, is not a signature within the statute of frauds. Lee v. Vaughan's Seed Store, 141 S. W. 496, 498, 101 Ark. 68, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 352.

The word "signature" being defined as "the act of putting down a man's name at the end of an instrument to attest its validity" (Bouv. Law Dict. Tit. "Signature") and writing, as "words traced with a pen, or stamped, printed, engraved or made legible by any other device" (And. Law Dict. Tit. "Writing"), it was held that, an attorney in fact being authorized to sign a remonstrance against the issue of a liquor license, it was immaterial that he did so by typewriter. Ardery v. Smith, 73 N. E. 840, 841, 35 Ind. App. 94 (citing Hamilton v. State, 2 N. E. 299, 103 Ind. 96, 98, 53 Am. Rep. 491).

There was a sufficient compliance with Ky. St. § 4481 (Russell's St. § 5758), requiring due notice of an election to determine whether bonds shall be issued by a common graded school district to erect a building to be given by the trustees by written or printed posters signed by them, stating the time and place of the election, if the original notice prepared by the trustees from which the posters were printed contained their official signatures, or if they authorized the printing of their names upon the posters and adopted them as their signatures; "to sign" meaning, in law, to attach a name, or cause it to be attached with the intention of signing it, by any of the known methods of impressing a name on paper. Lamaster v. Wilkerson, 136 S. W. 217, 218, 143 Ky. 226 (citing Words and Phrases, p. 6512).

In a statute requiring an original notice to be signed by plaintiff or his attorney to authenticate it as coming from the plaintiff, the word "signed" means no more than that the name of plaintiff or his attorney must be attached to the notice by any of the known modes of impressing a name on paper, namely, by writing, printing, or lithographing, provided the same is done with the intention of signing or be adopted in issuing the original notice for service, so that, where a plaintiff presented a notice containing the printed signature of his attorney to the court and procured a decree to be entered thereon, it would be assumed, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, that he had adopted such printed signature. Cummings v. Landes, 117 N. W. 22, 23, 140 Iowa, 80.

Subscribed synonymous

The word "subscribed," as used in section 74, c. 73, Comp. St. 1903 (Cobbey's Ann. St. 1903, § 10.258), relating to contracts between real estate brokers and landowners, is synonymous with the word "signed," and does not require the signature to be at the foot of the instrument. Myers v. Moore, 110 N. W. 989, 990, 78 Neb. 448 (citing In re Walker's Estate, 42 Pac. 815, 110 Cal. 387, 30 L. R. A. 460, 52 Am. St. Rep. 104; California Canneries Co. v. Scatena, 49 Pac. 462, 117 Cal. 447).

SIGN (Noun)

See Sky Sign.

As structure, see Structure.

Under Act Feb. 20, 1905, c. 592, §§ 1, 16, 33 Stat. 724, 728, authorizing the registration of trade-marks by filing an application specifying the merchandise to which the trade-mark is appropriated, a description of the trade-mark, and a statement of the mode in which the same is applied and affixed to goods, and authorizing an action for the wrongful use of a trade-mark by the use of signs, labels, etc., intended to be used in connection with the sale of merchandise, a trade-mark is only valid when actually affixed to a commodity, and one may not acquire a trade-mark in a sign placed on a building, the word "sign" being used to indicate a mark, symbol, token or emblem affixed to the article sold. Diederich v. W. Schneider Wholesale Wine & Liquor Co., 195 Fed. 35, 37, 115 C. C. A. 37.

SIGN OF INJURY

See Visible Sign of Injury.

SIGN OFF

T. & T. agree to pay all the indebtedness of T. & R. when R. "signs off" all his rights and title, and all property that has been made in said business lands, etc. The condition to "sign off" would, as to all tangible personal property and negotiable paper payable to bearer, be satisfied by a delivery of the same to T. & T. so as to place the same in their full possession and control, and an acceptance of the same, unless written evidence of the transfer was specially requested; but, if demanded, T. & T. had a right to written evidence of the transfer. As to contracts, accounts, choses in action, etc., there must be a written assignment and a delivery. As to lands, there must be a deed of conveyance properly executed, acknowledged, and delivered. Thompson v. Richards, 14 Mich. 172, 186.

SIGNED AND ACKNOWLEDGED

A certificate of acknowledgment to a petition for an election, stating that signers "executed the above instrument and severally acknowledged the execution of the same," sufficiently shows the petition was "signed and acknowledged," as required by Liquor Tax Law (Laws 1896, p. 57, c. 112) § 16; the word "executed" being an attestation that it was "signed." In re Livingston, 115 N. Y. Supp. 269, 270, 62 Misc Rep 334.

SIGNED AT THE END

See End.

SIGNED BY THE OWNER

An ordinance imposing a penalty for failure to file with the secretary of the board of health a plan of contemplated plumbing work, "signed by the owner," imposes the liability for violation of the ordinance of the owner and not on a plumber engaged by the owner to do the work. Board of Health of Borough of Glen Ridge v. State, 50 Atl. 585, 586, 67 N. J. Law, 103.

SIGNED BY THE PARTIES TO BE CHARGED

The "party to be charged," within the meaning of the statute of frauds, is the person against whom it is sought to enforce the contract. Miller v. Carolina Monazite Co., 68 S. E. 1, 2, 152 N. C. 608; Lee v. Vaughan's Seed Store, 141 S. W. 496, 498, 101 Ark. 68, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 352.

The phrase "to be charged," in the provision of the statute of frauds requiring that the party "to be charged" only need subscribe a memorandum of sale, applies to the vendor in case of a sale. Bailey v. Leishman, 89 Pac. 78, 79, 32 Utah, 123, 13 Ann. Cas. 1116 (citing Browne, St. Frauds [2d Ed.] §§ 365, 366).

Under the statute of frauds, the "party to be charged" in the case of the sale of real estate is the vendor; and if the memorandum in writing be signed only by the vendor it is sufficient. Wren v. Cooksey, 145 S. W. 1116, 1119, 147 Ky. 825.

Under the statute of frauds, providing that no action shall be brought to charge any person on any contract for sale of land, unless some memorandum or note thereof be in writing and signed by the "party to be charged," the vendor of real estate is the party to be charged, and not the purchaser; and hence a vendor, verbally agreeing to sell land to a city, cannot sue for breach of the agreement though the city spread the acceptance of the agreement on the minutes. City of Murray v. Crawford, 127 S. W. 494, 496, 138 Ky. 25, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 680.

Under the statute of frauds, requiring contracts to convey, etc., to be evidenced in writing and signed by the party to be charged therewith, or by some one authorized by him, a contract need not be subscribed, and a memorandum reduced to writing by a third person under authority of the parties thereto reading, "$5,000 Jan. 2, 1911, $5,000 Jan. 2, 1912. J. A. Horn to pay the above to E. A. Wellman, when he makes deed to Horn for Wellman's home place 3 Oct. 1910," is sufficient to charge Horn as purchaser. Wellman v. Horn, 72 S. E. 1010, 1011, 157 N. C. 170.

Under the statute of frauds requiring the memorandum to be signed by the party to be charged, it has frequently been held that "signing," whether in the caption or body or at the end of the instrument, will suffice, but that it must be signed with intent to enter into it. A printed signature will also answer the requirements of the statute, if there be sufficient evidence of its adoption as such by the party to be charged. In analogy to the law of "signing" as applied to the statute of frauds, under the statute a contract of fire insurance must be in writing and signed by the insured, or some person authorized to sign for him, and the usual and proper place for the signature is at the end of the matter which it attests, but in strict law it will suffice if, with the intent to constitute a signing, it is inserted in the writing in another place. Delaware Ins. Co. v. Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co., 55 S. E. 330, 334, 126 Ga. 380 (quoting and adopting definition in Donnell Mfg. Co. v. Repass, 75 Mo App. 420).

Civ. Code, § 1091, provides that an estate in real property, other than an estate at will or for a term of years not exceeding one year, can be transferred only by operation of law, or by a written instrument subscribed by the party disposing of the same or his agent. Code Civ. Proc. § 1971, provides that no such estate can be created, granted, etc., otherwise than by operation of law or a written instrument subscribed by the party creating, granting, etc., the same or by his agent. Code Civ. Proc. § 1973, and Civ. Code, §§ 1624, 1741, in effect declare that contracts for the sale of real property are invalid, unless they or some memorandum thereof be in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged or by his agent. Held, that the words "party to be charged" do not mean the vendor or the vendee, but the person charged in court with performance of the obligation. Harper v. Goldschmidt, 104 Pac. 451, 452, 156 Cal. 245, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 689, 134 Am. St. Rep. 124.

Under the provisions of section 6009, Rev. Codes, some of the contracts referred to therein require the signature of only one party, the party charged, and other contracts the consideration for which is the mutual promises of the parties to the contract, and, where no part of the contract has been performed, the memorandum referred to in said section must be signed by the parties to such agreement or contract in order to take the same out of the provisions of said section and bind both parties. Houser v. Hobart, 127 Pac. 997, 1001, 22 Idaho, 735, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 410.

SIGNED JUDGMENT

The term "signed judgment" is synonymous with "took judgment." Risher v. Wheeling Roofing & Cornice Co., 49 S. E. 1016, 1018, 57 W. Va. 149.

SIGNED, SEALED, AND DELIVERED IN THE PRESENCE OF

See, also, Presence of the Testator.

As to the matter of the attestation of a deed, our statute does not require any particular form of words for the attestation clause of a deed. The phrase commonly used in this state to denote that the persons signing are witnesses is, "Signed, sealed, and delivered in the presence of;" but any phrase which clearly denotes that the persons signing were witnesses will be valid. Where a deed has the names of two persons written in the place where the names of subscribing witnesses are usually placed, and the letters "Wit" are written above the names of the two persons, and where the testificandum clause is "In witness whereof we hereunto set our hands and seals this the 4th day of May, 1903," other facts showing delivery, the attestation of the deed is sufficient. Richbourg v. Rose, 44 South. 69, 72, 53 Fla. 173, 125 Am. St. Rep. 1061, 12 Ann. Cas. 274.

Where a deed had the names of two persons written in the place where the names of subscribing witnesses were usually placed, and the words "in the presence of" were written above the names of such persons, that is a substantial compliance with the requirement of Rev. St. 1892, § 1950, providing that no estate or interest of freehold shall be created, granted, transferred, or released except by deed in writing "signed, sealed, and delivered in the presence of" at least two subscribing witnesses. East Coast Lumber Co. v. Ellis-Young Co., 45 South. 826, 829, 55 Fla. 256.

SIGNAL

See Back-up Signal; Highball Signal; Kick Signal, Move Slow Signal; Stock Signal.

Given by conductor, see Given by the Conductor.

Signal points, see Point.

See, also, Telltales.

Switch targets are not "signals," within a statute making a railroad company liable for injury caused by the negligence of an "employé" having charge of any signal, etc.; the statute being applicable only to such signals as are complete within themselves, and not subsidiary parts of another device, and so operated that by the negligence of the operator they may be made to speak falsely. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. Barker, 83 N. E. 369, 374, 169 Ind. 670, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 542, 14 Ann. Cas. 375.

The complaint alleged that it was defendant's custom to stop its street cars at a certain street, and that, when a car approached the corner in charge of its motorman and conductor, or plaintiff, being in full view of the motorman and conductor, signaled the car to stop, and it had almost stopped, when plaintiff took hold of the support and was boarding the car, when it suddenly started forward without warning before plaintiff had obtained a footing, so as to jerk him so violently as to prevent him from getting on, whereby he was dragged, etc. Held to sufficiently allege that the motorman saw plaintiff and understood the signal to stop; the word "signal" meaning to communicate by means of an understood sign, and sufficiently showed that the injury was caused by the want of care of defendant's servants. Nilson v. Oakland Traction Co., 101 Pac. 413, 415, 10 Cal. App. 103.

SIGNAL AND PRECAUTIONS

Under an instruction that it is the duty of the defendant's engineer or fireman to ring the bell or sound the whistle or to give suitable and sufficient signals and warnings of the approach of its train, while moving its trains in its yards, and to use all proper and reasonable efforts to avoid injuring any party who may be in its yards on legitimate business, and if the jury find from the greater weight of evidence that the defendant failed to give such signal and take such precautions, and the said acts on the part of the defendant resulted in the killing of the plaintiff's intestate, they should answer the first issue "Yes," a contention that the instruction is contradictory, because the first part of the instruction is in the alternative, "ringing or sounding the whistle," and in the second part "giving the signal and take such precautions," is not tenable because the latter part says "signal and precautions," which is merely the equivalent of the alternative "signal" and "proper and reasonable effort" to avoid injury to others mentioned in the first part of that instruction. Edwards v. Carolina & N. W. R. Co., 52 S. E. 234, 235, 140 N. C. 49.

SIGNAL MAN

One whose duty it is to inspect and keep in proper order the automatic electric block signals and bells along the section of a railroad is called a "signal man." Lynch v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 106 S. W. 68, 69, 208 Mo. 1.

SIGNAL POINT

The employer's liability act, making railway companies liable for injury to an employé caused by the negligence of any person in charge of any "signal points," etc., is a literal copy of the English statute using the words "signal points," designating an apparatus for giving signals, called "points." In the original statute the word "signal" was used, without "points." The present statute covers cases of negligence of persons having charge of signals generally; "points" referring to apparatus used in giving signals, and not merely localities. Cogbill v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 44 South. 683, 685, 152 Ala. 154.

SIGNAL TORPEDO

"Signal torpedoes" are devices used by railroads in signaling, being fastened to the rails and containing an explosive. Obertoni v. Boston & M. R. R., 71 N. E. 980, 981, 186 Mass. 481, 67 L. R. A. 422.

SIGNIFY

To "signify" is "to make known." Goodwin v. Hodgkins, 77 Atl. 711, 712, 107 Me. 170.

Where a lease entitled the lessees to a renewal, provided they signified their acceptance in writing to the lessor on or before September 1, 1904, such provision only required the lessees to make known, manifest, notify, or express in writing their acceptance or desire to continue the lease, such terms being synonymous with "signify," as used in the lease, any writing adequate for that purpose being sufficient to operate as an election to renew. Wiener v. H. Graff & Co., 95 Pac. 167, 168, 7 Cal. App. 580.

SIGNS*Dollar sign

The symbol "$" denotes one or more dollars, and with figures indicating the number expresses the denomination of federal coins and the amount. Mayson v. Sheppard (S. C.) 12 Rich. 254, 257.

The mark commonly used to denote dollars ($) is not part of the English language, within the statute of this state, which requires declarations and other pleadings to be drawn in the English language; and a declaration in assumpsit upon a promissory note in which the amount for which the note was given was only expressed in figures with the mark for dollars prefixed (thus, $226.15), was held insufficient on demurrer. Clark v. Stoughton, 18 Vt. 50, 51, 44 Am. Dec. 361.

The mark "$" for dollar may be used in designating the amount under statutes for the collection of taxes. Jackson v. Cummings, 15 Ill. 449, 452, 453.

SILENCE

Estoppel by silence, see Estoppel in Pais.

SILHOUETTE

A "silhouette" is defined to be "a representation of the outlines of an object filled in with a black color; a profile portrait in black such as a shadow appears to be," and also as: "(1) Originally, a portrait in black or some other uniform tint sometimes varied as to the hair or other parts by lighter lines or a lightening of shade, showing the profile as cast by a candle on a sheet of paper, hence any opaque portrait, design, or image in profile. (2) Opaque representation or exhibition in profile, the figure made by the shadow or shadowy outline of an object; shadow." Where a contract granting one the privilege within a certain concession at an exposition of taking and selling photographs, provided that the lessor would not grant like or "similar" privileges to any one else and the privileges so granted to another to cut "silhouettes" with scissors and paste them on cards, it was held not an infringement on the exclusive privileges, though a silhouette made in such manner cannot be distinguished by an ordinary person from a photographic silhouette which is in the nature of a photographic novelty, and the only means of distinction is by the paper ordinarily used by photographers. Frankel v. German Tyrolean Alps Co., 97 S. W. 961, 962, 121 Mo. App. 51 (citing Webst. Dict. and Cent. Dict.).

SILICA

As mineral, see Mineral.

SILK

See Carded Silk; Combed Silk; Imitation Silk; Nearsilks.

As wearing apparel, see Wearing Apparel.

Raw silk, see Raw.

A "powder made from raw silk," which is used in the manufacture of wall paper and artificial flowers, is dutiable under a provision of the Tariff Act relating to manufactures of silk. W. W. Thomas & Co. v. United States, 145 Fed. 1023, 74 C. C. A. 682, affirming judgment 140 Fed. 93.

So-called remanit, in the form of ropes, braids, and mats, which has been manufactured from silk produced by carbonizing rags containing silk, is a manufacture of "silk," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, par. 391, Schedule L, 30 Stat. 187. Frank v. United States, 143 Fed. 702.

Ribbons composed chiefly of silk, but in part of cotton, are not "ribbons * * * of cotton, * * * whether composed in part of india rubber or otherwise," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule I, par. 320, 30 Stat. 179; for the word "otherwise" is there used with the meaning of "not," and not as relating to other materials than india rubber. Such ribbons are properly assessed as manufactures of silk, under paragraph 391 of Schedule L. Gartner, Sons & Co. v. United States, 154 Fed. 957, 958.

SILK BRAID

Horsehair braids are dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule L, par. 390, 30 Stat. 187, as "silk braids" by similitude. John A. Paterson & Co. v. United States, 159 Fed. 320.

SILK COCOONS

Paragraph 661, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, 30 Stat. 201, enumerating "silk cocoons and silk waste," includes those articles only when not manufactured at all. Fawcett v. United States, 146 Fed. 83.

SILK TRIMMINGS

Silk ribbons, of which some were, and others were not, in the nature of trimmings, but which, however used for trimmings, are required to be further fashioned for such use, and which are not in fact or commercially within the class of goods known as "trimmings," are not dutiable as "silk trimmings," under paragraph 390, Tariff Act 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule L, 30 Stat. 187, but as manufactures of silk not specially provided for, under paragraph 391 of said act (30 Stat. 187). Gartner & Friedenheit v. United States, 131 Fed. 574, 575.

SILK WASTE

Silk organzine, damaged in dyeing, is not by reason of the damage removed from the provision for "organzine," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule L, par. 385, 30 Stat. 185, and is classifiable as such, rather than as "silk waste," under section 2, Free List, par. 661, 30 Stat. 201. Cohen v. United States, 180 Fed. 634.

Paragraph 661, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, 30 Stat. 201, enumerating "silk cocoons and silk waste," includes those articles only when not manufactured at all. Combed silk that has fallen from or been caught in the machines in which it was undergoing further operations is dutiable under the provision in paragraph 384, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule L, 30 Stat. 185, for silk not further manufactured than combed, and is not subject to the provision for "silk waste" in paragraph 661, § 2, Free List, 30 Stat. 201. Fawcett v. United States, 154 Fed. 1003, 83 C. C. A. 197, 146 Fed. 83.

The primary meaning of the word "similar" as given by Webster is exactly alike. Krakowski v. United States, 161 Fed. 88, 89, 88 C. C. A. 252.

"Similar" means: "(1) Exactly corresponding, resembling in all respects, precisely like. (2) Nearly corresponding, resembling in many respects, somewhat alike, having a general likeness. (3) Homogeneous, uniform." Frankel v. German Tyrolean Alps Co., 97 S. W. 961, 962, 121 Mo. App. 51.

Under Code 1907, §§ 1070-1074, 1125, authorizing the annexation of territory to a city, and providing that after an election for annexation, under that or any "similar" law, no subsequent election shall be ordered for such territory or any part thereof within six months, an election under section 1073, to annex territory to a city, within six months after an election for the annexation of such territory and other territory to the city, under Act Aug. 8, 1907, authorizing the annexation of territory to the city on the act being approved by the voters at an election, is invalid; the word "similar" not meaning "precisely alike," but meaning "with more or less resemblance." Sigsbee, State ex rel. v. City of Birmingham, 48 South. 843, 845, 160 Ala. 196.

Pol. Code, § 4867, makes it the duty of the county clerk to make a duplicate assessment book for each city in the county; and section 4869 provides that the county clerk must deliver such duplicate book to each city treasurer after having attached thereto an affidavit similar to the one set out in Pol. Code, § 3845. This section requires the county clerk to state that he has made certain additions, calculations, and extensions in the book, which are, under section 4869, to be done by the city treasurer. Held, that the word "similar," in section 4869, does not require the county clerk to make an affidavit identical with the one required by section 3845, but merely requires an affidavit covering all the facts showing that the clerk has done his duty in making the copy required by section 4867 et seq. State ex rel. City Council of Butte v. Weston, 74 Pac. 415, 418, 29 Mont. 125.

Rev. St. 1899, § 1423, providing that Laws 1897, p. 132, relating to fraternal beneficiary associations, shall not apply to or affect grand or subordinate lodges of Masons, Odd Fellows, or similar orders paying only sick, disability, or funeral benefits, or any association not working on a lodge system, etc., does not exclude from the operation of such act the uniformed rank of the Knights of Pythias, which is a "similar order" paying death benefits. Tice v. Supreme Lodge, Knights of Pythias, 100 S. W. 519, 526, 123 Mo. App. 85.

Section 19, c. 98, p. 127, Acts 1888, extending the limits of Baltimore city by including parts of Baltimore county, provided that after the year 1900 the property, real and personal, in the territory annexed should be liable to taxation in the same manner and form as "similar" property within the limits of the city at the time of the passage of the act. Held, that the section, in the absence of any proviso limiting its operation, would render all property, real and personal, in the annexed territory, liable to taxation at the full city rate in the same manner as other real and personal property in the city; the word "similar" not referring to property improved in any particular way or located in any particular locality in the city, but to real and personal property within the limits of the city. City of Baltimore v. Gail, 68 Atl. 282, 284, 106 Md. 684.

As used in Baltimore City Charter, § 37, as amended, requiring grants of franchises to use streets to be by ordinance, referred to the board of estimates and providing that the right to use streets for bay windows, hitching posts, areaways, planting trees, storm doors, drains and drainpipes, stands, or other such temporary "or similar uses," may be granted by the board of estimates, the phrase "or similar uses" covered the erection of an awning with an iron frame covered with iron and luxfer prisms. Preston v. Likes, Berwanger & Co., 62 Atl. 1024, 1026, 103 Md. 191.

In Interstate Commerce Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, § 2, 24 Stat. 379, prohibiting discrimination between shippers under "substantially similar circumstances and conditions," such phrase relates to the circumstances and conditions of carriage only, and does not include matters affecting individual shippers; and a railroad may not charge one shipper of coal a lower rate than is charged another shipper between the same terminals, because the former is shipping under contracts extending over a term of years, based on lower rates which were in force when such contracts were made, while the other shipper has no such contracts. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. International Coal Mining Co., 173 Fed. 1, 4, 97 C. C. A. 383.

Differences with respect to competition between coal intended for railway consumption and other coal, and with respect to the manner of delivery, depending upon a difference in the facilities possessed by the railroads and other consignees, do not make the interstate traffic therein dissimilar in circumstances and conditions, within the meaning of the interstate commerce act of February 4, 1887, § 2, so as to justify the giving of a lower rate for the transportation of railway fuel coal than is given to shippers of other coal between the same points. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 32 Sup. Ct. 742, 746, 225 U. S. 326, 56 L. Ed. 1107.

In tariff law

The term "of similar description," in tariff acts by which import duties are levied on certain classified goods and goods "of similar description," is not a commercial term, as the tariff acts do not contemplate that goods classified under it shall in all respects be the same. Frankel v. German Tyrolean Alps Co., 97 S. W. 961, 962, 121 Mo. App. 51 (quoting Greenleaf v. Goodrick, 101 U. S. 278, 25 L. Ed. 845).

Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 504, 30 Stat. 196, relating to books, libraries, furniture, and "similar household effects," does not include automobiles, because they are not "similar" to libraries, furniture, etc. United States v. W. R. Grace & Co., 166 Fed. 748, 749, 92 C. C. A. 590.

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 7, 30 Stat. 205, relating to articles "similar" to other articles, the term quoted is used in the sense of nearly corresponding, resembling in many respects, somewhat like, or having a general resemblance. Tariff Act July 24, c. 11, § 7, 30 Stat. 205, relating to articles "similar" to other articles "either in material, quality, texture, or the use," does not require that similitude should exist in all four of the respects specified. One of these resemblances will suffice. Sake is dutiable as still wine by similitude, being "similar" to that article in material and use within the meaning of the similitude clause in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 7, 30 Stat. 205, which prescribes the classification of unenumerated articles "similar * * * in material, * * * use," etc., to enumerated articles. The resemblance in material arises from the fact that the predominant substance in both articles is alcohol, and that there is a substantial similarity in their alcoholic strength; the percentage of alcohol being about 18 in sake and from 11 to 16 in still wine. The resemblance in use arises from the fact that both articles are drunk for purposes of exhilaration, and are capable of producing intoxication. United States v. Komada & Co., 162 Fed. 465, 468, 89 C. C. A. 385.

Within the meaning of the similitude clause in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 7, 30 Stat. 205, ramie silver resembles cotton silver (1) in "material," because it is a vegetable fiber; (2) in "quality," because it has reached the same degree of purity, or freedom from objectionable substances; (3) in "texture," because the fibers are in the same form; and (4) in "use," because, like cotton sliver, it is spun into yarn and thread, so as to be manufactured into fabrics. Ramie sliver is dutiable as cotton sliver by similitude, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule I, par. 302, 30 Stat. 175. F. B. Vandegrift & Co. v. United States, 164 Fed. 65, 173 Fed. 609, 611, 97 C. C. A. 469.

Horsehair braids, used exclusively in the manufacture of hats, are dutiable by similitude, as "braids * * * wholly of straw, * * * suitable for making or ornamenting hats," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 409, 30 Stat. 189. To apply the similitude clause in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 7, 30 Stat. 205, it is not necessary that all the particulars of resemblance mentioned should exist; but the presence of one of the qualities is sufficient. Where an unenumerated article has a very vague and questionable resemblance to some enumerated article, and is exactly identical with another enumerated article, its status under the similitude clause in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 7, 30 Stat. 205, is fixed by the latter condition; the former being disregarded. There is no substantial resemblance between a horsehair hat braid and a silk braid in material, quality, and texture, within the similitude clause in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 7, 30 Stat. 205. While there is probably a greater similarity to braids of silk than to braids of straw, it is too remote to be considered. John A. Paterson & Co. v. United States, 166 Fed. 733, 92 C. C. A. 524.

SIMILAR SCHEME

An indictment charging misuse of the mails in furtherance of a lottery or similar scheme charged that defendants, having acquired certain land, conceived the idea of platting it into lots of unequal value and on a certain number of the lots erecting houses, rendering the inequality greater, then selling the lots at $140 each, the particular lot secured by a purchaser, however, not to be known or identified at the time of purchase, but that, after all the lots were sold, there was to be a drawing under defendants' supervision by which the lots were to be parceled out by lot or chance to each purchaser and deeded in accordance with the drawing. Held, that such scheme was in all respects similar to a lottery, and that the furtherance thereof by means of letters and circulars sent through the Post Office Department constituted a violation of Criminal Code (Act March 4, 1909, c. 321, § 213, 35 Stat. 1129), prohibiting the use of the mails in furtherance of a lottery or similar scheme. United States v. Ridgway, 199 Fed. 286, 290.

SIMILARITY

The "similarity" required by the similitude clause in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 7, 30 Stat. 205, is a real or substantial similarity. United States v. Komada & Co., 162 Fed. 465, 468, 89 C. C. A. 385.

SIMONY

A magic healer who takes the money of the sick is engaged in a fraudulent practice. If he had any divine power and was selling it, he was guilty of the common-law offense of simony. Bennett v. Ware, 61 S. E. 546, 551, 4 Ga. App. 293.

SIMPLE

SIMPLE ADDITION

"Simple addition" is the process of uniting independent amounts in one sum. In re Manhattan Bridge No. 3 in City of New York, 108 N. Y. Supp. 366, 367.

SIMPLE APPLIANCE

A pine stick, three feet long, an inch wide, and half an inch thick is within the rule that it is not the master's duty to inspect "simple appliances" furnished. Masich v. American Smelting & Refining Co., 118 Pac. 764, 767, 44 Mont. 36.

SIMPLE ASSAULT

"Simple assault" is an unlawful attempt by violence to do injury to the person of another; the person making the attempt having the present ability to commit such injury. State v. Mills (Del.) 69 Atl. 841, 842, 6 Pennewill, 497.

SIMPLE BOND

At common law a "simple bond" was an obligation to pay a certain sum of money to a named obligee on demand or on a day certain. Burnside v. Wand, 71 S. W. 337, 347, 170 Mo. 531, 62 L. R. A. 427.

SIMPLE CONTRACT DEBT

The consideration stated in a deed, no vendor's lien being reserved, is a "simple contract debt" within the statute of limitations. Harris v. Shield's Ex'r, 69 S. E. 933, 934, 111 Va. 643.

SIMPLE DOUBT

A "simple doubt," as contradistinguished from an "intricate" or "complicated" doubt, may be such a "reasonable doubt" as would require an acquittal; indeed, every reasonable doubt may be accurately said to be a simple doubt, and it is error to instruct a jury that it must not acquit if it has a simple doubt. Hampton v. State, 39 South. 421, 429, 50 Fla. 55.

SIMPLE LARCENY

Code, § 4831, defines "simple larceny" as the act of stealing, taking, and carrying away the goods or chattels of another, and provides a maximum penalty therefor. Section 4832 increases the penalty for larceny in a building in the nighttime, and section 4833 increases the penalty for larceny in a building in the daytime, where the value of the property stolen does not exceed $20. Held, that these sections do not define different crimes of larceny as to which there are no degrees, but that the same effect is obtained by varying the punishment according to the circumstances, and so if an indictment alleges with reasonable certainty that the accused feloniously took, stole, and carried away the goods or chattels of another, it charges the offense defined by section 4831, and if in addition it charges facts increasing the penalty provided in another section, that punishment may be imposed, but if the additional allegation is insufficient for that purpose, and a verdict of guilty is returned, the conviction is valid as for simple larceny, and accused is not prejudiced by the insufficiency of the matter in aggravation. State v. Carter, 121 N. W. 694, 695, 144 Iowa, 280.

If a person, fraudulently intending to get possession of the money of another and appropriate the same to his own use, by false representations induces the owner to deliver the money to him for the purpose of being applied for the owner's use or benefit, and then appropriates it in pursuance of the original intent, he is guilty of both larceny after trust delegated and simple larceny, and may be prosecuted for, and convicted of, either offense. Martin v. State, 51 S. E. 334, 123 Ga. 478.

SIMPLE LICENSE

A contract by a patentee giving to the grantee a right to make or use, or vend, or to make, use, and vend, the invention within a specified district, is a "simple license," and conveys no interest in the patent itself, and such a licensee's rights cannot be affected by any infringements of the patent within the specified district. The patentee or his assigns may, by instrument in writing, assign, grant, and convey either (1) the whole patent, comprising the exclusive right to make, use, and vend the invention throughout the United States; or (2) an undivided part or share of that exclusive right; or (3) the exclusive right under the patent within and throughout a specified part of the United States. Rev. St. § 4898. A transfer of either of these three kinds of interests is an assignment, properly speaking, and vests in the assignee a title in so much of the patent itself, with a right to sue infringers; in the second case, jointly with the assignor; in the first and third cases, in the name of the assignee alone. Any assignment or transfer short of one of these is a mere license, giving the licensee no title in the patent, and no right to sue at law in his own name for an infringement. An exclusive license is one which does not amount to an assignment by reason of something reserved to the patentee. A conveyance by a patentee to another of the sole and exclusive right and license to use and to build for use within territory described the machines of the patent, with certain express exceptions, and also reserving to the patentee the right to build machines in said territory for use outside thereof, is not an assignment, but is in the nature of an exclusive license, and the grantee cannot maintain a suit for infringement of the patent in his own name unless against the patentee, nor is he a necessary party to such a suit in equity by the patentee, although he is a proper party if his interests will be affected by the decree, and on seasonable objection by the defendant may be made a party in the discretion of the court. Bowers v. Atlantic, Gulf & Pacific Co., 162 Fed. 895, 898 (citing Waterman v. Mackenzie, 11 Sup. Ct. 334, 138 U. S. 252, 34 L. Ed. 923; Hammond v. Hunt, 11 Fed. Cas. 391).

SIMPLE MELANCHOLIA

"Simple melancholia" is a kind of insanity, and some of its pronounced characteristics are an indifference to life and to worldly interests and affairs, and, as it develops, delusions will develop, and the usual outcome is a suicidal tendency; but one afflicted with simple melancholia may converse apparently rationally, write apparently intelligently, and converse with friends, so that the affliction will not be noticed. The main condition is a change in the emotions and disposition. The mere fact that one is suffering from simple melancholia does not show testamentary incapacity, but to establish testamentary incapacity the insanity and the delusions must have directly affected the testamentary act. In re Dolbeer's Estate, 86 Pac. 695, 703, 149 Cal. 227, 9 Ann. Cas. 795.

SIMPLE TOOL

An implement having a wooden handle about three feet long, inserted in an iron cross-head, having a hammer face on one end and a pick point on the other end, is a "simple tool," which the master need not inspect. Lehman v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. Ry. Co. 122 N. W. 1059, 1061, 140 Wis. 497.

A "cant hook," consisting of a large handle of wood, over which an iron cuff is slipped and fastened a few inches from the bottom, into which cuff a hook is fastened by a bolt, and which is operated by hand by the operator catching hold of the handle, and placing the hook on a log, and using the implement as a lever, is not a "simple tool"; and the servant is not negligent in using it, unless he knows of defects therein, or ought to have known thereof by the use of ordinary care. Parker v. W. C. Wood Lumber Co., 54 South. 252, 253, 98 Miss. 750, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 832.

SIMPLE TRUST

A dry or simple trust is one as to which the trustee has no duties to perform and the cestui que trust has the entire management of the estate. It is a simple separation of the equitable and legal estates which can be united at the option of the cestui que trust. It is not to be confounded with those trusts which are created upon a declared condition which has passed away by the cessation of the reason for the continuance of the trust, as, for instance, a trust established for the benefit of a married woman who becomes discover, thus discontinuing the trust. Carpenter v. Carpenter's Trustee, 84 S. W. 737, 738, 119 Ky. 582, 68 L. R. A. 637, 115 Am. St. Rep. 275 (citing Woolley v. Preston, 82 Ky. 415; Thomas v. Harkness, 76 Ky. [13 Bush] 23).

SIMPLY

Civ. Code, § 1336, providing that "words in a will referring to death or survivorship simply relate to the time of the testator's death unless possession is actually postponed, when they must be referred to the time of possession," has no application to the construction of a will containing words of limitation upon a death coupled with a contingency such as dying without issues; this not being death "simply." In re Carothers' Estate, 119 Pac. 926, 928, 161 Cal. 588.

SIMPLEX OBLIGATIO

St. 4 Anne, c. 16, § 13, like Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 864, relative to tender of the amount actually due on a penal bond, covers bonds for a penalty with a condition or defeasance by which they shall become void upon the payment of a lesser sum, but it also covered actions for debt brought upon any single bill or upon any judgment, in which case the defendant may discharge himself by paying in to court the full amount of the debt, bond, or judgment with interest and costs. The Missouri Statute contains no such provision. Such bonds are not treated by the Missouri courts as falling within the same class as penal bonds, but are treated like any other agreement to pay money where the plaintiff is entitled to recover what he can prove was actually due at the time the suit was brought. In other words, such a bond is properly a "simplex obligatio," whereas a bond for the payment of money upon a condition is denominated a double or conditional bond. Burnside v. Wand, 71 S. W. 337, 342, 170 Mo. 531, 62 L. R. A. 427.

SIMULATION

In French law "collusion," or "simulation," is "a fraudulent arrangement between two or more persons to give a false or deceptive appearance to a transaction in which they engage." Sere v. Darby, 43 South. 255, 258, 118 La. 619.

Where a petition shows that a judgment debtor bought immovable property through an interposed person, in whose name title was taken in order to screen and cover it from the pursuit of his creditors, and that the vendor of the property was not a party to the scheme to defraud, and sold in good faith, believing the interposed person the real purchaser, the sale itself not being attacked, and the only object of the suit is to have it decreed that the judgment debtor is the true owner, and not the interposed person, the action is one in declaration of simulation, not to annul the sale, but to expose the real vendee. Hoffmann v. Ackermann, 35 South. 293, 294, 110 La. 1070.

SIMULTANEOUS

The word "simultaneous" may be used according to the subject-matter to which it refers in a sense that does not imply absolute synchronism, and, while the word may be thus used to imply absolute synchronism, the use of the word in the making of wire glass refers only to the laying of the wire and rolling the first sheet of glass, and not to the whole operation. Highland Glass Co. v. Schmertz Wire Glass Co., 178 Fed. 944, 963, 966, 967, 102 C. C. A. 316.

SIMULTANEOUSLY

The word "simultaneously," within the rule that to warrant the joinder of several persons in a bill for relief the wrongful act must be of such a character as to necessarily call upon all the orators "simultaneously," affecting all in the same manner, though not necessarily to the same extent, means not at the very same instant, but substantially the same time. Cloyes v. Middlebury Electric Co., 66 Atl. 1039, 1042, 80 Vt. 109, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 693.

The word "simultaneously" means at the same time and, as applied to an alleged infringement of a patent, if the machinery in question at any time during the operation moves "simultaneously" as does the machinery of the alleged infringed patent, such alleged infringing machinery is within the claim, though its respective movement may begin and end at different times. United Shirt & Collar Co. v. Beattie, 149 Fed. 736, 742, 79 C. C. A. 442.

The word "simultaneously," used in a patent to describe the operation of the parts of a machine which in fact operate progressively to complete the article produced, must be construed to mean that the parts operate unitedly, harmoniously, and in concord, and not at the same instant of time. E. J. Manville Mach. Co. v. Excelsior Needle Co., 167 Fed. 538, 540, 93 C. C. A. 216.

SINCE

"Since" means "after," "from the time of." An allegation that a condition has existed "since" a certain date does not include that date. Lawver v. Great Northern R. Co., 105 N. W. 1129, 97 Minn. 36.

The Primary Election Law. (Laws 1899, p. 970, c. 473, § 3, subd. 1), relating to the enrollment of voters at primary elections, requires each voter to declare that he "has not enrolled with or participated in any primary election or convention of any party since the first day of last year." Such law also provides that such declaration shall be made on the regular registration days preceding elections, and shall be deposited in the ballot boxes, which shall remain unopened until the Tuesday following the next succeeding day of the general election. The ballots are then opened, the blanks examined, and there is set opposite the name of each elector in the enrollment book the number designated by him on the enrollment blank. This must be done before the 15th of December and the enrollment books thus made up go into effect on the 1st day of January following, and remain in force until the 1st day of the following January, when they are superseded by new books. Held that, though the declaration is made in October, it should be treated as if made on January 1st following, when it becomes effective, and the statements that the voter has not enrolled "since the first day of last year" must be considered as referring to the day on which it takes effect. In re Duffy, 109 N. Y. Supp. 979, 981, 125 App. Div. 406.

As applicable to future

The word "since" is not always limited in meaning to the time between the present and a certain past event or a space of time between two certain past events, but sometimes reaches beyond the present and embraces future time, and, when used as a preposition, may mean "during or within the time after; ever after, or at a time after; from and after the time, occurrence, or existence of." Const. art. 13, § 6, provides for the forfeiture for taxes of 1,000 acres or more for failure to enter them on the land books for any five successive years after the year 1869. Laws 1882, c. 130, § 39, making it the duty of a landowner to have his land entered on the land books of the county, and cause himself to be charged with the taxes thereon, and pay them, provides that, when for any five successive years since the 9th day of April, 1873, the owner of a tract of land less than 1,000 acres in extent shall not have been charged on such books with state taxes on the land, it shall be forfeited by operation of law and the title thereto vested in the state. Held, that the phrase "since the 9th day of April, 1873," means all time after such date, and not merely the period between such date and the time of enactment of the act of 1882. State v. Mathews, 69 S. E. 644, 650, 68 W. Va. 89.

As subsequent

It has been held, in a bill for infringement of letters patent alleged to have been issued in 1879 and assigned to the complainant in 1880, that an averment of an infringement of the latter's rights "since" the date of the patent will be construed as meaning after or subsequent to the date of the patent and not "ever since" that time. Edison Electric Light Co. v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of United States, 55 Fed. 478, 480.

SINGLE COMPONENT MATERIAL

The Tariff Act, providing that the "component material of chief value" in imported merchandise shall be held to be that component material which shall exceed in value any other "single component material" of the article, and the value of the component material shall be determined with reference to the value of the components in their condition as found in the article, means the state which the materials are in when put together, without regard to their value after being advanced to completion; and articles of cotton covered with varnish, in which, before combination, the latter is of less value, should be regarded as composed in chief value of cotton, irrespective of the fact that subsequent labor in applying the varnish may render it the component of chief value in the completed articles. *United States v. SINGLE IMPROVEMENT

Where one improvement district is formed for the making of two improvements, the two improvements must be treated as one within Kirby's Dig. § 5683, limiting the cost of a "single improvement." Bateman v. Board of Com'rs of Improvement Dist. No. 1 of City of Clarendon, 143 S. W. 1062, 1063, 102 Ark. 306.

SINGLE-LINE RATES

The distinction in Laws 1905, c. 353, establishing rates for transportation of oil, between "single-line rates" and "double-line rates," is between rates for shipment over a single line and for shipment over more than one line. Tucker v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 108 Pac. 89, 90, 82 Kan. 222.

SINGLE OBLIGATION

"A 'single obligation' is one without any penalty, as where I simply promise to pay you $100." United States v. Green, 136 Fed. 618, 647 (quoting 2 Bouv. Law Dict. 254).

SINGLE PERSON

As family, see Family.

SINGLE RAILROAD

For the purposes of chapter 227 of the Acts of 1872-73, as well as chapter 41 of the Acts of 1907, two railroads, operated in connection with one another, under a lease of one by the other, or otherwise, constitute a "single railroad." Coal & Coke Ry. Co. v. Conley, 67 S. E. 613, 632, 67 W. Va. 129.

SINGLE ROOM

As dwelling house, see Dwelling—Dwelling House.

SINGLE-STAMP SPIRITS

"Single-stamp spirits," within St. 1909, § 4114A et seq., imposing a tax on the business of compounding, rectifying, adulterating, or blending distilled spirits known and designated as single stamped spirits, is not confined to whisky, but includes any distilled alcoholic spirits used as a beverage whether single or double stamped. Dr. C. Bouvier Specialty Co. v. James, 118 S. W. 381, 133 Ky. 580.

SINGLE STRANDS OR CORDS

The provision in the Tariff Act, relating to gloves stitched with more than three "single strands or cords," does not include gloves having but three points each, each point having three distinct rows of stitching, though the stitching shows nine chains of embroidery on the outside of the backs of the gloves and nine single rows of stitching on the inside. United States v. La Fetra, 172 Fed. 297, 298.

SINGLE SUBJECT

Where all the provisions of a statute fairly relate to the same subject, have a natural connection with it, or are the incidents or means of accomplishing it, the subject is single within Const. art. 4, § 28. State v. Smith, 135 S. W. 465, 467, 233 Mo. 242, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 179.

SINGLE TRAIN

A freight train scheduled to run regularly between points in different states is a "single train" throughout such run and at all times subject to the provisions of Safety Appliance Act March 2, 1893, c. 196, 27 Stat. 531, as amended, although some of the cars composing it may have been left and others taken on at different stations, and although after entering the second state the engine, caboose, and train crew may have been changed. In such case, if at any one or more points in the run a sufficient number of the cars composing the train are not equipped with air brakes to meet the requirement of the act, the railroad company is liable to the penalty imposed for its violation, but to one penalty only. United States v. Chicago Great Western Ry. Co., 162 Fed. 775, 776, 780.

SINGLE TRANSACTION

See Jeopardy.

SINKING

As used in Rev. Codes, § 8536, requires the use of steel cages equipped with doors in mine shafts over 300 feet deep, provided that, when such cage is used for slinking only, it need not be so equipped, the term "sinking" was not technical, but meant to descend, to go down, to excavate downward without substantial deviation from a straight line, extending from the point of beginning toward the center of the earth, and, hence, did not include the cutting of stations so as to relieve the operators from providing doors to the cages during such operations. Osterholm v. Boston & Montana Consol. Copper & Silver Mining Co., 107 Pac. 499, 503, 40 Mont. 508.

SINKING FUND

The object of every "sinking fund" is to diminish the debt whose existence warranted its foundation. Levy v. McClellan, 89 N. E. 569, 573, 196 N. Y. 178 (quoting Bank for Savings v. Grace, 7 N. E. 162, 168, 102 N. Y. 313-326).

"A 'sinking fund' may be, and generally is, intended as a cumulative security for the payment of the debt with which it is connected." Tennessee Bond Cases, 5 Sup. Ct. 974, 1098, 114 U. S. 663, 698, 29 L. Ed. 281.

The city of Spokane attempted to issue bonds the proceeds of part to be used for public improvements, and of part to be placed in a fund for retiring the bonds at their maturity. Rem. & Bal. Code, § 7507, subd. 5, authorizes the city to issue bonds in place of or to supply means to meet maturity bonds or for the consolidation or funding of the same. Held, that as a sinking fund contemplated by the statute is one arising from particular taxes imposed or duties which are appropriated toward the payment of a public debt, and can by no contrivance be created as part of the debt itself, and as the payment of interest upon the funding bonds would consume all their earnings, such issue was invalid, it being apparent that the nature and purposes of law as well as the character of a sinking fund was utterly misconceived. Murphy v. City of Spokane, 117 Pac. 476, 480, 64 Wash. 681.

SINKING FUND TAX

A "sinking fund tax" is raised to be applied to the payment of the principal and interest of a public loan or obligation. Brooks v. Incorporated Town of Brooklyn, 124 N. W. 868, 872, 146 Iowa, 136, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 425.

SISTER

As legitimate relation

The words "child," "children," "brother," or "sister," in Burns' Ann. St. 1908, §§ 2992, 2993, 2996, relating to descent, mean legitimates only, so that on the death of an intestate leaving neither children nor other descendants, nor husband, father, or mother, but a brother of the full blood, and the descendants of two illegitimate half-brothers, the surviving brother took the entire estate. Truelove v. Truelove, 86 N. E. 1018, 1020, 88 N. E. 516, 172 Ind. 441, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 220.

Half blood

In England it has long been settled that whenever the word brother or "sister" is used in a statute without limitation it includes half brothers or sisters, respectively. Under Gen. St. 1902, § 296, providing that, where a legatee being a brother of the testator shall die before him, the issue of the legatee shall take the estate bequeathed, the issue of the half-brother designated as a beneficiary in a will who predeceased the testatrix, are entitled to the legacy; the word brother in the statute including half-brother. Seery v. Fitzpatrick, 65 Atl. 964, 965, 79 Conn. 562, 9 Ann. Cas. 139.

Ky. St. 1909, § 1219, makes it incest for any one to carnally know his sister. Section 2090, prohibiting a man from marrying his sister, makes no distinction between those of the whole and the half blood, nor does section 1393, subsec. 3, governing descent and distribution save that the sister of the whole has twice the share of the sister of the half blood. Held that, in view of those statutes, it is incest for one to carnally know his half-sister. Burdue v. Commonwealth, 138 S. W. 296, 297, 144 Ky. 428.

Ky. St. § 2064 (Russell's St. § 3841), provides that where a devise is made to several as a class, and one or more shall die before, and another or others shall survive, testator, the share or shares of those dying shall go to his or their descendants, or, if none, to the surviving devisees. Section 4841 (section 3964) provides that if a devisee dies before testator, or is dead at the making of the will, leaving issue who survive testator, such issue shall take as the devisee would have done. Testator devised the remainder, after a life estate in land, to his brothers and sisters. He had one sister who died without issue, before he did, and a half-sister who died before the will was made, leaving issue who survived him. Held, that the will must be construed to mean "sisters" as a class, which being the case, the devise was controlled by section 4841, and the descendants of the half-sister took the share she would have had she survived testator. Barnhill v. Sharon, 121 S. W. 983, 984, 135 Ky. 70.

SISTER HOOK

A "sister hook" is defined as "a pair of hooks so mounted that they face and overlap each other; match hooks." Louden Machinery Co. v. Janesville Hay Tool Co., 141 Fed. 975, 985 (quoting and adopting definition in Stand. Dict.).

"Clip hooks" are "two regular iron hooks having one side flat, suspended (reversed to one another) from a small iron thimble. By overlapping, these two shapes form one complete inclosing hook. These are also known as "sister hooks." Louden Machinery Co. v. Janesville Hay Tool Co., 148 Fed. 686, 693, 78 C. C. A. 548 (quoting and adopting the definition in Patterson's Nautical Encyc. "Clip Hooks").

SITE

See County Site.

In Rev. Codes 1899, §§ 701, to 703, providing for the selection of a schoolhouse site, the word "site" does not of itself necessarily mean a place or tract of land fixed by definite boundaries. Petersburg School Dist. of Nelson County v. Peterson, 103 N. W. 756, 758, 14 N. D. 344.

A notice of election for the removal of a county seat is not objectionable in using the word "site" in respect to both building and offices. The word "location" is used in the statute in respect to offices, and while it may be preferable, both words are frequently employed in the same sense, and no confusion could have resulted. Stanton v. Board of Sup'rs of Essex County, 96 N. Y. Supp. 840, 842, 48 Misc. Rep. 415.

SITIO DE GANADO MAYOR

Under Spanish or Mexican grants, a "sitio de ganado mayor" was a square league, and appears to have been the only unit in estimating the superficies of land. Corrigan v. State, 94 S. W. 95, 100, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 171.

SITTING

The word "sitting," as used in Hurd's Rev. St. 1901, c. 38, § 132, which provides that any person who shall at any time or "sitting," by playing at cards lose to any person so playing any money amounting to $10, and shall pay the same, may sue and recover the money by action in assumpsit, is construed to include "all that transpires in playing the game of draw poker from the time certain players begin playing together on any one occasion until they cease playing together on that occasion, no matter how many hands are played." Zellers v. White, 70 N. E. 669, 672, 208 Ill. 518, 100 Am. St. Rep. 243.

A decision or "sitting" of the circuit court is over after the final discharge of the jury for the term, though no formal adjournment is had until the next ensuing term begins, and special sittings are held after the discharge of the jury. According to the practice throughout the state, the circuit courts meet on the first day of the term, and continue their sessions from day to day until they have disposed of all the cases on their several dockets. These sittings are those that are referred to in the rule by the use of the words 'the sittings of the term,' but they do not include special sittings held after 'the sittings of the term' for the purpose of keeping the court in session during the term for the transaction of such business as may arise from time to time after the regular sitting has ended." Hays v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co., 58 Atl. 439, 441, 99 Md. 413 (quoting Gaines v. Lamkin, 33 Atl. 459, 82 Md. 129).

SITUATE

Corporations .

The word "situated," in Laws 1851, c. 95, § 9, providing that penalties imposed on an insurance company for doing business in the state without a certificate may be recovered by the district attorney of the county in which the company or agent is situated, refers to the place where the agent is when he does the business or act complained of—the place which he makes his office for that business. People v. Imlay (N. Y.) 20 Barb. 68, 78.

As used in a statute providing for actions against a corporation, to be brought in the county in which it is "situated" or has its principal office or place of business, the term "situated" contemplates more than the mere temporary presence of an agent in the county, for the purpose of transacting the company's business. The fact that an agent of the corporation receives and answers correspondence, and keeps blank supplies in his residence in a county, is not sufficient to show that the corporation maintains an office there. Security Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Ress, 106 N. W. 1037, 1039, 76 Neb. 141.

A domestic life insurance corporation is "situated," within Code Civ. Proc. § 55, authorizing such a corporation to be sued in the county in which it is situated, in any county in which it maintains an agent or servant engaged in transacting the business for which it exists. Bankers' Life Ins. Co. of Lincoln v. Robbins, 73 N. W. 269, 270, 53 Neb. 44; Id., 75 N. W. 585, 586, 55 Neb. 117. See, also, Western Travelers' Acc. Ass'n v. Taylor, 87 N. W. 950, 62 Neb. 783.

SITUATION

See Dangerous Situation.

SITUS

See Business Situs.

The word "situs" means site, situation, location; a place where a thing is. Greene County v. Wright, 54 S. E. 951, 953, 126 Ga. 504.

"Situs" or situation imports fixedness of location, and while in its natural signification the term is applicable only to landed estates which are really fixed and immovable, it is also applied to personal property as annexing it to the individual to whom it belongs. Callender Navigation Co. v. Pomeroy, 122 Pac. 758, 761, 61 Or. 343.

The "situs" of personal property of every description is the domicile of the owner. Commonwealth v. Union Refrigerator Transit Co., 80 S. W. 490, 491, 118 Ky. 131.

"In the absence of some statute regulating the 'situs' of property for taxation, it is governed by the common law in regard to actual situs. It is competent, however, for the Legislature to give thereto for the purpose of taxation any situs it sees fit, subject to the rule of uniformity and to the limitation that there must be some appreciable relation between the municipality exacting the tax and the person upon whom the burden is cast, either directly or by reference to the property taxed, from which there can reasonably be seen reciprocal duties to accord benefits on the one hand, and to respond therefor on the other. Whether that relation does or does not exist in any given circumstance is so conclusively a legislative question that nothing short of manifestly capricious action, amounting to a taking of property for a public use without just compensation, will justify judicial interference." Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. State, 108 N. W. 557, 589, 128 Wis. 553.

Of franchise

"Under the statutes of this state, franchises must be classed as property subject to taxation. The franchise so assessable may be classified as creative and special. The creation of a corporation, the grant of power to exist and act as such, is, in itself, a franchise, and it has been distinctly decided that such franchise is assessable as property. This creative franchise is inseparable from the being or personality of the corporate body, and hence it must have its situs wherever the corporate entity has its domicile or residence, and this, in law, is the place where its principal place of business is situated." This being true, it follows under the express mandate of the statutes that such franchises must be assessed and taxed in the county where its principal place of business is located. San Joaquin & K. R. Canal & Irrigation Co. v. Merced County, 84 Pac. 285, 286, 2 Cal. App. 593.

SIX MONTHS RULE

The rule that, if a public service corporation diverts its income from the payment of current expenses to the improvement of the mortgaged property, so that the current expenses remain unpaid when a receiver is appointed, the court may, out of the income accruing during the receivership, apply to the unpaid claims for current expenses the amount so diverted, has been limited by so many courts to claims arising within six months before the receivership, that it has become known as the "six months rule." Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. Home Telephone Co. of Puget Sound, 200 Fed. 263, 264.

SIZED AND SUPER-CALENDERED PAPER

"Sized and super-calendered paper," as known to the trade, is a glazed paper torturing to the human eye by gas or electric light and out of place in brief work. Jackson v. Grissom, 94 S. W. 263, 264, 196 Mo. 624.

SKELETON BILL

Bills of exceptions commonly called "skeleton bills" are well recognized by the law; that is, where the court or judge prepares or signs the bill containing only the formal parts and provides by parenthetical instructions to the clerk to copy into the bill certain documents or evidence. This class of the bills of exceptions is of great use and labor saving to the profession and the courts, and, since our statute has provided for stenographers to take down the evidence upon the trial in shorthand and to furnish a transcript thereof, the evidence thus taken by the stenographer can be made a part of the record by such skeleton bill of exceptions; but in doing so, as in all other cases, the evidence must have been actually before the judge because under our statute the judge of the trial court is required to certify the evidence by proper bills of exceptions. Tracy's Adm'x v. Carver Coal Co., 50 S. E. 825, 826, 57 W. Va. 587 (citing Code 1899, c. 131, § 9).

SKELETON TRACK

Where the spaces between railroad ties are not filled to the tops of the ties, and about one-half of the ties are exposed, it is called a "skeleton track." St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Ames (Tex.) 94 S. W. 1112, 1114.

SKELPING TONGS

In the Simpson patent for apparatus for skelping or tube welding, which covers a combination of a welding table pivoted at the rear end, provided with an endless traveling chain and "skelping tongs" having a hook to engage the chain, the term "skelping tongs" does not restrict the invention to a pair of tongs used in combination with the other elements for the purpose of skelping, but was manifestly used, although possibly inaptly, to describe tongs for either skelping or butt welding. National Tube Co. v. Spang, Chalfant & Co., 132 Fed. 318-320.

SKID

As Appliance, see Appliance.

SKILL—SKILLFUL

See Assumption of Skill; Best Skill and Discretion; Game of Skill; Labor and Skill; Utmost Care and Skill.
Game of skill as lottery, see Lottery.

The word "skill," as a limitation of expert evidence, must be regarded in its broadest signification, not applied necessarily only to mechanical or professional knowledge. It includes every subject susceptible of special and peculiar knowledge derived from experience. Schwantes v. State, 106 N. W. 237, 247, 127 Wis. 160.

A contract to construct buildings in a "good, workmanlike manner" meant that it was to be constructed with fair average skill, considered in relation to the character of the work, and not with the highest skill known to the carpenter trade; "workmanlike" meaning worthy of a skillful workman, well-executed, skillful, and "skillful" being defined as having ability in a specified direction, experienced, practiced. Holland v. Rhoades, 106 Pac. 779, 780, 56 Or. 206.

A definition of ordinary care as that degree of care usually exercised by ordinarily prudent and "skillful" men, etc., is not erroneous because of the use of the word "skillful." Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Warner (Ky.) 79 S. W. 199, 200.

The word "skillful," used in an instruction defining ordinary care as that degree of care which ordinarily prudent and skillful men usually exercise under circumstances and in occupations similar to those proven in the case in question, is not commonly used in the definition of "ordinary care," but it is hard to distinguish the difference between the instruction as given by the court and the meaning of the ordinary definition. By this instruction no special skill was required. Ordinary skill is supposed to be possessed by ordinary men in conducting the business in which they are engaged. The word "skillful" as used did not add a new, distinct, or different standard, but only required what should be required of ordinary men in the business in which they are engaged. It would have been better if the court had conformed to the ordinary definition, but it cannot be said that the instruction as given was erroneous; and, if erroneous, it was only technically so and not prejudicial. Southern R. Co. in Kentucky v. Otis' Adm'r (Ky.) 78 S. W. 480, 482.

SKILLFUL AND CAREFUL MINING

Where defendant owned coal under land, the surface of which was owned by another, and conveyed his coal to a third person, giving an obligation to indemnify the grantee for any damages resulting to the surface of the land by reason of skillful and careful mining, the words "skillful and careful mining" related to the manner of working the coal, and did not impose on plaintiff, the grantee, in operating the coal, the duty of leaving proper and sufficient supports for the surface; and, where the grantee exercised skill and care in its mining operations, he could remove all the coal, and the grantors were bound to indemnify him against any damage resulting from injury to the surface which he might be compelled to pay to the owner thereof. Youghiogeny River Coal Co. v. Allegheny Nat. Bank, 60 Atl. 924, 927, 211 Pa. 319, 69 L. R. A. 637.

SKILLFUL AND EXPERIENCED MEN

An instruction, in an action for injuries to a passenger, imposing on the carrier the very high degree of care and foresight of skillful, careful, and practical railroad operatives under the same or similar circumstances, is not different in meaning from one imposing on the carrier the obligation to use the highest degree of care practicable among prudent, "skillful, and experienced men" in the same kind of business; there being no difference between "practical railroad operatives" and "skillful and experienced men." A practical railroad operative must be one of experience in that line. Loftus v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 119 S. W. 942, 944, 220 Mo. 470.

SKIN

The game of "skin" is as general and popular with the negroes of the South as the game of poker is with the whites of the entire country, and the Court of Appeals will judicially recognize that both games are played with cards. McClendon v. State, 69 S. E. 37, 8 Ga. App. 398.

SKINNED

See Fish Skinned or Boned.

SKINS

See Cabretta Skins.

"Hides" are separated from "skins" by weight. If more than 12 pounds in weight, they are known as "hides"; if less, they are known as "skins." United States v. Helmrath, 145 Fed. 36, 37, 75 C. O. A. 261.

SKY SIGN

Building Code of City of New York, § 144, provides that any sign or advertising device supported or attached over or above any building, etc., shall be deemed a "sky sign," and prohibits such signs from being constructed more than nine feet above the front wall of a building at any part. Relator seeks to erect a sky sign on a building to a greater height than permitted by an ordinance enacted pursuant to the building code, having leased the right to erect signs on the building, and respondent refused to issue a permit on the ground that its erection would violate the ordinance. Held that the ordinance constituted a "taking of property" without compensation, in that it arbitrarily limited the erection of signs above the height stated, and it was not justified as a police regulation. People ex rel. M. Wineburgh Advertising Co. v. Murphy, 113 N. Y. Supp. 855, 857, 129 App. Div. 260.

SLAB

"Slabs" are not within the statute giving a lien on the "lumber and timber" for services in cutting logs. Engl v. Hardell, 100 N. W. 1046, 1048, 123 Wis. 407.

A piece of steel 15 feet long, 4 feet 2 inches wide, 6½ inches thick, and weighing over 6 tons, with a geometrical design engraved on one side, a completed article ready for use in the manufacture of glass, is a "slab" and not a sheet or plate, and hence is not dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 135, 30 Stat. 161, as a sheet or plate, but under paragraph 193 as "steel in all forms and shapes not specially provided for in this act." Theo. W. Morris & Co. v. United States, 174 Fed. 656, 657, 98 C. C. A. 410.

SLACKEN

The word "slacken" means to lose rapidity; to become more slow. Badovinac v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 104 Pac. 543, 544, 39 Mont. 454 (citing Webst. Int. Dict.).

SLANDER

Malice in slander, see Malice.
See, also, Jactitation.

"Slander" or "defamation" is anything which tends to blacken or injure one's character or reputation. Dungan v. State, 57 South. 117, 118, 2 Ala. App. 235.

A "slander" is an oral utterance by an individual of defamatory matter. Duquesne Distributing Co. v. Greenbaum, 121 S. W. 1026, 1027, 135 Ky. 182, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 955, 21 Ann. Cas. 481.

An order of arrest which states the ground as "defamation of character of plaintiff" sufficiently states the ground of arrest to be "slander" within General Rules of Practice No. 13, providing that an order of arrest shall state the ground on which it is granted. Juskovitz v. Rafsky, 130 N. Y. Supp. 839, 840.

"An essential element of 'slander' is that the slanderous words should have been spoken in the presence of persons other than plaintiff, for without this there could be no tendency to injure or disgrace the person of whom the words are spoken." Knipe v. Brooklyn Daily Eagle, 91 N. Y. Supp. 872, 874, 101 App. Div. 43 (citing 9 Bacon, Abr. 32; 13 Enc. of Pl. & Prac. 42, 43; Terwilliger v. Wands, 17 N. Y. 54, 59, 72 Am. Dec. 420).

Civ. Code, § 46, subd. 3, defines "slander" as a false and unprivileged publication other than libel, which tends directly to injure another in respect to his office, profession, or business, either by imputing to him general disqualification in those respects which the office or other occupation peculiarly requires, or by imputing something with reference to his office, profession, trade, or business that has a natural tendency to lessen its profit. Under such Code a statement that a master mariner is in the habit of getting drunk is actionable, since such charge includes his conduct while on voyage. Swan v. Thompson, 56 Pac. 878, 880, 124 Cal. 193.

"Slander" is "the speaking of base and defamatory words which tend to the prejudice of the reputation, office, trade, business, or means of getting a living of another." An action by a depositor against a bank for refusal to honor checks is not an action of slander. James Co. v. Continental Nat. Bank, 58 S. W. 261, 263, 105 Tenn. 1, 51 L. R. A. 255, 80 Am. St. Rep. 857 (citing Cooley, Torts, 229, 235; Newell, Defam. 40; Townsh. Sland. & L. § 3; Rap. & L. Law Dict. 1198; 3 Black, Com. 183; Pollard v. Lyon, 91 U. S. 225, 23 L. Ed. 308; Harrison v. Burem, 1 Tenn. Cas. 94; Webst. Dict.).

"Slander" or oral defamation consists: First, in imputing to another a crime punishable by law; and, second, charging him with having some contagious disorder or being guilty of some debasing act which may exclude him from society; or, third, in charges made on another in reference to his trade, office, or profession calculated to injure him therein; or, fourth, any disparaging words productive of special damage flowing naturally therefrom." It is slander to falsely impute a bad character to a female schoolteacher. Nicholson v. Dillard, 73 S. E. 382, 384, 137 Ga. 225 (quoting and applying Civ. Code 1910, § 4433).

"Slander," for which a civil action is authorized, is defined in section 46 of the Civil Code, subd. 1, declaring that a publication other than libel, which falsely charges any person with crime, constitutes slander. Under such definition a statement that "I have a man to prove that H. struck S. in front of his place of business, that he had two witnesses who had tracked the blood stains from H.'s shop to where S. fell, and that he had proof that H. was guilty of the murder of S.," were slanderous per se as charging a crime, but there was a failure of proof where the proof showed only that defendant, in addition to saying that he had witnesses who saw H. strike S., said to one person "H. might have killed him anyhow," and to another, "If you will follow up H. pretty close, you will find that this man's death came that way," and "he might have something to do with it," and to another, "The S. case was a murder." Haub v. Freiermuth, 82 Pac. 571, 1 Cal. App. 556.

SLANDER BY WRITING OR SPEAKING

In Rev. St. Me. 1903, c. 88, § 1, which provides that "all personal actions except those of detinue, replevin, actions on the case for malicious prosecution, for slander by writing or speaking and for assault and battery may be commenced by trustee process," the words "slander by writing or speaking" are used in a comprehensive sense and include libel, and under such provision an action for libel cannot be commenced by trustee process. Macurda v. Globe Newspaper Co., 165 Fed. 104, 106.

SLANDER OF TITLE

"Slander of title" is an actual intrusion upon one's property in the nature of a trespass; a real action to protect title. Labarre v. Burton-Swartz Cypress Co., 53 South. 113, 116, 126 La. 982.

"Slander of title" differs from slander of person in that it may be the result of written as well as of spoken words. There must be a defamation of title by language before an action for slander of title will lie. Rhoades v. Bugg, 129 S. W. 38, 39, 148 Mo. App. 707.

SLANDEROUS WORDS

Words are "slandrous" per se which impute to the person mentioned the commission of a crime, or that he is affected with a contagious disorder which would render him obnoxious to society, or which would tend to injure his business. Farley v. Evening Chronicle Pub. Co., 87 S. W. 565, 568, 113 Mo. App. 216.

Words, to be a slander per se, must charge a criminal offense, or, failing of that, must be spoken of a person in reference to his business, and be of such character that they must necessarily injure him in his business, as that a tailor was a botch, or his clothes were misfit, or that he was insolvent, and the like. Hume v. Kusche, 87 N. Y. Supp. 109, 110, 42 Misc. Rep. 414.

Under Acts 1888, p. 723, c. 444, declaring all words spoken falsely and maliciously touching the character or reputation for chastity of any woman shall be deemed "slander," the statement that "[plaintiff's] youngest child was born of another man. * * * It would have been impossible for her husband to have been the father of it. Yes, it is true, and everybody knows it"—was "actionable per se," and proof thereof entitled plaintiff to recover without proof of damage. Cairnes v. Pelton, 63 Atl. 105, 107, 103 Md. 40.

"The language of some of the writers of the common law shows that the phrase 'slandrous words' was sometimes made to apply to spoken words and sometimes to words either spoken or written. * * * I cannot escape the conclusion that the Legislature of Maine, both in the original use of the phrase 'slandrous words' and the later use of the words, 'slander by writing or speaking,' intended to include libel. * * * In Me. Rev. St. 1903, c. 88, § 1, which provides that 'all personal actions, except those of detinue, replevin, actions on the case for malicious prosecution, for slander by writing or speaking, and for assault and battery may be commenced by trustee process,' the words 'slander by writing or speaking' are used in a comprehensive sense and include libel. Macurda v. Globe Newspaper Co., 165

Fed. 104, 107, 108 (citing McDonald v. Green, 57 N. E. 211, 176 Mass. 113, and Bouvier & Rapalje, Law Dict.).

SLATE SHIFTER

In the operation of a coal mine, in which there are many entries and a large number of railroad tracks in certain of the entries, crosscuts, and rooms, the person whose duty it was to clear away the fallen slate and debris from both sides of the track wherever there was sufficient room for a driver to go in case of danger is denominated a "slate shifter." Muren Coal & Ice Co. v. Howell, 68 N. E. 456, 457, 204 Ill. 515.

SLAVE

SLAVEHOLDER

A person whose only interest in slaves consists of an undistributed share of an estate composed of slaves is not a slaveholder within the terms of a statute requiring a certain proportion of the jurors to be slaveholders in certain cases. Spence v. State, 17 Ala. 192, 193.

SLAVERY

The word "slavery," as used in the thirteenth amendment to Const. U. S. § 1, providing that neither "slavery" nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, means a condition of enforced, compulsory service of one to another; "slavery" being defined in Webster as a "state of entire subjection of one person to the will of another." Hodges v. United States, 27 Sup. Ct. 6, 8, 203 U. S. 1, 17, 51 L. Ed. 65.

SLEEPING CAR

"A 'sleeping car' is obviously a public means of transportation." Allen v. Pullman's Palace Car Co., 24 Sup. Ct. 39, 191 U. S. 171, 183, 48 L. Ed. 134.

SLICK-EAR

"Slick-ear," as applied to cattle, means that the ownership thereof is unknown." State v. Eddy, 90 Pac. 641, 46 Wash. 494.

SLIGHT

The word "slight" is of indeterminate meaning. It usually implies unimportance. Moxley v. Hertz, 30 Sup. Ct. 305, 308, 216 U. S. 344, 54 L. Ed. 510.

SLIGHT CARE

Civ. Code, § 2175, prohibiting a carrier from limiting its liability for injuries resulting from gross negligence, was a part of Civ. Code 1872, which by sections 16 and 17 declared that there are three degrees of care and diligence, "slight," "ordinary," and "great," and three degrees of negligence, "slight," "ordinary," and "gross." "Slight care" was defined as that which is such as persons of ordinary prudence usually exercise about their own affairs of slight importance, and "gross negligence" was defined as that which consists in the want of slight care and diligence. These sections were repealed in 1874. Held, that such repeal cannot affect the construction of the words "gross negligence" as used in section 2175, as the intention of the Legislature at the time of the adoption of the latter section must control, and there is no warrant for holding that such words were intended to mean other than as the term is defined in the repealed sections. Walther v. Southern Pac. Co., 115 Pac. 51, 54, 159 Cal. 769, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 235.

The better doctrine is that care or the want of it is not to be measured arbitrarily according to fixed definitions as "slight care," "ordinary care," or "extraordinary care," or "slight negligence," or "gross negligence," although all these phrases are used somewhat loosely by courts and law-writers, but it is to be measured by reasonableness, under all the circumstances of the particular inquiry. The only true measure is "reasonable care," and that expression has been declared by the courts in England and elsewhere to be synonymous with "ordinary care." "Reasonable care" is a relative term, and what is reasonable care in a given case depends upon many considerations. What would be reasonable care under some conditions would clearly be negligence in others. Reasonable care and vigilance vary according to the exigencies which require vigilance and attention. They relate to the work to be done, to the instrumentalities to be used, to the dangers that may result from their use, to the varying duties owed by those who supply or use them. And in all cases reasonable care means such care as reasonable and prudent men used under like circumstances. Caven v. Bodwell Granite Co., 59 Atl. 285, 287, 99 Me. 278 (citing Fletcher v. Boston & M. R., 83 Mass. [1 Allen] 9, 79 Am. Dec. 695; Bigelow v. Reed, 51 Me. 325; Palmer v. Lumber Ass'n, 38 Atl. 108, 90 Me. 193; Sawyer v. J. M. Arnold Shoe Co., 38 Atl. 333, 90 Me. 369; Cayzer v. Taylor, 76 Mass. [10 Gray] 274, 69 Am. Dec. 317; Cunningham v. Hall, 86 Mass. [4 Allen] 268; Holly v. Boston Gaslight Co., 74 Mass. [8 Gray] 123, 69 Am. Dec. 233).

SLIGHT NEGLIGENCE

"A failure to exercise the highest degree of care is 'slight negligence.'" Dolphin v.

Worcester Consol. St. R. Co., 75 N. E. 635, 636, 189 Mass. 270.

"Slight negligence" is not incompatible with the exercise of ordinary care. Malott v. Schlosser, 119 Ill. App. 259, 261.

"Slight negligence" is characterized by such slight inadvertence that, in case of its being the fault of the injured person, it does not militate against his recovering for his loss, and, if it is the fault of the injurer, the result is damnum absque injuria. There are no subdegrees of slight or ordinary negligence. Astin v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 128 N. W. 265, 268, 143 Wis. 477, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 158.

Want of ordinary care is "negligence," but want of extraordinary care, or that care which is customarily exercised by extraordinarily careful people, is "slight negligence," and the latter does not affect the rights of parties injured. Hackett v. Wisconsin Cent. Ry. Co., 124 N. W. 1018, 1022, 141 Wis. 464.

The words, "slight," "ordinary," and "gross," as applied to negligence, are not used in the decisions with the same meaning, or any definite and well-understood meaning. The words "gross negligence" are often used as the antithesis of "slight care," but in many relations the law only requires the exercise of slight care, and the failure to exercise it cannot be different in degree from the failure to exercise a very high degree of care where it is demanded by the law. The absurdity for such a standard for determining supposed degrees of negligence is manifest. It has been noted that "slight negligence" is not regarded as inconsistent with due care, and, if due care is exercised, there is no actionable negligence, and therefore, in a legal sense, no negligence at all. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Hamler, 74 N. E. 705, 709, 215 Ill. 525, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 674, 106 Am. St. Rep. 187, 3 Ann. Cas. 42 (citing Bloor v. Town of Delafield, 34 N. W. 115, 69 Wis. 273; Decker v. McSarley, 93 N. W. 808, 116 Wis. 643; Rideout v. Winnebago Traction Co., 101 N. W. 672, 123 Wis. 297, 69 L. R. A. 601).

The better doctrine is that care or the want of it is not to be measured arbitrarily according to fixed definitions, as "slight care," "ordinary care," or "extraordinary care," or "slight negligence," or "gross negligence," although all these phrases are used somewhat loosely by courts and law-writers, but it is to be measured by reasonableness, under all the circumstances of the particular inquiry. Caven v. Bodwell Granite Co., 59 Atl. 285, 287, 99 Me. 278 (citing Fletcher v. Boston & M. R., 83 Mass. [1 Allen] 9, 79 Am. Dec. 695; Bigelow v. Reed, 51 Me. 325; Palmer v. Lumber Ass'n, 38 Atl. 108, 90 Me. 93; Sawyer v. J. M. Arnold Shoe Co., 38 Atl. 333, 90 Me. 369; Cayzer v. Taylor, 76 Mass. [10 Gray] 274, 69 Am. Dec. 317; Cunningham v. Hall, 86 Mass. [4 Allen] 268; Holly v. Boston Gaslight Co., 74 Mass. [8 Gray] 123, 69 Am. Dec. 233).

SLIGHTER

In an action under Laws 1907, p. 495, c. 254, defining the liabilities of railroads for injuries to employes, for the death of a brakeman, the use of the words "less or greater" instead of the statutory words "slighter or greater," in determining decedent's negligence as a contributing cause in comparison with that attributable to the railroad, was not erroneous, as the word "less" conveyed the idea conveyed by the word "slighter," as used in the statute. Boucher v. Wisconsin Cent. R. Co., 123 N. W. 913, 914, 917, 141 Wis. 160.

SLIP

"The escape of dust from blast furnaces into the atmosphere is, and always has been, incident to their operation. It escapes at all times, but in larger quantities when what is known as a 'slip' occurs in the furnace. In the operation of all blast furnaces, 'slips' occur from time to time. These are occasioned by the caking or incrusting of the ore in the stack of the furnace, and the falling away of the ore, fuel, and limestone beneath the crust by reason of the continued combustion and the liquefaction of the iron, thus forming a chamber or vacant space into which the incrusted ore at the top drops, occasioning an explosion, the violence of which depends upon the extent of the cavity produced and the amount of gas accumulated therein." Sullivan v. Jones & Laughlin Steel Co., 57 Atl. 1065, 1066, 208 Pa. 540, 66 L. R. A. 712.

SLOT MACHINE

As banking game, see Banking Game.

As gambling device, see Gambling Device.

As musical instrument, see Musical Instrument.

As property, see Property.

"Slot machines" are mechanical gamblers, and, being impassive and having no sensations of any sort, they are more likely to win than gambling games which are run by gamblers, who have all of the human passions and feelings. Playing against a slot machine is a struggle between a man and a machine—a man with nerves and emotions; a machine with no nerves and no emotions. Territory v. Jones, 99 Pac. 338, 340, 14 N. M. 579, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 239, 20 Ann. Cas. 128.

A clock maintained in a drug store, so arranged that by placing a nickel in a slot music was played and a red, white, blue, or green light would automatically appear, in which case the person depositing the nickel would be entitled to 5, 10, 15, or 25 cents' worth of merchandise, according to the light appearing, there being no blanks, was a "slot machine," within Acts 27th Leg. p. 267, c. 103, declaring that, if any person should keep or exhibit for purposes of gambling any slot machine, etc., he should be punished. Lytle v. State (Tex.) 100 S. W. 1160, 1161.

A statute (Laws 1903, p. 9, c. 5106, § 19) licensing "lung testers, striking machines, weighing machines, chewing gum stands, automatic penny in the slot machines, or any other device of similar nature," under a Constitution prohibiting lotteries, will not be construed to license the operation of a machine in which the element of chance largely predominates. Such machine can by no possible construction be considered as ejusdem generis with lung testers, striking machines, weighing machines, chewing gum stands, or automatic penny in the slot machines. The generic term "slot machine" evidently has reference to that numerous class of catch-penny contrivances, of more or less real use or amusement, where, by depositing a penny or other small coin, one may secure the identical object advertised. State v. Vasquez, 38 South. 830, 49 Fla. 126.

SLOUGH

As water course, see Water Course.

SLOW

See Move Slow Signal.

SLOW COMBUSTION

A "constant pressure engine" is one in which the cylinder pressure remains the same during the outward travel of the piston while the volume of flame increases. The pressure is applied continuously. This mode of operation is also called "slow combustion" and "nonexplosion." Columbia Motor Car Co. v. C. A. Duerr & Co., 184 Fed. 893, 904, 107 C. C. A. 215.

SLOWLY

"'Slowly' is a relative term when applied to a moving object, and must be measured according to the ordinary speed of the person or thing in question." In an action for injuries sustained by a passenger who was attempting to alight from a street car moving at the rate of three miles an hour when the car suddenly started forward, the use in an instruction of the word "slowly," with reference to the speed of the car, was not erroneous, especially where other instructions fully and correctly submitted the issue of contributory negligence. Dawson v. St. Louis Transit Co., 76 S. W. 689, 691, 102 Mo. App. 277.

The word "slowly" has a relative meaning. As applied to a slow-going animal in comparison with a race horse, the movement of the former would be called slow, but, compared with its own movements under different conditions, it would be considered rapid. An electric car moving at a speed of two miles an hour would be moving slowly compared with its usual and ordinary speed. Where, in an action against a street railway company for injuries to a passenger while alighting from a car in consequence of the sudden starting thereof, plaintiff's evidence showed that the car stopped at a crossing for passengers to alight, and that, while he was in the act of alighting, the car was suddenly started, causing him to be thrown on the pavement, and defendant's evidence showed that the car did not stop at the crossing, but was moving at the rate of from two to four miles an hour, an instruction that if, when the car either stopped or was moving very slowly, plaintiff was proceeding to alight therefrom and had stepped down from the front platform to the car step, and that defendant's employes in charge of the car saw plaintiff, etc., was not open to the criticism that there was no evidence that the car was moving slowly, but properly submitted the question whether the car was moving slowly. Ghio v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 103 S. W. 142, 143, 125 Mo. App. 710.

SLUE

The word "slue" may mean to pull a box on a car to one side to keep it from catching on the entry to a mine. Henrietta Coal Co. v. Campbell, 71 N. E. 863, 866, 211 Ill. 216.

SLUICE

A tile drain consisting of an opening or a channel through which water flows is a "sluice," and "culvert" includes "sluice." Herrick v. Town of Holland, 77 Atl. 6, 11, 83 Vt. 502.

SLUICEWAY

A gutter beside a roadway, by reason of defects in which ice gathered in the roadway causing plaintiff's injury, was not a "sluiceway" within Laws 1893, p. 47, c. 59, § 1, providing that towns are liable for damages to any person traveling on a sluiceway by reason of any defect which renders it unsuitable for traveling thereon. Drew v. Town of Bow, 65 Atl. 831, 74 N. H. 147.

SLUMBER

See Profound Slumber.

SLUNG SHOT

A stick about eight inches long, consisting of an ordinary round chair round, smaller at one end than the other, the small end having a hole bored through it and a string running through it, which may be hung on the wrist, and the larger end having holes bored in it and apparently filled with some kind of metal, and not being covered with anything, is not a "slung shot"; a slung shot being a metal ball of small size, with a string attached, used for striking, though the stick is a dangerous weapon. Geary v. State, 108 S. W. 379, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 38.

SLUSH

"Slush" is a colloquial expression for a mixture of snow and water. Maxfield v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 60 Atl. 710, 711, 100 Me. 79.

SLUT

See Dirty Slut.

The word "slut," according to Webster, means an untidy woman; a slattern. The word "slut" is defined in the Century Dictionary to mean: (1) A careless, lazy woman, a woman who is uncleanly as regards her person or her home, a slattern, often used as a name of contempt for a woman; (2) a young woman, a jade, a winch, used lightly; (3) an awkward person, animal, or thing; or (4) a female dog. According to the usual, popular, and natural signification, the words "dirty slut," when spoken of a woman, do not of themselves impute unchastity. Cooper v. Seaverns, 105 Pac. 509, 510, 81 Kan. 267, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 517, 135 Am. St. Rep. 359.

SMALL

"It is true that generally the word 'small' is a comparative term, denoting things of little size, as compared with other things of the same class." Gage v. City of Chicago, 66 N. E. 374, 376, 201 Ill. 93.

SMALL BREW

"'Malt beverage,' 'small brew,' and 'near beer,' are, as it would seem, synonymous terms, and are used to designate a class of beer, the sale and distribution of which is sought to be regulated and controlled by section 23½ of the Byrd Liquor Law, and in that act are put among the class of 'mixtures, preparations, and liquids' in which alcohol appears in varying proportions with other ingredients, and which may or may not be used as beverage, or may or may not contain alcohol in such proportion with the other ingredients that the stomach can bear enough of the mixture to produce intoxication; malt liquors being classified as within or without the ardent spirits class, according as they will or will not produce intoxication." Commonwealth v. Henry, 65 S. E. 570, 572, 110 Va. 879, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 883.

SMALL CONCRETE

Under a paving ordinance providing that the binder course shall be 1½ inches thick, when completed, and shall be composed of broken limestone, of a size known as "small concrete," although it is true that generally the word "small" is a comparative term, denoting things of little size, as compared with other things of the same class, it is not necessary that the broken pieces of granite or limestone should be of exactly the same size, in order to render the description definite and sufficient, since, in a course of  $1\frac{1}{2}$  inches of concrete and cement, the broken pieces would necessarily be much smaller in dimensions than the thickness of the completed pavement. Gage v. City of Chicago, 66 N. E. 374, 376, 201 Ill. 93.

SMALL GENERAL CHARGE

By the general usage in the mackerel fishery, the amount of the cook's wages is always included in the "small general charge," so called, and is to be deducted from that portion of the proceeds of the voyage which is apportioned to the master and crew, and not from that portion retained by the owners of the vessel. This does not, however, exempt the owners from their liability for the cook's wages. Harding v. Souther, 66 Mass. (12 Cush.) 307, 317.

SMALL LIMITATIONS

The expression "small limitations," when used in regard to the power of the Legislature to limit rights incident to property, necessarily varies in meaning and must be determined with reference to the exigencies of the particular situation. The actual destruction of private property under the police power is in some cases held proper, while very little interference in others might be held improper. Bonnett v. Vallier, 116 N. W. 885, 888, 136 Wis. 193, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 486, 128 Am. St. Rep. 1061.

SMALL LOT

A township which had been surveyed for sale into lots, mostly of 670 acres each, fell within the statute empowering the land agent to select for public uses 1,000 acres of land to average in quality and situation in each township which is or may be surveyed into "small lots" for sale or settlement. Stetson v. Grant, 66 Atl. 480, 482, 102 Me. 222.

SMART MONEY

See, also, Exemplary Damages; Punitive Damages.

"Smart money" is an amount in addition to compensatory damages awarded as a lesson to defendants to prevent a repetition of the misconduct for which the damages are awarded. Shallcross v. West Jersey & S. R. Co., 67 Atl. 931, 75 N. J. Law, 395.

"Smart money" is synonymous with "punitive damages." Louisville Gas Co. v. Kentucky Heating Co., 111 S. W. 374, 377, 132 Ky. 435.

The sum assessed by a jury additional to compensation for damages, by way of punishment for wrongdoing, is termed "smart money," or "exemplary," "vindictive," or "punitive" damages. Farrow v. Hoeffcker (Del.) 79 Atl. 920, 921, 7 Pennewill, 223.

While the damages to which a plaintiff may become entitled, in an action of tort to the amount of his expenses in litigation in addition to his actual damages, are in fact and in effect "compensatory damages" and not punitive, they are in practice variously termed "exemplary," "punitive," "vindictive," or "smart money," and, in an action for personal injuries in which plaintiff was entitled to recover such additional damages, it was not error to refer to them as "exemplary." Hull v. Douglass, 64 Atl. 351, 353, 79 Conn. 266.

"Smart money" may be given as damages only where the defendant in the act complained of acted with malice, and whether it is wise to punish defendant for public reasons may not enter into the consideration of the question whether such damages should be awarded. Magagnos v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 112 N. Y. Supp. 637, 638, 128 App. Div. 182 (citing Cleghorn v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 56 N. Y. 44, 15 Am. Rep. 375; Voltz v. Blackmar, 64 N. Y. 440; Muckle v. Rochester Ry. Co., 29 N. Y. Supp. 732, 79 Hun, 32; Craven v. Bloomingdale, 64 N. E. 169, 171 N. Y. 439; East v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 101 N. Y. Supp. 364, 115 App. Div. 683).

"Smart money" is only awarded in actions of tort against a telegraph company for failure to properly transmit a message, where the failure was the result of intention or gross negligence. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Reeves, 126 Pac. 216, 219, 34 Okl. 468 (quoting Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Chamberlain, 4 Okl. 542, 46 Pac. 499).

In actions of tort, the jury, in addition to the sum awarded by way of compensation for the injury, may award "exemplary, punitive, or vindictive damages," sometimes called "smart money." In an action against a master to recover for an illegal arrest caused by his servant, an instruction that the jury had the power, if it thought proper, in addition to compensatory damages, to award punitive damages, without further instructing them that defendant was not liable for such damages unless there was evidence that the acts of the servant were wanton or malicious, and that the master was implicated with the servant therein, or had authorized or ratified such acts, was erroneous. Craven v. Bloomingdale, 64 N. E. 169, 171, 171 N. Y. 439.

SMELTER RETURNS

The phrase "smelter returns," in a deed reciting that certain royalties on smelter returns of all ores removed should be paid to the owners, means returns from the ore, less the smelting charges, without deducting the charges for hauling, freight, and switching. Frank v. Bauer, 75 Pac. 930, 932, 19 Colo. App. 445.

SMOKE

"Smoke" is defined in Webster's International Dictionary as follows: "The visible exhalation, vapor, or substance that escapes or is expelled from a burning body, especially from burning vegetable matter, as wood, coal, peat, or the like." City of St. Paul v. Haugbro, 100 N. W. 470, 471, 472, 93 Minn. 59, 66 L. R. A. 441, 106 Am. St. Rep. 427, 2 Ann. Cas. 580.

SMOKED HERRING

"Smoked herring," though salted before being smoked, are not dutiable as "herrings, pickled or salted," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 260, 30 Stat. 171, being a commodity distinct therefrom both commercially and in common speech. Mattlage v. United States, 139 Fed. 704.

SMOKEHOUSE

As outhouse, see Outhouse.

SMOKELESS COAL

"Smokeless coal" is a trade or commercial term applied to a grade of soft coal in which the volatile matter runs from 16 to 21 per cent. State v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 130 N. W. 545, 547, 114 Minn. 122, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 494, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1030.

SMOKERS' ARTICLES

Articles used chiefly for the convenience of smokers, consisting of tables on the top of which are affixed smokers' accessories, and of an ornamental miniature automobile for the use of smokers, are dutiable as "smokers' articles" under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 459, 30 Stat. 194, and not as "house or cabinet furniture of wood," under paragraph 208, Schedule D, of said act, 30 Stat. 168. A. Steinhart & Bro. v. United States, 126 Fed. 443, 444.

SMOKING TOBACCO

"Cigarettes consist of 'smoking tobacco,' similar in all respects to that used in pipes. The circumstance that a longer 'cut' than that commonly used in pipes is most convenient for cigarettes is not important, nor that the tobacco is smoked in paper instead of pipes. It may be used for either purpose, and is all embraced in the term 'smoking tobacco.'" American Tobacco Co. v. Polacsek, 170 Fed. 117, 121 (quoting and adopting definition in Carroll v. Ertheller, 1 Fed. 688).

SMUGGLE

Section 2865, Rev. St., making it criminal to "smuggle or clandestinely introduce" merchandise into the United States, does not include a case where merchandise is fraudulently entered at the customhouse. United States v. Six Hundred and Forty Six Half-Boxes of Figs, 164 Fed. 778, 780.

SMUGGLING

"Smuggling" is defined as the fraudulent taking into a country, or out of it, merchandise which is lawfully prohibited. United States v. Mitchell, 141 Fed. 666, 670 (citing Dunbar v. United States, 15 Sup. Ct. 325, 156 U. S. 186, 39 L. Ed. 390).

To constitute the offense of "smuggling," there must be a secret introduction of dutiable goods with intent to defraud the government. San Antonio Light Pub. Co. v. Lewy, 113 S. W. 574, 582, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 22.

A fraudulent entry of merchandise at the custom house cannot be classified as "smuggling" nor brought within the words "clandestinely introduced," in Rev. St. § 2865, making it criminal to smuggle or clandestinely introduce merchandise into the United States. United States v. Six Hundred and Forty Six Half-Boxes of Figs, 164 Fed. 778, 780.

A person arriving in the United States omitted from his declaration made to the customs officials on shipboard any mention of a package of emeralds contained in his clothing, and at the time of the examination of his baggage on the dock falsely stated to such officers that he had no precious stones in his possession. Said emeralds were then seized under Rev. St. § 2865, providing for the forfeiture of smuggled goods. Held, that the act of "smuggling" was complete when he had passed from the vessel to the shore, and that it was immaterial that he had not gone beyond the customs lines established on the dock for convenience in examining baggage. United States v. 218½ Carats Loose Emeralds, 153 Fed. 643, 647 (citing United States v. One Pearl Necklace, 111 Fed. 165, 49 C. C. A. 287, 56 L. R. A. 130; One Pearl Chain v. United States, 123 Fed. 374, 59 C. C. A. 499; United States v. One Pearl Chain, 139 Fed. 517, 71 C. C. A. 500; United States v. Five Packages of Tapestry, 114 Fed. 496).

An indictment, alleging that accused at Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., did unlawfully, knowingly, and fraudulently import and bring into the United States certain merchandise, to wit, 3½ yards of black woolen suiting cloth of the value of $10, contrary to law—that is, clandestinely and without entering the same at the United States Customs Office and port of entry with the United States Collector of Customs and paying the duty thereon—the same being foreign merchandise subject to an import duty as provided in Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, 30 Stat. 151, sufficiently charged "smuggling," denounced by Rev. St. § 2865, providing that if any person shall knowingly and willfully, with intent to defraud the revenue of the United States, smuggle, or clandestinely introduce into the United States, any goods, wares, or merchandise subject to duty by law, and which should have been invoiced, without paying or accounting for the duty, or shall make out or pass, or attempt to pass, through the customhouse, any false, forged, or fraudulent invoice, etc., shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. Rogers v. United States, 180 Fed. 54, 58, 103 C. C. A. 408, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 264.

SNAP

A "set" or "snap" is a tool used to receive the blows of the sledge in riveting the plates of metal beams. The ordinary rule of the nonliability of an employer for injury sustained by an adult employé of ordinary discretion through the voluntary use of a defective tool, when the facts and the danger were within the comprehension of any ordinarily intelligent and prudent man, and were as completely within the knowledge and appreciation of the servant as of the master, is here applied to the case of a man who lost an eye by being struck by a sliver of steel from a "set" or "snap" used to receive the blows of the sledge in riveting I-beams. Gillaspie v. United Iron Works Co., 90 Pac. 760, 761, 76 Kan. 70.

SNAPPER

An assistant to a motorman in a mine, whose duty it is to throw switches, make couplings, and keep a general lookout ahead on the track, is a "snapper." Burns v. Vesta Coal Co., 72 Atl. 800, 802, 223 Pa. 473.

SNATCH BLOCK

"Snatch block" is an appliance made of iron and wood inclosing a pulley, with a hook to fasten it to a post. O'Leary v. Michigan State Telegraph Co., 109 N. W. 434, 435, 146 Mich. 243.

A "snatch block" was described as a heavy block of wood attached to an upright or stanchion by a line used to draw the grain into the leg extending from the hold of the boat to the elevator, and up which the grain was drawn. Connors v. Great Northern Elevator Co., 85 N. Y. Supp. 644, 645, 90 App. Div. 311.

SNUB ROPES

Guide lines used to steady beams in their descent from a derrick platform are called "snub ropes." Bryson v. Gallo, 180 Fed. 70, 75, 103 C. C. A. 424.

SO

As relating back

The word "so," as used in a bond given by a bank and sureties to the state treasurer, reciting that such treasurer would deposit certain moneys in the bank in question, and that the bank should keep, etc., all "said sums so deposited or to be deposited as aforesaid," points to something previously mentioned in the instrument, and the sureties on the bond are liable for deposits in the bank at the time the bond was executed. Kephart v. Buddecke, 80 Pac. 501, 503, 20 Colo. App. 546.

Where a mechanic's lien recited that, during the progress of work contract, defendant ordered certain extra work and agreed to pay therefor the reasonable value of the materials furnished and labor performed, that the reasonable value of said labor and material "so done and furnished" was and is the sum of $21.84, it is reasonably plain that the expression "so done and furnished" means done and furnished in accordance with the order and agreement of W. previously referred to, and the allegation is sufficient to show that the order and agreement for the extra work was that of defendant. Newell v. Brill, 83 Pac. 76, 77, 2 Cal. App. 61.

See Not So Dying.

SO FAR AS APPLICABLE

Between the adoption of Const. art. 20, an amendment disincorporating the former city of D. and several other municipal corporations, and merging them into the new city and county of D., and the adoption by the new municipality of a charter and ordinances, it possessed not merely the ordinary general governmental powers of a city necessary to its preservation and perpetuity, but special powers, so that it could create sidewalk districts, and assess the cost of building sidewalks; the new corporation, by Const. art. 20, § 1, succeeding to all the rights of the former city, section 3 making certain existing officers and boards of the former city, officers and boards of the new corporation, to hold till their successors were elected and qualified, and section 4 providing that the charter and ordinances of the old city, as they shall exist when such amendment of the Constitution takes effect, shall, for the time being only, and as far as applicable, be the charter and ordinances of the new corporation, "for the time being" meaning the aforesaid interim, and "so far as applicable" having reference to said article 20, and meaning so far it does not make said charter and ordinances inapplicable. Hallett v. City and County of Denver, 104 Pac. 1038, 1039, 46 Colo. 487.

SO FAR AS PRACTICABLE

A requirement in a city charter that the location of a defect in a street shall be stated "so far as practicable" in a notice thereof as affecting a claim for resulting injuries means that a reasonable degree of accuracy shall be used. A notice, stating that claimant was walking on the south side of a certain street between two certain other streets in the city, when she stepped upon a loose plank, the end of which had become rotten, and which had rotten stringers underneath, was held sufficient. Mulligan v. City of Seattle, 84 Pac. 721, 722, 42 Wash. 264.

SO LONG AS

The phrase, "so long as . . . the contract remains in force," used in a contract whereby a party bound himself to continue a third person in charge of the interests of the parties "so long as" he was connected with him "and the contract remains in force," does not refer to a possible breach, but means so long as the contract continues in force if performed according to its terms. Magnolia Metal Co. v. Gale, 75 N. E. 219, 220, 189 Mass. 124.

A devise to a widow "so long as she remains my widow" gives her no more than a life estate, the words quoted being words of limitation and not of condition, and only a life estate passes unless an intent to give a greater one affirmatively appears. Beatty v. Irwin, 73 N. E. 926, 927, 35 Ind. App. 238.

Where a testator devised all his estate of every kind to his wife and her heirs and assigns forever, "so long as she remains my widow," the quoted condition is equivalent to saying "provided she remains my widow," which does not cut down the estate, but merely attaches a condition which makes it defeasible in toto on a breach, and the widow, having died without having remarried, died seised of an estate in fee simple. Scott v. Murray, 67 Atl. 47, 218 Pa. 186.

SO UNDERSTOOD

See It Was So Understood.

SOAP PENCILS

Not dutiable as pencils, see Pencil.

SOBER

It may well be doubted whether the term "sobriety" is susceptible to any accurate definition for practical purposes. It sufficiently defines itself. Midland Valley R. Co. v. Hamilton, 104 S. W. 540, 542, 84 Ark. 81.

SOCIAL

SOCIAL CLUB

An association organized, as shown by its certificate of incorporation, for social fellowship, with the privilege of providing for its members refreshment, etc., is a "social club," within Acts 1902-04, p. 461, c. 270, subc. 4 [Code 1904, § 1105d], authorizing the incorporation of societies without capital stock, etc., and is not a "business corporation," within chapter 1, p. 437, of the act providing for the incorporation of corporations for the transaction of any lawful business. Hanger v. Commonwealth, 60 S. E. 67, 68, 107 Va. 872.

SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC

The name "Social Democratic Party" is neither the "same nor substantially the same" as the name "Democratic Party," within Election Law (Laws 1896, c. 909, p. 922, § 56), declaring that no political party may assume a name "the same or substantially the same" as that of a party with the right to its use established. In re Social Democratic Party, 93 N. Y. Supp. 1023, 1025, 105 App. Div. 243.

SOCIAL SETTLEMENT

The term "social settlement" is incapable of exact definition, not having yet found its way into the dictionary, though it may be understood in the sense of an abiding place of a group of persons concerning themselves with questions relating to public health, education, morals, etc., but Laws of 1902, p. 1758, c. 605, § 1, exempting from assessment for water supply any social settlement which shall own or lease for a term of not less than three years a building devoted exclusively to the purpose of such settlement, does not exempt a building adjoining, owned, and used by a church in part for its own purposes and in part for social settlement conducted therein by its officers. People ex rel. Trustees of Amity Baptist Church v. Monroe, 81 N. Y. Supp. 972, 40 Misc. Rep. 286.

SOCIETY

See Benevolent Society; Educational Societies; Missionary Societies or Corporation; Religious Society; Secret and Fraternal Society; Terminating Society.

"Society," as used in connection with a person's social relations with his fellow men, means the class with which he mingles, the class from which, if he marries, he selects his wife, the class of people with whose children his children go to school. Flood v. News & Courier Co., 50 S. E. 637, 639, 71 S. C. 112, 4 Ann. Cas. 685.

The words "society" and "social" are not arbitrary signs, but are descriptive, with commonly understood meanings in the terms "society events," "social events," "society gossip," and "social gossip"; and hence the use of such words in the name of a book, such as "Social Register," "Society List," etc., could not constitute a valid trade-mark. Social Register Ass'n v. Murphy, 128 Fed. 116, 120.

SOCIETY OF JESUS

The "Society of Jesus" is a religious order known as the Jesuit Order. It is composed of missionary and teaching priests of the Roman Catholic Faith. There is no legally incorporated body, but the members are bound only by their vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience, and, after the second novitiate, by a fourth vow requiring them to go wherever the pope may send them for missionary duty. They are governed by a general, and the society has been established in the United States for many years. A bequest to the society for the purposes of education or religion is invalid as not to an identified or ascertainable object. Coleman v. O'Leary's Ex'r, 70 S. W. 1068, 1070, 114 Ky. 388.

SODOMY

See, also, Crime Against Nature.

The common-law crime of "sodomy" included only an act committed per anum. State v. Whitmarsh, 128 N. W. 580, 582, 26 S. D. 426.

"Sodomy" may be committed by the mouth, or otherwise than per anum. White v. State, 71 S. E. 135, 136 Ga. 158; Id., 71 S. E. 499, 9 Ga. App. 307; Herring v. State, 48 S. E. 876-881, 882, 119 Ga. 709 (citing 3 Russ. Cr. [6th Ed.] 250; 1 Whart. Cr. Law [10th Ed.] § 579; Pac. Abr. tit. "Sodomy"; Clark, Cr. Law [2d Ed.] 367).

"Sodomy," within Code Supp. Iowa, § 4937, defining "sodomy" as the carnal copulation in any opening of the body except sexual parts, with another human being, or carnal copulation with a beast, follows the generally accepted definition of sodomy, and an indictment substantially following the language of the statute is sufficient. State v. Gage, 116 N. W. 596, 139 Iowa, 401.

"Sodomy" is derived from Sodom, where the crime was prevalent, and its carnal copulation by human beings against nature with penetration, but penetration of the mouth is not sufficient, and consent does not affect its criminality, but makes the consenting party an accomplice; and buggery is the same offense between a man and a beast. Commonwealth v. Poindexter, 118 S. W. 943, 944, 133 Ky. 720.

Copulation against the order of nature is "sodomy," whether the person with whom had was a man or woman. Adams v. State, 86 S. W. 334, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 90, 122 Am. St. Rep. 733.

The fact that one of the parties used the mouth of the other did not constitute the crime of "sodomy." Mitchell v. State, 95 S. W. 500, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 535 (citing Prindle v. State, 21 S. W. 360, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 551, 37 Am. St. Rep. 833; People v. Boyle, 48 Pac. 800, 116 Cal. 658; 1 Whart. Cr. Law, § 579; McClain, Cr. Law, § 1153).

SOFT DRINKS

What are commonly known as "soft drinks" contain only an appreciable amount of alcohol, not enough to produce intoxication, however much is drunk as a beverage. Roberts v. State, 60 S. E. 1082, 1086, 4 Ga. App. 207.

The term "soft drinks," as the words are popularly known, include not only such non-intoxicating beverages as lemonade, soda water, mineral waters, etc., but also those alcoholic decoctions invented to take the place of intoxicating drinks, such as malt mead, near beer, etc. Bradford v. Jones, 135 S. W. 290, 291, 142 Ky. 820.

SOFT GROUND

The term "soft ground," as used in mining, refers to selvage, decomposed rock, or soapstone. When exposed to the air soapstone becomes brittle and is likely to crack and slough off. Spencer v. Bruner, 103 S. W. 578, 126 Mo. App. 94.

SOJOURN

See Place of Sojourn.

SOLAR TIME

See Apparent Solar Time.

Mean solar time, see Mean Time.

SOLATIUM

The word "solatium," as used by the courts in stating that for a particular injury "solatium" will be allowed, means "a compensation as a soothing to the affections, or wounded feelings, and for loss of the comfort and social pleasure there is in the association between members of a family. 'Solatium' is sentiment, love, or affection, as distinguished from a property loss." The declaration in Rev. St. 1899, § 2866, that, in an action for a death, the jury may give such damages as they may deem fair and just, with reference "to the necessary injuries resulting from" such death, is equivalent to limiting the recovery to pecuniary injury, and therefore the statute by necessary implication excludes "solatium." Marshall v. Consolidated Jack Mines Co., 95 S. W. 972, 973, 119 Mo. App. 270.

SOLD

See Bought and Sold; This Day Sold.

The word "sold" imports not a mere proposition to sell, but a consummated contract of sale. Where a contract recited, "We have sold to a certain person certain land," describing it, the vendors by such words declared and acknowledged that they had sold the premises, and such declaration or acknowledgment was binding on them. Forthman v. Deters, 69 N. E. 97, 100, 206 Ill. 159, 99 Am. St. Rep. 145.

"It is true that in a technical sense, and where a due regard to the intention of the parties using the word 'sold' is had, it may mean a transfer of the title of property for a money consideration. Yet it has other meanings * * * when it is obvious that such was the intent of the party using the phrase."

Culver v. Uthe, 10 Sup. Ct. 415, 133 U. S. 655, 659, 33 L. Ed. 776.

To speak of property as having been "sold" does not necessarily mean that it has been paid for. Hathaway v. Burr, 21 Me. 567, 571, 38 Am. Dec. 278.

The use of the words "bought and sold" in a written contract of sale does not necessarily import a present sale, but are frequently used to express a mere agreement to sell. Waltl v. Gaba, 116 Pac. 963, 964, 160 Cal. 324.

One who has given trading stamps in connection with merchandise sold has "sold" such stamps, since the transaction consists in the transfer to the customer of certain merchandise then and there delivered and the transfer of an assignable order for certain other merchandise. Sperry & Hutchinson Co. v. Hertzberg, 60 Atl. 368, 372, 69 N. J. Eq. 264.

Under a contract for a sale of agricultural implements, providing that those not "sold" by a specified time should be returned, implements resold by the buyer under contracts reserving title until payment of the price are "sold," but other implements, which were consigned by the buyer to third parties for resale under contracts which did not require the buyers thereunder to pay for the implements, unless they sold them, are not "sold." Doylestown Agr. Co. v. Brackett, Shaw & Lunt Co., 84 Atl. 146, 149, 109 Me. 301; Buffalo Fertilizer Co. v. Aroostook Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 84 Atl. 1078, 1081, 109 Me. 483.

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 343, providing that the complaint shall contain a statement of the facts constituting the cause of action in plain language, so as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended, a complaint which alleges that defendants are jointly indebted to plaintiff in a specified sum for hay "sold" and delivered by plaintiff to defendants, during a specified time, and which includes an itemized statement of account, is sufficient when attacked for the first time on appeal; the word "sold" implying a contract of sale of an article for a specified sum. Pennsylvania Elevator & Supply Co. v. Fosnotte, 95 N. E. 586, 587, 48 Ind. App. 166.

A contract which requires the licensee under a patent to pay a royalty on each machine "sold or delivered" covers machines delivered by the licensee to customers, but which were returned, and not paid for. Confectioners' Machinery & Mfg. Co. v. Panoualias, 134 Fed. 393, 67 C. C. A. 391.

Where a contract is executory, the word "sold" means contracted to sell, and does not imply a change of title. Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Knox, 98 N. E. 295, 298, 177 Ind. 344.

A complaint which alleges that plaintiff "sold" to defendant personal property for a specified sum, that defendant paid a part, and that the balance was due, owing, and unpaid, on account of the sale of the property, is an attempt to follow Code Civ. Proc. § 426, by stating the facts constituting the cause of action in ordinary language, and sufficiently alleges, after verdict, that the unpaid price was due by alleging a completed sale, for the word "sold" describes a completely executed transaction, though the word is often used to indicate an executory agreement only, and the word "sale" does not necessarily, and in all connections, mean that title must pass. Christensen v. Cram, 105 Pac. 950, 156 Cal. 633 (citing Blackwood v. Cutting Packing Co., 18 Pac. 248, 76 Cal. 212, 9 Am. St. Rep. 199; Eaton v. Richerl, 23 Pac. 286, 83 Cal. 185; Pettinger v. Fast, 25 Pac. 680, 87 Cal. 461; Shainwald v. Cady, 28 Pac. 101, 92 Cal. 83).

Change of title implied

In a recital in an agreement that real property is sold, the word "sold" does not conclusively show a present conveyance. Thus an agreement reciting that real property was sold, and reciting the deposit of a sum of money on account of the purchase price to be returned if the sale was not consummated according to the conditions of the agreement, the purchaser's signature being preceded by the words "I agree to purchase," pursuant to which the purchaser went into possession and the seller executed a deed and placed it in a bank to be delivered on the performance of conditions by the purchaser, was an agreement of sale, and not a conveyance. In re Goetz's Estate, 109 Pac. 145, 146, 13 Cal. App. 198.

"In common parlance, the word 'sold' does not necessarily include the idea that the necessary writing has been executed to transfer the legal title, but rather that the terms and conditions of the sale have been agreed upon." Thus where a mortgagee, who loaned money on the security of a mortgage of real property, the deed to which the mortgagor had forged, was, through her attorney, aware the day before the loan was made that the owner had not conveyed his land to the mortgagor, she and her attorney could not have relied on a previous statement of the owner that he had "sold" his land to the mortgagor, and the owner was not estopped by his statement from asserting his right to have the mortgage declared void as a cloud on his title. Williams v. Ketcham, 77 N. E. 285, 289, 37 Ind. App. 506.

In the absence of a contrary showing, land is "sold," within a parol contract authorizing a broker to sell land for another in consideration of a stipulated commission, when the broker produces a purchaser willing and able to comply with the terms of the sale, and an agreement is entered into between the purchaser and the vendor which terminates in an actual transfer of the title, or when the agent has performed the services required of him, and the vendor and purchaser enter into an enforceable contract; the word "sold" not necessarily meaning that a conveyance must be made or that the title must pass. Sanderson v. Wellsford, 116 S. W. 382, 384, 53 Tex. Civ. App. 637.

Consideration implied

The word "sold" imports a consideration or price. Howell v. State, 52 S. E. 649, 650, 124 Ga. 698.

The word "sold" imports a contract of sale for a valuable consideration. Radebaugh v. Scanlan, 82 N. E. 544, 547, 41 Ind. App. 109.

Order of court implied

To say that land was "sold by the administrator" is to say that it was sold under the order of the court, for in no other way could the administrator have sold it. Gutter v. Dallamore, 79 Pac. 383, 384, 144 Cal. 665.

SOLD AND CONVEYED

A clause in a policy of insurance that, if the property insured shall be "sold or conveyed," the policy shall be null and void refers to a sale or conveyance of it by the assured, determining his interest in the subject of insurance, and not to a sale or conveyance to him, to increase his interest. Heaton v. Manhattan Fire Ins. Co., 7 R. I. 502, 507.

SOLD NOTE

"Sold notes" are written memoranda of a sale of goods delivered to the party thereto by the broker negotiating the sale. Generally that delivered to the buyer is the "bought" note, and that delivered to the seller is the "sold" note, but some authorities hold that the "sold" note is that delivered to the buyer and the "bought" note to the seller. Eau Claire Canning Co. v. Western Brokerage Co., 73 N. E. 438, 439, 213 Ill. 561 (citing Saladin v. Mitchell, 45 Ill. 79).

SOLDIER

In army regulations, par. 981, reading, "When soldiers awaiting result of trial or undergoing sentence commit offenses for which they are tried, the second sentence will be executed on the expiration of the first," the word "soldiers" embraces officers as well as enlisted men. Kirkman v. McClaughry, 160 Fed. 436, 440, 90 C. C. A. 86; Id., 152 Fed. 255, 261.

An enlisted man of the Ohio National Guard is a soldier "of the organized militia" of the United States, as defined by Act Cong. Jan. 21, 1903, c. 196, 32 Stat. 775 (U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1907, p. 328), as amended by Act Cong. May 27, 1908, 35 Stat. 399, c. 204, and as such liable to be tried and punished by court-martial, as the code of regulations of the Ohio National Guard and the articles of war of the United States as adopted in the code provides. McGorray v. Murphy, 88 N. E. 881, 80 Ohio St. 413, 17 Ann. Cas. 444.

U. S. Comp. Stat. § 1342, provides that "the word 'soldier' shall be understood to include noncommissioned officers, musicians, artificers, and privates and other enlisted men." Hartigan v. United States, 25 Sup. Ct. 204, 206, 196 U. S. 169, 49 L. Ed. 434.

SOLDIERS' HOME

As asylum, see Asylum.

SOLE

Under a rule adopted by the Commissioner of Patents, an applicant for a patent, if he was the inventor, must make oath or affirmation stating whether he is the "sole" or joint inventor of the invention. The word "sole," as used in the rule, is a shorter way of saying that the applicant does not know and does not believe that the invention was ever known before or used. United States v. Patterson, 172 Fed. 241, 247.

Separate distinguished

The word "separate," as used in creating a trust, has a fixed and technical meaning, and excludes the marital rights, whereas the same meaning is not attributable to "sole." Wilson v. Bryn Mawr Trust Co., 73 Atl. 1070, 1071, 225 Pa. 139.

SOLE AND EXCLUSIVE

In Ex parte Wilson, 140 U. S. 575, 11 Sup. Ct. 870, 35 L. Ed. 513, it was decided that Act Cong. March 3, 1885 (23 St. 385), conferring upon the territory of Arizona and her courts full jurisdiction of the offense of murder committed on an Indian reservation by an Indian, did not take away from the courts of the United States jurisdiction over the offense there committed by one other than an Indian, conferred by Rev. St. U. S. § 2145, on the ground that the United States, by yielding up a part of her jurisdiction over the offense, lost all. The court said: "Congress may provide for the punishment of one class of offenses in one court, and another class in a different court. Section 2145 extends to the Indian country the general laws of the United States as to the punishment of crimes committed in any place within the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, except as to crimes the punishment of which is otherwise expressly provided for. The words 'sole and exclusive,' in section 2145, do not apply to the jurisdiction extended over the Indian country, but are only used in the description of the laws which are extended to it." The Supreme Court of Oklahoma has held that the district courts of the territory of Oklahoma, when sitting with and exercising the powers and jurisdiction of a United States court, have exclusive jurisdiction of all crimes punishable by the laws of the United States, when committed by persons other than Indians upon an Indian reservation occupied by Indian tribes, and to which reservation the Indian title has not been extinguished. Herd v. United States, 75 Pac. 291, 292, 13 Okl. 512.

SOLE AND UNCONDITIONAL OWNERSHIP

See, also, Entire, Unconditional, and Sole Ownership; Sole Ownership; Unconditional and Sole Ownership.

The interest of a purchaser of property, which he has unqualifiedly agreed to buy, and which the former owner has absolutely contracted to sell to him upon definite terms, is the "sole and unconditional ownership," within the true meaning of the ordinary clause upon that subject in insurance policies, because the vendor may compel the vendee to pay for the property and to suffer any loss that occurs. Phenix Ins. Co. v. Hilliard, 52 South. 799, 801, 59 Fla. 590, 138 Am. St. Rep. 171 (citing Ins. Co. of North America v. Erickson, 39 South. 495, 50 Fla. 419, 2 L. R. A. [N. S.] 512, 111 Am. St. Rep. 121, 7 Ann. Cas. 495; Phenix Ins. Co. of Brooklyn, N. Y., v. Kerr, 129 Fed. 723, 64 C. C. A. 251, 66 L. R. A. 569; Rumsey v. Phoenix Ins. Co. [C. C.] 1 Fed. 396; 8 Words and Phrases, 7154; 2 Cooley, Ins. 1375; Rich. Ins. [3d Ed.] 336).

To be "unconditional and sole," within the meaning of such phrase as used in an insurance policy, the interest or ownership of insured must be completely vested; not contingent or conditional, nor in common or jointly with others, but of such nature that insured must alone sustain the entire loss if the property be destroyed, whether the title be legal or equitable. The "unconditional and sole ownership" of property, within the meaning of such phrase in an insurance policy, is in those on whom the loss insured against would certainly fall, not as a matter of mere contract obligation, but as the result of real bona fide rights in the insured property. Phenix Ins. Co. v. Hilliard, 52 South. 799, 801, 59 Fla. 590, 138 Am. St. Rep. 171.

A vendee, in possession of property under a parol agreement by which he unconditionally bound himself to buy and pay for the property, is the "sole and unconditional owner," within the meaning of that term as used in fire insurance policies, and may truthfully represent himself as such in an application therefor. Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co. of Milwaukee, Wis., v. B. S. Rhea & Son, 123 Fed. 9-12, 60 C. C. A. 103.

Where the purchaser of gin machinery took possession and gave purchase-money notes, which were recorded and reserved title in the seller, and all of the price had not been paid when the policy on the machinery was issued, the buyer was the sole and unconditional owner of the machinery within a stipulation in the policy for sole and unconditional ownership; such a stipulation merely contemplating that the property is not held jointly with others. Lancaster v. Southern Ins. Co., 69 S. E. 214, 216, 153 N. C. 285, 138 Am. St. Rep. 665.

A clause in a policy making it void if the insured is not the "sole and unconditional owner" relates to ownership when the policy was issued. A vendor in a written land contract who has admitted the vendee into possession and received from him large payments on the purchase money is not a sole and unconditional owner, although he retains the legal title. Rosenstock v. Mississippi Home Ins. Co., 35 South. 309, 313, 82 Miss. 674.

The insured was the "unconditional and sole owner" in fee simple within a policy containing a stipulation that it was to be void if the interest of the insured be other than unconditional and sole ownership, where the interest of the insured was a life estate in property or its proceeds, united with the absolute right as a testamentary trustee to dispose of the same as she saw fit for the purposes of the trust. Security Ins. Co. of New Haven v. Kuhn, 69 N. E. 822, 823, 207 Ill. 166.

The giving of a chattel mortgage does not deprive the owner of "sole and unconditional ownership," within a provision of an insurance policy that it should be void if such was not his interest in the property, where the policy contained a separate provision against chattel mortgages. Lancashire Ins. Co. v. Monroe, 39 S. W. 434, 436, 101 Ky. 12.

SOLE CAUSE OF DEATH

Where at the time of an accident insured was suffering from some disease which had no causal connection with the injury or death resulting from the accident, the accident was the sole cause within the policy. Penn. v. Standard Life Ins. Co., 76 S. E. 262, 263, 160 N. C. 399, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 597.

SOLE HEIR

A clause of a will constituting the wife of testator his "sole heir" gives to her his full estate, to the exclusion of all other persons. Bollentin v. Bollentin, 109 N. Y. Supp. 212, 213, 57 Misc. Rep. 250.

SOLE JUDGE OF VALUE

Where a contract of sale of the total equipment of a telephone company provided for an inventory to be made by two reputable experienced telephone men, who should be selected in a certain manner, and should be the "sole judges of all values," the appraisers were not limited to fixing values but were also authorized under the terms used to determine quantity as well. Rogers v. Rehard, 97 S. W. 951, 952, 122 Mo. App. 44.

SOLE LEGATEE

"A 'sole legatee' takes all that remains after satisfying all charges, losses, and expenses." In re Goggin's Estate, 88 N. Y. Supp. 557, 560, 43 Misc. Rep. 233.

SOLE MANAGEMENT

The phrase "sole management," in a statute providing that during the marriage the husband shall have the "sole management" of all his wife's separate property, implies the power of control and possession, as personalty cannot be managed without the power to control and possession thereof to that end. Bledsoe v. Fitts, 105 S. W. 1142, 1144, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 578.

SOLE MANUFACTURER

Where complainants were the sole proprietors of a certain kind of cigarette paper, manufactured exclusively for them in Paris, and all of the paper was stamped with complainant's watermark, and was unobtainable by others, complainant's representation that they were "sole manufacturers" of the paper in Paris, when in fact they had no factory there, was not such material misrepresentation as precluded them from equitable relief against a fraudulent infringement thereof, though the statement "manufactured solely and exclusively for complainant" would have been more exact. Gluckman v. Strauch, 91 N. Y. Supp. 223, 225, 99 App. Div. 361.

SOLE OWNERSHIP

See Unconditional and Sole Ownership. See, also, Entire, Unconditional, and Sole Ownership; Sole and Unconditional Ownership.

Insured's ownership is "sole" when no one other than insured has any interest in the property as owner, and is "unconditional" when the quality of the estate is not limited or affected by any condition. Rochester German Ins. Co. of Rochester, N. Y., v. Schmidt, 162 Fed. 447, 451, 89 C. C. A. 333.

The title of an equitable owner of property in actual possession and entitled to a deed conveying the legal title is that of "sole ownership, both legal and equitable," within a fire policy providing that it shall be void if assured's interest be other than ownership of such character. Arkansas Ins. Co. v. McManus, 110 S. W. 797, 798, 86 Ark. 115.

SOLE POSSESSION

As possession, see Possession.

SOLE USE

In a bequest to a son and a daughter the words "for their sole use" actually mean "for their respective use." Gardiner v. Savage, 65 N. E. 851, 852, 182 Mass. 521.

As granting estate in fee

Where testator devised to his executrix all the rest and residue of his property, both real and personal, for her sole use and benefit, the legal effect of the words "for her sole use and benefit" was to give the property absolutely to the devisee. Gallison v. Quinn, 66 N. E. 961, 962, 183 Mass. 241.

SOLELY

See, also, Necessarily and Solely.

Where a corporation operating a business college owned real estate, part of which was vacant and held for an advance in value, and the balance was occupied by a building, one entire story of which was occupied as a residence of the family conducting the school, the property was not "solely" used for educational purposes so as to sustain a claim of exemption from taxation under Pub. Laws 1909, No. 309, § 7, par. 4. Parsons Business College v. City of Kalamazoo, 131 N. W. 553, 554, 166 Mich. 305, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 921.

The word "only," in the judiciary act (Act March 3, 1887, c. 373, § 1, 24 Stat. 552, as amended by Act Aug. 13, 1888, c. 866, § 1, 25 Stat. 433), providing that, when jurisdiction is founded "only" on diversity of citizenship, suit may be brought in the district of the residence of either the plaintiff or the defendant, is equivalent to "solely." Whitaker v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 176 Fed. 130, 131.

SOLEMN

SOLEMN ADMISSION

Admissions made in a pleading, denominated "solemn admissions," are not required to be supported by evidence on the part of the adverse party. Such admissions are taken as true against the party making them without further proof or controversy. Knowles v. New Sweden Irr. Dist., 101 Pac. 81, 85, 16 Idaho, 217.

SOLICIT

To "solicit" is to ask earnestly; to make petition to; to appeal to (for something); to endeavor to obtain by asking or pleading; to plead for. Thus where a grocer maintains a delivery wagon, and an employé delivers goods previously ordered from him when making a former delivery, or which have been ordered by letter or telephone from the customer direct to the store, the fact that a patron receiving goods orders others from the person delivering, not being asked, solicited, or requested so to do by him, does not establish the fact of "canvassing or soliciting orders for any article, goods or merchandise," under the provisions of an ordinance imposing a license tax on such occupation, so as to render either the agent or his principal liable for the tax. Village of Scribner v. Mohr, 132 N. W. 734, 735, 90 Neb. 21, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1287.

Advertise

To solicit is defined as "to importune, entreat, implore, ask, attempt, try to obtain." The word "solicit," in Kirby's Dig. § 5133, making it unlawful for any person engaged in the sale of liquor, where the same may be lawful to solicit orders for liquors in places where the sale is prohibited by law, does not include advertising, and an advertisement of liquors in a newspaper is not within the statute. Carter v. State, 98 S. W. 704, 81 Ark. 37.

Attempt distinguished

In determining whether certain conduct was punishable criminally at common law, it has been frequently said that "soliciting" is an act done which in itself is sufficient, when coupled with wrongful intent, to constitute a crime. The word has been used in the same connection with words like "incite," "endeavor," and "attempt," but the purpose has been to show that solicitation in itself embodied the elements of an independent crime, and not to discriminate it as an ineffectual attempt to commit another crime. The solicitation of a bribe does not constitute an "attempt" to accept or receive a bribe. State v. Bowles, 79 Pac. 726, 729, 70 Kan. 821, 69 L. R. A. 176.

Take distinguished

An act prohibiting any person or corporation from soliciting orders for the sale of intoxication liquors in any place in the state where the sale of such liquors is forbidden by law is not violated by a showing that orders have been taken in such a place. "Taking" and "soliciting" do not mean the same thing, and are not convertible terms. Sanderfur-Jullan Co. v. State, 77 S. W. 596, 72 Ark. 11.

Letter

Solicitation by letter, intended to be received and read by a post office employé in the post office building, and which was so received and read in such building, is embraced by the provision of Civil Service Act Jan. 16, 1883 (22 Stat. 403, 407, c. 27) § 12, that no person shall, in any room or building occupied in the discharge of official duties by any officer or employé of the United States mentioned in such act, "solicit, in any manner whatever," or receive, any contribution of money or any other thing of value for any political purpose whatever. United States v. Thayer, 28 Sup. Ct. 426, 427; 209 U. S. 39, 52 L. Ed. 673.

The solicitation by mail of orders for intoxicating liquor is personal solicitation within Pen. Code 1895, § 428, prohibiting the solicitation, personally or by agent, of orders for intoxicating liquor in a prohibition county, where the solicitor in person writes or mails the letter received by the prospective buyer. Rose v. State, 62 S. E. 117, 120, 4 Ga. App. 588.

Act May 14, 1886 (83 Ohio Laws, p. 157), as amended by Act March 28, 1906 (98 Ohio Laws, p. 99) and by Act March 12, 1909 (100 Ohio Laws, p. 92) § 4, provides that any person, firm, or officer of a corporation, who, after April 15, 1909, solicits orders for intoxicants in territory where their sale as a beverage is prohibited, shall be subject to a fine. Held that, in view of the definition of the word "solicit," as implying an application to another for obtaining something, the solicitation to constitute a violation of the act may be made by letter, as well as in person. Hayner v. State, 93 N. E. 900, 902, 83 Ohio St. 178.

Offense

To "solicit the commission of an offense" is the doing of an act and is a step in the direction of an offense. To solicit the commission of an offense which is a felony is a misdemeanor at common law, and it is immaterial that the offense which is solicited is made a felony by act of Parliament or by the common law. State v. Sullivan, 84 S. W. 105, 109, 110 Mo. App. 75 (citing State v. Hayes, 78 Mo. 316; State v. Avery, 7 Conn. 267, 18 Am. Dec. 105; Walsh v. People, 65 Ill. 58, 16 Am. Rep. 569; 1 Bish. Cr. Law, § 767; 1 Russ. Cr. Law, §§ 193, 194; distinguishing Hutchinson v. State, 36 Tex. 293).

SOLICITATION

See Personal Solicitation.

SOLICITING AGENT

"A 'soliciting agent' who takes orders subject to the approval of his principal is not ordinarily regarded as a vendor." State v. Bristow, 109 N. W. 199, 200, 131 Iowa, 664.

SOLICITOR

See Assistant Solicitor.

As managing agent, see Managing Agent. As officer of bank, see Officer (Of Corporation).

In England legal practitioners are divided into two classes, denominated "solicitors" or "attorneys," and "barristers," and their respective duties and functions are well defined. "Barristers" could not recover for professional services, but "attorneys or solicitors" have always been permitted to recover at law for their services. Spencer v. Busch, 98 N. Y. Supp. 690, 692, 50 Misc. Rep. 284.

While it provided in section 11 of the act of 1891 (Acts 1890-91, p. 937) that accusations in the criminal court of Atlanta shall be signed by the "solicitor general," yet, when that section is construed in connection with sections 9 and 10 (page 937), it appears that the term "solicitor general" was loosely applied to the solicitor of that court, and it was intended that accusations should be signed by him, and not by "the solicitor general of the superior court." Mitchell v. State, 54 S. E. 931, 126 Ga. 84.

SOLID

SOLID BLOCK

The provision in the Tariff Act for statutory produced from a "solid block or mass of marble or from metal," is not limited to statuary made from single blocks, and the words "solid block" do not refer to "metal." United States v. Perry, 133 Fed. 841; United States v. Tiffany & Co., 160 Fed. 408, 411, 87 C. C. A. 360.

SOLID ROCK

A provision of specifications in a contract for a railroad construction that "solid rock" shall include "all other material which in the judgment of the engineer cannot be moved without being blasted" is to be given a reasonable construction with reference to practical railroad construction, and solid rock may thereunder include material which can be moved without blasting, where such mode of moving it would not be practical. Fruin-Bambrick Const. Co. v. Ft. Smith & W. R. Co., 140 Fed. 465, 475.

SOLITARY CONFINEMENT

"Close confinement" and "solitary confinement" do not import the same kind of punishment. Although "solitary confinement" may involve "close confinement," a criminal could be kept in "close confinement" without being subject to "solitary confinement." "Confinement" and "close confinement" equally mean such custody, and only such custody, as will safely secure the production of the body of the prisoner on the day appointed for his execution. Rooney v. North Dakota, 25 Sup. Ct. 264, 266, 196 U. S. 319, 49 L. Ed. 494, 3 Ann. Cas. 76.

The peculiarities of the system of punishment by "solitary confinement" were the complete isolation of the prisoner from all human society and his confinement in a cell of considerable size so arranged that he had no direct intercourse or sight of any human being and no employment or instruction. Leach v. Whitbeck, 115 N. W. 253, 254, 151 Mich. 327 (quoting and adopting definition in Re Medley, 10 Sup. Ct. 384, 134 U. S. 160, 33 L. Ed. 835).

SOLUBLE GREASE

As alizarin assistant, see Alizarin Assistant.

SOLVENCY—SOLVENT

See Financially Solvent.

See, also, Insolvency—Insolvent.

One is "solvent" when able to pay his debts and liabilities. Young v. Young, 111 N. Y. Supp. 341, 343, 127 App. Div. 130; Lansing Boller & Engine Works v. Joseph T. Ryerson & Son, 128 Fed. 701, 705, 63 C. C. A. 253.

A representation of "solvency" is a declaration that the party has property sufficient to pay all his debts and one about to be incurred. Christian v. State, 69 S. E. 29, 30, 8 Ga. App. 371.

Where defendant C. falsely represented that a corporation was wholly solvent and would pay 100 cents on the dollar, "solvency" as so used meant ability to discharge its obligations as they fell due in the ordinary course of business. Simons v. Cissna, 100 Pac. 200, 202, 52 Wash. 115.

A man may be fully able to pay his debts if he will, and yet in the eye of the law he is insolvent, if his property is so situated that it cannot be reached by process of law and subjected without his consent, to the payment of his debts. To say that a debtor is solvent, when his entire estate is exempt to him from the payment of his debts and cannot be subjected by his creditors against his will, would be a solecism. "Solvency" involves, not only the ability of the debtor to pay, but the ability of the creditor to enforce payment by legal process. Pelham v. Chattahoochie Grocery Co., 47 South. 172, 175, 156 Ala. 500.

"Solvency" is generally understood to mean that a person is able to pay his debts as they mature. The term is used too, in a sense importing that one's property is adequate to satisfy his obligations when sold under execution. Only clear solvency in the latter sense will uphold a voluntary conveyance against pre-existing debts. An examination of the decided cases will demonstrate that rarely, or never, has a voluntary transfer of property by a debtor been upheld against his creditors, except when the circumstances of the debtor, at the date of the conveyance, clearly established that the transaction would not endanger, hinder, or delay the collection of his obligations, but that his remaining assets were unquestionably ample to meet them. Vandeventer v. Goss, 91 S. W. 958, 961, 116 Mo. App. 316.

Where a person, although indebted to others, has business or income and pays his debts, or has property out of which collection can be made, then he may fairly be regarded as a "solvent debtor," within Rev. St. 1898, § 1036, making debts due from solvent debtors subject to taxation. Kingsley v. City of Merrill, 99 N. W. 1044, 1046, 122 Wis. 185, 67 L. R. A. 200, 2 Ann. Cas. 748.

Ability to purchase distinguished

There is a marked distinction between the solvency of an individual and his ability to make a purchase. "Solvency" means his ability to discharge his legal obligations, while his "ability to purchase property" means, as the authorities say, that he is "ready" to do so, which, according to Webster, is "equipped or supplied with what is needed for some act or event." Collurn v. Seymour, 76 Pac. 1058, 1060, 32 Colo. 430, 2 Ann. Cas. 182.

SOME

"Some" means two or more. Hurn v. Olmstead, 105 N. Y. Supp. 1091, 1092, 55 Misc. Rep. 504.

"Some," as defined in the Century Dictionary, is "a certain indefinite or indeterminate quantity or part of; more or less; often so used as to denote a small quantity or a deficiency." The definition given in Webster's International Dictionary is: "Consisting of a greater or less portion or sum; composed of a quantity or number which is not stated; used to express an indefinite quantity or number; not much; a little." "Some time" is equally as indefinite as a "considerable time," and certainly is not a longer time. So a special finding that a defect in an appliance, claimed to be the cause of an injury to an employé, had existed for "some time previous to accident" is too indefinite to warrant a recovery. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Dorr, 85 Pac. 533, 535, 73 Kan. 486 (citing Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Spear, 6 N. W. 202, 44 Mich. 169, 38 Am. Rep. 242; St. Louis Paper Box Co. v. J. C. Hubinger Bros. Co., 100 Fed. 595, 40 C. C. A. 577; Railroad Co. v. Swarts, 48 Pac. 953, 58 Kan. 235)

SOME EVIDENCE

The phrase "some evidence," as used in the rule that a violation of the statute prohibiting the employment in factories of boys under 14 years of age is "some evidence" of negligence in an action for an injury to a servant, may mean indefinite or indeterminate, as opposed to definite or determinate. In other words, the violation is not determinate proof of negligence. Lee v. Sterling Silk Mfg. Co., 101 N. Y. Supp. 78, 80, 115 App. Div. 589.

Every single piece of evidence is "some evidence." Thus the violation of a statute prohibiting the employment of a child of the age of plaintiff, in an action for injuries, is "some evidence" that it was wrong and negligent to employ such child. Lee v. Sterling Silk Mfg. Co., 93 N. Y. Supp. 560, 562, 47 Misc. Rep. 182.

"Some evidence," as used in the rule that, in the absence of some evidence as to the fact, a judicial trial does not substitute an unfounded guess or conjecture for the legal proof which the law requires, means evidence having a logical and reasonable tendency to prove the fact. Theobald v. Shepard, 71 Atl. 26, 28, 75 N. H. 52.

SOME NEWSPAPER

The words "some newspaper," as used in a law requiring the county treasurer to give notice of the sale for taxes by publication thereof in "some newspaper" in the county, must be given a wider latitude than the words "official newspaper," as used in a prior law, and hence, in selecting such newspaper, the treasurer is not bound to select the particular newspaper with which the county commissioners may have a contract to do the county printing. Allen v. Board of Com'rs of Cleveland County, 73 Pac. 286, 288, 12 Okl. 603.

SOME ONE

Where, on a trial of several persons for rape, the evidence showed three series of acts at different places, an instruction that, to hold two or more guilty, the evidence must establish that "some one" of them performed an act under circumstances constituting rape, and that such others as were held guilty assisted in committing such particular act, was not erroneous as authorizing a conviction, though the jury might not agree as to the defendant who was the principal, and who aided and abetted, since the words "some one" were not equivalent to "either" or "any one," but meant a particular person. Vogel v. State, 119 N. W. 190, 198, 138 Wis. 315.

SOME OTHER

The term "some other occupation," in a fraternal benefit association certificate, providing for payment to a member becoming disabled from following his usual or "some other occupation" by reason of accident or disease, does not mean any other occupation, and so, where a fraternal association provided that a member, who was unable to perform the business which he had always followed because of disability arising after admission to endowment membership, should be deemed entitled to disability benefits, a member who was a farmer and operated a saw-mill, who had become permanently disabled by an accident so as to be unable to follow his usual occupation, was entitled to the benefit specified. Beach v. Supreme Tent K. of M., 69 N. E. 281, 282, 177 N. Y. 100.

SON

The word "sons" is not a technical, legal term, to which a fixed and determined meaning must be given, regardless of the sense in which it was employed, but is flexible and subject to construction, to give effect to the intention of the testator. Connor v. Gardner, 82 N. E. 640, 644, 230 Ill. 258, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 73.

An adopted son is a "son," within Transfer Tax Law N. Y. (Laws 1896, p. 869, c. 908) § 221, as amended by Laws 1905, p. 829, c. 368, which provides that, when property of the value of less than $10,000 be transferred by any such transfer to or for the use of any wife or widow of a "son," such transfer of property shall not be taxable. In re Duryea's Estate, 112 N. Y. Supp. 611, 612, 128 App. Div. 205.

Testator in the first clause of his will bequeathed to his wife the interest on a mortgage during her life, and provided that at her death the principal sum of the mortgage should be equally divided between his "sons and their heirs share and share alike." In the second clause of the will he gave to his sons by name "or their heirs" the residue of the estate in equal shares. Held that, since under the Statute of Wills (2 Rev. St. [1st Ed.] pt. 2, c. 6, tit. 1) § 52, providing that, where property shall be bequeathed to a child of the testator, the legatee shall die during testator's lifetime, leaving a child, the property bequeathed shall vest in the surviving child, the children of testator's sons, who died in his lifetime, would share in the residue, the same rule should apply to the bequest in the first clause; the word "sons," as used therein, not meaning the sons who would survive the testator, but the sons who were named in the second clause of the will, and the children of sons who died in the lifetime of the testator were entitled to a share in the bequest. In re Smith's Estate, 97 N. Y. Supp. 321, 322, 110 App. Div. 421.

Child as including, see Child—Children (In Statutes).

SON ASSAULT

By a plea of "son assault demesne," the defendant justifies an assault and battery by asserting that plaintiff committed an assault on him and that he merely defended himself. Smith v. Wickard, 85 N. E. 1030, 1031, 42 Ind. App. 508.

A plea of "son assault demesne," which is in the nature of a confession of the assault charged, and an avoidance thereof, by showing that the plaintiff first assaulted the defendant, and that the injuries grew out of his assault, must, even under the Code, give "color," which, as a term of pleading, signifies an apparent or prima facie right in the plaintiff; the Code, while having abolished forms, not having changed the substance of various pleas. Shirley v. Benick, 151 S. W. 357, 359, 151 Ky. 25.

SOON

See As Soon As Able; As Soon As Possible.

SOONER

A "sooner" in the parlance of Oklahoma is one who to the injury of other intending settlers enters on and claims land as his homestead before such entry and claim are effective to initiate a valid homestead under the acts of Congress. Howe v. Parker, 190 Fed. 738, 740, 111 C. C. A. 466.

SORREL

Both of the terms "sorrel" and "bay," as applied to the description of the color of horses, appear, according to the lexicographers, to have reference to "reddish brown." Stickney v. Dunaway & Lambert, 53 South. 770, 771, 169 Ala. 464.

SORT

Plaintiff undertook to drive and deliver certain logs and clean and separate them from logs of other parties, and, by a second contract, agreed to float, drive, and sort in separate booms other logs bearing given marks. Held, that to "sort" meant to separate the logs, and the causes of action arising on the contracts were practically identical as to what was to be done under each. McGuire v. J. Neils Lumber Co., 107 N. W. 130, 131, 97 Minn. 293.

SOUND

See Finish Sound.

See, also, Unsound.

In an action for the breach of a contract for the delivery of "good merchantable corn," an instruction using the phrase "sound merchantable corn" is not erroneous, for the words "sound" and "good" mean substantially the same. Stahr v. Hickman Grain Co., 116 S. W. 784, 786, 132 Ky. 496.

Physical condition

A "sound" condition physically signifies an absence of bodily infirmity, and means the same as sound health, which does not mean perfect health, and a mere temporary indisposition or ailment will not ordinarily be regarded as rendering the health unsound. French v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 115 N. W. 869, 875, 135 Wis. 259, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1011.

"Sound," active, and healthy are comparative terms. Green v. Houston Electric Co., 89 S. W. 442, 445, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 260.

SOUND AND DISPOSING MIND AND MEMORY

See Sound Mind and Memory.

SOUND DISCRETION

The discretion of the court, as applied to its right to determine the imposition of a burden, such as costs on a party, which is said to rest in the sound discretion of the court, was introduced from civil law courts. While "sound discretion" is an excellent phrase in the abstract, the exercise of it over men's property, liberty, or life is sometimes called a tyrannical and not a judicial power; discretion is admitted to be dangerous, but sound discretion is claimed to be a different thing. Sound discretion is discretion as settled by rules; otherwise it is sound only when the court decides as the party seeking the decision wants; and hence in practice it will come to mean a notion, whim, or caprice of the judge who exercises it. The Margaret v. The Connestoga, 2 Wall. Jr. 116, 16 Fed. Cas. 710, 718.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2327, relating to the appointment of a committee of the person and property of a lunatic, etc., and making it the duty of the court to which a petition for such appointment has been presented to either issue a commission or direct the questions of fact to be tried before a jury, if it presumptively appears to the satisfaction of the court, from the petition and the proofs accompanying it, that the case is one of a person incompetent to manage his affairs, and that a committee ought in the exercise of a sound discretion to be appointed, not every case of mental weakness or impaired intellectual power will justify the court in exercising the power; for, even where incompetency exists, the situation and surroundings of the incompetent may be such that there is no necessity for the appointment of a committee, and the phrase "to the sound discretion of the court" indicates the necessity for especial care in a proceeding calculated to deprive a citizen, not only of the possession of his property, but also of his personal liberty. In re Burke, 110 N. Y. Supp. 1004, 1006, 125 App. Div. 889.

SOUND HEALTH

"Sound health" means a state of health free from any disease or ailment that affects the general soundness and healthfulness of the system seriously, not a mere temporary indisposition, which does not tend to weaken or undermine the constitution of the assured. Sound health means freedom from serious disease, or grave, important, weighty trouble. Jeffrey v. United Order of Golden Cross, 53 Atl. 1102, 1105, 97 Me. 176 (citing Brown v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 32 N. W. 610, 65 Mich. 306, 8 Am. St. Rep. 894); Atlantic & B. R. Co. v. Douglas, 46 S. E. 867, 868, 119 Ga. 658.

The term "sound health," as used in a life insurance policy, providing that no obligation is assumed unless assured is in sound health, means an absence of any disease that has a direct tendency to shorten life. Murphy v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 118 N. W. 355, 356, 106 Minn. 112.

A sound condition physically signifies an absence of bodily infirmity, and means the same as "sound health," which does not mean perfect health, and a mere temporary indisposition or ailment will not ordinarily be regarded as rendering the health unsound. French v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 115 N. W. 869, 875, 135 Wis. 259, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1011.

A stipulation in a contract of fraternal insurance with a married woman that the policy should not take effect unless delivered to her "while in sound health" is not violated by reason of the applicant being pregnant at the time of delivery of the policy. Rasicot v. Royal Neighbors of America, 108 Pac. 1048, 1053, 18 Idaho, 85, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 433, 138 Am. St. Rep. 180.

SOUND MIND AND MEMORY

See, also, Unsound Mind.

"Sound mind and memory" is equivalent to sanity, and one who is rational and acting rationally is, in the common understanding, sane and sound of mind. In re Arrow-smith's Estate, 69 N. E. 77, 79, 206 Ill. 352 (citing Yoe v. McCord, 74 Ill. 33; Campbell v. Campbell, 22 N. E. 620, 130 Ill. 466, 6 L. R. A. 167).

Every mind in the legal sense is sound that can reason and will intelligently in the particular transaction being considered, and every mind is unsound or insane that cannot so reason and will. In re American Board of Com'rs for Foreign Missions, 66 Atl. 215, 221, 102 Me. 72.

While the term "sound mind" is somewhat indefinite, yet, where the court had expressly instructed the jury as to what constituted unsoundness of mind, the finding that decedent was not of sound mind at the time he executed the will in dispute was sufficient to warrant the court in refusing to probate the will. In re Selleck's Will, 101 N. W. 453, 125 Iowa, 678.

As capacity to understand nature of act

A person is of "sound mind" in making a will if, at the time of its execution, he has such mental capacity as to enable him to know the natural objects of his bounty, his obligations to them, the character and value of his estate, and to dispose of it according to a fixed purpose of his own. Watson, Ex'r, v. Watson, 121 S. W. 626, 629, 137 Ky. 25 (quoting and adopting definition in Woodford v. Buckner, 63 S. W. 617, 111 Ky. 241).

"Sound mind and memory" requisite to the valid execution of a will has been defined as "knowing and comprehending the transaction, or, in popular phrase, that the testator should, at the time of executing the will, know and understand what he was about." Todd v. Todd, 77 N. E. 680-682, 221 Ill. 410 (quoting and adopting definition in Redf. Wills, 123).

A "sound mind," used in reference to testamentary capacity, means such a mind as enables a person executing a will to be capable of knowing his property and understanding the reasonable claims of the persons who may have the reasonable and natural claims on his bounty. Archambault v. Blanchard, 95 S. W. 834, 846, 198 Mo. 384.

An instruction that if testator has sufficient mentality to recognize those who are the objects of his bounty, or should be, and to recollect the property that he is to bestow, and that he is making his will, the courts have no right to disturb it, and that testators have testamentary capacity if they can recognize to whom their bounty should go, or the fact of to whom they wish it to go, and that they have property of which they wish to dispose, was not error when construed with other instructions properly defining "sound mind" as one capable of rationally thinking, reasoning, acting, and determining for himself, or a person of "sound and disposing mind" as one who is in possession of natural mental faculties of mind capable of rationally thinking and acting for himself. In re Higgins' Estate, 104 Pac. 6, 10, 156 Cal. 257.

The words "sound and disposing mind and memory" mean a mind sufficient to enable a testatrix to understand what business she was engaged in while she was making and executing a will, also to enable her to know who were the natural objects of her bounty, and her relation to them, and what property she had and the disposition she desired to make of it. Seibert v. Hatcher, 102 S. W. 962, 905, 205 Mo. 83.

As affected by slight weakness of mind

The requirements of a "sound and disposing mind" do not imply that the powers of the mind may not have been weakened or impaired by old age or bodily disease. In re American Board of Com'rs for Foreign Missions, 66 Atl. 215, 221, 102 Me. 72.

"Intellectual feebleness from age or other cause or delusions about matters not connected with property or its disposition may exist, and notwithstanding the person may have a 'sound and disposing mind and memory,' if the testator possesses so much mind and memory as enables him to transact common and simple kinds of business with that intelligence which belongs to the weakest class of sound minds, and can recall the general nature, condition, and extent of his property, and his relation to those to whom he gives, and also to those from whom he excludes his bounty, it is sufficient." In re Randall, 59 Atl. 552, 553, 99 Me. 396 (citing Hall v. Perry, 33 Atl. 160, 87 Me. 569, 47 Am. St. Rep. 352).

SOUND REASON

The use of the language "sound reason," "honest belief," in connection with instructions as to self-defense, can only be understood to mean that defendant must actually, in good faith, have thought that he was in danger of losing his life or suffering great bodily harm, and that he had reason and cause for such belief. Robinson v. Territory, 85 Pac. 451, 456, 16 Okl. 241.

SOUND VALUE

Appraisers of the loss on insured property were appointed, by the terms of the agreement for submission, to estimate "the sound value and loss" upon the property damaged and destroyed. In their award they stated that they had carefully examined the premises and remains of the property "in accordance with the foregoing appointment, and have determined the loss and damage" to be an amount specified. Held, that the award was not in accordance with the submission, as the "sound value" is "the cash value, making an allowance for depreciation due to use, etc., at and immediately preceding the time of the fire." Mason v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia, 122 N. W. 423, 427, 23 S. D. 431.

SOUNDING

The term "soundings," as used in the plan for the laying of a sewer in a street upon which bids were called for, means tests that are made at intervals in the street by driving a bar into the earth in order to discover the character of the soil in the street. Kelly v. New York, 84 N. Y. Supp. 349, 350, 87 App. Div. 299.

Instruments used by timber men for the purpose of detecting hidden defects in the roof of a mine are known as "sounding rods." Himrod Coal Co. v. Clark, 64 N. E. 282, 284, 197 Ill. 514.

SOUNDING IN DAMAGES

Trespass is an action "sounding in damages," and the compensation for damage recoverable therein is, as the words imply, to be measured by the plaintiff's damage or loss arising from the defendant's trespass or wrongful act. Trustees of Dartmouth College v. International Paper Co., 132 Fed. 92, 93.

In an action for rent, damages for failure to repair under a contract may be set off against the rent, and is not objectionable as sounding in damages merely, as under Code 1907, § 5859, a debt or demand not "sounding in damages merely" is one which, when the facts upon which it is based are established, the law is capable of measuring by a pecuniary standard. Donnelly v. House, 49 South. 324, 325, 160 Ala. 325.

A claim by a chattel mortgagor against the mortgagee for damage to property, by use or waste, taken in detinue against the mortgagor and improperly delivered to the mortgagee by the sheriff, could be set off in the detinue action, being a demand not sounding in damages merely, within Code 1907, § 5858, providing that a "demand not sounding in damages" merely, subsisting between parties at the commencement of the suit, whether arising ex contractu or ex delicto, may be set off by defendant. Torbert v. McFarland, 55 South. 311, 313, 172 Ala. 117.

SOUNDING IN TORT

A claim against the United States for compensation for unlawful and unnecessary destruction of property during the war under the order of the general commanding is one "sounding in tort" within the meaning of Act March 3, 1887, c. 359, 24 Stat. 505, excluding cases of that character from the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims. Juragua

Iron Co. v. United States, 29 Sup. Ct. 385, 389, 212 U. S. 297, 53 L. Ed. 520.

A claim for the value of the use by the military authorities of a Spanish merchant vessel captured in the harbor of Santiago is not one "sounding in tort." Herrera v. United States, 32 Sup. Ct. 179, 181, 222 U. S. 558, 56 L. Ed. 316.

SOUNDNESS

Of mind and memory, see Sound Mind and Memory.

A warranty of "soundness" in a horse is one which avers that at the time of the sale the horse has no disease which actually diminishes his natural value, so as to make him less capable of work. Andrews v. Peck, 78 Atl. 445, 446, 83 Conn. 666, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 181, 21 Ann. Cas. 1000.

SOURCE

See New and Additional Sources.

Any other source, see Any Other.

Other sources, see Other.

The term "source of stream" is defined by the New Revised Encyclopedic Dictionary as "the spring or fountain head from which its supply of water proceeds; any collection of water within or upon the surface of the earth from which a stream originates." Sierra County v. Nevada County, 99 Pac. 371, 376, 155 Cal. 1.

Laws 1905, p. 2023, c. 723, § 2, requires the submission of maps and profiles and approval of the State Water Commission before taking or condemning lands for new or additional sources of water supply. Held, that the word "source" may refer to a lake, etc., as a source of supply, or to any well-defined watershed from which percolating water might be taken, and the statute did not exclude a whole territory in which a city has incidentally procured some part of its supply, the limitation on "new and additional sources" meaning sources which had not been appropriated at the time of the statute. Queens County Water Co. v. O'Brien, 115 N. Y. Supp. 495, 498, 131 App. Div. 91.

SOUTH

The term "southward" must be considered with reference to its subject-matter, and, as used in a conveyance describing land, may include land lying in a southwesterly direction, where that seems to be the intention. Higgins v. Round Bottom Coal & Coke Co., 59 S. E. 1064, 1068, 63 W. Va. 218.

SOUTHEAST

SOUTHEAST QUARTER

See S. E. 4; S. E. Qr. 24.

SOUTHWEST

Where a deed called for a "southwest course," without stating the degrees, it meant a course equally diverging from south and west or south, 45 degrees west. Holden v. Alexander, 62 S. E. 1108, 1112, 82 S. C. 441.

"Southwest part of my farm," as used in a lease granting a quarry right from a parcel of land "beginning eighty rods easterly of the southwest part of my farm and extending northerly to the north line of land owned by me, eighty rods east of the lake shore," did not describe or fix any point as being intended to lie within the description, and was therefore void for uncertainty. Goodsell v. Rutland-Canadian R. Co., 56 Atl. 7, 75 Vt. 375.

SOUTHWEST QUARTER

The phrase "the southwest quarter" of a named section, used in a tax deed describing the lands conveyed, means the tract indicated on the official plat most nearly responding to that call, notwithstanding it does not contain 160 acres, nor one-fourth of the area of the entire section. Gunn v. Brower, 105 Pac. 702, 703, 81 Kan. 242.

A description "southwesterly  $\frac{1}{4}$  lot" means one-fourth of the lot toward or from the southwest, and it cannot be construed to mean the southerly one-fourth in area or quantity of the lot which was in the form of a rectangular parallelogram extending lengthwise northeast and southwest. While it cannot be said with certainty what part of the lot is included in the description, the most reasonable construction is that it describes a tract of land bounded by lines parallel with the side and end lines of the lot intersecting at the center thereof, the southwesterly corner of which is the southwesterly corner of the lot; that is, the most westerly corner. The term "southwesterly  $\frac{1}{4}$ " of the lot implies a correlative, a southeasterly one-fourth of the lot. Ames v. Dever, 110 N. W. 370, 100 Minn. 125.

SOVEREIGN

The commonwealth, in leasing its lands, is not acting in its political character as "sovereign," but merely as the owner of property, occupying the position of a private citizen leasing his property, and the lease must be construed as if made between individuals. Boston Molasses Co. v. Commonwealth, 79 N. E. 827, 828, 193 Mass. 387.

SOVEREIGNTY

The very meaning of "sovereignty" is that the decree of the sovereign makes law. American Banana Co. v. United Fruit Co., 29 Sup. Ct. 511, 513, 213 U. S. 347, 53 L. Ed. 826, 16 Ann. Cas. 1047.

"Sovereignty of a state" embraces the power to execute its laws and the right to exercise supreme dominion and authority except as limited by the fundamental law. People ex rel. Attorney General v. Tool, 86 Pac. 224, 226, 35 Colo. 225, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 822, 117 Am. St. Rep. 198.

SOW

A "sow" is defined as the female of the hog or swine. Langford v. State, 89 S. W. 830, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 561 (citing Webst. Dict.).

SPANGLE

Articles composed of gelatin spangles, see Articles within Tariff Act.
As other article, see Other.

SPANGLED HAT CROWNS

Dutiable as articles composed of gelatin spangles, see Articles within Tariff Act.

SPARK

"Sparking" is but the short jump of electricity from one object to another, or a slight break in a simple current. Sexton v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 149 S. W. 21, 26, 245 Mo. 254.

SPARKING PLUG

A "sparking plug" is a device for electricity igniting the gas in explosive engines. Folger & Moriarty v. Dow Portable Electric Co., 128 Fed. 45.

SPEAK

An allegation in an indictment that defendant did falsely and maliciously impute a want of chastity to one B. by then and there, in the presence of A. P., "falsely and maliciously saying of and concerning her," etc., is sufficient under Rev. St. 1892, § 2419, providing that whoever "speaks of and concerning any woman," etc., since the word "saying," used in connection with "in the presence of and in the hearing of" in the indictment, is equivalent to the word "speaking" in the statute. Stutts v. State, 42 South. 51, 52, 52 Fla. 110.

SPEAKING DEMURRER

"Generally a demurrer founded on matter collateral to the pleading against which it is directed is called a 'speaking demurrer,' and is held bad." Columbia Savings & Loan Ass'n v. Clause, 78 Pac. 708, 709, 13 Wyo. 166 (citing Ruddick v. Marshall, 23 Iowa, 243).

"A demurrer which sets up a ground dehors the record or a ground which, to be sustained, requires reference to facts not appearing upon the face of the pleading thus attacked is said to be a 'speaking demurrer,' and is never held good." Jeffries v. Fraternal Bankers' Reserve Society, 112 N. W. 786, 787, 788, 135 Iowa, 284, 14 Ann. Cas. 346.

A demurrer which sets up a fact or omission not appearing in the bill and thereupon demurs is a "speaking demurrer" and cannot be sustained. Teeter v. Veitch, 57 Atl. 160, 164, 66 N. J. Eq. 162.

A demurrer averring any fact not stated in the pleading which is attacked is commonly called a "speaking demurrer." Wood v. Kincaid, 57 S. E. 4, 144 N. C. 393.

Where averments of fact are introduced in a demurrer, and the facts thus averred are necessary to support it, it constitutes a "speaking demurrer" and is bad. Where a bill in equity was filed in the common pleas, and defendant filed a demurrer setting up prior adjudication in the court of quarter sessions, it is bad as a speaking demurrer, where there is no reference in the bill to the proceedings of the quarter sessions. Pew v. Minor, 65 Atl. 787, 216 Pa. 343.

A "speaking demurrer," viz., one that alleges affirmative matter which, taken with the allegations in the petition, shows that no cause of action is pleaded, does not exist in Missouri. Hubbard v. Slavens, 117 S. W. 1104, 1111, 218 Mo. 598; Waters v. Hubbard (Mo.) 117 S. W. 1112.

A demurrer to an amended answer and cross-bill in equity, which, instead of raising a question against the sufficiency of the pleadings, alleges new matter in pais, is a "speaking demurrer" and, as such, improper. Coffman v. Gates, 121 S. W. 1078, 1080, 142 Mo. App. 648.

SPEARMINT

The word "Spearmint," as applied to chewing gum, is a term descriptive of the flavor, open to every manufacturer who uses such flavor, and cannot be appropriated as a trade-mark. William Wrigley, Jr., & Co. v. Grove Co., 183 Fed. 99, 100, 105 C. O. A. 391; Id., 161 Fed. 885.

SPECIAL

See, also, General.

Peculiar synonymous

An instruction, in an action for damages for change of grade of a street, that the jury should assess plaintiff's damage at the excess of the market value immediately before the grading was commenced, over the market value thereof immediately after the grading was finished, less the value "of any special benefits * * * which are peculiar" to the property, is not erroneous for the use of the word "peculiar," which is simply synonymous with the word "special." Powell v. City of Columbia, 134 S. W. 76, 77, 154 Mo. App. 239.

SPECIAL ACCEPTANCE

See, also, General Acceptance.

SPECIAL ACT

See Special Law.

SPECIAL ADMINISTRATOR

As personal representative, see Personal Representative.

A "special administrator" is a representative of a decedent, appointed to care for and preserve his estate until an executor or general administrator is appointed. Jones v. Minnesota Transfer Ry. Co., 121 N. W. 606, 607, 108 Minn. 129.

SPECIAL AGENCY OR AGENT

A "special agent" is one who is authorized to do one or more specific acts in pursuance of particular instructions or within restrictions necessarily implied from the act to be done. Manhattan Life Ins. Co. v. First Nat. Bank of Denver, 80 Pac. 467, 471, 20 Colo. App. 529 (quoting and adopting Storey, Ag., § 17); Bowles v. Rice, 57 S. E. 575, 576, 107 Va. 51; Columbus Show Case Co. v. Brinson, 57 S. E. 871, 872, 128 Ga. 487 (citing Jesse French Piano & Organ Co. v. Cardwell, 40 S. E. 292, 114 Ga. 340, and citing and quoting from the opinion of Justice Strong in Butler v. Maples, 76 U. S. [9 Wall.] 773, 19 L. Ed. 822).

An agency is "special" when the agent is authorized to act in a single transaction only. Belcher v. Manchester Building & Loan Ass'n, 67 Atl. 399, 400, 74 N. J. Law, 833; Karns v. State Bank & Trust Co., 101 Pac. 564, 566, 31 Nev. 170 (quoting Great West. Min. Co. v. Woodmas of Alston Min. Co., 20 Pac. 771, 12 Colo. 46, 13 Am. St. Rep. 204).

An agency is "special" when both the end and the means are specific. Robinson v. Bank of Winslow, 85 N. E. 793, 794, 42 Ind. App. 350.

It is necessary to a valid service of process on an agent of a foreign corporation under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 311, providing for suits against foreign corporations in the county where it has an office or agency, etc., that the person served be an agent at the time of the service, and it was not sufficient to show that he has been a "special agent," for that term necessarily implies that the agency is for a special purpose, and the agency is terminated when that purpose is accomplished. C. Callahan Co. v. Wall Rice Mill. Co., 89 N. E. 418, 419, 44 Ind. App. 372.

"An agent for a particular act or transaction is called a 'special agent.'" Section 5415, Rev. Codes. A person dealing with a special agent is bound to ascertain the scope of the agent's authority, and, if he does not, he deals at his peril. Schaeffer v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co., 100 Pac. 225, 227, 33 Mont. 459 (citing Moore v. Skyles, 82 Pac. 799, 33 Mont. 135, 3 L. R. A. [N. S.] 136, 114 Am. St. Rep. 801).

One to whom a money order was given by another, with instructions to see if it was all right, and, if so, to get it cashed, was a "special agent" of the latter, within the meaning of Civ. Code, § 3072, defining a special agent as an agent for a particular act or transaction. Moore v. Skyles, 82

Pac. 799, 33 Mont. 135, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 136, 114 Am. St. Rep. 801.

One who contracted to serve a club as "steward," agreeing to personally conduct a restaurant at his own cost and without any liability on the part of the club, is a "special agent" of the club, so that the club could show the exact limit of his authority. Reis v. Drug & Chemical Club, 105 N. Y. Supp. 285, 286, 55 Misc. Rep. 276.

SPECIAL APPEARANCE

See, also, General Appearance.

"Special appearance" is one made for the purpose of urging jurisdictional objections. Merely because a defendant says he entered a "special appearance" does not make it such. That must be determined in part at least by the object he has in view. Everett v. Wilson, 83 Pac. 211, 212, 34 Colo. 476.

A "special appearance" is made when a party or his attorney seeks to obtain an order vacating some proceeding which, it is insisted, has been undertaken in an unauthorized manner; such appearance being thus limited to prevent conferring jurisdiction of the person. Multnomah Lumber & Box Co. v. Weston Basket & Barrel Co., 99 Pac. 1046, 1048, 54 Or. 22.

A party's appearance with a statement that he appeared "specially" is a "special appearance," though no objection to the jurisdiction was specified. Marr v. Cook, 111 N. W. 116, 117, 147 Mich. 425.

The appearance of an attorney for the sole purpose of moving to dismiss the action for irregularities in the proceedings is a "special appearance," and the right to dismiss may be insisted on. Woodard v. Tri-State Milling Co., 55 S. E. 70, 71, 142 N. C. 100.

An appearance which is general in fact cannot be made special by its designation as a "special appearance." Rogers v. Penobscot Min. Co., 132 N. W. 792, 795, 28 S. D. 72, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 1184.

Where an appearance is properly restricted, it will stand as made until some inconsistent action is taken, and it is not necessary to state the precise purpose of the appearance on the docket, but its mere designation as "special" confines it to dilatory matters, and precludes a presumption of anything further; and hence a failure to file a motion to dismiss in time, after a special appearance, does not make the appearance general. Wade v. Wade's Adm'r, 69 Atl. 826, 827, 81 Vt. 275.

In determining whether an appearance is special or general, the question of whether it is to deny the court's jurisdiction of the person controls, irrespective of any stipulation or statement that it was special, and irrespective of defendant's intention to make it so. Sit You Gune v. Hurd, 120 Pac. 1135, 61 Or. 182.

An appearance for any other purpose than questioning jurisdiction for want of process, defect of process, defective service thereof, or because the action was commenced in the wrong county, etc., is general, and not special, though accompanied by the claim that the appearance is special; and hence an appearance to move to vacate a cause, or to dismiss or discontinue it, because plaintiffs' pleading does not state a cause of action, which is equivalent or analogous to a demurrer, amounts to a general appearance. Norfolk & O. V. Ry. Co. v. Consolidated Turnpike Co., 68 S. E. 346, 348, 111 Va. 131, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 239.

Whether an appearance is general or special is governed by the object and purpose of the appearance; and any action upon the part of the defendant, except to object to the jurisdiction, which recognizes the case as in court, will amount to a "general appearance." Dailey v. Foster, 128 Pac. 71, 72, 17 N. M. 377.

A "special appearance" for the purpose of objecting to the jurisdiction is not an "appearance" within Municipal Court Act (Laws 1902, p. 1578, c. 580, § 311), providing that where personal service of summons has not been made nor personal service of notice of entry of the judgment had, and the defendant has not appeared, he may appeal at any time within 20 days after personal service of the entry of the judgment. Dixon v. Carrucci, 97 N. Y. Supp. 380, 382, 49 Misc. Rep. 222.

The "special appearance" of a foreign corporation defendant in a state court for the single purpose of insisting that no valid service has been made upon it is not a submission to the claimed jurisdiction. Lathrop-Shea & Henwood Co. v. Interior Const. & Imp. Co., 150 Fed. 666, 670.

The filing of a petition for removal of a cause to the proper Circuit Court of the United States in a state court, where the action is pending, amounts to a "special appearance" by defendant in the state court only, and does not therefore prevent it, after removal, from moving in the federal court to dismiss the action for want of jurisdiction of defendant's person, either in the state or federal court. International Text-Book Co. v. Heartt, 136 Fed. 129, 131, 69 C. C. A. 127 (citing Goldney v. Morning News, 15 Sup. Ct. 559, 156 U. S. 518, 89 L. Ed. 517; Wabash Western R. Co. v.

An administrator with will annexed, who appeared merely to dismiss the petition to revoke the probate of the will for failure to issue the required citation, did not "appear generally," and his appearance was a "special appearance," though he did not designate such appearance as special. In re Hite's Estate, 101 Pac. 8, 9, 155 Cal. 390.

SPECIAL ASSESSMENT

See, also, Special Tax.

"Special assessments" are a peculiar species of taxation standing apart from the general burdens imposed for state purposes and governed by principles that do not apply universally. They are made upon the assumption that a portion of the community is to be specially and peculiarly benefited in the enhancement of the property peculiarly situated as regards a contemplated expenditure of public funds, and in addition to the general levy they demand that special contributions in consideration of the special benefit shall be made by the persons receiving it. Billings Sugar Co. v. Fish, 106 Pac. 565, 572, 40 Mont. 256, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 973, 20 Ann. Cas. 264; Farnham v. City of Lincoln, 106 N. W. 666, 668, 75 Neb. 502 (quoting and adopting definition in Cooley, Tax'n [1st Ed.] p. 416, and [3d Ed.] vol. 2, p. 1153; Winona & St. P. R. Co. v. City of Watertown, 44 N. W. 1072, 1 S. D. 46.

A "special assessment" within Const. art. 9, § 9, authorizing the Legislature to vest municipalities with power to make local improvements by special assessment, etc., is an assessment to pay for improvements for public purposes on real property which is, by reason of the locality of the improvement, specially benefited beyond the benefits by the improvement to real property generally throughout the municipality, proportioned by such benefits. Loeffler v. City of Chicago, 92 N. E. 586, 589, 246 Ill. 43, 20 Ann. Cas. 335.

"A 'special or local assessment' is a burden imposed by law upon real property for a public improvement; the extent of the burden being determined by the special benefits which inure to the assessed property by reason of the improvement." A tax in a city on all property taxable by the state to construct public sewers which will benefit the whole city, and is called a special public sewer tax, is a general tax and not a "special assessment." Union Trust Co. v. Pagenstecher, 119 S. W. 1103, 1104, 221 Mo. 121.

A "special assessment" is a "tax" in the sense that it is an enforced contribution from the property owner for the public benefit, but not in the sense that it is a burden, as he receives an equivalent in the shape of the enhanced value of his property, and only property benefited by the improvement may be assessed, the district being determined legislatively, but the amount of the tax is determined judicially, and according to the benefits. Although possessing many points of similarity, special assessments and taxes are inherently different, and the same rule of construction where the words are used in statutes will not be indiscriminately applied. State ex rel. Moore v. Furstenau, 129 N. W. 81, 82, 83, 20 N. D. 540.

Ordinary "special assessments" means the taxation of abutting property for such improvements as sidewalks, paving, etc. A special levy of two mills on the dollar on all the property within the city for the purpose of providing a system of waterworks when some of the property assessed may be one or more miles from a water main or hydrant is not a special assessment, and calling it such does not make it so. City of Ottumwa, Iowa, v. City Water Supply Co., 19 Fed. 315, 329, 56 C. C. A. 219, 59 L. R. A. 604.

Where a town voted to exempt certain business organizations from taxation for 10 years, such vote precluded a village within the town from levying general taxes on such exempt property, but did not preclude the levy of special assessments thereon for municipal improvements; "general taxes" being based on the fact that the government must have revenue, and on the principle that all citizens and property within its jurisdiction should contribute, without special benefit, while "special assessments" are based on the theory of a special benefit to the property assessed, by means of a local improvement. Caverly-Gould Co. v. Village of Springfield, 76 Atl. 39, 42, 83 Vt. 396.

As incumbrance

See Incumber—Incumbrance.

As tax

See Tax—Taxation.

SPECIAL ASSUMPSIT

At common law the action of assumpsit was divided into "special assumpsit," or an action brought on an express promise, and "general assumpsit" or an action brought on an implied contract. Board of Highway Com'rs v. City of Bloomington, 97 N. E. 280, 284, 253 Ill. 164, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 471.

SPECIAL AUTHORITY

In Acts Ind. 1899, p. 150, c. 105, § 6, relating to township taxation, and providing that no debt of township not embraced in the annual estimates shall be created without "special authority," the term "special authority" refers to authority given by the board at a special meeting of the board and upon call of the trustee to determine whether an emergency exists for the expenditure of any sums not included in existing estimates and levied as fixed at the annual meeting. Lincoln School Tp. v. American School Furniture Co., 68 N. E. 301, 302, 31 Ind. App. 405.

SPECIAL BAIL

An undertaking by defendant and his sureties by which, in consideration of the release of property attached, they become responsible to the plaintiff for the amount which may be recoverable, in form as well as in nature, is "special bail," in that it is given by responsible, and not merely nominal, parties, as in case of common bail, with which it is contrasted. Preston v. McNell Lumber Co., 143 Fed. 555, 557.

SPECIAL BENEFITS

Construction of railroad

The term "special benefits," as used in condemnation of railroad right of way, has the same meaning and is governed by the same principles as when employed in highway, drainage, or ordinary municipal improvement proceedings, only in so far as private property is taken for public use by such proceedings, and in other cases the identity of meaning and principles is to be determined with reference to distinctions with respect to the exaction of payment as a condition precedent to use of the land by a railroad, to the difference in accessibility to the improvement, and to the judicial nature of proceedings to condemn as distinguished from the administrative character of local improvement assessments. Such benefits must be pro tanto a fair equivalent for land parted with and damages inflicted. To that end they must be special, not common; direct, not consequential; substantial, not speculative; proximate, not remote; actual, and not constructive. In re Mantorville Ry. & Transfer Co., 112 N. W. 1033, 1035, 101 Minn. 488, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 277, 118 Am. St. Rep. 647.

Municipal improvements

A "special benefit" within the statute providing for assessments for the construction of a sewer in proportion to special benefits is a benefit derived from the construction of a sewer so situated and constructed that connection can be had with the property as opportunity presents for individual use. Power v. City of Helena, 116 Pac. 415, 416, 43 Mont. 336, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 39.

A lot derives "special benefit" from the construction of a sewer, within the meaning of a statute and ordinance providing that assessments shall be made in proportion to special benefits, when the sewer is so situated and constructed that connection can be had therewith, as the opportunity presented for individual use determines the question of special benefit. Bennett v. City of Emmetsburg, 115 N. W. 582, 589, 138 Iowa, 67.

An owner whose property is damaged is entitled to just damages, irrespective of damages awarded to, or "special benefits" assessed against, another owner; such special benefits being the peculiar benefits that accrue to any owner by a public improvement, apart from those common to the general public, and having no relation to the damages awarded. Appeal of Newton, 79 Atl. 742, 746, 84 Conn. 234.

"Special benefits" are peculiar benefits received from local improvements above the ordinary benefits which the community receives. Durkee v. City of Barre, 71 Atl. 819, 824, 81 Vt. 530.

Special assessments upon abutting landowners for public improvements are based upon "special benefits," which are those that the landowner receives from the improvements in excess of the general public. Corliss v. Village of Richford, 81 Atl. 234, 85 Vt. 85.

"The term 'special benefits' implies benefits such as are conferred specially upon private property by public improvement, as distinguished from such benefits as the public generally is entitled to receive therefrom. * * * If the improvement should result in an increase in the value to adjacent property, which increase is enjoyed by other adjacent property owners, as to the property of each exclusively, the benefit is special, and it is none the less so because several adjacent lot owners derive, in like manner, special benefits, each to his own individual property." Spokane Traction Co. v. Granath, 85 Pac. 261, 264, 42 Wash. 506 (quoting and adopting definition in Kirkendall v. City of Omaha, 57 N. W. 752, 39 Neb. 1).

"Special benefits," as used in the law of eminent domain, are such as affect the actual use and enjoyment of property and thereby render it more valuable in the market. All conveniences and benefits are not proper subjects for the jury to consider in awarding damages to a landowner seeking damages for injury to his land, but the benefits which may be taken into consideration to reduce the damages are such as are direct and special as to the claimant and as to his land, and are not such as are received in common by the whole community. With reference to cause and effect, "special benefits" are such as are direct, certain, and proximate, and not such as are indirect, contingent, or remote. While it is true that increased value of land is often taken into consideration, this is done only where such increased value arises from such direct, special, and proximate cause. The increased value must be founded on something which affects the land itself, directly and proximately, and something which increases the actual or usable value of the land, as well as its market or salable value, and not such as increases merely the market or salable value alone. Increased value, founded upon merely increased facilities for travel and transportation by the public in general, is not the kind of increased value which may be taken into consideration, since that kind of increased value is too indirect and too remote from the original cause, and besides it is common to the whole community, to a greater or less extent. Williamson v.

Read, 56 S. E. 174, 175, 106 Va. 453 (citing Heninger v. Peery, 47 S. E. 1013, 102 Va. 896).

"Whatever gives an additional value to the particular parcel of land is a 'special,' and not a 'general,' benefit; and it may be a 'special benefit' although not an immediate one." "These benefits are estimated like damages," and in doing so the general rule in estimating value is that "everything which gives the land intrinsic value is to be taken into consideration." Under the statute providing for the assessment of lands benefited by the construction of public drains under such act, only such lands are to be included in the assessment district as are "specially benefited" in some manner different and in addition to the benefit conferred in common with all lands in the community or locality affected; and where, owing to its location, the construction of a drain will not drain land in question any more or differently than is done by an existing swale or swamp, and will not render the land more accessible or affect its immediate surroundings, such land is not "benefited," though the drain may carry off the water; the lower land being subject to the natural servitude to receive the waters flowing from the land in question. Zinser v. Board of Sup'rs of Buena Vista County, 114 N. W. 51, 55, 137 Iowa, 660 (quoting and adopting definition in Lipes v. Hand, 1 N. E. 871, 4 N. E. 160, 104 Ind. 503; Suth. Dam. §§ 441, 452).

SPECIAL CASE

As used in Const. § 218, making it unlawful for any carrier to charge greater compensation in the aggregate for transportation under similar circumstances and conditions for a shorter than for a longer distance, but providing that such a common carrier may, in special cases, be authorized by the railroad commission to charge less for longer than for shorter distances, a "special case" might embrace a case involving the rate for transportation of all freight of a particular class to a certain point from some other point, but the section was not intended to restrict it simply to permission to a carrier to make a single shipment and charge less for the long than for the short haul. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 71 S. W. 910, 915, 114 Ky. 787 (concurring opinion).

SPECIAL CIRCUMSTANCES

Plaintiff, in an action for injury received from the sudden starting of defendants' elevator while he was alighting therefrom, should be allowed an order for examination before trial of defendants' employé, the operator of the elevator, unless defendants waive the giving by plaintiff of a bill of particulars of the respects in which the elevator was defectively equipped, constructed, and operated, an order for which was obtained by them; the "special circumstances" on which plaintiff seeks his order, under Code Civ. Proc. § 872, subd. 5, being that he cannot comply with the order for a bill of particulars unless permitted to examine said employé. Hill v. Bloomingdale, 121 N. Y. Supp. 370, 371, 136 App. Div. 651.

The tug Hoyt, passing up East river on the Brooklyn side in the daytime, exchanged crossing signals with the ferryboat Fulton, crossing from New York; the Hoyt, as the privileged vessel, being required to keep her course and speed, and the Fulton to cross under her stern. The Fulton, however, held her course, and came so close to the Hoyt that the latter, to avoid collision, when under the Fulton's bows starboarded her helm, throwing her head nearly across the river. During such time the tug No. 9 was coming down the river, and had given three signals to the Hoyt for passing port and port, none of which were answered. After the Hoyt had passed the Fulton, both she and the No. 9 gave alarm signals, ported, and reversed, but were then so near together that a collision occurred. Held, that the danger of the Hoyt from the Fulton, which was within full view of the pilot of the No. 9 was a "special circumstance" within the meaning of the rules (23 Stat. 438 et seq., rule 23) which required the latter to slacken speed or to stop and reverse, and that she was in fault for keeping her course and speed; that the Hoyt was also in fault for failing to answer the signals of the No. 9, although not for her maneuver in passing the Fulton. The C. R. Hoyt, 136 Fed. 671, 675.

SPECIAL COMMISSION

Neither the aggregate body of the qualified voters of a municipality, nor the electors signing the petition for the submission of a proposed ordinance to the vote of the electors, constitute a "special commission," within Const. art. 11, § 13, providing that the Legislature shall not delegate certain powers to any special commission. Hence the initiative provision of the charter of Los Angeles is not violative of this constitutional provision. In re Pfahler, 88 Pac. 270, 277, 150 Cal. 71, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1092, 11 Ann. Cas. 911.

SPECIAL COMMISSIONER

The "special commissioner" is an officer of the court designated by the bankruptcy court as a court of equity to take testimony of witnesses, so called to distinguish him from a special master in the ordinary equity case. United States v. Liberman, 176 Fed. 161, 162.

SPECIAL CONTRACT

A "special contract," which is always express, is one with peculiar provisions or stipulations not found in the ordinary contract relating to the same subject-matter, and which, if omitted from the ordinary contract, the law will never supply, while an express contract is one whose terms are uttered or stated in words or writing, and may or may not be special. Indianapolis Coal Traction

Co. v. Dalton, 87 N. E. 552, 554, 43 Ind. App. 330; Jackson v. Creek, 94 N. E. 416, 418, 47 Ind. App. 541.

SPECIAL DAMAGES

"Special damages" are the natural but not necessary result of the act complained of and must be specifically alleged. Irby v. Wilde, 43 South. 574, 150 Ala. 402; Lay v. Postal Telegraph Cable Co., 54 South. 529, 530, 171 Ala. 172; Morris v. Allen, 121 Pac. 690, 692, 17 Cal. App. 684; Henderson v. Coleman, 115 Pac. 439, 448, 19 Wyo. 183; Cordner v. Hall, 79 Atl. 55, 58, 84 Conn. 117; Moore v. Linneman, 136 S. W. 232, 143 Ky. 231, 234; Friedman v. Pulitzer Pub. Co., 77 S. W. 340, 343, 102 Mo. App. 683 (citing Hughes v. Western Union Tel. Co., 79 Mo. App. 133; Roberts v. Graham, 73 U. S. [6 Wall.] 578, 18 L. Ed. 791); Thompson v. St. Louis & Suburban R. Co., 86 S. W. 465, 468, 111 Mo. App. 465; Baltimore Mach. Works v. McKelvey, 75 N. Y. Supp. 1090, 1092, 71 App. Div. 340; Stowe v. La Conner Trading & Transp. Co., 80 Pac. 856, 857, 39 Wash. 28.

"Special damages" are those which are the natural and proximate result of the wrong, but not the necessary consequence thereof, and must be specially alleged. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Roney (Ky.) 108 S. W. 343 (quoting and adopting definitions in Newman, Pl., p. 438); Epstin v. Berman, 58 S. E. 1013-1015, 78 S. C. 327.

"Special damages" are such as actually result from the commission of a wrong, but are not such a necessary result as will be implied by law. Lee v. Boise Development Co., 122 Pac. 851, 852, 21 Idaho, 461; O'Brien v. Quinn, 90 Pac. 166, 167, 35 Mont. 441 (citing Root v. Butte, A. & P. Ry. Co., 51 Pac. 155, 20 Mont. 354; 13 Cyc. 13).

"Special damages" are those that do not necessarily, but do directly, naturally, and proximately, result from the breach. Moses v. Autuono, 47 South. 925, 926, 56 Fla. 499, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 350.

"Special damages" are such as are not the necessary, but the direct, natural, and proximate, result of the negligence complained of, and defendant is not presumed to know them, but they must be specifically alleged, unless they are fairly included in other damages alleged, or unless the law infers them from the facts stated. Jacksonville Electric Co. v. Batchis, 44 South. 933, 934, 54 Fla. 192.

"Special damages" are those of an unusual and extraordinary nature and not the common consequence of the wrong complained of, and they must be specially pleaded. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Spears, 65 S. E. 482, 483, 110 Va. 110.

"Special damages" are such as really took place, and are not implied by law. They are either superadded to general damages arising from an act injurious in itself, or are such as arise from an act not actionable in itself, but injurious only in its consequences. Thompson v. St. Louis & Suburban R. Co., 86 S. W. 465, 469, 111 Mo. App. 465 (quoting and adopting the definition in Brown v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 12 S. W. 656, 99 Mo. 318); Monarch Tobacco Works v. American Tobacco Co., 165 Fed. 774, 782 (quoting and adopting definition in Bates, Fed. Proc. § 1001, and citing Tidd, Prac. 1807, 389, 400; 1 Chitty, Pl. [12th Am. Ed.] 395-399); Hoskins v. Scott, 96 Pac. 1112, 1114, 52 Or. 271.

"Special damages" are such as result proximately but not ordinarily from the wrong complained of. They are either superadded to the general damages arising from an act injurious in itself, or are such as will arise from an act not actionable in itself, but injurious only in its consequences, such as really occur. Of a claim of such damages, the wrongdoer ought to be specifically informed. Sloss-Sheffield Steel & Iron Co. v. Dickinson, 52 South. 594, 595, 167 Ala. 211.

"Special damages" for breach of contract are such damages as have proximately resulted, but do not always immediately result, from the breach, and will not therefore be implied by law. Howard Supply Co. v. Wells, 176 Fed. 512, 515, 100 C. C. A. 70.

"Special damages" in actions for conversion, or for the taking and detention of personal property, not provable without special allegation thereof, are those which, although the natural, are not the necessary, consequences of the act; being outside of the costs and disbursements allowed by law, and consequential in their nature. In an action of claim and delivery, in which the plaintiff has seized lumber shipped by defendant to third parties, damages to the defendant because the seizure of the lumber prevented him from getting money to pay his men, made it necessary for him to mortgage his house to get money for that purpose, and so crippled him financially that he was obliged to suspend his business of sawing lumber and turn over his property to the plaintiff, who had a mortgage on it, are "special damages," not recoverable unless specially alleged. Robert R. Sizer & Co. v. Dopson, 72 S. E. 464, 466, 89 S. C. 535.

"General damages" are such as the law implies or presumes to have occurred from a wrong complained of, while "special damages" are such as really took place, and are not implied by law, but are either superadded to general damages from an act injurious in itself, or are such as arise from an act not actionable in itself, but injurious only in its consequences. Thus damages to the market value of a horse are general damages, while damages from loss of earnings or use are special damages. Van Buskirk v. Quincy, O. & K. C. R. Co., 111 S. W. 832, 834, 131 Mo. App. 357.

The only difference between general and "special" damages is that general damages are the necessary and usual result of the acts complained of, while special damages need not be, but must only be the proximate result thereof. In any case predicated upon a wrong, a person may be entitled to recover general damages which are the necessary and usual results of the acts complained of, and special damages which are not the usual and ordinary result but as directly traceable to the wrongful acts complained of and result therefrom, but all other damages are too remote. McKinney v. Carson, 99 Pac. 660, 664, 35 Utah, 180.

General damages distinguished

See General Damages.

Libel or slander

In libel, "special damages" are damages with respect to the property, business, profession, or occupation, which are computable in money. Post Pub. Co. v. Butler, 137 Fed. 723, 727, 71 C. C. A. 309.

"Special damages," in reference to publication of libelous matter, was such damages as were computable in money, and may be said to be fairly embraced in the list of actual damages as given in Gen. St. 1901, c. 57b, § 2, providing that the words "actual damages" shall be construed to include all damages which the plaintiff shall show he has suffered in respect to his property, business, trade, profession, or occupation. Hanson v. Krehbiel, 75 Pac. 1041, 1042, 68 Kan. 670, 64 L. R. A. 790, 104 Am. St. Rep. 422.

SPECIAL DEMURRER

See, also, General Demurrer; Special Exceptions.

A demurrer to the whole petition on the ground that it does not set out a cause of action "in a logical and legal form" should be regarded as a general demurrer, as a "special demurrer" is one pointing out defects in a pleading in such a manner that they may be amended. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Cates (Tex.) 132 S. W. 92, 93.

A "special demurrer" goes to the structure merely and not to the substance and obliges the party demurring to lay his finger on the very point. A demurrer is not necessarily a "special demurrer" merely because addressed to a particular paragraph of the pleading. Douglas, A. & G. R. Co. v. Swindle, 59 S. E. 600, 603, 2 Ga. App. 550 (quoting and adopting definition in Martin v. Bartow Iron Works, 35 Ga. 320, 16 Fed. 888).

A "special demurrer" is an objection to a pleading which shows: First, that the court has no jurisdiction of the defendant or of the subject of the action; second, that the plaintiff has not legal capacity to sue. Civ. Code Prac. § 92. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Herndon's Adm'r, 104 S. W. 732, 735, 126 Ky. 589. See, also, Gillen v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 125 S. W. 1047, 1048, 137 Ky. 375; Terrell v. Drake, 140 S. W. 53, 145 Ky. 13.

SPECIAL DEPOSIT

See, also, Deposit; General Deposit.

A "special deposit" is a bailment, and implies the setting apart of the specific money or chattel deposited by its return on demand. Schofield Mfg. Co. v. Cochran, 47 S. E. 208, 209, 119 Ga. 901 (citing 1 Morse, Banks and Banking [4th Ed.] §§ 191, 193).

Bank deposits are either general or special, being "special" where the bank merely assumes custody of the funds, without authority to use them, and where the depositor is entitled to a return of the identical money, in which case the relation is that of bailor and bailee, and not creditor and debtor. Fogg v. Tyler, 82 Atl. 1008, 1010, 109 Me. 109, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 847, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 41.

A "special deposit" is one where the bank merely assumes charge or custody of the property without authority to use it, the depositor being entitled to receive back the identical thing deposited, in which case the title remains with the depositor, and, if the subject be money, the bank has no right to mingle it with other funds. Butcher v. Butler, 114 S. W. 564, 566, 134 Mo. App. 61 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6574).

"Special deposits" are deposits like stocks, bonds, and other securities, and sometimes money, to be specially kept and returned to the owner, or money deposited for a fixed period of time, or on unusual conditions, which is mingled in the general funds like a general deposit, and is repaid therefrom, or money which is to be applied by the bank at the depositor's request for specific purposes. First Nat. Bank of Decatur v. Henry, 49 South. 97, 100, 159 Ala. 307 (citing 5 Cyc. 313).

Plaintiff agreed to loan M. $2,000 to pay the balance of the price of certain land, M. agreeing to deposit the amount in defendant bank as a special deposit, and to use the same only to pay for the land, and to give plaintiff a lien thereon as soon as the title was transferred. The money was deposited by M. in defendant bank to the credit of an account styled "Henry I. Moore, special," but the bank had no knowledge of the agreement between plaintiff and M., M. having overdrawn his general account, the amount of the special deposit, under agreement between M. and the bank, was transferred to his general account, and checked out, and not applied to the purchase price of the land. Held, that the style of the deposit was insufficient to put the bank on inquiry, and that its acts as to such deposit were not a conversion thereof as against plaintiff. Prosser v. First Nat. Bank (Tex.) 134 S. W. 781, 783.

Laws 1907, p. 248, by sections 1, 3, 5, 9, and 16 provides for the State Treasurer designating banks as state depositories for receiving funds of the state, excepting the educational fund, on deposit, and paying them out on order or checks of the State Treasurer, such deposits to draw interest, and the depositories to deposit securities or give bonds for payment of such deposits and interest. Sections 6, 7, and 8 provide for the State Treasurer designating banks as "active depositories" for the collection of drafts, checks, etc., that he may receive on account of any claim due the state, for such active depositories promptly making such collections, without charge, and notifying the State Treasurer of the collection, and depositing securities for such prompt collection, and for the safe-keeping and prompt payment, on the State Treasurer's order, of such collections. Section 10 exempts the State Treasurer from liability for any moneys lost by failure or insolvency of a depository. Const. art. 8, § 5, entrusts the investment of the educational fund to a board of commissioners. Held, that a deposit for collection and safe-keeping of which nature a deposit of checks for the educational fund must be, is a "special deposit," title to which does not pass to the bank, as in the case of a general deposit, but remains in the state, so that the appropriation of such fund by a person having custody thereof is a larceny of state funds. State v. Ross, 104 Pac. 596, 601, 55 Or. 450, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 601, 613.

General deposit distinguished

Deposits in banks are either general or special. Where a special deposit is made, the bank is merely a trustee, the property right remaining in the depositor. Where a general deposit is made, the property is vested in the bank, and the relation of debtor and creditor is established. Shopt v. Indiana Nat. Bank, 83 N. E. 515, 517, 41 Ind. App. 474.

If the agreement between the parties is that the identical coin or currency shall be laid aside and returned, it is a "special deposit." But if the agreement is that the money shall be returned, not in the specific coin or currency deposited, but in an equal sum, it is a "general deposit." In either case the money is deposited for safe-keeping, and the only distinction between the two kinds of deposit is in the character of the return that is to be made, whether it shall be returned in the identical thing deposited or in kind. Warren v. Nix, 135 S. W. 896, 899, 97 Ark. 374.

Deposits in a bank are of two classes, special when the identical or other thing deposited is to be restored or is given for some specified purpose or is received by the bank as a collecting agent, such collection to be remitted, the property in the deposit in such case remaining in the depositor, the bank being the bailee or agent; and general special deposits which comprise all moneys simply deposited in the bank on account of the depositor to be withdrawn from time to time by him, such a deposit transferring the ownership of the money to the bank, and creating the relation of debtor and creditor between the bank and depositor. City of Miami v. Shutts, 51 South. 929, 931, 59 Fla. 462.

Where money or its equivalent is deposited in a bank without any special agreement, the law implies that it is to be mingled with other funds of the bank, and the relation of debtor and creditor is created, and the deposit is general; the bank becoming the owner of the fund. But, where there is an accompanying agreement that the identical thing deposited shall be returned or paid out for a specific purpose, the transaction constitutes a "special deposit," and the bank is liable only as bailee. Thus holders of bonds issued to secure funds for the construction of a railroad deposited money with a trust company from time to time as construction funds were needed, and the trust company paid out of the deposit exchange drawn on it by a bank in payment of drafts given by the construction company in payment for labor and material; the bank agreeing that the fund should be used for no other purpose, and there being no other business transactions between the bank and the trust company, it was held that the deposit was a special one, the bank holding as trustee, and, on its becoming insolvent, its power as trustee was destroyed, and it was entitled only to be reimbursed out of the fund for the amount of construction claims actually paid. McBride v. American Ry. & Lighting Co. (Tex.) 127 S. W. 229, 233.

Where money was deposited in a bank to secure payment of compensation under a well drilling contract, and, while the depositor had no right to check against the deposit, there was no agreement that the money should be kept separate from the other funds of the bank, it was a "general" and not a "special deposit," though the transaction was called a "trust fund account" on the bank's books, and hence, on the insolvency of the bank, the depositor was not entitled to a priority over general creditors. Butcher v. Butler, 114 S. W. 564, 566, 134 Mo. App. 61.

SPECIAL DEPOSITORY

"A 'special depositor' is merely a bailee, and his possession is the possession of his principal." Critchfield v. Nance County, 110 N. W. 538, 77 Neb. 807.

SPECIAL DUTY

The provision of Act May 13, 1907, requiring prosecuting attorneys in the several counties of the state to sue for and recover the penalty imposed on foreign corporations doing business in the state without filing with the secretary of state a copy of their charters or articles of incorporation, must be treated as declaratory of the general laws of the state, making it the duty of prosecuting attorneys to prosecute all actions in which the state is interested, and not as a "special duty," within the meaning of Fitts v. McGhee, 172 U. S. 516, 528, 19 Sup. Ct. 269, 274, 43 L. Ed. 535, holding that, where a statute makes it the "special duty" of a prosecuting attorney to maintain actions on behalf of the state for the enforcement of the provisions of the statute, a person aggrieved by such enforcement may maintain a bill to enjoin the enforcement of the statute on the ground that it is unconstitutional and void. The "special duty" referred to in the case cited is clearly an administrative duty, such as is exercised by boards or ministerial officers, but not by attorneys. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Andrews, 154 Fed. 95, 105, 106.

SPECIAL ELECTION

See, also, General Election.

It is not necessarily the time or manner of holding an election to fill a vacancy that makes it a "special election," but the fact that it is held at a time other than that fixed by law to elect an officer for the regular or defined term. State ex rel. Fish v. Howell, 110 Pac. 386, 388, 59 Wash. 492.

Laws 1911, c. 116, authorizing certain cities to adopt a commission form of government, provides (section 2) that on a proper petition the mayor, by proclamation, shall submit the question of organizing as a city under the act to a "special" election, to be held at a time specified therein and within 60 days after the petition is filed. The act did not further fix the time for holding the election. Const. art. 11, § 10, provides that cities and towns previously organized and incorporated may become organized under such general laws whenever a majority of the voters voting at a "general" election shall so determine. Held that, since a "special election" is any election which is not regularly held for the election of officers, or for some other purpose which comes before the electors at regular fixed intervals, any election at which the organization of a city was submitted would be, as to such question, a special election, and that the word "special," as so used, is surplusage; and hence, where a petition for the organization of a city under such act was filed within 60 days prior to a general election, it was the duty of the mayor to call the election at such time as would comply with the constitutional requirements; the act being, therefore, not invalid as violating the constitutional provision as to the kind of election at which the question was to be submitted. State ex rel. Hunt v. Tausick, 116 Pac. 651, 656, 64 Wash. 69, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 802.

SPECIAL ENTRY

In order that an entry on state lands should be a "special entry," it must carry on its face notice, to the common understanding of men acquainted in the neighborhood thereof, of some call therein, so that other entrymen may know when they are without its sphere. Breckenridge Cannel Coal Co. v. Scott, 114 S. W. 930, 936, 121 Tenn. 88.

Where it appears from undisputed testimony of a witness, and from the entry itself, that the objects and localities called for in said entry were notorious, well known, and easily ascertained, and that any one acquainted with that general region would know from the description in the entry where the land was and could have easily located it, such entry is a "special entry," and the date of title to the land called for therein is fixed by the date of the entry, and a grant founded on said prior special entry gives a title superior to that of an older grant but founded on a younger entry. Savage v. Bon Air Coal, Land & Lumber Co., 2 Tenn. Ch. App. 594, 611.

SPECIAL EXCEPTIONS

"Special exceptions" are nothing more than different reasons assigned why the general demurrer should be sustained. Mere reasons assigned why a general demurrer should be sustained to certain interpleading answers are not special exceptions to such answers. Nixon v. Malone (Tex.) 95 S. W. 577, 581.

SPECIAL EXECUTION

See, also, General Execution.

"A 'special execution' is one that directs a levy on some special property, while a 'general execution' is one that makes no such requirement, but demands a levy on the debtor's property generally." A further distinction between a special and a general execution is to be found in the fact that ordinarily a special execution issues only in proceedings where defendant has not been brought into court by personal service of process, but his property has been seized, and hence the execution to satisfy the judgment is limited to the specific property seized, though by statute there are cases where, even when defendant is personally brought into court, the judgment is a special one against certain property belonging to defendant, and in such cases no general judgment is entered, whereas a general execution, which may be levied on any property defendant owns, follows a general judgment based on personal service. Smith v. Rogers, 90 S. W. 1150, 1152, 191 Mo. 334.

SPECIAL FINDING

See, also, General Finding.

"Special findings" are particular findings of individual facts. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Osburn, 100 Pac. 473, 474, 79 Kan. 348.

The office of a "special finding" is to state the ultimate facts and not the probative or evidentiary facts. Behler v. Ackley, 89 N. E. 877, 880, 173 Ind. 173 (citing Taylor v. Canaday, 57 N. E. 526, 155 Ind. 671).

Under a statute authorizing a new trial on the ground that the decision of the court is not sustained by sufficient evidence, specifications for a new trial that the "special findings" specified were not sustained by sufficient evidence, were without the issues, and were contrary to law, and that the court erred in not finding certain facts specified, were insufficient, since by the "decision" of the court referred to in the statute is meant "the special finding," when one has been required. Major v. Miller, 75 N. E. 159, 161, 165 Ind. 275.

An opinion of the trial judge analyzing the facts and applying the law is not a "special finding" of fact within Rev. St. § 700, providing that when an issue of fact in a civil action is tried by the court without a jury as authorized by section 629, and the finding is special, a review may extend to the sufficiency of the facts found to support the judgment. Keeley v. Ophir Hill Consol. Min. Co., 169 Fed. 598, 600, 95 C. C. A. 96.

An opinion of the trial judge setting forth the reasons for its decision in an action at law tried without a jury is not a "special finding" within Rev. St. §§ 649, 700 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, pp. 525, 570). U. S. v. Sioux City Stock Yards Co., 167 Fed. 126, 127, 92 C. C. A. 578.

SPECIAL FRANCHISE

See Each Special Franchise.

A "special franchise" granted to a railroad corporation is a right granted to it to maintain its road where, without such authority, it would be unlawful to do so. People ex rel. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Priest, 99 N. E. 547, 555, 206 N. Y. 274.

Under Laws N. Y. 1896, p. 796, c. 908, § 2, subd. 3, as amended by Laws 1899, p. 1589, c. 712, providing that a "special franchise" shall be deemed to include the value of the tangible property of a person or corporation situated in, upon, or above any street, highway, public place, or public waters in connection with the special franchise, and the tangible property so included shall be taxed as a part of the "special franchise," and Laws 1899, p. 1594, c. 712, § 47, providing that tangible property subject to a special franchise tax situated in, upon, under, or above any street, highway, public place, or public waters, as described in subdivision 3 of section 2, shall not be taxable, except upon the assessment made by the state board of tax commissioners, taxable property of an electric light company situated in or under public waters in connection with a special franchise cannot be assessed by the commissioners of taxes in the city of New York, but is to be taxed only as a part of a "special franchise" made by the state board of tax commissioners. People ex rel. Edison Electric Illuminating Co. v. Commissioners of Taxes and Assessments, 110 N. Y. Supp. 833, 834, 58 Misc. Rep. 249.

General Tax Law (Laws 1896, p. 796, c. 908) art. 1, § 2, subd. 3, as amended by Laws 1899, p. 1589, c. 712, § 1, provides that "a franchise right, authority or permission specified in this subdivision shall for the purpose of taxation be known as a 'special franchise.' A special franchise shall be deemed to include the value of the tangible property of a person, copartnership, association, or corporation situated in, upon, over or above any street, highway, public place or public waters in connection with the special franchise. The tangible property so included shall be taxed as a part of a special franchise." Held, that the rights and privileges granted to a telegraph company to construct and operate lines in and between the cities of the state constitute, for the purpose of taxation, a "special franchise." People ex rel. New England Tel. Co. v. Woodbury, 116 N. Y. Supp. 209, 213, 63 Misc. Rep. 1.

The right granted by a city to maintain a tunnel under a street between buildings on each side thereof, the portion of the street affected by the grant being owned in fee by the city, is not a "special franchise" nor taxable as such within Laws 1899, c. 712, amending the tax law in relation to the taxation of public franchises as real property; the grant being for private purposes only, and made by the city as proprietor. People ex rel. Abraham v. Perley, 123 N. Y. Supp. 436, 438, 67 Misc. Rep. 471.

The charter of a corporation is its "general franchise," which can be repealed at the will of the Legislature pursuant to its reserved power to repeal; while a "special franchise" is the right granted by the public to use property for a public use but with private profit, and such a franchise, when acted on, is vested property and cannot be repealed, unless power to do so is reserved in the grant, though it may be condemned on making compensation. Lord v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of United States, 87 N. E. 443, 447, 194 N. Y. 212, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 420.

"Special franchises," which are privileges of a public nature, the exercise of which is permitted under grants from the state to corporations, partake at common law of the nature of realty, and by General Tax Law (Laws 1896, p. 796, c. 908) § 2, subd. 3, as amended by Laws 1899, p. 1589, c. 712, are classed as real estate within 1 Rev. St. (1st Ed.) p. 750, § 10, and Real Property Law (Laws 1896, p. 559, c. 547) § 1, and they are real estate within Const. art. 8, § 10, limiting municipal indebtedness to a specified per cent. of the assessed valuation of the real estate of the municipality. Levy v. McClellan, 89 N. E. 569, 571, 196 N. Y. 178.

Tax Law (Laws 1896, c. 908), as amended by Laws 1899, c. 712, § 1, included special franchises in the definition of land, adding "all surface, underground, or elevated railroads," "including the value of all franchises, rights or permission to construct, maintain, or operate the same in, under, above, on, or through streets, highways, or public places." This act having been construed by the Supreme Court to include the privilege of crossing public highways at grade, the Legislature, by Laws 1901, c. 490, § 1, provided that the term "special franchise" should not include the crossing of a street, highway, or public place where such crossing was not at the intersection of another street or highway, unless the crossing was other than at right angles for a distance of not less than 250 feet, in which case the whole of the crossing should be deemed a special franchise; and, by Laws 1907, c. 720, § 1, the act was so amended as to provide that the term "special franchise" should not include the crossing of a street, highway, or public place "outside" the limits of a city or incorporated village, where such crossing is less than 250 feet long. Held, that the word "surface" as used in the act of 1899, did not limit that act to street railroads operated by horses or electricity, under the rule of ejusdem generis, but was intended to include steam railroads as well, so that steam railroads were subject to franchise taxation for the right to cross streets in cities at grade. People ex rel. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Woodbury, 96 N. E. 431, 432, 203 N. Y. 167.

The property of a subway railroad company was subject to taxation, under the special franchise tax act (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 60, §§ 43-49), before final completion of its works. Under Tax Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 60) § 2, subd. 3, defining a "special franchise," etc., such term, so far as railroads are concerned, embraces rights or permission to construct, maintain, and operate railroads in, under, above, on, or through streets, highways, or public places only, and does not include the right to construct a subway under a navigable river, title to the bed of which was in the state. People ex rel. Hudson & M. R. Co. v. State Board of Tax Com'rs, 96 N. E. 435, 438, 203 N. Y. 119.

Special Franchise Tax Law (Laws 1896, c. 908, as amended by Laws 1899, c. 712, § 2, subd. 3), authorizes the assessment for the purpose of taxation of all franchises, etc., to construct a railroad above, on, or through streets, highways, or public places. Laws 1896, c. 908, § 2, subd. 4, as amended by Laws 1901, c. 490, provides that the term "special franchise" shall not be deemed to include the crossing of a street, highway, etc., where such crossing is not at the intersection of another street or highway, unless such crossing shall be at other than right angles for a distance of 250 feet, in which case the whole of such crossing shall be deemed a special franchise. Statutory Construction Law (Laws 1892, c. 677) § 1, provides that it is applicable to every statute, unless its general object, or the context of the language construed or other provisions of law, indicate that a different meaning was intended, etc. Section 8 (incorporated in General Construction Law [Laws 1909, c. 27, § 35; Consol. Laws, c. 22]) provides that words in the singular number include the plural and in the plural number include the singular. Held, that under such rule the term "special franchise" includes the crossing of any number of streets, highways, or public places adjoining each other, where the crossing is at other than right angles for a distance of not less than 250 feet. People ex rel. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Woodbury, 125 N. Y. Supp. 728, 729, 140 App. Div. 848.

Under Tax Law (Consol. Laws, c. 60) § 2, subd. 3, defining the terms "land," "real estate," and "real property" to include land, underground railroads, including the valuation of franchises to construct and operate the same, and defining a "special franchise" to include the value of the tangible property of a corporation situated in or under or above any street, a corporation owning special franchises to operate an underground railroad under city streets owns special franchises subject to taxation, though only so small a part of the railroad is constructed and in operation as is insufficient to meet operating expenses, taxes, and interest, and the franchises, if possessing a value, are taxable, though they are not used. People ex rel. Hudson & M. R. Co. v. State Board of Tax Com'rs, 127 N. Y. Supp. 918, 925, 143 App. Div. 26.

The New York & Long Island Railroad Company was incorporated in 1887 and obtained the consent of the then city of New York for the construction of a tunnel railroad under one of the streets of the borough of Manhattan, and the time for construction was extended to 1907, at which time the company's corporate existence expired under the provisions of section 5 of the railroad law (Laws 1890, c. 505, amended by Laws 1901, c. 508), and its property became vested in the relators, who were its directors at that date, as trustees for stockholders and creditors in accordance with section 35 of the general corporation law (Consol. Laws, c. 23). The state in 1891, by patent, granted to the company and its successors a right of way to construct a tunnel under the waters of the East River with all "the rights, hereditaments and appurtenances" belonging and appertaining thereto, to have and to hold forever. Tax Law, 1896, c. 908, § 2, subd. 3, as amended by Laws 1899, c. 712 (Consol. Laws, c. 60, art. 1, § 2, subd. 3), provides that the terms "land, real estate and real property" shall include underground railroads, including the value of all franchises to construct and operate the same, to be known as special franchises and to include the value of the tangible property of a corporation, situated under any public waters. In 1908 and 1909 the State Board of Tax Commissioners assessed the company's special franchise to the relators. Held, that while the patent was not an absolute conveyance of land, or a fee, that part of the tunnel beneath the bed of the river extending from a point 300 feet east of the bulkhead line of the Manhattan shore was property subject to taxation as a "special franchise" under the tax law. People ex rel. Bryan v. State Board of Tax Com'rs, 127 N. Y. Supp. 858, 862, 142 App. Div. 796; Id., 124 N. Y. Supp. 711, 67 Misc. Rep. 508.

Relator street railroad company has the exclusive right in the nature of an easement to occupy forever a strip within a street with its railroad tracks for running cars thereon. Tax Laws (Laws 1896, c. 908) § 2, subd. 3, as amended by Laws 1899, c. 712, provides that the terms "land, real estate," etc., include all structures erected upon or affixed to land, all surface or elevated railroads, including the value of all franchises or permissions to construct and operate the same on any streets; all railroad structures, tracks, etc., permitted or authorized to be laid upon any street, and that a franchise specified herein shall be known as a "special franchise," for the purpose of taxation. Held, that relator's right to maintain and operate its road within the street was not a "special franchise," within the statute. People ex rel. Long Island R. Co. v. State Board of Tax Com'rs, 133 N. Y. Supp. 348, 349, 148 App. Div. 751.

The mere fact that a corporation is organized for the specific purpose of acquiring, and is given power to acquire, public uses or franchises does not carry with it the idea that such franchises, when acquired, be they many or few, are merged in, and must be assessed as, part and parcel of the general corporate franchise. San Joaquin & K. R. Canal & Irrigation Co. v. Merced County, 84 Pac. 285-288, 2 Cal. App. 593.

SPECIAL FUND

The term "special fund," in Comp. St. 1901, c. 12a, § 7, providing that property of every description belonging to any city governed by the act shall be exempt from taxation, execution, and sale, and that judgments against a city shall be paid out of the judgment fund or, when a special fund is created for such purpose, out of such special fund, does not include an assessment levied in pursuance of section 158, authorizing an assessment to pay damages awarded for grading, change of grade, or for the appropriation of private property, upon the lots and lands benefited, which shall abut or be adjacent to the street, avenue, or alley graded or opened, but refers to a levy made for the payment of a specific judgment in pursuance of chapter 77, art. 6, § 2. City of Omaha v. State, 94 N. W. 979, 980, 69 Neb. 29.

SPECIAL GUARANTY

"A 'special guaranty' is limited to the person to whom it is addressed, and usually contemplates a trust or reposes a confidence in such person. Such a guaranty may not be assigned until a right of action has arisen thereon." A guaranty executed and attached to a promissory note at the time it is indorsed and delivered imposes no trust or confidence in the indorsee, and, though it specifically names him, will be considered a general guaranty of the note, and not a 'special guaranty' personal to the indorsee, and it may be transferred by assignment upon the further indorsement of the note. Everson v. Gere, 25 N. E. 492, 122 N. Y. 290 (citing and adopting Evansville Nat. Bank v. Kaufmann, 93 N. Y. 273, 45 Am. Rep. 204).

SPECIAL INJUNCTION

A "special injunction" is one granted for the prevention of irreparable injury, when the preventive aid of the court is the ultimate and only relief sought and the primary equity involved in the suit. Beasley v. Jenkins, 42 South. 145, 146, 117 La. 577 (citing Current Law, vol. 4, p. 96, § 1).

SPECIAL INTEREST

See Direct and Special Interest.

SPECIAL INTERROGATORIES

The purpose of "special interrogatories" is to elicit facts to test the correctness of the general verdict. Freedman v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 71 Atl. 901, 905, 81 Conn. 601, 15 Ann. Cas. 464.

SPECIAL JUDGMENT

A "special judgment" is one operating in rem. Smith v. Collyer, 55 Atl. 805, 806, 69 N. J. Law, 365.

SPECIAL JURY

Under V. S. 1127 (P. S. 1477), providing that a person drawn as juror from a town containing more than 200 inhabitants shall be disqualified from serving again for two years, a plea in abatement filed at the October term, alleging that on a date before the March term a certain juror was summoned as juror, and attended, qualified, and acted as such through the term, "without this, that said [juror] was during said last-mentioned session of said court summoned as a petit juror to serve at said session of court," was demurrable, because not showing that the juror was not drawn as a special or struck juror; the allegation that he was "drawn" not being sufficient for this purpose, in view of sections 1134, 1137 (1484, 1487), speaking of a struck jury as "drawn" and calling it a "special jury." State v. Waterman, 62 Atl. 1016, 1017, 78 Vt. 379.

SPECIAL LAW

Local or special law, see Local Law.

See, also, Class Legislation; General Law.

A "special law" is one that relates to particular persons or things of a class, as distinguished from a "general law," which applies to all persons or things of a class. Prince George's County Com'rs v. Baltimore & O. R.

Co., 77 Atl. 433, 434, 113 Md. 179 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, pp. 6578-6584; vol. 8, p. 7802); State v. Miksicek, 125 S. W. 507, 511, 225 Mo. 561, 135 Am. St. Rep. 597; Ex parte Berger, 90 S. W. 759, 762, 193 Mo. 16, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 530, 112 Am. St. Rep. 472, 5 Ann. Cas. 383 (citing State ex rel. Lionberger v. Tolle, 71 Mo. 645); Koster v. Coyne, 97 N. Y. Supp. 433, 435, 110 App. Div. 742 (quoting In re N. Y. El. R. Co., 70 N. Y. 327, 350); Sanchez v. Fordyce, 75 Pac. 56, 57, 141 Cal. 427; City of Little Rock v. North Little Rock, 79 S. W. 785, 787, 72 Ark. 195 (citing Little Rock & F. S. Ry. Co. v. Hanniford, 5 S. W. 294, 49 Ark. 291; Wheeler v. City of Philadelphia, 77 Pa. 338); Title & Document Restoration Co. v. Kerrigan, 88 Pac. 356, 365, 150 Cal. 289, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 682, 119 Am. St. Rep. 199; Jay v. Thomas, 46 Pac. 578, 586, 5 Okl. 1; Smith v. State, 113 S. W. 289, 291, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 298 (quoting and adopting definition in Clark v. Finley, 54 S. W. 343, 93 Tex. 171); O'Connor v. St. Louis Transit Co., 97 S. W. 150, 153, 198 Mo. 622, 115 Am. St. Rep. 495, 8 Ann. Cas. 703; Boise Irrigation & Land Co. v. Stewart, 77 Pac. 25, 28, 10 Idaho, 38 (quoting Suth. St. Const. § 121).

A "special law" is one that applies only to a special locality or to an individual or to a number of individuals selected out of a class to which they belong. Mix v. Board of Com'rs of Nez Perce County, 112 Pac. 215, 218, 18 Idaho, 695, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 534.

A law is "special," in a constitutional sense, when by force of an inherent limitation it arbitrarily separates some persons, places, or things from those upon which, but for such separation, it would operate. Van Cleve v. Passaic Valley Sewerage Com'rs, 58 Atl. 571, 572, 71 N. J. Law, 183.

An act is not "special" or lacking in uniformity merely because it does not apply to every person or subject within the state. In re Martin, 106 Pac. 235, 237, 157 Cal. 51, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 242.

An act general in form, relating to persons, places, and things as a class, and not local or temporary, is not necessarily "special legislation," though the occasion of its being passed is to aid in the formation of a corporation to administer a certain charitable trust. St. John v. Andrews Institute for Girls, 83 N. E. 981, 984, 191 N. Y. 254, 14 Ann. Cas. 708.

A statute which relates to particular persons or things of a class is "special," and comes within Const. art. 3, § 56, prohibiting special laws as to certain matters and in other cases where a general law can be made applicable. Smith v. State, 113 S. W. 289, 290, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 298.

If a statute operates only on a portion of the persons who come within its scope or range, it is a "special law," subject to the constitutional inhibition of such laws. State ex rel. Applegate v. Taylor, 123 S. W. 892, 916, 224 Mo. 393.

A "general law," within the meaning of Const. Or. art. 11, § 2, as amended June 4, 1906, and providing that corporations may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by special laws, is one by which all persons or localities complying with its provisions may be entitled to exercise powers, rights, and privileges conferred, while a "special law" is one conferring on certain individuals or citizens of a certain locality rights and powers or liabilities not granted to or imposed on others similarly situated. Straw v. Harris, 103 Pac. 777-780, 54 Or. 424; Farrell v. Port of Columbia, 91 Pac. 546, 547, 50 Or. 169.

The fact that an act to legalize bonds to be issued and sold by municipalities is limited in its application to bonds sold after its passage, and for not less than par, does not render it a "special law" in a constitutional sense. City of Redlands v. Brook, 91 Pac. 150, 152, 151 Cal. 474.

Const. § 110, defines a "special" or private law as one which applies to an individual association or corporation. State ex rel. Attorney General v. Sayre, 39 South. 240, 142 Ala. 641, 4 Ann. Cas. 656.

An act relating to persons or things as a class is a "general" and not a "special" law, and hence Act Oct. 14, 1879 (Laws 1878-79, p. 125), relating to the suspension and removal of railroad commissioners, is not a special law. Gray v. McLendon, 67 S. E. 859, 868, 134 Ga. 224.

The fact that municipal officers are now appointive has no reasonable relation to the method of appointment, and legislation changing the method of appointment, which applies only to municipalities where the excise commissioners are appointive at the time of the passage of the act, is "special" and unconstitutional. Bumsted v. Henry, 67 Atl. 375, 376, 74 N. J. Law, 790.

Gen. St. 1906, §§ 3772, 3775, regulating the catching of fish in rivers, creeks, bays, bayous or other waters on the coast are not "local" or "special laws," where the first provision therein covers the full territory of the state defined as on the coast of the state while the latter applies to all the rivers of the state, and are not in violation of Const. art. 3, §§ 20, 21. Carlton v. Johnson, 55 South. 975, 976.

As depending on reasonableness of classification

A statute making it an offense for the proprietors of places where liquors are kept for sale at retail to permit females under the age of 21 years to remain in or about the places is not "special or class legislation" because excepting therefrom open and public restaurants or dining rooms; the classification being a reasonable one under the police powers of the state, and operating uniformly. State v. Baker, 92 Pac. 1076, 1078, 50 Or. 381, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1040.

If the individuals to whom legislation is applicable constitute a class characterized by some substantial qualities or attributes of such character as to indicate the necessity or propriety of certain legislation restricted to that class, such legislation, if applicable to all members of that class, is not "special legislation" within the Constitution. Ex parte King, 106 Pac. 578, 579, 157 Cal. 161.

A law which operates only upon a class of individuals is none the less a general law if the individuals to whom it is applicable constitute a class which requires legislation peculiar to itself in the matter covered by the law. The class, however, must not only be germane to the purpose of the law, but must also be characterized by some substantial qualities or attributes which render such legislation necessary or appropriate for the individual members of the class. It may be founded on some natural or intrinsic or constitutional distinction, but the distinction must be of such a nature as to reasonably indicate the necessity or propriety of legislation restricted to that class. Title & Document Restoration Co. v. Kerrigan, 88 Pac. 356, 365, 150 Cal. 289, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 682, 119 Am. St. Rep. 199 (quoting and adopting definitions in McDonald v. Conniff, 34 Pac. 71, 99 Cal. 386, 391; De Voe v. Superior Court of Mendocino County, 74 Pac. 28, 140 Cal. 476, 98 Am. St. Rep. 73; People v. Cent. Pac. R. Co., 38 Pac. 905, 105 Cal. 576, 584; City of Pasadena v. Stimson, 27 Pac. 604, 91 Cal. 238; citing Rode v. Siebe, 51 Pac. 869, 119 Cal. 518, 39 L. R. A. 342; Darcy v. City of San Jose, 38 Pac. 500, 104 Cal. 642).

As law

See Law.

Local law distinguished

The word "local," as applied to legislation, signifies legislation relating to part of the territory of a state only, while the word "special" is more appropriately applied to laws granting some special right, privilege, or immunity, or imposing some particular burden upon some portion of the people of the state less than all. People v. Wilcox, 86 N. E. 672, 673, 237 Ill. 421.

Local law synonymous

The terms "local law" and "special law" are used interchangeably. Const. 1901, § 10, defines a "local law" as one applicable to any political subdivision of the state, and a "special law" as one which applies to an individual association or corporation. Montgomery City Charter (Acts 1892-93, p. 377) § 20, exempts persons procuring a liquor license from the city from paying any tax or license to the county. Act March 4, 1903 (Gen. Acts 1903, p. 184), provides for a county liquor tax, and repeals all laws, general and "special," inconsistent with itself, and Act Sept. 30, 1903 (Gen. Acts 1903, p. 298) § 4, again confers power on counties to levy a liquor tax, and provides that the statute shall not affect the exemption provided by any city charter. Held that, notwithstanding the constitutional definitions, the exemption was repealed by Acts March 4, 1903 (Gen. Acts 1903, p. 184), and not revived by Act Sept. 30, 1903 (Gen. Acts 1903, p. 298) § 4. Gaston v. O'Neal, 41 South. 742, 743, 145 Ala. 484 (citing Maxwell v. State, 89 Ala. 150, 7 South. 824; Holt v. Mayor and Aldermen of Birmingham, 111 Ala. 369, 19 South. 735).

The words "local" and "special," as used in Const. art. 3, § 30, providing that no local or special laws shall be passed for the incorporation of cities and towns, are synonymous words of description. Eckerson v. City of Des Moines, 115 N. W. 177, 183, 137 Iowa, 452.

Const. art. 11, § 2, grants to the legal voters of every city and town power to enact and amend their municipal charter, and article 4, § 1a, provides that the initiative and referendum powers reserved to the people are further reserved to legal voters of every district as to all local, special, and municipal legislation. Held that, as the words "local" and "special" mean enactments intended only to affect certain persons who operate in specified localities, an incorporated port cannot under a special election had under such powers extend its boundaries by annexing other territory without the consent of the inhabitants of the territory annexed, this being particularly true in view of L. O. L. § 3209, and Laws of 1911, p. 158, § 3, both of which provide for the annexation of new territory to municipalities and ports only with the consent of the inhabitants of the territory to be annexed. State ex rel. v. Port of Tillamook, 124 Pac. 637, 640, 62 Or. 332.

The words "local" and "special" in Const. art. 4, § 1a, reserving the initiative and referendum powers to the voters of every municipality as to all local, special, and municipal legislation, are synonymous, and mean enactments intended to affect only certain persons, or to operate in specified localities; and an act is "local" when the subject relates to a portion only of the people or their property, or when it operates only within a single city, county, or other particular division. Schubel v. Olcott, 120 Pac. 375, 379, 60 Or. 503. See, also, Acme Dairy Co. v. City of Astoria, 90 Pac. 153, 154, 49 Or. 520.

Classification of municipal corporations

A law is not "local" or "special" within the constitutional inhibition against such laws regulating county and township affairs, for classifying counties and townships on the basis of population, if population makes a substantial difference in the conditions affected by the statute, and the statute, if considered as regulating county and township affairs, did not violate the constitutional inhibition for fixing a lower tax rate in counties and cities having a larger population. People ex rel. Booth v. Opel, 91 N. E. 458, 461, 244 Ill. 317.

Acts Tex. 30th Leg. (Laws 1907, p. 269, c. 139), providing for a particular jury system for all counties having a city containing a population of 20,000 or more, according to a census, is not a "special law," within Const. art. 3, § 56, prohibiting the passage of any local or special law regulating the summoning or impaneling of juries. Northern Texas Traction Co. v. Danforth, 116 S. W. 147, 148, 53 Tex. Civ. App. 419; Houston Electric Co. v. Faroux (Tex.) 125 S. W. 922, 923.

P. L. 1907, pp. 79, 89, 114, creating boards of fire and police commissioners, boards of finance, and boards of public works in cities having a population of not less than 100,000 nor more than 200,000, are each a "general law," and not a "special law," regulating municipal affairs. McCarter v. McKelvey (N. J.) 73 Atl. 884, 885.

Since the Constitution provides that cities of the commonwealth shall be divided into classes, the fact that the city of Louisville is the only city in the first class does not render such act void as "special legislation," in contravention of Const. § 59. Kirch v. City of Louisville, 101 S. W. 373, 375, 125 Ky. 391.

Acts 1906, p. 1, c. 1, empowering cities of the first class to construct a system of sewerage, and providing that the mayor shall appoint four persons who, with the mayor, shall constitute a sewerage commission, is not "special legislation," within Const. § 59, prohibiting the passage of special acts concerning specified subjects, though the city of Louisville is the only city of the first class, as the statute would be applicable to all cities of the first class. Miller v. City of Louisville (Ky.) 99 S. W. 284, 285.

Act March 1, 1910 (Laws 1910, c. 50), permitting all second-class cities to adopt the commission form of government as provided therein, is not "special legislation" contrary to Const. § 59, prohibiting the General Assembly from passing special acts amending the charter of any corporation. Bryan v. Voss, 136 S. W. 884, 886, 143 Ky. 422.

Laws 1905, p. 1160, c. 501, amending Laws 1898, p. 371, c. 182, entitled an act for the government of cities of the second class, provides that the amendatory act shall not apply to any city that becomes a city of the second class under the enumeration to be had in 1905, until 1908. Held, that this does not render it a "special city law," within Const. art. 12, § 2, providing that such a law shall not be passed until a certified copy of the bill has been transmitted to the mayor of the city affected thereby, and returned with a certificate whether the city has or has not accepted the same. Koster v. Coyne, 77 N. E. 983, 984, 184 N. Y. 494; Id., 97 N. Y.

Supp. 433, 435, 110 App. Div. 742 (quoting Matter of N. Y. El. R. Co., 70 N. Y. 327, 350).

Creation and definition of offenses

Va. Code 1904, §§ 1759, 1766, denouncing certain acts as misdemeanors affecting the interests of the Virginia Pharmaceutical Association, and undertaking to give to the appointees of such association the exclusive right to be prosecutors of such crimes and the exclusive beneficiary in the penalty to the extent of a half of the fines imposed, apply to the whole state, and make a violation of its provisions by any person a misdemeanor punishable by fine, and are not "special or private laws" within Const. 1902, § 63, cl. 1 (Code 1904, p. ccxxiii), prohibiting the General Assembly from enacting any local, special, or private law for the punishment of crime. Bertram v. Commonwealth, 62 S. E. 969, 971, 108 Va. 902.

Establishment and regulation of courts

The law limiting the jurisdiction to justices of the peace in cities of the first class violates Const. art. 6, § 26, prohibiting the Legislature from enacting any "special law" regulating the jurisdiction of justices of the peace, the practice of courts of justice, or in all cases where a general law can be applicable. Special laws are generally objectionable for not extending to the whole subject to which their provisions would be equally applicable, and thus permitting a diversity of laws relating to the same subject. The object of the prohibition of special or local laws is to prevent this diversity. Each subject as to which such laws are prohibited is by such inhibition designated as a subject of only general legislation, which shall have a uniform operation. Generality in scope and uniformity of operation are both essential. A law which embraces a whole subject would still be special if not framed to have a uniform operation. Love v. Liddle, 72 Pac. 185, 187, 26 Utah, 62, 62 L. R. A. 482 (quoting and adopting definition in Suth. St. Const. § 127).

Establishment of seat of government

An act entitled "An act providing for the permanent location of the seat of government and capital of the state, creating a board of capital commissioners and defining its powers and duties, authorizing the Governor to accept, for capital purposes, the proceeds of the sale of land, or donations from other sources, and declaring an emergency," is not a "special law," within Const. art. 5, § 32, providing that no special or local law shall be considered by the Legislature until notice of the intended introduction thereof shall first have been published in newspapers, etc. Coyle v. Smith, 113 Pac. 944, 945, 28 Okl. 121.

Regulation of civil remedies and proceedings

A law in which procedure provided for the establishment and quieting of title to real estate is distinctive, and which applies only where the records have been destroyed by earthquake, fire, or flood, is not violative of Const. art. 4, § 25, subds. 3, 33, prohibiting the Legislature from passing any local or "special laws" regulating the practice of courts, and in cases where a general law can be made applicable. The mere fact that a law operates only on one class of cases does not make it repugnant to the Constitution. Title & Document Restoration Co. v. Kerrigan, 88 Pac. 356, 365, 150 Cal. 289, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 682, 119 Am. St. Rep. 199 (citing Deyoe v. Superior Court, Mendocino County, 74 Pac. 28, 140 Cal. 476, 98 Am. St. Rep. 73).

Act No. 70 of 1886, § 1, which provides that in suits against railroads for the killing, etc., of stock, it shall suffice in order to recover to prove the killing or injury unless defendant shows that it did not result from carelessness on its part, etc., is a general law applying throughout the state and to all railroads, and, since it merely makes a change in the rules of procedure and evidence in a particular class of cases, does not discriminate invidiously between persons, and hence does not contravene Const. art. 48, §§ 15, 18, forbidding the passage of local or special laws regulating the practice of courts or changing the rules of evidence. Learned & Koontz v. Texas & P. Ry. Co., 54 South. 931, 932, 128 La. 430.

Const. art. 4, § 34, authorizes the Legislature to pass any local or general law for the establishment of municipal government in the city of Chicago, and, pursuant thereto, the Legislature enacted the Municipal Court Act, § 23 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 37, § 286), providing that if upon application to the Supreme Court or Appellate Court, or to any judge thereof, for a supersedeas, the same shall be denied, the order or judgment shall stand affirmed unless the court or judge denying the supersedeas shall otherwise order. Const. art. 6, § 11, authorizes the creation of the Appellate Court, and section 29, provides that all laws relating to courts shall be general and of uniform operation, and the practice of all courts of the same class or grade, so far as regulated by law, and the effect of all judgments, shall be uniform. Held that, since a case brought to the Appellate Court from the municipal court upon writ of error was a new suit in the Appellate Court, the practice in the Appellate Court must be the same as in cases brought up from the other courts of record, and section 23 of the municipal court act was unconstitutional as being a special law regulating the practice in the Appellate Court. Clowry v. Holmes, 87 N. E. 303, 238 Ill. 577.

Act March 2, 1903 (St. 1903, p. 67, c. 61), amending Pol. Code, § 3443, to provide a special proceeding in the courts for determination of questions as to validity of proceedings for purchase of public lands, in which the ordinary rules as to practice, pleadings, and evidence, including motion for new trial and appeal, are recognized, is not a "special law" regulating the practice of courts of justice, prohibited by the Constitution. Boggs v. Ganeard, 84 Pac. 195, 199, 148 Cal. 711.

Regulation of corporations

Const. art. 11, § 8, declares that no corporation shall be created or its powers increased or diminished by "special laws." Held, that Acts 1887, p. 112, c. 39, authorizing the board of directors of any railroad company to change a terminus at any time before final location of the line, is not a "special law," within the Constitution; the provision being applicable merely to laws for the benefit of particular corporations, designated by name. Memphis & St. L. R. Co. v. Union R. Co., 95 S. W. 1019, 1024, 116 Tenn. 500.

Regulation of drainage

Acts 1909, c. 13, amended the drainage law of 1907, and section 1 provided that where drainage districts had been established, or where a hearing had been theretofore had on the petition, and action taken by the county commissioners' court, or where a public hearing was then pending, and the notices have been posted, the notices of the public hearing, as well as of the hearing on the engineer's report, provided for by section 10, should be deemed and declared legal notices of the public hearing. Acts 1911, c. 118, amending the Drainage Act 1907, provides that "in all drainage districts heretofore created, and which have issued and registered bonds with the comptroller," all proceedings done in connection with and leading up to the creation "of such districts" and the issuance of such bonds are hereby declared valid and legal. Held, that the statutes were not special laws within Const. art. 3, § 57, prescribing certain formalities in the passage of such laws. Parker v. Harris County Drainage Dist. No. 2 (Tex.) 148 S. W. 351, 362.

Regulation of elections

Acts 1904, p. 197, c. 93, amending St. 1903, § 1596a, subsec. 2, making the sheriff ex officio a member of the county board of election commissioners, so as to provide that, in counties containing cities of the second class, the circuit court clerk, instead of the sheriff, shall be a member of the board, is repugnant to Const. § 59, prohibiting the enactment of a "special law," where a general law can be made applicable, and forbidding the passage of special acts to provide for conducting elections. Droege v. McInerney, 87 S. W. 1085, 120 Ky. 796.

Act March 2, 1911 (Acts 1911, c. 83), providing for the time of election of all judges of the probate, juvenile, and superior courts of the state, is not rendered a "special act," and hence unconstitutional within Const. art. 4, § 22, prohibiting special acts regulating the election of county and township officers, because it specifically designates the courts to which it refers, and thus excludes courts hereafter created. Spencer v. Knight, 98 N. E. 342, 344, 177 Ind. 564.

Regulation of irrigation

A law which defines the procedure for determining conflicting rights of appropriators and owners of water rights and applying to all alike of this peculiar class is a "general" and not a "special law," in the constitutional sense. Boise Irrigation & Land Co. v. Stewart, 77 Pac. 25, 28, 10 Idaho, 38.

Regulation of liquor traffic

Laws 1905, c. 115, prohibiting saloons within five miles of any United States government sanatorium, and within specified distances of any military reservation, and of enumerated educational institutions, is a general statute, and not a special one, within Act Cong. July 30, 1886, c. 818, 24 Stat. 170, prohibiting the "special laws," though there was but one United States sanatorium in the territory at the time of the passage of the act. Rapp v. Venable, 110 Pac. 834, 837, 15 N. M. 509.

Act Feb. 25, 1904, 24 St. at Large, p. 485, amending General Dispensary Law March 6, 1896, 22 St. at Large, p. 128, § 7, and levying a tax of one-half a mill on counties voting out the dispensary with the exception of two counties which never had dispensaries, is not a violation of Const. art. 3, § 34, as a "special law," where a general law could be applicable, but the law is general with special provisions. Murph v. Landrum, 56 S. E. 850, 855, 76 S. C. 21.

Regulation of occupations

A statute providing for an attorney's lien on his client's cause of action, providing that attorneys may contract for a percentage of the proceeds of any settlement, and that on notice to a defendant of an agreement between the attorney and client, stating the interest the attorney has in the cause of action, if defendant after such notice settles the cause of action without consent of the attorney, defendant shall be liable for the attorney's lien, is a general law and not class legislation on the ground that it simply applies to attorneys at law. O'Connor v. St. Louis Transit Co., 97 S. W. 150, 153, 198 Mo. 622, 115 Am. St. Rep. 495, 8 Ann. Cas. 703.

Regulation of public lands

Where a contract for the preparation of abstracts of title required the insertion of all "special acts" of Congress affecting the property, the abstractor was not authorized to insert Act Cong. Sept. 28, 1850, c. 84, 9 Stat. 519, granting swamp lands to the state; that not being a special act of Congress, but an act general in its terms, applicable to all the lands of the state and in the state of the character described, and where such contract required the inclusion of "special acts" of Congress, or of the state Legislature, the abstractor was not authorized to include an act of Congress donating internal improvement lands, nor state statutes curing defective conveyances and acknowledgments. McVeigh v. Chicago Mill & Lumber Co., 132 S. W. 638, 642, 96 Ark. 480.

Regulation of schools

The school law of 1907 (P. L. 1907, p. 365) enacted in obedience to the constitutional mandate and in general terms extending throughout the entire state, purporting to deal with the single general subject of a system of free schools for education of all children in the state between the ages of five and eighteen years, and creating a board of trustees of the Teachers' Retirement Fund with enumerated powers is not a "special act," violative of Const. art. 4, § 7, par. 11, providing that the legislation shall pass no special act conferring corporate powers. Allen v. Board of Education of City of Passaic, 79 Atl. 101, 103, 81 N. J. Law, 135.

Regulation of taxation

Since property used for railroad or canal purposes constitutes a class for taxation by reason of its use a tax law operating on the whole mass of the property so used is a general law, while a tax law which does not embrace in its operation all the property so used is a "special law." United New Jersey R. & Canal Co. v. Parker, 69 Atl. 239, 245, 75 N. J. Law, 771, modifying 67 Atl. 686, and Central R. Co. of New Jersey v. State Board of Assessors, 67 Atl. 672.

Special provisions in general laws

The phrase "special provisions in general laws," as used in Const. art. 3, § 34, XII, providing that the General Assembly shall forthwith enact general laws concerning the subjects mentioned in such section which shall be uniform in their operation, "provided that nothing contained in this section shall prohibit the General Assembly from enacting special provisions in general laws," means provisions in general laws which, while having a limited application, must not be so inconsistent with the general scheme or purpose of the statute as to prevent substantial uniformity of operation throughout the state. State ex rel. Schroder v. Burns, 52 S. E. 960, 961, 73 S. C. 194 (citing State v. Queen, 40 S. E. 553, 554, 62 S. C. 247, 251; Caroline Grocery Co. v. Burnet, 39 S. E. 381, 384, 61 S. C. 205, 211, 58 L. R. A. 687; State v. Higgins, 28 S. E. 15, 51 S. C. 51, 38 L. R. A. 561; Dean v. Spartanburg County, 37 S. E. 226, 59 S. C. 110; Nance v. Anderson County, 39 S. E. 5, 60 S. C. 501),

SPECIAL LEGISLATION

See Special Law.

SPECIAL MANDATE

"Special mandate," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 509, declaring that a judgment lies dates from the filing of special mandate from the Supreme to the lower court, refers entirely to the special mandate required by section 594 on reversal of a judgment in whole or in part and has no application where a judgment was affirmed. Harvey v. Godding, 109 N. W. 220, 221, 77 Neb. 289, 124 Am. St. Rep. 841.

SPECIAL MEETING

By the statute a "special meeting" of the board of county commissioners is a meeting called upon order of a majority of the board after the close of the regular session to be held at such time as the order may fix. The order must be entered of record, and five days' notice is required to be given to those not joining in the order. Gilbert v. Canyon County, 94 Pac. 1027, 1030, 14 Idaho, 429.

SPECIAL MOTION

Under Comp. Laws 1897, §§ 436, 437, providing that a judgment creditor whose execution has been returned unsatisfied may file a bill to compel the discovery of any property belonging to defendant, and the court shall have power to compel such discovery and prevent transfer of such property, and chancery rule 30, subd. "b," providing that, when the complainant in a creditor's bill shall have the statutory right of discovery, the defendant shall fully answer all interrogatories, and, if he fails to do so, the complainant may have his right to further answer and disclosure determined by the court on special motion, the trial court has a discretionary power to compel such discovery; the chancery rule having been promulgated by the Supreme Court, which is presumed to have used the term "special motion" in its technical sense which is not a motion of course, but one directed to the discretion of the court. Crawford v. Mandell, 138 N. W. 705, 707, 173 Mich. 109.

SPECIAL OCCASION

What will constitute a "special occasion" not being stated by Cr. Code, div. 11, § 3 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1911, c. 38, § 405), providing that, if the grand jurors are dismissed before the court adjourns, they may be summoned again on any special occasion at such time as the court directs, it is left to the discretion of the circuit court to determine when and for what purpose they shall be recalled. People v. McCauley, 100 N. E. 182, 184, 256 Ill. 504.

SPECIAL ORDER

Any special order, see Any.

An order amending a judgment already entered is a "special order after final judgment," and therefore appealable, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1722, as amended by Sess. Laws 1899, p. 146. State ex rel. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co. v. District Court of Second Judicial Dist., 79 Pac. 410, 411, 32 Mont. 20.

An order of the district court overruling a motion to dismiss an appeal to that court from a judgment of a justice of the peace is not a "special order" made after final judgment so as to be appealable. Raymond v. Raymond, 79 Pac. 1056, 1057, 32 Mont. 170.

An order overruling a motion to set aside an order of dismissal of an action, and for reargument of question involved in a demurrer to the complaint, is a "special order" after final judgment, and not a judgment. Oliver v. Kootenai County, 90 Pac. 107, 108, 13 Idaho, 281.

A judgment of dismissal and for costs is a final judgment, and an order overruling a motion to vacate the judgment is a "special order" after final judgment and appealable under Rev. St. 1899, § 806 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 769), authorizing an appeal from any special order after final judgment. State ex rel. Potter v. Riley, 118 S. W. 647, 656, 219 Mo. 667.

Where, in a suit to quiet title, a guardian ad litem was appointed at plaintiff's instance for a minor defendant, and, after hearing, the court entered judgment in favor of plaintiff, quieting his title to the premises, and added to the judgment a provision requiring plaintiff to pay the sum of $200 to such guardian ad litem for his services, such part of the judgment was not appealable as a "special order made after final judgment," within Code Civ. Proc. § 939. Aronson v. Levison, 83 Pac. 154, 155, 148 Cal. 364.

A statute authorizing an appeal from a "special order made after final judgment" is broad enough to authorize an appeal from an order made by the court vacating or setting aside a judgment. Shumake v. Shumake, 107 Pac. 42, 45, 17 Idaho, 649.

Certain persons obtained a judgment in the superior court against petitioner in a partnership accounting, and on August 5th a final judgment was rendered in partition proceedings confirming the sale of the property involved therein, and directing that petitioner herein and others be paid a certain sum, but the referee, without any order of court, delivered the money to the clerk of court, who gave it to the county treasurer. On August 18th G. had execution issued under the judgment in the partition proceeding which was levied upon petitioner's interest in the money deposited with the county treasurer, and his interest therein was sold to G. for the value of the money, but the treasurer refused to deliver the money to him without an order of court, whereupon G. filed a petition in the superior court praying an order directing the treasurer to pay over the money, and, on the hearing, an order was issued directing the treasurer to pay over the money as required; the order being made without notice to petitioner. Held that, since the order concerned and affected the judgment against petitioner, it was appealable as a "special order" after final judgment, within Code Civ. Proc. § 939, subd. 3, and it was immaterial whether the execution should have issued on the judgment in the accounting action or in the suit for partition, or that G. and the county treasurer were strangers to both actions, or that the two actions were entirely unrelated. Magee v. Superior Court of Solano County, 101 Pac. 532, 535, 10 Cal. App. 154.

SPECIAL POWER

Real Property Law, § 118, declares a "special power" to be in trust where a person or class of persons other than the grantee is designated as entitled to any benefit from the disposition or charge authorized by the power. Murray v. Miller, 70 N. E. 870, 873, 178 N. Y. 316.

SPECIAL PRESENTMENT

An indorsement of "true bill" is not necessary to the finding of an indictment, and, since a "special presentment" is treated as an indictment in this state, the indorsement "special presentment" on the finding of the grand jury is sufficient as a finding of an indictment. Barlow v. State, 56 S. E. 131, 133, 127 Ga. 58 (citing Groves v. State, 73 Ga. 205; Foster v. State, 41 Ga. 582; Martin v. State, 46 N. W. 621, 30 Neb. 507; Sparks v. Commonwealth, 9 Pa. 354; State v. Williams, 18 South. 647, 47 La. Ann. 1609; White v. Commonwealth, 70 Va. 824; Tilly v. State, 21 Fla. 242; State v. Elliott, 11 S. W. 566, 98 Mo. 150; State v. Hogan, 31 Mo. 340; State v. Bowman, 2 N. E. 289, 103 Ind. 69).

SPECIAL PRIVILEGE

Especial privilege, see, also, Especial.

A "special privilege" in constitutional law is a right, power, franchise, immunity, or privilege granted to or vested in a person or class of persons, to the exclusion of others and in derogation of common right. City of Plattsmouth v. Nebraska Telephone Co., 114 N. W. 588, 590, 80 Neb. 460, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 654, 127 Am. St. Rep. 779.

SPECIAL PRIVILEGE OR IMMUNITY

See, also, Privileges and Immunities.

Rev. St. § 3836-3 (Bates' Ann. St. p. 2130), conferring power on building and loan associations to assess such dues, fines, interest, and premium on loans made, or other assessments as may be provided for in the constitution and by-laws, and that they shall not be deemed usury, though in excess of the legal rate of interest, is a valid enactment, and not in conflict with Const. art. 1, § 2, prohibiting "special privileges or immunities," in that it unlawfully discriminates in favor of building and loan associations on the question of usury. Cramer v. Southern Ohio Loan & Trust Co., 74 N. E. 200, 204, 72 Ohio St. 395, 69 L. R. A. 415, 2 Ann. Cas. 990; Brooklyn Building & Loan Ass'n v. Desnoyers, 26 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 352, 354.

A statute requiring corporations of other states and foreign countries, doing business in the state, to designate a resident agent on whom process may be served, and providing that the designation shall be filed with the Secretary of State, and making a certified copy of such designation sufficient evidence of incorporation, is not invalid, as granting special and exclusive rights, privileges, and immunities to corporations. Anglo-Californian Bank v. Field, 80 Pac. 1080, 1082, 146 Cal. 644.

Act Oct. 1, 1903 (Loc. Acts 1903, p. 443), providing for the establishment, maintenance, and regulation of a dispensary in the town of Elba for the sale of liquors, and to establish and perpetuate a board of commissioners for the management of such dispensary—such board being created without funds to inaugurate the business, though authorized to borrow money—and providing that such commissioners shall receive all the issues and profits thereof, was unconstitutional, as a grant of a "special privilege" to the commissioners. Town of Elba v. Rhodes, 38 South. 807, 808, 142 Ala. 689.

Since Acts 1903, p. 140, c. 67, authorizing the county commissioners to pay to certain officers therein named salaries, notwithstanding the fact that such respective officers have not turned into the county treasury out of the fees that may have been collected a sum sufficient to equal the total amount of their respective quarterly allowance of salary, applies to all sheriffs who were in office during all or any part of the time from January 1, 1900, to March 3, 1903, the date of the taking effect of the act of 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 140, c. 67), and whose salaries have not been paid in full on account of the insufficiency of collected fees, it is not obnoxious to Const. art. 1, § 23, prohibiting the General Assembly from granting "special privileges or immunities" to any citizen or class of citizens. Board of Com'rs of Perry County v. Lindemann, 73 N. E. 912, 913, 165 Ind. 186.

A franchise or privilege granted by a city to an electric company to use its streets, not being exclusive, is not a "special privilege or immunity," prohibited by Neb. Const. art. 3, § 15. Omaha Electric Light & Power Co. v. Omaha, 172 Fed. 494, 498.

Neither the power of a municipality to contract with a third party for the construction and operation of waterworks, street railways, or other public utilities, nor the right of such a third party under such a contract, constitutes a special privilege or immunity, within the meaning of those terms in section 16, art. 1, of the Constitution of Nebraska, which prohibits the Legislature from "making any irrevocable grant of 'special privileges or immunities.'" Omaha Water Co. v. Omaha, 147 Fed. 1, 77 C. C. A. 267, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 736, 8 Ann. Cas. 614 (citing Walla Walla v. Walla Walla Water Co., 19 Sup. Ct. 77, 172 U. S. 1-17, 43 L. Ed. 341; Detroit v. Detroit Citizens' Street R. Co., 22 Sup. Ct. 410, 184 U. S. 368-389, 46 L. Ed. 592).

SPECIAL PROCEEDING

See Original Special Proceeding.

A "special proceeding" is a generic term for all proceedings in courts of justice which are not ordinary actions. Anderson v. Englehart, 105 Pac. 571, 573, 18 Wyo. 196, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 894. See, also, State ex rel. Carleton v. District Court of Lewis & Clark County, 82 Pac. 789, 790, 33 Mont. 138, 8 Ann. Cas. 752 (citing 1 Enc. L. & P. 906).

"The term 'special proceeding,' within its proper definition, is a generic term for all civil remedies in courts of justice which are not ordinary actions. Where the law confers a right and authorizes a special application to a court to enforce it, the proceeding is special, within the ordinary meaning of the term 'special proceeding.'" Nelson v. Steele, 88 Pac. 95, 96, 12 Idaho, 762 (quoting and adopting definition in Re Central Irr. Dist., 49 Pac. 354, 117 Cal. 382, and citing Schuster v. Schuster, 87 N. W. 1014, 84 Minn. 403).

A "special proceeding" implies that there is a legal controversy existing between the parties. Queens County Water Co. v. O'Brien, 115 N. Y. Supp. 495, 499, 131 App. Div. 91.

The term "special proceedings," as used in Rev. St. 1898, § 3069, subd. 2, relating to appeals, has the same meaning as defined in sections 2593, 2596, providing that the title of which they are a part relate only to actions and proceedings in the circuit court and other courts of record, and declaring after defining an "action," that every other remedy is a "special proceeding." Ellinger v. Equitable Life Assur. Society of U. S., 104 N. W. 811, 813, 125 Wis. 643.

Accounting

Under Civ. Code Prac. 1869, §§ 2, 3, 4, dividing remedies in civil cases into actions and special proceedings, and defining a civil action as an ordinary proceeding in a court of justice by one party against another to enforce a private right, or redress or prevent a private wrong, and declaring that every other remedy in a civil case is a "special proceeding," and Kirby's Dig. § 6033, which provides that a civil action is commenced by filing a complaint and causing a summons to issue, the matter of confirming accounts of guardians, or administrators or executors, is not a civil action but a "special proceeding." Nelson v. Cowling, 116 S. W. 890, 893, 89 Ark. 334.

Appeal from allowance of claim

An appeal from a city auditing board to the county board of supervisors by a constable for the adjustment of his claim for services is a "special proceeding." Perry v. Myer, 89 N. Y. Supp. 347, 348.

Under Mills' Ann. St. § 803, providing that an appeal to the district court from an order of the board of county commissioners disallowing a claim shall be tried the same as appeals from justices' courts, an appeal from the disallowance of a claim is not a "special proceeding" in the district court, but is an "action," and its judgment is reviewable in the Supreme Court, within Const. art. 6, § 2, conferring on the Supreme Court jurisdiction to review final judgments in civil cases. Washington County v. Murray, 100 Pac. 588, 590, 45 Colo. 115.

Appeal from order removing officer

Under a city charter provision authorizing the mayor to remove for cause any one appointed to office by him, and providing that upon conviction of the cause charged the accused may appeal to the Supreme Court, an appeal from an order removing an officer is, under Code Civ. Proc. § 3334, defining special proceedings as prosecutions other than actions for the enforcement or protection of a right or redress of a wrong, a "special proceeding," and costs may, in the discretion of the court, be awarded at the rates allowed for similar services in an action, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 3240. O'Neil v. Mansfield, 95 N. Y. Supp. 1009, 1014, 47 Misc. Rep. 516.

Appeal from revocation of license

An appeal from a judgment of the State Board of Medical Examiners revoking a physician's license is a "special proceeding," within a statute defining an action as an ordinary proceeding by which one party prosecutes another for the enforcement or protection of a right, the redress or prevention of a wrong, or the punishment of a public offense, and declaring every other remedy to be a "special proceeding." State ex rel. Gattan v. District Court of Second Judicial Dist., 101 Pac. 961, 39 Mont. 134.

Attachment

"Special proceeding," as used in the South Carolina Code, does not include an attachment, or process incident to an action. Allen v. Partlow, 3 S. C. 417, 418.

Certiorari

The "writ of review," by B. & C. Comp. § 594, made substantially the same as the common law writ of certiorari, is a "special proceeding." Hall v. Dunn, 97 Pac. 811, 813, 52 Or. 475, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 193.

Commitment of insane

Proceedings for commitment of a person as insane are not "special proceedings," within the meaning of that term, as defined by the Code. Costs cannot be charged against the petitioner. In re Murtaugh, 102 N. Y. Supp. 176, 177, 117 App. Div. 302.

Proceeding to charge assignor with costs

A proceeding against the assignor of a cause of action to charge him with costs, under Code Civ. Proc. § 3247, providing that, where an action is brought in the name of another by a transferee, he is liable for costs as if plaintiff, and that, where costs are awarded against the plaintiff, the court may direct the person so liable to pay them, is a "special proceeding," properly commenced by notice or order to show cause. Friedman v. Metropolitan S. S. Co., 96 N. Y. Supp. 331, 333, 109 App. Div. 600 (citing Marvin v. Marvin, 78 N. Y. 541).

Condemnation proceedings

Condemnation proceedings are "special proceedings" provided by statute. State ex rel. Davis v. District Court of Fifth Judicial Dist., 74 Pac. 200, 29 Mont. 153.

Laws 1880, p. 349, c. 292, confers power to appoint commissioners in condemnation proceedings upon the circuit court or the judge thereof. Laws 1905, p. 446, c. 295, confers on the superior court for Lincoln county jurisdiction equal to and concurrent with the circuit court of that county in "all civil actions and proceedings at law and in equity," with an immaterial exception and confers express authority to issue all commissions provided by law, and provides that, whenever a statute shall mention the circuit judge, the words shall be deemed to apply to the judge of the superior court for Lincoln county. St. 1898, § 2594, divides remedies in courts of justice into "actions" and "special proceedings"; the latter embracing all remedies other than actions, under the direct provisions of section 2596. Held, that inasmuch as the words "at law and in equity" embrace all exercise of judicial or quasi judicial power of courts, whether conferred by statute, common law, or equitable rules, the expression "all civil actions and proceedings at law and in equity" is extensive and general, rather than restrictive and particular, and confers on the superior court or the judge thereof the same power to appoint commissioners in condemnation proceedings as is possessed by circuit courts or judges. Wisconsin River Imp. Co. v. Pier, 118 N. W. 857, 859, 137 Wis. 325, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 538.

Enforcement of attorney's lien

A proceeding by a client against his attorney pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 66, authorizing the court, on the petition of the client or attorney, to determine and enforce the lien of the attorney, is not an "action" but is a "special proceeding." Cartier v. Spooner, 103 N. Y. Supp. 505, 507, 118 App. Div. 342.

Motion to exclude attorneys from participating in litigation

An order denying a motion to exclude attorneys privately employed in an action by the state to recover a penalty from participating in the litigation is not an order terminating a "special proceeding." A special proceeding is one either entirely outside of an action, as a proceeding for contempt, or to condemn land, or one merely connected with an action as a proceeding by a person not a party to the action, to be made such. State v. Wisconsin Telephone Co., 113 N. W. 944, 945, 134 Wis. 335.

Proceedings supplementary to execution

Each of the remedies provided for by Code Civ. Proc. § 2432, in proceedings supplementary to an execution against property, is a "special proceeding" and should be prosecuted as such. Harris v. Weiss, 105 N. Y. Supp. 8, 9; McAlpin v. Stoddard, 105 N. Y. Supp. 9, 11, 54 Misc. Rep. 647; Ward v. Stoddard, 128 N. Y. Supp. 846, 849, 144 App. Div. 143; Id., 127 N. Y. S. 713, 70 Misc. Rep. 506.

Supplementary proceedings against a foreign corporation are "special proceedings" within Code Civ. Proc. § 433, providing that the provisions of section 432 for service of process on a foreign corporation by delivering a copy thereof "to a person designated for the purpose, as provided in General Corporation Law (Consol. Laws, c. 23) § 16," shall not apply to special proceedings "where special provision for the service thereof is otherwise made." Meyer v. Consolidated Ice Co., 116 N. Y. S. 906, 132 App. Div. 265; Id., 90 N. E. 54, 55, 196 N. Y. 471.

Supplementary proceedings, though termed "special proceedings" in Code Civ. Proc. § 2433, are not such to the extent of preventing an order therein requiring the judgment debtor to attend for examination, being an order in an "action," within section 338, subd. 4, so as to allow it to be served in any part of the state, though made by a justice of the City Court. Deane v. Sire, 95 N. Y. Supp. 556, 557, 48 Misc. Rep. 606.

Habeas corpus proceeding

Habeas corpus belongs to what under the Code, are termed "special proceedings." Winovich v. Emery, 93 Pac. 988, 990, 33 Utah, 345.

Highway proceeding

A proceeding for the laying out of a highway being a "special proceeding" within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 3334, costs may be awarded the successful party under section 3240, providing that costs in a special proceeding may be awarded to any party in the discretion of the court. In re Terry, 123 N. Y. S. 258, 262, 67 Misc. Rep. 514.

Injunction proceeding

The procedure by which an injunction against the foreclosure of a mortgage by advertisement may be obtained under Rev. Codes 1899, § 5845, is not a "special proceeding," within the meaning of that term, as used in the Code. Tracy v. Scott, 101 N. W. 905, 906, 13 N. D. 577.

As used in Rev. St. 1899, § 4247, providing for review of a judgment or final order, and section 4249 declaring that an order affecting a substantial right, which in effect determines the action or prevents a judgment, and an order affecting a substantial right in a special proceeding, is a "final order" which may be reviewed in the Supreme Court, the term "special proceeding" is not limited to a proceeding apart from an action, but includes a necessary proceeding to aid the ultimate relief sought in an action, and hence an order denying a motion to dissolve a temporary injunction before judgment was a final order, terminating a "special proceeding," and reviewable on writ of error. Anderson v. Englehart, 105 Pac. 571, 573, 18 Wyo. 196, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 894 (citing 1 Enc. L. & P. 996).

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 22, declaring that an "action" is an ordinary proceeding in a court of justice by which one party prosecutes another for the enforcement or protection of a right, the redress or prevention of a wrong, or the punishment of a public offense, and section 23 declaring that every other remedy is a "special proceeding," a suit in equity to restrain defendants from polluting a water course is an "action" and not a "special proceeding" within Code Civ. Proc. § 394, providing that whenever an action is brought by a county or a city against residents of another county or city, or a corporation doing business in the latter, the action must be, on motion of the defendant, transferred for trial to a county other than the plaintiff, if the plaintiff is a county, and other than that in which the plaintiff is situated, if the plaintiff is a city, the term "special proceeding" being limited to a proceeding in a court which under the common law and equity practice was neither an action at law nor a suit in equity. Yuba County v. North American Consol. Gold Min. Co., 107 Pac. 139, 140, 12 Cal. App. 223.

Proceeding to investigate finances of town

A proceeding instituted by the freeholders of a town for an investigation into its financial affairs, under General Municipal Law, § 3, Laws 1892, p. 1733, c. 683, is a "special proceeding." In re Town of Hadley, 89 N. Y. Supp. 910, 911, 44 Misc. Rep. 265.

Application for leave to file petition in error

The term "special proceeding" is sometimes defined as a proceeding in court which was not, under the common-law and equity practice, either an action at law or a suit in equity. The term is used in the Code in contradistinction to "action." So where one who has been tried and convicted before the mayor of a municipal corporation for violation of an ordinance applies, under section 1752, Rev. St. 1892, to the court of common pleas, or a judge thereof, for leave to file a petition in error to review the proceedings and judgment of the mayor, and the court or judge to whom the application is made refuses to grant leave to file the petition in error, such refusal is not reviewable on error in the circuit court. Such application is not a "special proceeding" but a request for leave to file a proceeding to review a judgment. Village of Canfield v. Brobst, 72 N. E. 459, 461, 71 Ohio St. 42 (citing Enc. of Pl. p. 112).

Mandamus proceeding

The application for a writ of mandate is a "special proceeding" of a civil nature. Jones v. Board of Police Com'rs of City and County of San Francisco, 74 Pac. 696, 697, 141 Cal. 96; Nelson v. Steele, 88 Pac. 95, 96, 12 Idaho, 762.

A mandamus proceeding is a "special proceeding," and not an action, under Rev. Codes 1905, §§ 6741-6743, and is not triable de novo on appeal, section 7229 allowing a new trial only in actions. State v. Fabrick, 112 N. W. 74, 75, 16 N. D. 94.

When the writ of mandamus is the sole relief sought, it is ordinarily classed as a "special proceeding," but remains triable at law. Ford v. City of Manchester, 113 N. W. 846, 848, 136 Iowa, 213.

Probate proceedings

A proceeding in the probate court to establish a will does not come within the category of a civil action, but is a "special proceeding," though the latter is not defined in the statute. Lanning v. Gay, 78 Pac. 810, 811, 70 Kan. 353.

A proceeding in the Surrogate's Court to compel payment of a legacy is a "special proceeding," and is not controlled by Code Civ. Proc. § 1819, establishing limitations for an "action" to recover a legacy. In re Cooper, 101 N. Y. Supp. 283, 284, 51 Misc. Rep. 881.

Application to be relieved from bid at judicial sale

"An application to compel a purchaser to take title and that of a purchaser relieved from his bid are regarded as 'special proceedings.'" So under Code Civ. Proc. § 3240, providing that in case of "special proceedings," where costs are not specially regulated by the act, they may be allowed in the discretion of the court at the rates allowed for similar services in other actions, allowance for counsel fees in a proceeding to recover payments on land bought of a receiver, when there was a failure of good title, is discretionary with the court. People v. New York Building-Loan Banking Co., 82 N. E. 184, 185, 189 N. Y. 233 (quoting and adopting the definition in Parish v. Parish, 67 N. E. 298, 175 N. Y. 181).

Removal of administrator

An application to the clerk of the superior court to remove an administrator, as authorized by Code, § 1521, is neither a "civil action" nor a "special proceeding," within

Code Civ. Proc., for the purpose of litigating rights and liabilities of adverse parties, but is a mere application for the exercise of a statutory power to protect the estate. In re Battle's Estate, 74 S. E. 23, 24, 158 N. C. 388.

Removal of magistrate

Proceedings provided for in Const. art. 6, § 17, and Greater New York Charter (Laws 1901, p. 599, c. 466) § 1401a, by virtue of which city magistrates may be removed from office by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, are not "special proceedings" within Code Civ. Proc. § 3334, defining that term as every other prosecution "by a party," and hence are not reviewable by the Court of Appeals. In re Droege, 90 N. E. 340, 342, 197 N. Y. 44.

Statutory arbitration

Statutory arbitration being made by Code Civ. Proc. c. 17, "special proceedings" within the purview of section 66, giving a lien from the commencement of any special proceeding unaffected by any settlement between the parties, an attorney's lien for fees on a specified portion of awards in favor of his client in statutory arbitration proceedings was not affected by the fact that the arbitration agreement provided for the setting off of awards recovered by each against the other, unless the attorney was a party to or consented to the agreement for the set-off of awards, since an attorney's lien is superior to the right of parties to set off judgments recovered by them respectively against each other. Webb v. Parker, 114 N. Y. Supp. 439, 494, 130 App. Div. 92.

Action for trespass

An action by the Forest, Fish, and Game Commission for trespass on the forest preserve is not a suit or special proceeding within Laws 1897, p. 98, c. 220, § 20, as amended by Laws 1898, p. 264, c. 135, § 20, authorizing the forest preserve board to bring an action or special proceeding for certain purposes and the provision of that section permitting the forest preserve board to settle and compromise any action or special proceeding authorized thereby furnishes no authority to the Forest, Fish, and Game Commissioner to settle such action. People v. Santa Clara Lumber Co., 113 N. Y. Supp. 70, 75, 60 Misc. Rep. 150.

Proceeding to vacate judgment

An order of the superior court pending an appeal from a justice, there triable de novo, vacating the justice's judgment, is not an order preventing a judgment in the action from which appeal might be taken, or one after judgment; but though entitled, like the papers on which the motion was founded, in the action, is one in a "special proceeding," within Rev. St. 1898, § 3069, enumerating appealable orders. Deuster v. Zillmer, 97 N. W. 31, 33, 119 Wis. 402.

SPECIAL PROMISE

A "special promise" to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another means an express promise, and not one implied by law. Peele v. Powell, 73 S. E. 234, 236, 156 N. C. 553.

SPECIAL RECEIVER

A "special receiver" is simply an officer of the court and as such has no right even in the cause in which he is appointed, without leave of the court, to intermeddle in questions affecting the rights of the parties. Whyel v. Jane Lew Coal & Coke Co., 69 S. E. 192, 194, 67 W. Va. 651.

SPECIAL REGISTRATION

Under Const. § 6, requiring all elections to be free and equal, section 147 providing that, where registration is required, only persons registered may vote, Ky. St. 1903, § 1486, as amended by Acts 1904, p. 31, c. 6, requiring voters of all incorporated cities and towns to register before being entitled to vote, section 1490 providing that the general registration shall be on the first Tuesday in October in each year, and section 1495 providing that, when an election is ordered to be held in a county containing an incorporated city or town, at any other time than the regular November election, the officer ordering it shall fix a day for registration of the persons entitled to vote at such election, and declaring that the registrations thereunder shall be known as "special registrations," and that any person so registered shall be entitled to vote at all elections held prior to the next general election, a local option election held in an incorporated town in April, without any special registration being provided for, is void, and may not be sustained by showing that the result was not affected by omission of such registration. Early v. Rains, 89 S. W. 289, 291, 121 Ky. 439.

SPECIAL SESSION

Local Option Law Or. (Laws 1905, p. 47, c. 2) § 10, provides that the county court 11 days after election, or as soon thereafter as practicable, shall hold a "special session," and, if a majority of the votes are for prohibition, the court shall immediately make an order declaring the result of the vote and absolutely prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors, etc. Held, that the court, by announcing the result of the election at a special session called during general term, did not invalidate the proceedings; the words "special session," as used in the act, not being synonymous with "special term" (the word "term" signifying "the space of time during which the court holds a session"), and the word "session," as used, referring to a temporary sitting of the court, for the transaction of special business assigned to them, which may occur either during a general or special term, and, if all members are present for such purpose, it is immaterial as to how it was called, or when, providing the time prescribed by the act for such special sitting has elapsed. State v. Edmunds, 104 Pac. 430, 432, 55 Or. 236 (quoting and adopting definition in Bouv. Law Dict.).

Gen. St. 1902, § 452, fixes the time and place of holding terms and sessions of the superior court. Section 454 provides that the judges of the superior court at their annual meeting shall provide for such "additional sessions" as may be necessary, and further provides that any judge may hold "a special session" for the trial of civil causes at any time, subject to the proviso that no contested issue shall be tried at a special session, except by a written agreement of parties or their counsel, unless 20 days' notice of the time and place of such session shall be given. The heading and body of a judgment file in a case described the session at which the trial was had as a "special session," and the notice which was given of the time and place of holding the session was stated. Held, that the session was a special session, at which it was error for the court to try the case, contested issues being involved therein, in the absence of a written agreement of the parties or their counsel, or of the prescribed 20 days' notice of the time and place of the session. O'Keefe v. Scoville Mfg. Co., 61 Atl. 961, 962, 78 Conn. 286.

SPECIAL STATUTE

See Special Law.

SPECIAL SUBJECT-MATTER OF LEGISLATION

See Specially Named Legislation.

SPECIAL TAIL

Created by the words "heirs of the body," see Heirs of the Body.

SPECIAL TAX

See, also, General Tax; Special Assessment.

The term "special tax," as used in Act No. 24 of 1870, prohibiting the police jury from applying to roads any funds in the treasury not derived from a special road tax, merely means a tax levied specially for road purposes. Klees v. Police Jury of Parish of St. Bernard, 59 South. 247, 249, 131 La. 263.

"Special taxes" voted in aid of railroads under constitutional sanction are not local assessments, since the word "special" implies merely an additional tax over and above the general tax authorized by the Constitution. Louisiana & A. Ry. Co. v. Shaw, 46 South. 994, 995, 121 La. 997.

Assessment for local improvements

The term "special taxes," as applied to the charging of the cost of the improvement of city streets against abutting property, is not technically correct. Such charges are special benefits and not taxes in any sense of the word. If they were taxes, they could not generally be enforced because the amount would make the total tax exceed the limitation prescribed by the Constitution. State ex rel. Johnson v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 93 S. W. 784, 787, 195 Mo. 228.

Section 3 of the private act of December 20, 1860 (Laws 1860, p. 56), conferring corporate powers upon plaintiff, which provides that a certain amount of plaintiff's ground, together with the property thereon, "shall be exempt from all taxation, state, county, municipal, and special during the existence of this charter," does not exempt such property from assessments for local improvements; the word "tax" not including assessments, and the word "special" as used with "taxation" referring to special taxes levied and collected in the manner of general taxes, such as road and school taxes, and not to local assessments. Board of Improvement of Paving Dist. No. 5 of Ft. Smith v. Sisters of Mercy, 109 S. W. 1165, 1167, 86 Ark. 109.

Income tax

Supply Act Feb. 18, 1905 (24 St. at Large, p. 993) § 5, requires county auditors and treasurers to collect taxes levied under its provisions, and forbids their collecting any other tax except, among others, such special tax as is authorized under any act or joint resolution of the General Assembly. Held, that the income tax provided for by Act March 5, 1897 (22 St. at Large, p. 529; Civ. Code 1902, §§ 325-331), is a "special tax" within section 5 of the supply act. Hence the act providing for the income tax was not repealed. Alderman v. Wells, 67 S. E. 781, 785, 85 S. C. 507, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 864.

SPECIAL TAX BILL

SPECIAL TERM

Local Option Law (Laws 1905, p. 47, c. 2) § 10, provides that the county court 11 days after election, or as soon thereafter as practicable, shall hold a "special session," and, if a majority of the votes are for prohibition, the court shall immediately make an order declaring the result of the vote and absolutely prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors, etc. Held, that the court by announcing the result of the election at a special session called during general term did not invalidate the proceedings, the words "special session" as used in the act not being synonymous with "special term," and the word "session" as used referring to a temporary sitting of the court, for the transaction of special business assigned to them, which may occur either during a general or special term, and, if all members are present for such purpose, it is immaterial as to how it was called, or when, providing the time prescribed by the act for such special sitting has elapsed. State v. Edmunds, 104 Pac.

430, 432, 55 Or. 236 (quoting and adopting definition in Bouv. Law Dict.).

Circuit and county judges can convene their courts only by authority of express statutes, and no power is given them to convene during vacation without a previous order and without notice, so that they cannot by merely transacting business call into being a term of court. The words "special" and "adjourned" were applied by statute to terms of courts of record, held pursuant to orders made in term time, long before the enactment of the statute relating to the number and time of the terms of the probate court. Other statutes specifically authorize the probate court to transact designated business in vacation, and still others provide for the calling of special terms in vacation in certain cases. In other cases where courts may convene during vacation without previous order of adjournment during term time, provision is made for the calling of the special term by the judge or majority of the judges of the court in question; the terms of the Supreme Court held by order of the court in term time and those called by a majority of the judges in vacation being designated as "special terms." Held, that Rev. St. 1909, § 4060, which provides the number and time of the terms of the probate court, and that said court "may hold special and adjourned terms at any time when required," interpreted in the light of legislative intention expressed in the correlated acts, presupposes some action on the part of the court as such and does not invest the judge with the power to convene his court at will, so that where such judge in vacation, without adjournment to a given day, and without a previous order and without notice, took his seat and entered an order for the sale of land held by a curatrix, the court was not in session, and the order was void. Carter v. Carter, 141 S. W. 873, 237 Mo. 624.

A "special term" of a circuit court of the United States, as the expression is employed in Rev. St. § 670, is a session ordered for the disposal of business, supplementary to a regular term and to be held at the place fixed by Congress for holding such regular term. American R. Co. v. Castro, 27 S. Ct. 466, 468, 204 U. S. 453, 51 L. Ed. 564.

SPECIAL TRAVERSE

A "special traverse" must always consist of an inducement, which is the affirmative part of the pleading, and a negative, which is called the absque hoc, and a conclusion to the country. Beatty v. Parsons (Del.) 78 Atl. 302, 304, 2 Boyce, 134.

Where a plea is what is known as a "special traverse," the inducement should be in substance a sufficient answer to the declaration, though not a direct denial nor yet confession and avoidance, and such a plea should conclude with a traverse which goes to a material point of the declaration on which the merits may be tried. Rogers v. Barth, 117 Ill. App. 323, 327.

SPECIAL TRUST

The English statute of uses (St. 27, Henry VIII, c. 10) was not in force in the state of Virginia after the year 1792, and has never been adopted, in any form, as part of the law of this state, although St. 27, Henry VIII, did execute all trusts except what were known as "special trusts"—trusts imposing duties upon the trustees which had to be kept alive to avoid defeating the intention of the parties. Blake v. O'Neal, 61 S. E. 410, 414, 63 W. Va. 483, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1147.

SPECIAL VENIRE

Under Code Cr. Proc. art. 642, defining a "special venire" as a writ issued by the district court in a capital case, commanding the sheriff to summon jurors for the trial, a special venire issued in a capital case which names the case by style and number and the court in which it is pending, and which gives the date to which the same is returnable, is sufficient, and it need not state that the case is a capital one or state the nature of the offense. Harrelson v. State, 132 S. W. 783, 785, 60 Tex. Cr. R. 534.

SPECIAL VERDICT

A "special verdict" is defined by statute as that by which the jury finds the facts only, leaving the judgment to the court. Glade v. Eastern Illinois Min. Co., 107 S. W. 1002, 1004, 129 Mo. App. 443 (citing Shipp v. Snyder, 25 S. W. 900, 121 Mo. 155); Nerger v. Commercial Mut. Fire Assoc., 114 N. W. 689, 690, 21 S. D. 537 (quoting Rev. Code of Civ. Proc. § 270); Russell v. Rhinehart, 122 N. Y. Supp. 539, 542, 137 App. Div. 843; Morrison v. Lee, 102 N. W. 223, 225, 13 N. D. 591.

A "special verdict" is one which sets out the facts, leaving the court to draw therefrom the conclusions of law. Blackshare v. State, 128 S. W. 549, 551, 94 Ark. 548, 140 Am. St. Rep. 144 (quoting and adopting definition in Bish. New Cr. Proc. § 1006).

A "special verdict" is that by which the jury find the facts only, leaving the judgment to the court. The true office of a special verdict is to single out the issuable facts of the case on which defendant's obligation rests. The question should be so framed as to present, in as clear and sharp a way as possible, the real issues concerning which proof is offered, so that, when determined by the jury, the court may apply the law and render judgment accordingly. Olwell v. Skobis, 105 N. W. 777, 781, 126 Wis. 308 (quoting and adopting the definition in Bigelow v. Danielson, 78 N. W. 599, 102 Wis. 470, 473).

The purpose of a "special verdict," is to furnish the basis of the judgment, while the purpose of "special interrogatories" is to elicit facts to test the correctness of the general verdict. Freedman v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 71 Atl. 901, 905, 81 Conn. 601, 15 Ann. Cas. 464.

Under Code, § 3725, defining a "general verdict" as one in which the jury pronounce generally for plaintiff or for defendant on all or any of the issues, and section 3726, defining a "special verdict" as one in which the jury finds facts only, and providing that it must present the ultimate facts as established by the evidence, and not the evidence to prove them, so that nothing remains to the court but to draw from them its conclusions of law, where all the material facts are determined by answers to interrogatories, such findings may together constitute a special verdict rendering a general verdict unnecessary. Farmers' Sav. Bank of Arispe v. Arispe Mercantile Co. (Iowa) 127 N. W. 1084, 1086.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1186, declaring that a "special verdict" is one by which the jury finds the facts only, leaving the court to determine which party is entitled to judgment thereon, where the court in an equity suit submitted two of several questions of fact to the jury, the jury's answers did not constitute a special verdict. Duclos v. Kelley, 89 N. E. 875, 876, 197 N. Y. 78, reversing 106 N. Y. Supp. 1058, 122 App. Div. 329.

The term "special verdict," in the Code, requiring the court on request to direct the jury to find a "special verdict," does not mean a finding on every material issue, but the object of the statute is to determine whether a general verdict is or is not against the law. Plyler v. Pacific Portland Cement Co., 92 Pac. 56, 60, 152 Cal. 125.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 625, providing that in actions for the recovery of money only, or real property, the jury may render a general or special verdict, and that in all other cases the court may direct a special verdict upon any of the issues, and that a special finding of facts inconsistent with the general verdict controls the latter, the term "special verdict" does not mean, as at common law, a finding upon every material issue in the case, but allows findings upon any issue; and, while there may be a conflict in the special findings themselves, any inconsistency with the general verdict serves to nullify it. Napa Valley Packing Co. v. San Francisco Relief & Red Cross Funds, 118 Pac. 469, 471, 16 Cal. App. 461.

A "special verdict," though comprising many findings, is but one verdict, and no material part of it can be set aside for want of sufficient evidence to sustain it without setting it all aside. Under a statute making a special finding by the jury conclusive between the parties as to the facts found, a judgment cannot be rendered on the remainder of a special verdict consisting of many findings, some of which are set aside as not sustained by the evidence, but a new trial must be granted. Casey-Swasey Co. v. Manchester Fire Ins. Co., 73 S. W. 864, 865, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 158 (citing Waller v. Liles, 70 S. W. 17, 96 Tex. 21).

Partial verdict distinguished

Where a count of the indictment charged defendant with receiving stolen property knowing the same to have been stolen, a verdict finding defendant guilty of receiving stolen property, and fixing his punishment at one year in the penitentiary, is not a "special verdict," but a partial verdict in the form of a general verdict on the count. Blackshare v. State, 128 S. W. 549, 551, 94 Ark. 548, 140 Am. St. Rep. 144.

SPECIALLY CHARGED

The words, "specially charged," when used in connection with a state officer's duty to enforce a statute, are not limited to a case where the officer is expressly commanded by the statute to bring suits for penalties or prosecute offenses under the act, but include every case where the officer is charged by his general duties as a law officer of the state to enforce the statute. Southern R. Co. v. McNeill, 155 Fed. 756, 775.

SPECIALLY EXCEPTED PERIL

Where a policy insuring "against all direct loss or damage by fire, except as herein-after provided," contains a provision that the insurer shall "not be liable for loss caused directly or indirectly by invasion * * * or for loss or damage occasioned by or through any earthquakes," a loss indirectly caused by the progress of fire from a distance, although originally started by an earthquake, is not within the exemption," and the insurer is not exempted from liability in such case by Civ. Code Cal. § 2628, which provides that, "when a peril is specially excepted in a contract of insurance, a loss which would not have occurred but for such peril is thereby excepted, although the immediate cause of the loss was a peril which was not excepted," since the peril "specially excepted" is fire directly caused by earthquake, and it was not the intention of the statute to create an exemption wider than that stipulated for by the parties. Williamsburgh City Fire Ins. Co. of Brooklyn v. Willard, 164 Fed. 404, 409, 90 C. C. A. 392, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 103.

SPECIALLY NAMED LEGISLATION

A proclamation calling a special session of the Legislature to enact all legislation as to corporations does not "specially name" legislation requiring railroad companies to fence their tracks, and Laws Colo. 1902 (Ex. Sess.) c. 1, known as the "fencing statute," is therefore void, under Const. art. 4, § 9, providing that at such session no business shall be transacted other than that specially named in the proclamation. Nielsen v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 187 Fed. 393, 396, 109 C. C. A. 225.

A proclamation of the Governor calling the Legislature in special session to enact any and all legislation relating to or in any wise affecting foreign and domestic corporations, or corporations of a quasi public nature, does not name any special subject-matter of legislation within Const. art. 4, § 9, requiring the Governor, convening the Legislature in special session to state the purposes for which it is convened, and an act passed at the special session, defining the liability of railroads for killing live stock, is invalid. Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Moss, 115 Pac. 696, 697, 50 Colo. 282.

SPECIALLY PRESCRIBED BY LAW

A provision in a standard fire policy that no suit or action should be maintainable thereon unless commenced within 12 months next after the fire, which provision was specially authorized by Laws 1886, p. 721, c. 488, §§ 2, 3, and Laws 1892, p. 1980, c. 690, § 121, prescribing a standard form of policy and forbidding the issuance of any other, constituted a limitation "specially prescribed by law," and not by a contract between the parties, within Code Civ. Proc. § 414, declaring that the provisions of the chapter shall constitute the only rules of limitation applicable to a civil action or special proceeding, except in the case where a different limitation is specially prescribed by law or a shorter limitation is prescribed by the written contract of the parties. Bellinger v. German Ins. Co., 100 N. Y. Supp. 424, 426, 113 App. Div. 917; Id., 100 N. Y. S. 424, 51 Misc. Rep. 463.

SPECIALLY SET UP

A right claimed under an authority exercised under the United States will be regarded as "specially set up or claimed," within the meaning of Rev. St. U. S. § 709 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 575], defining the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States over state courts, where it clearly and unmistakably appears from the opinion of the state court that the federal question was assumed to be in issue, that the decision was against the federal claim, and that the decision of the question was essential to the judgment rendered. State of Montana v. Rice, 27 Sup. Ct. 281-283, 204 U. S. 291, 51 L. Ed. 490.

The objection that no federal right was "specially set up and claimed" within the meaning of Rev. St. U. S. § 709 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 575], governing the appellate jurisdiction of the federal Supreme Court over state courts, cannot successfully be maintained, where judicial proceedings in New Jersey were clearly relied upon in New York by executors in an "appeal to the surrogate" as a defense to the assessment of the New York transfer tax, although such right was not in terms stated to be one claimed under the federal Constitution—especially where the constitutional right was specifically claimed in writing while the surrogate still had the "appeal" under consideration, and its denial was made the subject of exceptions. Tilt v. Kelsey, 28 Sup. Ct. 1, 3, 207 U. S. 43, 52 L. Ed. 95.

A right or immunity under a statute of the United States is "specially set up and claimed" in the state court within the meaning of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 709, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 575, where a railroad company insists, throughout garnishment proceedings brought against it for charges in excess of a special rate entered into with the garnishment debtor alone, that no recovery could be had against it consistently with the interstate commerce act, as, in disregarding the agreement for the special rate, it only conformed to the provisions of such act governing rates to be applied to interstate shipments. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. C. H. Albers Commission Co., 32 S. Ct. 316, 320, 223 U. S. 573, 56 L. Ed. 556.

SPECIALTY

See Common-Law Specialty; Debt by Specialty.

There are two classes of specialty contracts in the English law: "Common-law specialties" and "mercantile specialties." The first class includes bonds and covenants (i. e., instruments under seal); the second class includes bills and notes, and policies of insurance, and possibly other mercantile instruments. Teasley v. Brenau Ass'n, 61 S. E. 141, 4 Ga. App. 243.

By "specialty" is meant a bond or the coupon originally attached to it, though the latter be unsealed and cut off from the bond for the purpose of demand of payment and action. Prescott v. Williamsport & N. B. R. Co., 159 Fed. 244, 248 (citing Penrose v. King [Pa.] 1 Yeates, 344; Helmbold v. Railroad Co. [Pa.] 14 Wkly. Notes Cas. 128; Philadelphia Trust, Safe-Deposit & Ins. Co. v. Philadelphia & E. R. R., 28 Atl. 960, 160 Pa. 590).

The word "sealed" inserted in the body of an instrument promising to pay money will not make it a "specialty" without a seal, and "(L. S.)" or some equivalent mark annexed. Comley v. Ford, 64 S. E. 447, 450, 65 W. Va. 429 (citing Mitchell v. Parham [S. C.] Harp. 3).

Bills and notes are not simple contracts, but "specialties," and one of the characteristics of a specialty is that none but the parties thereto can be parties to an action thereon. In re L. B. Weisenberg & Co., 131 Fed. 517, 522.

A bank check more nearly resembles a "specialty" than a simple contract, and the law governing specialties is applicable thereto. "The term 'specialty' is applied to an instrument which becomes effective by the mere fact of its formal execution. There are two classes of specialty contracts in the English law: Common-law specialties and mercantile specialties. The first class includes bonds and covenants (i. e., instruments under seal); the second class includes bills and notes, and policies of insurance, and possibly other mercantile instruments. There is a prevalent notion, traceable to an opinion given in the House of Lords in 1778, in the case of Rann v. Hughes, 7 T. R. 350, note, that only contracts under seal can be specialties; all other contracts, whether written or oral, being merely simple contracts. The fallacy of this notion is easily demonstrated by an examination of the resemblances between bills and notes and instruments under seal, on the one hand, and the differences between bills and notes, and simple contracts, on the other hand, in those points in which specialties and simple contracts most strikingly differ from each other." Purcell v. Armour Packing Co., 61 S. E. 138, 141, 4 Ga. App. 253 (citing 2 Ames' Cas. B. N. 872).

Pennsylvania Act 1713 (1 Smith's Law, p. 76) provides that all actions of debt grounded on any contract without specialty shall be commenced and sued within the time and limitation expressed, and not after, and then declares that such actions for debt must be brought within six years next after the cause of action accrued. Held, that a cause of action to enforce a stockholder's statutory liability for corporate debts after insolvency was based on an implied contract pursuant to the statute without a "specialty," and was therefore barred under such act within six years after it accrued. Little v. Kohn, 185 Fed. 295, 296.

Judgment

Code Civ. Proc. 1859, § 20, barring actions not brought within three years "upon a 'specialty,' or any agreement, contract, or promise in writing," did not include a judgment. Burnes v. Simpson, 9 Kan. 447 (citing and adopting Tyler's Ex'r's v. Winslow, 15 Ohio St. 365; Todd v. Crumb, 5 McLean, 172, 23 Fed. Cas. 1350; Dudley v. Lindsay, 9 B. Mon. 486, 50 Am. Dec. 522; 2 Bl. Comm. 464, 465).

"A judgment for damages, estimated in money, is sometimes called by text-writers a 'specialty' or 'contract of record' because it establishes a legal obligation to pay the amount recovered; and by fiction of law a promise to pay is implied where such legal obligation exists. It is on this principal that an action ex contractu will lie upon a judgment. Chit. Cont. (Perkins' Ed.) 87. But this fiction cannot convert a transaction wanting the assent of parties into one which necessarily implies it. Judgments for torts are usually the result of violent contests, and, as observed by the court below, are imposed upon the losing party by a higher authority against his will and protest." Brun v. Mann, 151 Fed. 145, 146, 156, 80 C. C. A. 513, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 154 (quoting and adopting definition in Louisiana ex rel. Folsom v. New Orleans, 3 Sup. Ct. 213, 109 U. S. 288, 27 L. Ed. 930).

SPECIFIC

SPECIFIC BEQUEST

See Specific Legacy.

SPECIFIC CRIMINAL OFFENSE

As applied to habeas corpus proceedings, contempt of court is a "specific criminal offense." In re Shull, 121 S. W. 10, 11, 221 Mo. 623, 133 Am. St. Rep. 496.

SPECIFIC DENIAL

There is a specific denial within St. 1898, § 4192, providing that a writing purporting to have been signed or executed by any person shall be proof that it was so signed or executed till such person shall "specifically deny the signature or execution," where, with the instrument before her, she stated, "I did not write that signature and did not authorize any one to write it for me," though the jury might have understood from the confusion of some of her other answers that she did not deny the act, but merely memory of it, where equally they might have understood that she did. Illinois Steel Co. v. Paczocha, 119 N. W. 550, 554, 139 Wis. 23.

SPECIFIC DEVISE

A "specific devise" is a testamentary gift of a specific thing, identified and distinguished from all other things of the same kind, which may be satisfied only by its delivery. In re Snyder's Estate, 66 Atl. 157, 217 Pa. 71, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 49, 118 Am. St. Rep. 900, 10 Ann. Cas. 488.

At common law all devises of real estate are "specific." Every devise of land is specific. Every legacy of personal estate is not, because personal estate fluctuates and varies. Land does not, for no more passes by a will than the testator had at the time of making his will. Forrester v. Lord Leigh, 1 Amb. 173; Clifton v. Burt, 1 P. Wms. 679; Howe v. Earl of Dartmouth, 7 Ves. Jr. 147; Milnes v. Slater, 8 Ves. Jr. 305; Redf. Wills, pt. 2, 471; Mirehouse v. Scaife, 2 Mylne & C. 695; Masters v. Masters, 1 P. Wms. 424. In this country no devise of real estate will be regarded as specific unless it contains a description of the estate sufficient to enable the devisee to indemnify the same. In re Woodworth's Estate, 31 Cal. 595, 610, 614 (citing Redf. Wills, pt. 2, 870).

"A 'specific legacy' or 'devise' is a gift by will of a specific article or part of the testator's estate, which is identified and distinguished from all other things of the same kind and which may be satisfied only out of the particular thing." White v. White, 53 S. E. 371, 372, 73 S. C. 261 (quoting and adopting 18 Ency. Law, 714).

While at common law all devises of land were regarded as specific devises, a testamentary gift, to be specific, must be of a designated article or of a specific part of the testator's realty, and hence a devise of one-third of all his real property is not specific. When a will devised to testator's wife "one-third of all my property, both real, personal and mixed, of which I shall die seised and possessed or to which I shall be entitled at the time of my decease," the devise of land to the widow was not a "specific devise." Wilts v. Wilts, 130 N. W. 906, 907, 151 Iowa, 149.

"Testator gave land described by street and number and by boundaries to his brothers, and other land similarly described to his sons. By a codicil he revoked the devise to his brothers and gave the property to his children, to accumulate as well as moneys at interest, etc., not otherwise appropriated." Held, that the devise to the children of the lands described was a "specific devise" and not chargeable with the payment of general legacies, under Civ. Code, §§ 1357, 1359, 1360, 1362, defining specific devises, especially where, at the time of the making of the will, the testator had sufficient personal property to satisfy the general legacies. In re Painter's Estate, 89 Pac. 98, 99, 150 Cal. 498, 11 Ann. Cas. 760.

Under a will directing the executor to sell all real estate of which testator should die seised, except a building named, and giving all his residuary estate to his sister, if living at his death, the building constitutes a part of the residuary estate, subject to the general rule that where testator makes a general gift of legacies, and then, without creating any express trust for their payment, makes a general residuary disposition of the whole estate, the real estate will be charged with the legacies, and the building cannot be held to be a "specific devise" not so liable, on the ground that, as the direction to sell included all real estate but the building, nothing except it would pass under the residuary devise. Tyler v. Tallman, 68 Atl. 948, 949, 29 R. I. 57.

SPECIFIC INSURANCE

Two blanket marine policies of insurance insured all merchandise belonging to insured from the moment it became his property, in Yucatan, until discharged from the steamer, in Boston, fixing the rate, but left the amount of the premium and insurance to be determined by the invoice, which might not arrive until after the cargo. Held, that the policies were contracts for "specific insurance." Peabody v. Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co., 50 N. E. 526, 527, 171 Mass. 114.

SPECIFIC LEGACY

See, also, General Legacy.

Legacies are divided into two classes—specific and general. A "specific legacy" is a bequest of a particular thing that can be distinguished from others of the same kind. In re Parsons' Estate, 129 N. W. 955, 150 Iowa, 230.

"Specific legacy" is defined by Civ. Code, § 1357, to be a legacy of a particular thing specified and distinguished from all others of the same kind belonging to the testator. In re Painter's Estate, 89 Pac. 98, 100, 150 Cal. 498, 11 Ann. Cas. 760.

An enumeration of specific articles in a residuary clause does not make the bequest "specific" as to such articles, but a gift is specific, where the specified things are so enumerated as to distinguish them from the residue. Kemp v. Dandison, 135 N. W. 270, 271, 169 Mich. 578, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 1042.

A "specific legacy" is a bequest of a specified part of a testator's personal estate, distinguished from all others of the same kind. In re Fisher, 87 N. Y. Supp. 567, 568, 93 App. Div. 186 (citing Crawford v. McCarthy, 54 N. E. 277, 159 N. Y. 514).

A "specific legacy" is a gift by will of a specific article, or part of testator's estate, which is identified and distinguished from all other things of the same kind, and which may be satisfied only by the delivery of the particular thing bequeathed. In re Matthews, 107 N. Y. Supp. 301, 302, 122 App. Div. 605; White v. White, 53 S. E. 371, 372, 73 S. C. 261.

A "specific legacy" is a bequest of a specific thing or fund that can be separated out of all the rest of testator's estate of the same kind so as to individualize it, and enable it to be delivered to the legatee as a particular thing or fund bequeathed. Palmer v. Palmer's Estate, 75 Atl. 130, 132, 106 Me. 25, 19 Ann. Cas. 1184.

A "specific legacy" is a gift by will of a specific article of testator's estate distinguished from all other things of the same kind, and which can be satisfied only by the delivery of such particular thing. In re Snyder's Estate, 66 Atl. 157, 217 Pa. 71, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 49, 118 Am. St. Rep. 900, 10 Ann. Cas. 488.

A "specific legacy" is a gift of particular specified things, or of the proceeds of the sale of specified things, or of a specific fund or a defined portion thereof, and it is satisfied by the delivery of the specific property identified as the subject of the gift, and where the same is not owned by testator at his death the legatee takes nothing, for he has no claim on the general assets. Weed v. Hoge, 83 Atl. 636, 638, 85 Conn. 490, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 542.

"A 'specific bequest' is a testamentary gift of a part of the donor's personal property, which corporal object or chose in action is so accurately described that it can be identified from all other things of its kind." A "specific bequest," within B. & C. Comp. §

1171, exempting personalty specifically bequeathed from the payment of debts so long as any property of the estate not specially devised or bequeathed remains unsold, is a testamentary gift of a part of testator's personalty so accurately described that it can be identified from all other things of its kind. In re Noon's Estate, 88 Pac. 673, 675, 49 Or. 286 (citing 1 Rep. Leg. 191; Johnson v. Goss, 128 Mass. 433; In re Woodworth's Estate, 31 Cal. 595).

"A 'specific legacy' is a gift not only of the thing or fund itself, but of all its produce, from the time of the testator's death." A "specific legacy" is "a gift by will of a specific article or part of the testator's estate, which is identified and distinguished from all other things of the same kind, and which may be satisfied only by the delivery of the particular thing." Such legacies "carry any accessions that may accrue by way of increase or interest after the death of the testator." Gordon v. James, 39 South. 18, 23, 86 Miss. 719, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 461 (citing In re Hodgman's Estate, 35 N. E. 660, 140 N. Y. 428).

"A 'specific bequest' of personal property is the bequest of a particular thing or money specified and distinguished from all others of the same kind, as of a horse, or of money in purse." "A legacy of a particular thing specified and distinguished from all others of the same kind belonging to the testator is specific." Underhill says that a "specific legacy is a gift of a particular thing or of money specified and distinguished from all things, and which at the execution of the will is owned by the testator, as of a horse, or a piece of plate, or of money in purse, stocks of a corporation, and the like." "A 'specific legacy' is one that can be separated from the body of the estate and pointed out so as to individualize it and enable it to be delivered to the legatee as a thing sui generis." "A legacy is specific when it is a bequest of a specific article of the testator's personal estate, distinguished from all others of the same kind, as, for instance, of a particular horse, or piece of plate, money in a purse or chest, a particular stock in the public funds, or a bond or other security for money." It has been said: "A specific legacy is sometimes distinguished from the rest of the testator's estate, and it is sufficient if it can be specified and distinguished from the rest of the testator's estate at the time of his decease." Underhill states that the very essence of a "specific legacy" is absent in the above example, as the testator does not give the articles specifically which may be readily identified as owned by him at the execution of his will. In re Campbell's Estate, 75 Pac. 851, 853, 27 Utah, 361 (quoting definitions from 1 Underhill, Wills, § 407; In re Woodworth's Estate, 31 Cal. 595; Estate of Apple, 6 Pac. 7, 66 Cal. 432; Harper v. Bibb, 47 Ala.

547; Loring v. Woodward, 41 N. H. 391; 1 Rop. Leg. 170).

"A 'specific legacy' is a bequest of a particular article or specified part of the testator's estate which is so described and distinguished from all other articles or parts of the same as to be capable of being identified." Bequests of rents not in existence at the time of making the will, the proceeds of a sale of a storehouse left after paying the mortgage on it, and taxes and money in bank after paying expenses and doctor's bill are specific legacies. Manlove v. Gaut, 2 Tenn. Ch. App. 410, 445.

Where the thing bequeathed is by the terms of the will individuated so that it is distinguished from all others of the same kind, it is a "specific legacy," and hence a bequest of all "my household goods, cash on hand or in bank, life insurance and all other personal property of every description" was a "specific legacy" so far as the household goods, cash, and insurance were concerned, though a "general legacy" as to any other property passing by the bequest. Kearns v. Kearns, 76 Atl. 1042, 77 N. J. Eq. 453, 140 Am. St. Rep. 575.

A bequest of life insurance of a specified amount in a company named is a "specific legacy," which carried with it the gift of all its accretions. In re Gans' Will, 112 N. Y. Supp. 259, 262, 60 Misc. Rep. 282.

A bequest of all wheat of which testator was the owner stored on lands belonging to him and one-half of all grain that might be raised on such lands during a year named was a "specific bequest." Rock v. Zimmermann, 126 N. W. 265, 266, 25 S. D. 237.

A bequest of "all money that I may have in" a certain bank "except therefrom the sum of fifteen hundred ($1,500) dollars," which was otherwise disposed of by the will, is a "specific legacy" as are other bequests in form. "I direct that five hundred ($500) dollars of said money (herein before referred to in the Omaha National Bank) be paid to my grandson." In re Bush's Estate, 131 N. W. 602, 604, 89 Neb. 334.

The payee of a note dying in 1903 made the following bequest to the promisor, who then owed a balance of $1,000 on the note: "I give and bequeath to my son * * * the sum of $1,000 to be paid as follows: Said sum to be credited on a promissory note I now hold against him for the sum of $1,300." And by order of a probate court of another state made in 1905 that amount was credited on the note, and it was ordered sold, and the purchaser sued thereon to recover interest from 1903. Held, that the credit given to the promisor was a "specific legacy," to which the legatee's right of property became fixed at the time of the payee's death, and that neither the estate nor plaintiff, its assignee, were thereafter entitled to interest. Martin v. Barger, 114 Pac. 505-507, 62 Wash. 672.

Demonstrative or general legacy distinguished

The distinction between a specific and a demonstrative legacy involves not merely a technical question depending for its solution solely upon the precise language of the bequest, but a substantial inquiry respecting the intention of the testator as shown by the terms of the particular legacy, examined in connection with all the other provisions of the will. A specific legacy is a bequest of a specific article or particular fund which can be distinguished from all the rest of the testator's estate of the same kind, while a general legacy is payable out of the general assets of the estate. In re Stilphen, 60 Atl. 888-890, 100 Me. 146, 4 Ann. Cas. 158.

A legacy is a general legacy and not "specific" where so given as not to amount to a bequest of a particular thing or money distinguished from all other things of the same kind. In re Barton's Estate, 118 N. Y. Supp. 1087, 1090, 64 Misc. Rep. 242.

A "demonstrative legacy" is one of a certain amount or quantity, the particular fund or personal property being pointed out from which it is to be paid or taken; it differing from a "general legacy" in that it does not abate upon insufficiency of assets, and from a "specific legacy" in that there is recourse for its payment from the general estate in the event of ademption. Thompson v. Stephens, 75 S. E. 136, 137, 138 Ga. 205.

A "general legacy" is one payable out of the general assets of testator's estate, while a "specific legacy" is a gift by will of a specific article or particular part of an estate, which is identified and distinguished from all others of the same nature, and is to be satisfied only by the delivery and receipt of the particular thing given. A bequest by testatrix of any and all sums that might thereafter be payable to her or her estate, as the proceeds of any insurance on her husband's life, to her husband's five sisters, or such of them as should be living at the time such insurance money should be actually collected and received by testatrix's executors, etc., was a "specific legacy." Nusly v. Curtis, 85 Pac. 846, 847, 36 Colo. 464, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 592, 118 Am. St. Rep. 113, 10 Ann. Cas. 1134.

A "general legacy" is a gift of personal property by a last will and testament not amounting to a bequest of a particular thing or money or of a particular fund designated from all others of the same kind. A "specific legacy" is a bequest of a specified part of a testator's personal estate distinguished from all others of the same kind. A "demonstrative legacy" is a bequest of a certain sum of money, stock, or the like payable out of a particular fund or security. Whether a legacy is specific or not must necessarily depend upon the nature of the thing referred to and described in the will. If the thing be capable of individuality as a ring or picture, or if it be an assemblage of things as a library or a cabinet or something capable of being operated by sensible distinctions as the property of a particular estate, in all such cases the description in the will sets forth with distinctness the subject of bequest and makes it specific. Whether a bequest couched in general terms is specific or otherwise depends on this: If the things falling within the terms, when enumerated, are in their nature specific, then the legacy is specific, otherwise it is not. Where testator bequeathed to a legatee all the claims held by testator against his father and all his interest in the father's estate, such legacy was specific. Rogers v. Rogers, 45 S. E. 176, 177, 67 S. C. 168, 100 Am. St. Rep. 721 (quoting and adopting definitions in Drawford v. McCarthy, 54 N. E. 278, 159 N. Y. 514; Pell v. Ball, Speers' Eq. 48; citing 18 Enc. Law, 711, 714, 721).

A bequest of the use of the $500 bequeathed to testatrix by her brother for life, the same to be paid to another on the death of the first legatee, was a "specific legacy" in fact, but it was a general legacy if the fund was not in such distinct form that it was identifiable when the will was made. In re Getman, 113 N. Y. Supp. 67, 68, 128 App. Div. 767.

Stock, bonds, or securities

A bequest of "my stock, right, title and interest" in a certain company was a "specific legacy." Kearns v. Kearns, 76 Atl. 1042, 77 N. J. Eq. 453, 140 Am. St. Rep. 575.

Where a legacy of bonds or securities is intended to be a gift of the bonds and securities specified, and such bonds and securities are the only source for the payment of the legacy, the legacy is a "specific legacy" of the bonds or securities, and not of the money in them or secured by them, and, if the specific security is disposed of or extinguished, the rule of redemption applies, and the legacy is gone. Blair v. Scribner, 57 Atl. 318, 326, 65 N. J. Eq. 498.

"A 'specific legacy or devise' is a gift by will of a specific article or part of the testator's estate, which is identified and distinguished from all other parts of the same kind, and which may be satisfied only by the delivery of the particular thing." Thus, where one clause of a will, standing by itself, bequeathed certain shares of stock, the legacy was a specific one. Waters v. Hatch, 79 S. W. 916, 922, 181 Mo. 262.

At the time of making his will, testator's estate consisted of certain securities of which he thereafter died possessed. By his will he gave to his wife $17,000 "to be paid to her out of securities which I now hold, instead of cash." Held, that the legacy was a specific one and is to be paid out of the securities which were a part of the estate of testator. Allen v. Allen, 74 Atl. 274, 276, 76 N. J. Eq. 245, 139 Am. St. Rep. 758.

SPECIFIC LEGATEE

"A 'specific legatee' is one who has a bequest of a particular thing, distinguished from all others of the same kind." In re Goggin's Estate, 88 N. Y. Supp. 557, 560, 43 Misc. Rep. 233.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE

"Specific performance" is an equitable remedy, which compels such substantial performance of the contract as will do justice between the parties. Sugar v. Froehlich, 82 N. E. 414, 416, 229 Ill. 397.

"Specific performance" of contracts is a purely equitable remedy, being a substitute for the legal remedy of compensation when it is inadequate or impracticable, and lies within sound judicial discretion on consideration of the particular surrounding circumstances. Brown & Sons v. Boston & M. R. R., 76 Atl. 692, 695, 106 Me. 248.

"Specific performance" contemplates that the party, against whom such relief is sought, has, by his contract and covenant, agreed to do some certain specific thing which the court can order. Morey v. Terre Haute Traction & Light Co., 93 N. E. 710, 714, 47 Ind. App. 16.

"Specific performance" rests on the sound reasonable discretion of the court. Hathcock v. Société Anonyme La Floridienne, 45 South. 481, 482, 54 Fla. 631.

"Specific performance" is a matter of sound judicial discretion, controlled by established principles of equity, and it will be granted or withheld by the court upon a consideration of all the circumstances of each particular case. Offutt v. Offutt, 67 Atl. 138, 139, 106 Md. 236, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 232, 124 Am. St. Rep. 491.

The remedy by "specific performance" is within the legal discretion of the court, and is not a matter of strict right, and when the conduct of a purchaser in a contract for the purchase of land has created conditions rendering it inequitable for the court to interfere and specifically enforce the contract, there is no hardship in treating an abandonment as conclusive and in refusing to permit a retraction. Cox v. Raider, 101 N. W. 531, 533, 138 Mich. 249.

To warrant "specific performance" of a contract to sell land, the description of the subject-matter must be as definite and certain as that required in a deed. Fordyce Lumber Co. v. Wallace, 107 S. W. 160, 85 Ark. 1.

"It is not necessary, in order to sustain the right to a 'specific performance,' that at the time such performance is sought to be compelled the vendor should have a complete equitable or legal title to the land which he contracted to convey. It is sufficient that he then have some interest in the property. It is no answer for a vendor to say, when specific performance is sought under his contract, that the interest or title which the decree seeks to affect, is not as complete as he agreed to convey. If the vendee is willing to enforce the contract against a lesser interest, or a less perfect title, it does not lie with the vendor to object on that account. It is only when the vendor has no title or interest in the lands at all that such a decree will not be awarded, for the very good reason that courts will not attempt to require done what it is impossible to do. If, however, the vendor has any interest in the property contracted to be conveyed, the vendee may enforce the contract as to whatever interest he may possess." Farnum v. Clarke, 84 Pac. 166-170, 148 Cal. 610.

SPECIFIC REPAIRS

Work of excavating earth forming a causeway crossing a great pond, and substituting therefor a bridge at a different grade, constituted "specific repairs," within Pub. St., c. 49, §§ 10, 65, under which no notice to abutting owners is required. Bigelow v. City Council of City of Worcester, 48 N. E. 1, 2, 169 Mass. 390.

A street was laid out in 1872 by an order which established its grade; but, though opened to travel, the grade was not made as established until 1897, when the board of aldermen declared the grade as fixed in 1872, and, without any concurrent vote of the city council, instructed the superintendent of streets to bring the street to such grade. The mayor and board of aldermen, with the concurrent vote of the city council, alone had authority to establish a street grade. Petitioner, claiming damages by reason of the work done, filed a petition within a year from the expiration of 30 days after the filing of a previous petition for damages with the mayor and board of aldermen, as required by Pub. St. c. 52, in cases of objections to ordinary repairs. It was held that the work done under the 1897 order could not be regarded as "specific repairs," under Pub. St. c. 49, since specific repairs could only be ordered by officers authorized to establish a grade, and that the work must be treated as ordinary repairs. Albro v. City of Fall River, 56 N. E. 894, 895, 175 Mass. 590.

SPECIFICALLY

SPECIFICATION

See Plans and Specifications.
Plans distinguished, see Plan.

A construction contract required the work to be done according to certain "specifications," under which the manner of doing the work and materials to be used were particularly set out. The contract then contained several paragraphs, grouped under the designation of "general stipulations." The contractor's contract with a subcontractor declared the "specifications" of the construction contract to be a part thereof and to govern the same. Held, that the "general stipulations" of the construction contract constituted a portion of the "specifications," within the meaning of the subcontractor's contract, and consequently constituted a part thereof. McGregor v. J. A. Ware Const. Co., 87 S. W. 981, 983, 188 Mo. 611.

Rev. St. 1899, § 5859, as amended by Laws 1901, p. 65, requires contracts for street improvements to be let to the lowest bidder on plans and specifications filed with the city clerk. Held, that the word "plans" as used means a profile, drawing, or picture showing, in a general way, the character of the work, while "specifications" means a detailed statement of the character of the improvements, the purpose of the provision being that by filing plans and specifications information would be furnished to enable bidders to intelligently figure the cost; and, where there was nothing complicated or difficult to understand about grading or paving the street to be improved, and all the details of the work were fully stated, both in the ordinance authorizing it and in the specifications filed, the omission to file plans did not invalidate the contract. McCoy v. Randall, 121 S. W. 31, 34, 222 Mo. 24.

Drainage Law (Laws 1895, pp. 271-296, c. 115), § 2, provides that the petition for the organization of a drainage district shall contain a description of the proposed system of drainage, designating the outlet, route, branches, and terminal. Section 9, as amended by Laws 1905, p. 362, c. 175, provides for the filing of a petition showing that the proposed system of drainage is necessary to drain the lands described, together with "specifications" for its construction, with plans and drafts of artificial appliances. Section 14 provides that, in case the damages for the right of way amount to more than the benefits, the proceeding shall be dismissed. Section 18 provides for the construction of the improvement. Section 19 provides for the manner of doing the work, and prohibits any change in the system, except on the consent of the owners benefited. It was held that there could be no misunderstanding as to what the word "specifications" means in this connection; that it was here applied to a public improvement, and its use, together with the use of the words "necessary plats and plans," and the further words providing for drafts of any artificial appliances or equipment necessary in aid of the improvement, together with the estimated cost thereof, indicate that such a system, with plans and specifications, is to be prepared and submitted in the petition as will enable the commissioners, in the event of its approval and adoption, to proceed in contracting for and constructing the improvement, without change. State ex rel. Matson v. Superior Court, Skagit County, 85 Pac. 264, 268, 42 Wash. 491.

In architecture

The word "specification," when used in a building contract, means a detailed statement of each particular part of the work to be done, usually prepared by the architect, to amplify the details of the plans. Fowler v. Bushby, 125 N. Y. Supp. 890, 891, 69 Misc. Rep. 341.

The term "specifications," as used in a building contract, ordinarily means a detailed and particular account of the structure to be built, including the manner of its construction and the materials to be used. Woollacott v. Meekin, 91 Pac. 612, 615, 151 Cal. 701, dissenting opinion (quoting the definition in Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Stewart, 29 Atl. 964, 79 Md. 487).

The "plans" and "specifications" for the construction of a large building should be definite, specific, and certain, in justice both to the contractor and the owner. Nave v. McGrane, 113 Pac. 82, 85, 19 Idaho, 111.

In patents

In Rev. St. § 4916, authorizing the issuance of a reissue patent where the original is inoperative or invalid "by reason of a defective or insufficient specification," the word "specification," by settled construction, may include the claims as well as the technical specifications preceding them. McDowell v. Ideal Concrete Mach. Co., 187 Fed. 814, 820, 109 C. C. A. 574.

SPECIFICATION OF ERROR

See Distinct Specification of Error.

SPECIFY

See Substantially as Specified; Time Specified.

"Specify" means to mention specifically or explicitly, to state in full and explicit terms or explicitly and in detail, name expressly, distinctly, and particularly. A. M. Dillow & Co. v. City of Monticello, 124 N. W. 186, 189, 145 Iowa, 424.

Where a town council passed a resolution declaring that it was desirable and necessary to lay out a new street between two points specified, and application was made for the appointment of commissioners to lay out the same after the publication of a notice reciting the resolution, the notice was not sufficient under a statute declaring that the notice shall "specify" the nature and extent of the intended improvement, inasmuch as the resolution failed to specify the exact location of the street. In re Mt. Pleasant Ave., 10 R. I. 320, 326.

SPECIFY FOR

"In the plush trade, the words 'specified for' have a technical meaning, and signify the giving of instructions in respect to the printing." Aikman v. Wahneta Silk Co., 96 N. Y. Supp. 1067, 1068, 110 App. Div. 191.

SPECIFYING OUT

The term "specifying out," as used in contracts made in the iron trade, means furnishing specifications or designations of the kind of iron desired for delivery. Moran Bolt & Nut Mfg. Co. v. St. Louis Car Co., 109 S. W. 47, 49, 210 Mo. 715.

SPECULATE—SPECULATION

Engaged in speculating, see Engaged.

"Speculate" means to "take the risk of loss in view of possible gain." Arentsen v. Moreland, 99 N. W. 790, 796, 122 Wis. 167, 65 L. R. A. 973, 106 Am. St. Rep. 951, 2 Ann. Cas. 628 (quoting Century Dictionary).

One of the definitions of "speculate" is to take the risk of loss in view of possible gain. Century Dict. The authorities, both English and American, are to the effect that a vendor who agrees to convey what he at the time knows that he has no right to convey, because the title is in another, thereby assumes the risk of acquiring the title and making the conveyance, or responding in damages for the vendee's loss of the bargain. Such contracts are speculative in character, and the party giving them understands the risk he assumes when the covenant is entered into. Such contracts for the future delivery of personal property have frequently been characterized by this and other courts as "speculative" in character. Lawson v. Cobban, 99 Pac. 128, 130, 38 Mont. 138.

SPECULATIVE DAMAGES

Damages are speculative when the probability that a circumstance will exist as an element for compensation is conjectural. The term is usually applied in cases of breach of contract, when compensation is sought for loss of uncertain or remote profits, not within the understanding of the parties, or where there is an uncertainty as to whether the party has been in fact damaged, or whether the damages result from the act of the other party, or where they are wholly uncertain in measure or extent. The rule against the recovery of "speculative damages" is generally directed against uncertainty as to cause rather than as to uncertainty as to measure or extent; that is, if it is uncertain whether defendant's act caused any damages, or whether the damages proved flowed from the defendant's act, there may be no recovery of such uncertain damages, whereas uncertainty which affects merely the measure or extent of the injury suffered does not bar a recovery. Crichfield v. Julia, 147 Fed. 65, 70, 71, 77 C. C. A. 297 (citing And. Law Dict.; Anvil Min. Co. v. Humble, 14 Sup. Ct. 876, 153 U. S. 540, 38 L. Ed. 814; Taylor v. Bradley, 39 N. Y. 129, 100 Am. Dec. 415; Wakeman v. Wheeler & W. Mfg. Co., 4 N. E. 264, 101 N. Y. 205, 54 Am. Rep. 676; Bluegrass Cordage Co. v. Luthy, 33 S. W. 835, 98 Ky. 583; In re Stern, 116 Fed. 604, 54 C. C. A. 60; Allen v. Field, 130 Fed. 641, 65 C. C. A. 19).

In an action for injuries caused to plaintiff's property by the explosion of a boiler on property of defendant, the probable loss of profits which plaintiff might have earned during the rebuilding of his mill depend on so many contingencies that such damages are termed "speculative," and are not recoverable. James McNeill & Bro. Co. v. Crucible Steel Co., 56 Atl. 1067, 1071, 207 Pa. 493.

Plaintiffs, cattle sellers in Baltimore, sent a telegram to their agent in Chicago on the evening of July 13, 1904, directing him, if he could purchase "reasonably," to ship Thursday for the succeeding Monday's market "four to six" car loads of market cattle. Defendant negligently failed to deliver the message until it was too late for the agent to comply therewith, though the agent testified that if he had received the message in the ordinary course he would have shipped the cattle. Plaintiffs testified that they had a regular line of customers on the Baltimore market, and that if they had been shipped one of the plaintiffs testified "he was satisfied" the cattle would have brought $5 a head profit, "had they arrived on the market day." There was no evidence whether the agent would have purchased four or six loads, nor any certainty that the cattle would have arrived in time, nor that plaintiffs suffered loss by purchasing other cattle to fill their orders. Held, that the evidence was too speculative to sustain a recovery of $5 a head for the number of cattle that could have been loaded in six cars as the profits plaintiffs lost by defendant's default. Western Union Tel. Co. v. N. Lehman & Bro., 67 Atl. 241, 244, 106 Md. 318, 14 Ann. Cas. 736.

SPECULATIVE RISK

The word "speculative" means disposed towards speculation, as distinguished from investment. An assignment of a life insurance policy to a third person, not a relative or creditor and having no insurable interest in the life of the insured, is invalid as a speculative risk. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Lane, 151 Fed. 276, 284.

SPECULATOR

See Ticket Speculator.

SPEECH

Liberty of speech, see Liberty of Speech and the Press.

SPEED

See Excessive Speed; Moderate Speed; Safe Speed.

"Speed" is a relative term, and whether a certain speed, at which a car was propelled, resulting in injury to a railroad employé, is negligence, must to some extent depend upon the location, conditions, and surroundings, and is usually a question for the jury. Adams v. Cleveland C., C. & St. L. R. Co., 90 N. E. 382, 383, 243 Ill. 191.

SPEEDY AND ADEQUATE REMEDY

A remedy does not fail to be "speedy and adequate" because by pursuing it through the ordinary course of law more time would be probably consumed than in prohibition proceedings sought to be used. Hubbard v. Justice's Court of San Jose Tp., 89 Pac. 865, 866, 5 Cal. App. 90 (quoting Agassiz v. Superior Court, 27 Pac. 49, 90 Cal. 101).

SPEEDY REMEDY

See Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy.

The remedy by appeal or certiorari as to a void judgment is not adequate or "speedy," in the sense required to exclude relief by injunction. Worrall v. H. S. Chase & Co., 123 N. W. 338, 340, 144 Iowa, 665.

SPEEDY TRIAL

The term "speedy," as used in the guaranty of speedy criminal trials, being a word of indeterminate meaning, permits legislative definition to some extent. State v. Webb, 70 S. E. 1064, 1065, 155 N. C. 426.

A "speedy trial," guaranteed by the Constitution, means a trial as soon after indictment as the prosecution can, with reasonable diligence, prepare for it, regard being had to the terms of court, or a trial conducted according to fixed rules, regulations, and proceedings, free from vexatious, capricious, and oppressive delay. State v. Keefe, 98 Pac. 122, 126, 17 Wyo. 227, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 896, 17 Ann. Cas. 161.

A "speedy trial" means a trial regulated and conducted by fixed rules of law, and any delay created by the operation of those rules does not work prejudice to any constitutional right of the defendant. Sample v. State, 36 South. 367, 368, 138 Ala. 259.

The several continuances of trial on the first indictment, considered in connection with the trials on the other indictments, did not violate the constitutional provision requiring a "speedy trial" to defendant charged with crime. State v. Dilts, 69 Atl. 253, 256, 76 N. J. Law, 410.

The provision of the state Constitution that accused persons shall have a "speedy public trial" should be so construed as to allow officers representing the state in prosecuting criminal offenses reasonable time in which to secure the attendance of witnesses. This right is carefully guarded by laws requiring due diligence on the part of such officers in bringing parties to trial, and providing that after a reasonable delay the defendant shall be discharged from custody. State v. Pratt, 107 N. W. 538, 540, 20 S. D. 440, 11 Ann. Cas. 1049.

A "speedy trial," as provided for by Mansf. Dig. Ark. §§ 2192, 2193, means a trial conducted according to the fixed rules, regulations, and proceedings at law, free from vexatious, capricious, and causeless delays by the officers of the state or county upon whom devolves the prosecution or determination of criminal cases, and unless good cause to the contrary is shown, a person indicted under the law in force in the Indian Territory prior to statehood is entitled to be tried before the end of the third term of the court after the return thereof. State ex rel. Sims v. Caruthers, 98 Pac. 474, 482, 1 Okl. Cr. 428.

The right of a "speedy trial" is necessarily relative. It is consistent with delays and depends upon circumstances. It secures rights to a defendant. It does not preclude the rights of public justice. The term "speedy trial," as it occurs in the Constitution, has been judicially interpreted as meaning generally a trial as soon after the indictment as the prosecution can with reasonable diligence prepare for, regard being had to the terms of court. Where relator was indicted at the October, 1909, term of the district court, which term ended February 4, 1910, and on February 8th a special term of said court was convened with a special judge at the instance and request of relator, for the purpose of hearing his motion to quash the indictment, and another special term was convened February 28, 1910, with a special judge, and the next regular term, which was to continue until May 31, 1910, convened on March 7, 1910, and the Legislature by Act March 25, 1910, provided that the regular term of said district court should commence on the first Mondays in January, May, and October of each year, relator's substantial right to a speedy trial was not violated. State ex rel. Eubanks v. Cole, 109 Pac. 736, 743, 4 Okl. Cr. 25 (quoting and adopting Beavers v. Haubert, 25 Sup. Ct. 573, 198 U. S. 77, 49 L. Ed. 950; 12 Cyc. 498, citing and adopting Ex parte State, 76 Ala. 482; Sample v. State, 36 South. 367, 138 Ala. 259).

Rev. Code 1852, as amended to 1893, p. 858, c. 116, § 17, provides that, if any person shall be committed for treason or felony, and shall not be indicted and tried at the next term of the court where such crime is cognizable, he shall be set at liberty on bail, unless it appear by affidavit that the witnesses for the state could not then be had, and, if the prisoner shall not be indicted and tried at the second term after commitment, he shall be discharged. Held, that where accused, charged with violating the election law, was indicted at the May, 1906, term of court, and the case was continued at the September term on the application of the state, defendant, not having insisted on a trial at that term, was not entitled to dismissal on being called for trial at the November term. State v. Tyre (Del.) 67 Atl. 199, 201, 6 Pennewill, 343.

SPENDTHRIFT

SPENDTHRIFT CLAUSE

A clause in a trust deed that the said trustee, party of the second part, shall hold principal, increase, and income of said fund, free from all claims, attachments, judgments, executions, and liens of every nature by creditors, against either of said parties of the first part, and the said parties of the first part shall not have, nor shall either of them have, any power to anticipate, charge, or encumber the said principal fund or any part thereof, or the increase, interest, or income thereof, or in any way defeat the intent of this instrument as herein expressed, which is to make provision for the support, maintenance, and personal comfort of the parties of the first part, free from liens and claims of creditors, is called a "spendthrift clause." Wright v. Leupp, 62 Atl. 464, 465, 70 N. J. Eq. 130.

SPENDTHRIFT TRUST

Where a trust is created, so that neither the interest nor the principal could be reached by their creditors, it is called a "spendthrift trust." Merrill v. Preston, 72 N. E. 941, 942, 187 Mass. 197.

A "spendthrift trust" is created where property is left to a trustee, the proceeds to be used for the support of a designated beneficiary, in which case the beneficiary's interest may not be subjected to the payment of his debts. Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Crist, 118 N. W. 394, 395, 140 Iowa, 308, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 526, 132 Am. St. Rep. 267.

A trust created to provide for the maintenance of the beneficiary, and at the same time securing it against his improvidence and incapacity for self-protection, is what is known as a "spendthrift trust." Bennett v. Bennett, 75 N. E. 339, 341, 217 Ill. 434, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 470.

A "spendthrift trust" is defined as one created with a view of providing a fund for the maintenance of another, at the same time securing it against his own improvidence or incapacity for self-protection, provisions against alienation of the fund by the voluntary act of the beneficiary or in invitum by his creditors being the usual incidents of such trusts. Croom v. Ocala Plumbing & Electric Co., 57 South. 243, 244, 62 Fla. 460.

The will of a testatrix, giving her son the annual income of her trust estate, and in terms preventing him from alienating it, or his creditors from reaching it, creates a "spendthrift trust." Olsen v. Youngerman, 113 N. W. 938, 939, 136 Iowa, 404.

"Spendthrift trusts" are defined as those trusts which are created with a view to providing a fund for the maintenance of another and at the same time securing it against his own improvidence or incapacity for self-protection. The fact that the beneficiaries of such trust may be active, sober, frugal business men does not affect its character, nor is it essential to the creation of such a trust that the immunity of the fund from the claims of creditors be specifically provided for. If such a result is accomplished by the terms of the will, it is sufficient. Wagner v. Wagner, 149 Ill. App. 73, 84; Id., 91 N. E. 66, 244 Ill. 101, 18 Ann. Cas. 490.

A "spendthrift trust" is the term commonly used to designate a trust created for the maintenance of the cestui que trust and to secure the fund against the improvidence of the cestui que trust. The English rule, which has been adopted in most of the states of this Union, is that it is against the policy of the law for the grant to be so limited that a donee shall have the possession and enjoyment of the property, but shall not have the power of alienation, or that the property shall not be liable for his debts. Under the English law it is competent to make the estate determinable, as upon the bankruptcy of the donee, in which event the estate is to revert to the donor, or to some person specified in the grant. In such case the creditor is deprived of the estate by the act which deprives the donee thereof. But where no such provision for the determination of the estate is contained in the grant, the property will pass to the assignee in bankruptcy. The American doctrine differs from the English rule, and is thus stated in 26 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (2d Ed.) p. 139: "This doctrine is that it is lawful for a testator or grantor to create a trust estate for the life of the cestui que trust, with the provision that the latter shall receive and enjoy the avails at times and in amounts either fixed in the instrument or left to the discretion of the trustee, and that such avails shall not be subject to alienation by the beneficiary nor liable for his debts." A deed conveyed the title to the grantee on condition that the land should not be liable for any debts of the grantee then existing, or that he might contract during a specified number of years, and that the grantee should have no right to incumber or dispose of the land for a certain period except to dispose of it by will. Held, that a "spendthrift trust" was not created, there having been no trust estate, the grantee not having been limited to the enjoyment of the income, his right not being limited to support, he having taken an absolute fee, and having had the right of possession. Kessner v. Phillips, 88 S. W. 66, 67, 189 Mo. 515, 107 Am. St. Rep. 368, 3 Ann. Cas. 1005.

Testator's will provided that a share of his estate should be held in trust for a daughter, a married woman, to "her sole and separate use" during her life, so that she might enjoy the net income free from the control of any husband, that she should have power to dispose of the principal fund by will, and that, in default of such will, it should go to her heirs. Held, that neither the principal nor the income of the fund could be subjected to the claim of her attorneys for services in advising her in relation to the management of the fund, the fund being in possession of the court, and neither the principal nor income being a "separate estate," but the will created a mere "spendthrift trust." Castree v. Shotwell, 68 Atl. 774, 775, 73 N. J. Eq. 590.

SPENT GINGER

The article known as "spent ginger," which is a by-product from the treatment of ginger root in the manufacture of ginger extract, etc., and consists of a dried cake of ginger particles, is held to be "ginger root, unground," as enumerated in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 667, 30 Stat. 201. Lewis German & Co. v. United States, 137 Fed. 817, 70 C. C. A. 315.

SPICE

The residuum in the process of decortivating pepper berries, consisting of the inner cuticle in the form of a powder, which without further grinding, is mixed with ground pepper as an adulterant, is dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 287, 30 Stat. 173, as "spices not specially provided for." Frame & Co. v. United States, 143 Fed. 692, 693.

SPIKER

A "spiker" is a railroad workman whose duty it is to drive spikes into the cross-ties, by which the track rails are held in place. Nocita v. Omaha & C. B. St. Ry. Co., 131 N. W. 214, 89 Neb. 209.

SPILLWAY

As structure, see Structure.

SPINDLES

The word "spindles," used in relation to mills or factories, signifies more than a pin or rod on which yarn or thread is twisted, and is used as a unit of measure or capacity of the mill, including all the machinery and appliances necessary to operate it, so that the statement of the number of spindles in a mill fairly signifies to those acquainted with mills and mill property the size and capacity of the mill, though in the case of either a cloth or yarn mill the number of certain kinds of the machines might vary according to the quality or kind of yarn or cloth produced. So a description of a cotton or woolen mill in a list of property filed with the assessors under Pub. St. c. 11, by stating the number of spindles in the mill, is sufficient, where the assessors knew that cloth as well as yarn was manufactured; the spindles in the mill being taken as the unit of measure of its capacity, and the statement including by implication all other necessary machinery. Troy Cotton & Woolen Manufactory v. City of Fall River, 46 N. E. 99, 100, 167 Mass. 517.

SPINE

See Railway Spine.

SPINNING MILL

A machine which doubles raw skein silk is called a "spinning mill." Klots v. United States, 189 Fed. 606, 607, 71 C. C. A. 590.

SPIRIT—SPIRITS

See Ardent Spirits; Neutral Spirits; Proof Spirit; Single-Stamp Spirits.

Cordials are "spirits manufactured or distilled from grain or other materials," as that phrase is used in section 3, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, 30 Stat. 203, and, when imported from France, are subject to the reduced rate of duty provided for such spirits in the reciprocal commercial agreement with that country (30 Stat. 1774) negotiated under the authority of said section. United States v. Julius Wile Bro. & Co., 130 Fed. 331, 64 C. C. A. 577.

SPIRITUALISM

Belief in as insane delusion, see Insane Delusion.

"Spiritualism" may be defined as a belief in the power of some departed spirits to communicate with the living by means of mediums. City of Chicago v. Payne, 160 Ill. App. 641, 642.

SPIRITUOUS LIQUORS

"Spirituous liquor" is that which is in whole or in part composed of alcohol, extracted by distillation, such as whisky, brandy, or rum; these being regarded as spirituous and intoxicating liquors, without the necessity of proof. Marks v. State, 48 South. 864, 868, 159 Ala. 71, 133 Am. St. Rep. 20.

The term "spirituous liquors" includes malt liquors as well. State v. Dowdy, 53 S. E. 1002-1003, 145 N. C. 432 (citing State v. Giersch, 4 S. E. 193, 98 N. C. 720).

There is a marked distinction between "spirituous" and "malt" liquors. The former is obtained by distillation; the latter, by fermenting an infusion of malt. The qualifying words "spirituous" and "malt" are therefore not synonymous terms, and the employment of either cannot be understood as implying the use of the other, so as to permit the disjunctive "or," as used in the phrase "spirituous or malt liquors," set out in the complaint, to be construed as "to wit," such as spirituous liquor or whisky, malt liquor or beer, vinous liquor or wine, etc. The specific charge that Wong Sing sold "spirituous and malt liquors," assuming that these kinds of beverages were blended so as to be embraced in a single transaction, is rendered uncertain by the subsequent statement in the complaint that he sold either "spirituous or malt liquors." Under ordinances forbidding the sale of "any spirituous or malt liquors," and making each sale a separate and distinct offense, an information charging a sale of "spirituous and malt liquors," or spirituous or malt liquors, was not sufficient under Code Cr. Proc. §§ 1306, 1308, requiring that the accusation be as direct and as certain as the crime charged, and that it charge but one crime, and in one form only. Wong Sing v. City of Independence, 83 Pac. 387, 389, 47 Or. 231.

St. 1898, c. 1565c, prohibiting the sale of any spirituous, malt, ardent, or intoxicating liquors or drinks in no-license territory, when considered in connection with section 1565, as amended by Laws 1905, p. 520, c. 341, providing that proof of the sale of any malt, spirituous, vinous, or distilled liquor shall be deemed proof of the sale of intoxicating liquors, etc., is violated by a sale of malt liquors or drinks which are the product where the alcohol, produced by fermentation, of which malting is a preliminary process, remains in the liquor drawn off from the malt, or by a sale of "spirituous liquors" or drinks which are the product where the alcohol is separated by distillation so that the liquor separated contains a percentage of alcohol, or by a sale of ardent liquors or drinks, or by a sale of intoxicating liquors or drinks, and hence a sale of malt liquor containing alcohol is an offense, though the beverage is a non-intoxicant. Pennell v. State, 123 N. W. 115, 116, 141 Wis. 35.

Intoxicating liquor synonyms

As intoxicating liquor, see Intoxicating Liquor.

The qualifying phrase, "which produces intoxication," in Rem. & Bal. Code, § 6288, prohibiting the sale or giving away of "malt, spirituous or vinous liquor * * * or any essence * * * compound * * * which produces intoxication," refers only to the enumerated essences and compounds preceding it, and does not qualify "spirituous liquor" which is deemed intoxicating. State v. Bailey, 121 Pac. 821, 822, 67 Wash. 336 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, pp. 6610-6615).

While all "spirituous liquors" are intoxicating, and by force of statute all intoxicating liquors are ardent spirits, it is certain that all ardent spirits are not "spirituous liquors." "Malt liquors," for instance, are intoxicating, but cannot be classed as spirituous. Donithan v. Commonwealth, 64 S. E. 1050, 109 Va. 845 (citing 17 A. & E. Enc. Law, 203; State v. Oliver, 26 W. Va. 422, 53 Am. Rep. 79; Com. v. Livermore, 70 Mass. [4 Gray] 20; Feldham v. City of Morrison, 1 Ill. App. 460).

Proof of an unlawful sale of a mixture, preparation, or liquid "which will produce intoxication" will sustain a conviction upon an indictment charging the unlawful sale of "spirituous liquors, wine, porter, ale, beer and drinks of like nature" without a state license therefor. For the purpose of chapter 32, § 1, of the Code of 1899, such mixture, preparation, or liquid is in law "spirituous liquor," whether it be such in fact or not. State v. Good, 49 S. E. 121, 122, 56 W. Va. 215.

Alcohol

Pure alcohol is within the term "spirituous and intoxicating liquors." Marks v. State, 48 South. 864, 868, 159 Ala. 71, 133 Am. St. Rep. 20.

Alcohol is judicially recognized as a "spirituous and intoxicating liquor." Cureton v. State, 70 S. E. 332, 333, 135 Ga. 660.

Cider

Cider is not to be considered a "spirituous liquor," and it is not a malt liquor, whisky, brandy, wine, ale, beer, or any mixture thereof. Donithan v. Commonwealth, 64 S. E. 1050, 109 Va. 845.

SPIKE FENCE

"Spite fences" are fences, often high and unsightly, erected to annoy a neighbor or adjoining landowner by obstructing his air, light, or view. Anthony Wilkinson Live Stock Co. v. McIlquam, 83 Pac. 364, 368, 14 Wyo. 209, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 733 (citing Allen v. Kinyon, 1 N. W. 863, 41 Mich. 282; Kuzniak v. Kozminski, 65 N. W. 275, 107 Mich. 444, 61 Am. St. Rep. 344; Wood, Nuls. [2d Ed.] § 6).

A landowner has no right to maintain a "spite fence," which is one erected solely for the malicious purpose of vexing and injuring another landowner in the enjoyment of his land. Norton v. Randolph (Ala.) 58 South. 283, 285, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 129.

SPLITTING OR COUGHING OF BLOOD

The term "splitting or coughing of blood," as used in a question by a medical examiner to an applicant for life insurance, means the disorder so called, whether the blood comes from the lungs or the stomach. Eminent Household of Columbian Woodmen v. Prater, 103 Pac. 558, 563, 24 Okl. 214, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 917, 20 Ann. Cas. 287.

SPLENDID INVESTMENT

The statement that a purchase of property is a "splendid investment," made at the same time and in connection with representations as to conditions which, if true, would necessarily follow the conclusion expressed by such statement, since it forms a part of and gives color to the representations as an entirety, cannot be taken as "hot air" or regarded as "puffing," but must be considered as a part which goes to make up the whole of the representations, and, further than this, it cannot be taken as a statement or representation of prospective profits on the investment. Collins v. Chipman, 95 S. W. 666, 670, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 563.

SPLIT

Telephone wires

"Splitting" a pair of telephone wires to make a connection is done when by electricity some of the wires in a cable are disabled, leaving others defective, and one good wire of a pair is connected with another good wire of another pair. Cumberland Telegraph & Telephone Co. v. Kelly, 160 Fed. 316, 87 C. A. 268, 15 Ann. Cas. 1210.

Switch

The expression "split the switch" means that in some unknown manner the switch has so far opened that the wheels of a car leave the main track and proceed on the switch track. Simone v. Rhode Island Co., 68 Atl. 202, 203, 28 R. I. 186, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 740.

Where a switch tongue is jarred by the forward trucks or wheels of a car in passing on the main line rail, so as to catch the wheels of the after truck and force them onto the switch rail while the forward trucks continued on the main rail, the car is said to "split the switch," as it is expressed, and a derailment is necessarily produced. Birmingham Traction Co. v. Reville, 34 South. 981, 984, 136 Ala. 335.

SPLITTER

A "splitter" in a packing plant is a person who splits recently slaughtered hogs with a cleaver. Rendlich v. Hammond Packing Co., 80 S. W. 683, 106 Mo. App. 717.

A device with which it is customary to equip or guard saws in a sawmill, consisting of a piece of iron or steel about the thickness of the saw blade, placed in an upright position, a few inches back of the saw, the top extending only to the top of the saw, is known as a "splitter." Peterson v. Union Iron Works, 93 Pac. 1077, 48 Wash. 505.

SPOLIATOR—SPOLIATION

The doctrine of "spoliation" is inapplicable, where testatrix requested another, who was made a beneficiary by her subsequent will, to retain a will until he learned that another had been filed in the probate court, and, on learning that fact, such other caused the former will to be destroyed. In re Rogers' Will, 80 Vt. 259, 67 Atl. 726, 730.

"Alterations of any sort, made in a will by a stranger to it, without the knowledge of the testator, have no effect whatever, and the instrument must be admitted to probate as it stood originally. Such changes are a mere 'spoliation,' and parol evidence will always be received to show the original contents of the will." Monroe v. Huddart, 113 N. W. 149, 150, 79 Neb. 569, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 259.

"Whatever inferences may be drawn against a party by reason of his failure to produce evidence in his possession, or under his control, are allowed on the theory that he willfully withholds such evidence. His conduct, says Greenleaf, is attributed to his supposed knowledge, that the truth would have operated against him. * * * He is treated in law as a 'spoliator of evidence.'" Lowe v. Donnelly, 85 Pac. 318, 319, 36 Colo. 292 (quoting and adopting definition in Cartier v. Troy Lumber Co., 28 N. E. 932, 138 Ill. 533, 14 L. R. A. 470).

Sponge

The term "sponges," as used in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 82, means natural "sponges," and does not include manufactured rubber sponges. Alfred H. Smith Co. v. United States, 143 Fed. 691, 692; Id., 149 Fed. 1022, 79 C. C. A. 531.

Spontaneous

SPONTANEOUS COMBUSTION

As fire, see Fire.

The word "spontaneous," when used in connection with combustion, means the internal development of heat without the action of an external agent, which may become so rapid as to produce fire. Western Woolen Mill Co. v. Northern Assur. Co., of London, 139 Fed. 637, 639, 72 C. C. A. 1.

SPONTANEOUS EXCLAMATION

A barn was destroyed by a fire which originated the day before on a neighboring ranch, whose manager, with others, discovered the danger while the fire was at some distance and vainly endeavored to save the building. In an action by the owner of the barn against the owner of the ranch, testimony that while the barn was burning the manager said that he had himself set out the fire was not competent evidence that he had in fact done so. The declaration of the manager was not rendered competent by reason of his being the defendant's agent, for it was a mere narration of a past transaction, not relating to, explaining, or characterizing any act in which he was then engaged, and the circumstances do not indicate that it was such a "spontaneous exclamation," made under the stress of nervous excitement, that its truth could be presumed without being sworn to. Johnson v. McLain Inv. Co., 100 Pac. 52, 53, 79 Kan. 423, 131 Am. St. Rep. 302.

Sport

See Private Sports; Public Sport.

Baseball does not come within the class of "sports" prohibited on Sunday by section 1368, C. L. 1897. Territory v. Davenport, 124 Pac. 795, 797, 17 N. M. 214, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 407.

SPORTING

Playing at the game of baseball is "sporting," within the meaning of the statute concerning the observance of Sunday. Seay v. Shrader, 95 N. W. 690, 692, 69 Neb. 245.

SPORTING HOUSE

The so-called "sporting houses" are houses of ill fame. Johnson v. People, 66 N. E. 877, 881, 202 Ill. 53.

SPOT CASH

As used in a contract for the purchase of lemons, the term "spot cash" had reference to payment to be made after the lemons were washed, inspected, selected, accepted, and weighed, and the culls disposed of. Central Mercantile Co. v. Graves, 88 Pac. 78, 79, 74 Kan. 718.

A "spot cash sale" means a sale which requires the buyer to pay cash for the goods on the delivery of the same. In such a sale the title does not pass until the goods are paid for, and one delivering goods under and by virtue of such a contract for sale has the right to replevin the goods on failure of the buyer to pay the price. McIver v. Williamson-Halsell-Fraser Co., 92 Pac. 170, 171, 19 Okl. 454, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 696.

SPOUSE

See Former Spouse.

As legal representative, see Legal Representative.

SPRAG—SPRAGGING

A "sprag" is a wedge-shaped piece of wood, which is placed on a track in front of the wheels of a car to bring the car to a standstill. McGrath v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 53 Atl. 207, 208, 68 N. J. Law, 425.

As applied to mining, "spragging" is the insertion of a strong stick, called a "sprag," from between the spokes of one car wheel to and between the spokes of the opposite wheel, so that, when the sprag comes in contact with the body of the car, it acts as a brake by preventing any further revolutions of the wheels, and compelling the sliding thereof along the track rails. Collingwood v. Illinois & I. Fuel Co., 101 N. W. 283, 284, 125 Iowa, 537.

SPRAWL

A boss in charge of workmen in a quarry is under no legal obligation to ascertain the safety of the place unless its superintendence is committed to him, and in any event an injury to one ordered by the boss to shovel "sprawl," or loose rock, near where a loose rock in the wall is likely to fall, cannot be ascribed to the giving of the order by the boss unless he knew or had reason to believe that the place was unsafe; and a complaint alleging negligence of the boss in giving such order, when by the exercise of due diligence he should have known that the rock was likely to fall and injure the servant, is demurrable. Alabama Consol. Coal & Iron Co. v. Hammond, 47 South. 248, 249, 156 Ala. 253.

SPRAY

"Spray" is defined as water dispersed in particles, as by the wind or by force of impact. Small showers of water, thrown in minute whirling streams by a syringe, constitute "spray" within this definition. Marvel Co. v. Pearl, 133 Fed. 100, 162, 66 C. C. A. 226 (citing Stand. Dict.).

SPREAD

A statute, requiring certain papers to be "spread" upon a named book, is to be read as if it had said such papers should be recorded in such book. Hager v. Melton, 66 S. E. 13, 15, 66 W. Va. 62.

Const. § 106, requires proof by affidavit of publication of notice of intention to apply for the enactment of a local law to be "spread" on the journal of each house. "While ordinarily the language employed might be interpreted to mean to be transcribed upon or written upon, yet it is susceptible of a more extended definition or meaning, and in order to uphold the constitutionality of the act, there being no express prohibition, nor one resulting from necessary implication, against the doing of the thing as it was done, that construction will be adopted, if reasonable, that will save the statute. The pasting of the written or printed copy of the notice and affidavit of notice upon the page of the journal was, in a sense, spreading the same upon the journal, and the doing of the thing in the way in which it was done indicates a legislative construction of that provision in the Constitution, and under all the circumstances this legislative construction is entitled to some consideration." Dudley v. Fitzpatrick, 39 South. 384, 386, 143 Ala. 162.

SPREADER

An iron spike placed immediately behind a power saw, of sufficient height to prevent the saw from catching the material and throwing the same back with force against the operator, is called a "spreader." Nickey v. Dougan, 73 N. E. 288, 289, 34 Ind. App. 601.

A "spreader," used in connection with a rip saw, is a piece of iron or steel slightly thicker than and set about two inches behind the saw it is to be used with, so as to spread the seam in the wood, and thereby hinder the clamping of the saw. Dean v. St.

Louis Woodenware Works, 80 S. W. 202, 204, 106 Mo. App. 167.

SPRING

See Early Spring; Live Springs.

Water rising to the surface of the earth from below, and either flowing away in the form of a small stream or standing as a pool or a small lake, is the definition of a "spring." De Wolfskill v. Smith, 89 Pac. 1001, 1003, 5 Cal. App. 175 (quoting Cent. Dict.).

In an action involving an alleged appropriation of certain springs, it appeared that certain so-called "springs" occupied a space of about one-half an acre, and that during a portion of the year about 10 acres was marshy, and a witness testified that the springs rested right on the brow of a drop-off; that there was quite a bit of water standing around in the springs, and it looked like there might be five or six springs; but the evidence showed that there was no stream leading into them, and that the water therefrom formed no channel or stream in leaving, though during a portion of the wet season some of the water would flow down, for a short distance on the side hill, where it would disappear in the soil. Held, that the pools of water were not live springs, and that they constituted nothing more than a bog occasioned by seepage water. Dickey v. Maddux, 93 Pac. 1090, 1091, 48 Wash. 411.

SPRING BACK BOOK

"A 'spring back book' is one that is heavily reinforced with board or some such material in such a way as will make the back close quickly." Commonwealth v. Bacon (Ky.) 111 S. W. 387, 391.

SPRING OR AUTUMN ELECTION

The words "at the next spring or autumn election," in Const. 1850, art. 20, § 1, as amended in 1876 (Pub. Laws 1877, p. 311), providing that any amendment to the Constitution proposed by the Legislature shall be submitted to the electors at "the next spring or autumn election" thereafter, etc., when considered in connection with article 4, § 34, and article 5, § 3, article 7, § 1, mentioning the general biennial fall election, and article 11, § 1, referring to an annual election on the first Monday of April in each organized township, and article 13, § 6, providing for the election of regents of the university at the time of the election of a justice of the Supreme Court, and Comp. Laws, § 178, providing for the holding of a general election in the townships and wards of the state on the first Monday of April in odd-numbered years, for the election of judges of the Supreme Court, refer to two state-wide elections, one in the fall of the even-numbered years, and the other in the spring of the odd-numbered years, and the spring election referred to does not include the election held in April in the even-numbered years. Chase v. Board of Election Com'rs of Wayne County, 115 N. W. 454, 455, 151 Mich. 407.

Const. 1850, art. 20, §§ 1, 2, as amended in 1861 (Laws 1861, p. 589, Joint Res. No. 17), 1876 (Pub. Laws, p. 311), providing that amendments to the Constitution proposed by the Legislature shall be submitted to the electors at the next "spring or autumn election," and that the question of the general revision of the Constitution shall be submitted to the electors at the general election in 1886, and in each sixteenth year thereafter, and at such other times as the Legislature may provide, and in case the majority of the electors decide in favor of a convention the Legislature shall provide for the election of delegates, and all amendments shall take effect at the commencement of the year after their adoption, fixes the date of the submission to the electors of the adoption or rejection of a Constitution framed by a convention which completed its labors in February, 1908, as the next November election. Carton v. Secretary of State, 115 N. W. 429, 435, 151 Mich. 337.

SPRING SHOT

A "spring shot" in blasting is a shot so arranged that it simply makes a chamber at the bottom of the drilled hole, while a blast proper is a stronger charge and both tears and throws the earth and rock. Spokane v. Patterson, 89 Pac. 402, 403, 46 Wash. 93, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1104, 123 Am. St. Rep. 921, 13 Ann. Cas. 706.

SPRING WATER

"Spring water" is water taken directly from a natural spring. Ordinary croton water drawn from the pipes in New York City, filtered and bottled after the addition of small quantities of mineral salts and carbonic acid gas, is not "spring water," as the term is generally understood, and the labeling of the bottles as "spring water" constitutes a misbranding, within the meaning of the Food and Drugs Act (Act June 30, 1906, c. 3915, § 8, 34 Stat. 771). The proof showed that ordinary croton water, like the water of any fresh water lake or river, is partly spring and partly rain and surface water, and was not what is commonly understood by the public as "spring water." United States v. Morgan, 181 Fed. 587, 588.

Sess. Laws 1889, p. 215, § 1, providing that all ditches constructed to utilize the waste, seepage, or spring waters of the state, shall be governed by the same laws relating to priority of right to water in ditches constructed for the purpose of utilizing the water of running streams, if valid, is applicable only to appropriations of "waste, seepage, and spring waters" before they reach a natural stream, whether by natural surface flow or percolation, or by being artificially turned into the same; and the waters after reaching a natural stream become, in the absence of an intention by the owner to reclaim them, a part of the stream, and inure to the benefit of the appropriators of its waters. La Jara Creamery & Live Stock Ass'n v. Hansen, 83 Pac. 644, 645, 35 Colo. 105.

SPRINKLING

As street improvement, see Street Improvement.

SPROCKET CHAIN DRIVE

A "sprocket chain drive" is the equivalent of a "belt drive" as a means for propelling railway motor velocipedes. Sheffield Car Co. v. Buda Foundry & Mfg. Co., 177 Fed. 713, 715.

SPUN CANDY

"Floss" or "spun candy" is candy consisting of threadlike or silklike filaments formed from melted sugar or candy. Electric Candy Mach. Co. v. Morris, 156 Fed. 972, 973.

SPUR TRACK

As railroad track, see Railroad Track.

SQUARE

See Public Square.

The word "square," when placed on the plat of a city addition, indicates a dedication for public use, either for purposes of a free passage or to be ornamented and improved for grounds of pleasure, amusement, recreation, or health; such being its proper and natural meaning, as well as its ordinary and usual signification. The word "square" as a term of dedication imports absolute and complete abandonment to such public uses. Fessler v. Town of Union, 56 Atl. 272, 275, 67 N. J. Eq. 14 (quoting Trustees of Methodist Episcopal Church of Hoboken v. Mayor, etc., of City of Hoboken, 83 N. J. Law, 13, 97 Am. Dec. 696).

Ky. St. 1903, §§ 3564, 3566, 3567, 3571, 3572, providing that the original construction of any street, etc., may be at the exclusive cost of the owners of the "lots and parts of lots or land" abutting on the street improved, etc., when corrected by substituting the word "of" for the word "or" in the quoted clause, and when considered in connection with the history of the legislation as shown in section 3564, providing that the construction of any street may be made at the cost of the owners of lots in each fourth of a square apportioned according to the number of square feet, and defining a "square" as a "subdivision of territory bounded on all sides by principal streets," and as amended by Act March 24, 1894 (Acts 1894, p. 350, c. 114) § 5, constituting section 3572, does not authorize a municipality to assess for a street improvement a street car franchise to operate a line of roads in the center of the street improved. City of Maysville v. Maysville, St. R. & Transfer Co., 108 S. W. 960, 962, 128 Ky. 673 (citing and distinguishing City of Louisville v. Figg, 75 S. W. 269, 116 Ky. 135; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co., 76 S. W. 1097, 116 Ky. 856; City of Ludlow v. Trustees of Cincinnati S. R. Co., 78 Ky. 357).

Under St. 1903, § 2833, providing that, when an improvement is the original construction of any street, it shall be made at the exclusive cost of the owners of lots in each fourth of a square, to be equally apportioned according to the number of feet owned by them, that each subdivision of the territory bounded on all sides by principal streets shall be deemed a square, and that if the contiguous territory is not defined into squares by principal streets the ordinance shall fix the depth on both sides, it is not meant that squares are rectangular figures, or having four equal sides, or figures of any uniform shape or size; and wherever territory is bounded on all sides by "principal streets," it is a "square" within the meaning of the statute, though of course there may be territory of that description of such size as to indicate that it had not yet been divided into squares, in which event it would fall within the latter part of such section, and the mere fact that a square is larger than the average does not militate against the validity of an assessment, where it is shown that the square is bounded on all sides by principal streets and its size is not such as to warrant a finding that the city has not determined that it shall remain a square in its present form. German Protestant Orphan Asylum v. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. (Ky.) 82 S. W. 632, 633.

As synonymous with block

The words "square" and "block," when used to designate a piece of land in a city, are synonymous terms. We find the word "square" used chiefly in Southern cities, and the word "block" elsewhere; but they mean the same thing. They mean a piece of land defined by streets surrounding it. Gilsonite Roofing & Paving Co. v. St. Louis Fair Ass'n, 132 S. W. 657, 660, 231 Mo. 589.

Rev. St. 1909, § 7201, makes it unlawful for a county court to grant a license to keep a dramshop in a town or city containing 2,000 inhabitants or more until a majority of the taxpaying citizens and guardians of minors holding property in the "block or square" in which the dramshop is to be kept shall sign the petition asking for such license to keep a dramshop in such block or square. Held, that the words "block" or "square" as so used were synonyms and contemplated a portion of a city inclosed by streets, whether occupied by buildings or composed of vacant lots; the term "block or square" meaning a portion of ground in a town or city surrounded by streets, and hence a petition signed by only a majority of the owners of property within a section of a city bounded on two sides by streets, neither dedicated nor open to the public, but shown on the plat of that portion of the city, was insufficient. Kochtitzky v. Herbst, 140 S. W. 925, 929, 160 Mo. App. 443.

The word "block," as used with reference to subdivisions of land, is synonymous with the word "square," and means the territory bounded by four streets. An application for a liquor license, under an ordinance requiring that it shall be signed by a majority of the property owners, according to the frontage, "on both sides of the street in the block upon which such dramshop is to be kept, and * * * by a majority of the bona fide householders and persons and firms doing business on each side of the street in the block upon which the dramshop is to have its main entrance," though signed by the property owners and householders and persons or firms doing business on both sides of the street in the block in which the dramshop is to have its main entrance, is insufficient to compel the issuance of a license, where it does not have the signatures of a majority of the property owners on both sides of the streets bounding the block in which the dramshop is to be located, for the word "block," as used in the first clause recited, means the territory inclosed by the four streets, and is synonymous with the word "square." Harrison v. People ex rel. Boetter, 63 N. E. 191, 192, 195 Ill. 466 (citing Cent. Dict.; Webst. Dict.; City of Ottawa v. Barney, 10 Kan. 270; Olsson v. City of Topeka, 21 Pac. 219, 42 Kan. 709; State v. Defes, 10 South. 597, 44 La. Ann. 164; Todd v. Kankakee & I. R. Co., 78 Ill. 530; City of Chicago v. Stratton, 44 N. E. 853, 855, 162 Ill. 494, 501, 35 L. R. A. 84, 53 Am. St. Rep. 325).

As park

The word "park," written upon a block upon a map of city property, indicates a public use; and conveyances made by the owners of the platted land by reference to such map operate conclusively as a dedication of the block. There is little, if any, distinction between the words "park" and "square," and when used in this way they mean substantially the same thing. Frauenthal v. Slaten, 121 S. W. 395-398, 91 Ark. 350.

SQUARE INCH OF WATER

A column of flowing water measured by the square inch, instead of cubic inches, is intended by deeds providing for a measurement of water by "square inches"; but no accurate measurement can be made unless the velocity of the flow is determined. Crane v. McMurtrie (N. J.) 68 Atl. 392, 899.

SQUARE LEAGUE

A "square league," or "sitio de ganado mayor," appears to have been the only unit in estimating the superficies of land granted by the Spanish or Mexican authorities. Eleven of these leagues was the usual extent for a rancho grant. If more or less was intended in the grant, it was carefully stated. Corrigan v. State, 94 S. W. 95, 100, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 171.

SQUARED TIMBERS

The words "saw logs" and "squared timbers," as used in a contract for the delivery of a certain number of "saw logs" and an agreement to pay therefor two cents per cubic foot for "squaring said logs," has reference to logs that will square out at least 18 cubic feet to the log. Hinote v. Brigman & Crutchfield, 33 South. 303, 305, 44 Fla. 589.

SQUAT*SQUATTED UPON

A vendee in possession after breach of contract and notice to quit can be ousted only by action, and not by summary proceedings to recover real property under Code Civ. Proc. § 2232, subd. 4, authorizing such proceedings against a person who has "intruded into" or "squatted upon" real property without the permission of the person entitled to possession, or after a permission given by the person entitled to such possession has been revoked and notice of revocation given. Stockwell v. Washburn, 111 N. Y. Supp. 413, 415, 59 Misc. Rep. 543.

SQUATTER

A "squatter" may be defined to be a person who settles or locates on land, inclosed or uninclosed, with no bona fide claim or color of title and without the consent of the owner. Baker v. State, 71 S. E. 594, 9 Ga. App. 423 (Pen. Code 1910, § 216, subd. 4; 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6619).

One who takes possession of a tract of public land with a view to becoming an entryman under the homestead law, except as to the limited statutory time allowed him preceding actual entry at the land office, is a mere "squatter" having no rights in the land as against the government or others. United States v. Bagnell Timber Co., 178 Fed. 795, 799, 102 C. C. A. 243.

Where a lease was terminated by a warrant in summary proceedings for nonpayment of rent, an assignment of the lease without the landlord's consent, in violation of the covenants of the lease, did not confer any right upon the assignee, where his occupancy of the premises covered by the lease did not begin until after its termination; but such occupancy rendered him a mere "squatter" or "intruder," within Code Civ. Proc. § 2232, subd. 4, authorizing summary proceedings to recover possession of land from a person who has intruded into or squatted upon any real property without the permission of the person entitled to the possession thereof. Mahoney v. Hoffman, 109 N. Y. Supp. 13, 14, 58 Misc. Rep. 217.

SQUEEZE*SQUEEZER

A "squeezer" is the name applied to a machine used in the manufacture of iron and steel, the function of which is to receive the product of the furnace after it has passed from the furnace between the rolls, and further to compact it by hydraulic pressure. Pflueger v. Lewis Foundry & Machine Co., 134 Fed. 28, 29, 67 C. C. A. 102.

SR.

The suffix "Sr." is not part of a man's name, and, except in a few instances, may be disregarded. Ross v. Berry, 124 Pac. 342, 343, 17 N. M. 48.

STABLE

See Livery Stable.

A stable in which stall room is leased to persons who care for and control their own horses and vehicles is not "a stable for taking horses and carriages for hire," within Rev. Laws, c. 102, § 70, prohibiting the erection of such a stable within 200 feet of a church. The word "hire" in that act must be taken to have its secondary meaning of compensation or pay as distinguished from its more accurate meaning of compensation for use, and the words "take in upon hire" were inserted to make certain that a boarding stable was within the act. Congregation Beth Israel v. O'Connell, 72 N. E. 1011, 187 Mass. 236.

As building

See Building.

Garage

A restriction in a deed of property in a fine improved residence district, intended for the benefit of the grantor and his grantees, declared that "no stable of any kind, private or otherwise, shall be erected or maintained on any portion of said land," and that no building erected on the land should be used for any manufacturing or mechanical purpose. Held, that a building on such property, used by defendants as a garage for their own automobiles, was not a "stable," within the restriction. Riverbank Imp. Co. v. Bancroft, 95 N. E. 216, 218, 209 Mass. 217, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 730, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 450.

STACK

A "stack" of hay is a large pile gathered after the hay has been seasoned, as distinguished from a "cock" or "shock" which is a small pile into which the hay is gathered after being mowed, and thus permitted to remain until seasoned. People v. Doyle, 110 Pac. 458, 459, 13 Cal. App. 611.

A "stack" is defined as being a "pile of grain in the sheaf, or of hay, straw, peas, etc., gathered into a circular or rectangular form, often, when of large size, coming to a point or ridge at the top, and thatched to protect from the weather." A lightning policy on grain "stacks" on a farm covers grain stacked under a shed. Farmers' Mutual v. Reser, 88 N. E. 349-352, 43 Ind. App. 634; Id., 88 N. E. 353, 43 Ind. App. 738.

STAGE

See At Any Stage; Entertainment of the Stage.

Stage of manufacture, see Degree.

STAGE LINE

"Stage line," "railroad line," and "automobile line" are expressions which are ordinarily understood to be a regular line of vehicles for public use operated between distant points, or between different cities, and do not include hacks, stages, and automobiles, which merely operate from point to point in one city for the transportation of the public. That defendant's hack's or other similar vehicles regularly met railway trains at a station, and for hire transported passengers in that town, was not the operation of a hack line within the license law. Commonwealth v. Walton, 104 S. W. 323, 126 Ky. 523.

STAGE OF CASE

Where, under Rev. St. § 880, a party is charged with attempting to prevent a witness from appearing or testifying in the case of State v. A. B., "charged with larceny," such attempt is alleged to have been committed in a "stage of a criminal case," within the meaning of the law. State v. Sullivan, 51 South. 588, 589, 125 La. 560; Same v. Hood, 51 South. 589, 125 La. 563.

STAGECOACH

As used in Ky. St. 1903, § 4724, regulating rate of toll on turnpikes, provides a certain charge for each pleasure or hackney coach, and a different charge for each stagecoach, vehicles used for carrying passengers, express matter, and mail were "stagecoaches." Burton v. Monticello & B. Turnpike Co. (Ky.) 109 S. W. 319.

STAGING

As appliance, see Appliance.

As place of work, see Place.

STAGGERING DRUNK

See Drunk.

STAGNUM

The word "stagnum" comprehends both land and water. Conover v. Atlantic City Sewerage Co., 57 Atl. 897, 898, 70 N. J. Law, 315.

STAINED EARTHENWARE

Earthenware, to which a single color glaze has been added, is, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 96, 30 Stat. 156, not only "decorated," but "stained," within the meaning of the paragraph. United States v. L. Straus & Co., 168 Fed. 569, 570.

STAIRWAY

Ladder distinguished

A declaration by a servant for injuries alleged that defendant maintained "a one and two story building, * * * a one story building having a second story or cupola, or a portion of the same near the middle part which was connected to the first story" by a "stairway which was in fact a ladder" not having any handrail, by reason of which plaintiff fell and was injured. Held, that the terms "stairway" and "ladder" are not synonymous, a stairway pertaining to architecture and having various technical parts, consisting of risers, treads, nosings, fliers, and winders, and being stationary, while a ladder is in the nature of a tool, consisting of a frame, usually portable, of wood, metal, or rope, used for ascent or descent, consisting only of two parts, the sides and cross-steps or rounds, which form the steps, and a cupola is not a story of a building, but is the top of a structure, usually a cup-shaped spherical roof, though the term is also applied to any similar structure rising above the roof of a building, whatever its shape may be; and, while the declaration was indefinite as to the description of the building, an allegation that plaintiff was required to use such "stairway" in the course of his employment sufficiently alleged a violation of Pub. Laws 1909, No. 285, § 14, providing that stairways with substantial handrails shall be provided in manufacturing establishments, and, where necessary, steps shall be substantially covered with rubber for the better safety of persons employed in such establishments, the risk of which plaintiff did not assume, and was therefore not demurrable. Davis v. Buss Mach. Works, 135 N. W. 303, 304, 169 Mich. 498.

STAKE

See Grub Stake.

In gaming

"Stakes," in the ordinary sense of the term, signifies something deposited by two persons with the third on condition that it is to be delivered to the one who shall become entitled to it by the happening of a specified contingency. Baxter v. Deneen, 57 Atl. 601, 607, 98 Md. 181, 64 L. R. A. 949, 1 Ann. Cas. 147.

STAKING IT

In operating a "cradle," which is a short detached track made to fit over a ground track with rails extending to a boat called "feather rails" which lap over the rails of the regular track of a railroad, so that a car can be shoved along the main track until it reaches the thin edge, when it will proceed along the cradle track to a boat, the adjusting of the cradle track at the right point is called "staking it," and is done in this manner: A wooden beam is put against the land end of the cradle, and the other end of the beam is attached to a locomotive, which pushes the track toward the river or pulls it away as may be necessary; the steamboat pushing or pulling on the cradle at the other end. Burke v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co., 97 S. W. 981, 120 Mo. App. 683.

STALE

A suit to correct a mistake in a deed, brought more than 40 years after its date, with no excuse pleaded or proved for the delay, will be deemed a "stale" demand. William Carlisle & Co. v. King (Tex.) 122 S. W. 581, 583.

Entirely independent of any statutory period of limitations, equity will not enforce "stale demands," where the complainant has inexcusably slept upon his rights for so long a time and under such circumstances as to make it inequitable to enter upon an inquiry as to the validity thereof. Kleinclaus v. Dutard, 81 Pac. 516, 147 Cal. 245.

Where a demand was entered in favor of plaintiff, quieting title in certain land, but, by a mistake of the clerk, described the land as in fractional section No. 92, instead of fractional section No. 2, and plaintiff, without excuse, failed to discover the mistake for more than four years, when he filed a petition for correction, his claim was a "stale demand," and his right to relief was barred by laches. Rogers v. Waggoner (Tex.) 149 S. W. 561, 562.

STALL

A "stall" for a horse is necessarily a quadrangular box. It must under any device have posts and sides. A certain patent on a portable horse stall held, under the evidence, not a mere improvement of a former patent obtained by the same person on a portable stall, but a distinct and independent contrivance, so that no interest therein passed under an assignment by the patentee of an interest in the former patent. Stitzer v. Withers, 91 S. W. 277, 279, 122 Ky. 181.

STAMP

See Tax-Paid Spirit Stamps; Trading Stamp.

As property, see Property.

Where a witness testified that defendant stated he kicked and stamped deceased, an instruction that if defendant, by "stamping," kicking, and beating deceased, etc., was not objectionable in the use of the word "stamping," being but another form of saying that defendant kicked deceased. Grant v. State, 120 S. W. 481, 483, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 411.

STAMP BUSINESS

See Trading Stamp Business.

STAMP COMPANY

STANCHION

The "stanchions" of a vessel are the parts of wood or iron placed so as to support the beams of the vessel. W. S. Keyser & Co. v. Duit, 150 Fed. 328, 80 C. C. A. 212 (citing Patterson's Nau. Ency. verbo "Stanchions").

STAND

See Trolley Stand.

STAND BEHIND

Representations as to the condition of mules, made at the time of sale, and which induced the purchase, and accompanied by a statement of the seller that he would "stand behind" the mules, are warranties. Mosby v. Larue, 136 S. W. 887, 888, 143 Ky. 433.

STAND BY

See Stood by, Aided, Abetted, or Assisted.

The phrase "stands by," within the equitable principle that one is estopped to claim title to land which, while standing by, he has permitted another to mortgage or sell, does not necessarily mean actual presence, but implies knowledge under such circumstances as render it the duty of the possessor to communicate it. Gaddes v. Pawtucket Inst. for Savings, 80 Atl. 415, 33 R. I. 177, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 407.

STAND CONDEMNED

"A man's land should 'stand condemned' when, and only when, every step which the law prescribes to that end has been taken. Every reasonable doubt should be resolved in favor of the citizen. It is well known that charters are obtained by those most interested in securing the largest delegation of power possible. The owner, whose property is to be condemned, has no opportunity to be heard. The constitutional provision requiring notice of the introduction of private laws has, by custom and construction, been practically abrogated. Power is ever aggressive, and often indifferent to individual rights.

Recognizing these truths, taught by experience, the courts have wisely declared that all grants of power are to be construed strictly against the grant, and liberally in favor of the citizen." Creedmoor Charter (Priv. Acts 1905, p. 1006, c. 398) § 17, provides for the condemnation of land for street purposes, and declares that the report of appraisers shall lie in the mayor's office for purposes of inspection and appeal, and that, unless an appeal is taken from such report, the land so appraised shall stand condemned for the use of the town and the price fixed shall be paid. Held, that such provision applied only to the procedure for fixing the price to be paid, and should be construed to mean that if no appeal was taken from the appraised value the land should stand condemned at such value, but does not suspend the right of entry if an appeal is taken. State v. Jones, 52 S. E. 240, 248, 139 N. C. 613, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 313.

STAND GOOD

As a guaranty or suretyship

An agreement to "stand good" for the board of another does not imply a guaranty or suretyship. One may "stand good" for a debt of his own, or for goods which he may purchase for another, and yet be the original and only obligor. McNabb v. Clipp, 81 N. E. 858, 859, 5 Ind. App. 204.

STAND MUTE

See Stood Mute.

STAND SUSPENDED

See Suspend—Suspension.

STANDING

See Good Standing.

STANDING CAR

Under a street railroad rule that, when passing standing cars, the gong must be rung and the car stopped with the front end opposite the rear of the standing car, the word "standing" was not limited to the passing of cars absolutely at rest, but included cars that had stopped and had just started from which passengers might have alighted. Birmingham Ry., Light & Power Co. v. Morris, 50 South. 198, 203, 163 Ala. 190.

STANDING OR ERECTED UPON

The phrase "building standing or erected upon," as used in P. L. p. 378, providing for an assessment for damages to the owner of buildings standing or erected upon any street, the grade whereof has been changed, applies only to buildings fronting upon or possessing an entrance upon the street. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. City of Summit, 72 Atl. 83, 84, 77 N. J. Law, 438.

STANDING TIMBER

As interest in land, see Interest (In Property).

See, also, Stumpage.

"Standing timber" is a part of the freehold. Marion County Lumber Co. v. Tilghman Lumber Co., 66 S. E. 124, 125, 84 S. C. 505.

STANDARD

See Fixed Standards; Mutual Standard.

STANDARD DEVELOPMENT OF STREAM

"Standard development of a stream" means the power which the stream affords by a natural, unobstructed flow to be used in a continuous 24-hour daily use. Hazard Powder Co. v. Somersville Mfg. Co., 61 Atl. 519, 520, 78 Conn. 171, 112 Am. St. Rep. 144.

STANDARD SCHEDULE RATE

Acts 1905, p. 873, c. 410, provides that it shall be unlawful for any person not the authorized agent of a carrier issuing the same to sell or deal in any passenger ticket issued and sold "below the standard schedule rate under contract that it shall be nontransferable." Held that, since standard schedule rates are fixed with reference to interstate commerce by Interstate Commerce Act, § 6, and with reference to intrastate commerce by Acts 1897, p. 121, c. 10, § 22, the act was not invalid for uncertainty of the expression "standard schedule rate." Samuelson v. State, 95 S. W. 1012, 1017, 116 Tenn. 470, 115 Am. St. Rep. 805.

STANDARD TIME

"Allowing one hour for each 15 degrees of longitude west from Greenwich, the seventy-fifth meridian passing somewhere near Washington, the ninetieth near St. Louis, and so on, and by establishing one uniform standard of time for all the territory within each of the sections named, a satisfactory, practical basis is attained." Where a policy expired on a certain day at "noon," parol evidence was admissible to establish that, by a well-known custom of the place where the contract was made, the word "noon" was used to mean 12 o'clock midday, "standard time," and was so intended by the parties to the contract, instead of 12 o'clock sun time. Rochester German Ins. Co. v. Peaslee-Gaulbert Co., 87 S. W. 1115, 1118, 120 Ky. 752, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 464, 9 Ann. Cas. 324.

STARBOARD

See Tribord.

STARE DECISIS

See, also, Law of the Case.

"The doctrine of 'stare decisis,' commonly called the 'doctrine of precedents,' has been firmly established in the law. It means that we should adhere to decided cases and settled principles, and not disturb matters which have been established by judicial determination." Johnson v. Western Union Tel. Co., 57 S. E. 122, 124, 144 N. C. 410, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 256, 119 Am. St. Rep. 961 (quoting and adopting the definition of Justice Walker in Hill v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co., 55 S. E. 854, 143 N. C. 539, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 606.

It is well settled as a general proposition, admitting, however, of exceptions, that courts will adhere to and follow decisions of the highest court of the jurisdiction, where the same points come again in litigation; and the rule is of universal application, where the law has become settled as a rule of property by reason of such earlier decisions, and rights have become vested on the faith of them. This is the doctrine of "stare decisis." Shoemaker v. Cincinnati, 68 N. E. 1, 2, 68 Ohio St. 603.

Prior decisions of inferior courts cannot afford a basis for the application of the doctrine of "stare decisis." City of Sedalia, to Use of Sedalia Nat. Bank, v. Donohue, 89 S. W. 386, 388, 190 Mo. 407, 4 Ann. Cas. 89.

The maxim "stare decisis" does not contemplate whatever a court may happen to say in a discursive argument of a cause, or even several causes, but has regard only to points and adjudications actually involved as essential elements in the questions in actual controversy. Ingham v. Wm. P. Harper & Son, 128 Pac. 675, 676, 71 Wash. 286.

The maxim of "stare decisis" applies only to decisions on points arising and decided in causes, and the precedent includes the conclusions only upon questions which the case contains and which are decided. Koerner v. St. Louis Car Co., 107 S. W. 481, 485, 200 Mo. 141, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 292.

Where a series of decisions of a court of last resort have been acted upon as the proper interpretation of the law for a long time, they will not be interfered with, though the courts will decide otherwise, were the question a new one. Inman v. Sherrill, 116 Pac. 426, 427, 29 Okl. 100.

The doctrine of "stare decisis" does not prevent a re-examination and correction of principles previously declared. It does not prevent a re-examination of the question of the method of impeaching accused, testifying in his own behalf, by proof of a prior conviction of crime, and a correction of the previously declared law, if found erroneous. Commonwealth v. Walsh, 82 N. E. 19, 198 Mass. 369, 124 Am. St. Rep. 559, 13 Ann. Cas. 642.

The rule of "stare decisis" applies with special force to an opinion prescribing rules for the location of survey lines, handed down several years ago, as it must be presumed that since it was delivered, many surveys have been made, grants issued, and titles confirmed under its authority, and it has thus become a part of the practical construction of many thousands of grants and conveyances. Morgan v. Renfro, 99 S. W. 311, 314, 124 Ky. 314.

"Stare decisis" means to follow precedent, and is founded upon the broad principle that the law governing commercial transactions and affecting property rights should remain settled, and not be subject to flexible and restless precepts. Courts ought not, and will not, disturb contractual relations or valuable rights resting upon the strength of decisions by courts of last resort, but will adhere to the maxim "stare decisis," when necessary for their protection and enforcement, where the facts are substantially the same as those upon which the former decisions were grounded, "except from the most urgent consideration of public policy"; but the rule does not require a court to enforce a rule of law disapproved by the court of last resort, though announced by a court having at the time equal jurisdiction, unless a refusal would amount to a trap into which parties had been thereby induced to enter, to their irreparable injury. Subsequent to the execution of a contract for the drilling of a gas well, the Appellate Court decided that such contracts ran only from year to year, and that at the end of any year either party could terminate the agreement. Thereafter the Supreme Court placed a different construction on such contracts. There was nothing to show any arrangement between the parties to the contract, based on the faith of the decision of the Appellate Court. Held, that the rule of stare decisis did not require the trial court to enforce the rule of law as previously laid down by the Appellate Court. Diamond Plate Glass Co. v. Knote, 77 N. E. 954, 955, 38 Ind. App. 20.

START

"Start" means to cause to move; to set going; to give an initial impulse, as to start a train; to cause to begin to move; the beginning, as of a journey or course of action; initial impulse or movement; first motion from a place. Knuckey v. Butte Electric R. Co., 109 Pac. 979, 981, 41 Mont. 314.

STARTED

An allegation that a street car "started" is, by necessary implication, an allegation that the car was stationary at the time. A thing cannot start without a stop. The one includes the other, ex vi termini. Peterson v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 111 S. W. 37, 42, 211 Mo. 498 (citing and adopting Flaherty v. St. Louis Transit Co., 106 S. W. 21, 207 Mo. 318).

STARTING PLACE

See Place of Starting.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 4494, requires railroad corporations to run cars at regular times and to furnish sufficient accommodations at the place of starting, the junction with other railroads, and at sidings and stopping places established for receiving and discharging way passengers and freights. Article 4519 requires every railroad company to erect at every station or place for the reception and delivery of freight suitable buildings to protect freight. Article 4562, subd. 12, requires every railroad company to maintain depot buildings at its several stations for passengers and to maintain freight depots. Article 4579, subd. 1, requires the Railroad Commission to enforce all laws in reference to railroads. Held, that the Railroad Commission is bound, not only to enforce the regular running of the trains, but also the requirement as to starting places, junctions, etc., and may require a railroad company to locate a station and construct a depot where the railroad company is bound under the law to locate a station, and that a place located on the state line through which a railroad runs, which is located more than nine miles from the nearest station in the state, is a "starting place" within the meaning of the statute, and the company may be required to locate a station there, although it has a station within 900 feet of the place in another state. Railroad Commission of Texas v. Chicago, R. I. & G. R. Co., 117 S. W. 794, 796, 102 Tex. 303.

When the Constitution speaks of a "state," and inhibits the doing of certain things, it sometimes includes under the term every instrumentality or agency of the state which presumes to act by authority of the state, and in other cases the action of the state in its sovereign or legislative character is alone referred to. Karem v. United States, 121 Fed. 250, 256, 57 C. C. A. 486, 61 L. R. A. 437.

In the case of State v. Wilmington City Council (Del.) 3 Har. 204, it was said: "The question presented is whether the office of treasurer of a public corporation such as the city of Wilmington comes within the true meaning and import of the term 'civil office in the state,' as used in the Constitution. The word 'state' has two meanings, and is used in both of them in different parts of that instrument. In one sense, it signifies the territory inhabited by the people; in the other, it means the body politic inhabiting the territory. So that the term 'civil office in the state' may mean either 'civil office in the territory' or 'civil office in the frame of government or political organization' which it was the business of the convention to establish." Pol. Code Ga. 1895, § 223, declaring that persons holding any office of profit or trust under the government of either of the several states, or of any foreign state, are held and deemed ineligible to hold any civil office in this state, did not render one who held the office of solicitor of the county court of a county ineligible to hold the office of mayor of a municipal corporation located in such county. Long v. Rose, 64 S. E. 84, 85, 132 Ga. 288.

Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1667, 1668, providing for treble damages for the cutting of trees, do not relate to damages to trees on lands of the state. The operation of the statute is limited to the lands of persons, and of cities, villages and towns, and does not extend to lands of the state. The "state" is a political corporate body. If treble damages had been intended as to the cutting of trees on its land, it would have been named. It is not a person within the meaning of the word as there employed. Not being within the list of corporate bodies therein mentioned the state may not be regarded as included within its provisions. People v. Bennett, 107 N. Y. Supp. 406, 407, 56 Misc. Rep. 160.

As all state agencies

The word "state" in Const. U. S. Amend. 14, providing that no state shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, includes its officers, its courts, and other governmental agencies. All of them are included in the prohibitions. Ex parte Powers, 129 Fed. 985, 988.

General and implied powers arising out of the charter of a municipal corporation do not constitute such legislative authority for an ordinance passed by the municipality repealing or repudiating a prior ordinance by which it entered into a contract as to render it an "act of the state" within the contract clause of the federal Constitution. American Telephone & Telegraph Co. of Alabama v. New Decatur, 176 Fed. 133, 136.

The word "state," in Const. U. S. art. 1, § 10, providing that no "state" shall pass a law impairing the obligation of contracts, includes a city or other subdivision or agency of a state. A resolution of a city council directing the removal from the streets of the tracks of a street railroad company is a law of the state within the constitutional provision where under the state law, the resolution is as effective for the intended purpose as an ordinance would be. Des Moines City R. Co. v. Des Moines, 151 Fed. 854, 858, 859.

Where a state has conferred power on some one of its agencies to perform a certain function involving the exercise of discretion, the performance of such function within that grant, although in a manner to render it obnoxious to the laws of the state, is none the less the act of the "state" within the contemplation of the constitutional prohibition against deprivation of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. San Francisco Gas & Electric Co. v. City and County of San Francisco, 189 Fed. 943, 949.

Under Cr. Code, § 272, making it an offense for any person to hire, persuade, or induce a witness in a criminal case to leave the "state," so that he cannot be produced as a witness, an indictment alleging that witnesses were induced to absent themselves from the "jurisdiction" of the court was sufficient, as the word "jurisdiction" is synonymous with the word "state" as used in the statute. Tedford v. People, 76 N. E. 60, 62, 219 Ill. 23.

As the people

A "state" has been defined as "a body politic or a society of men united together for the purpose of promoting their mutual comfort and advantage by the joint efforts of their combined strength, * * * as a self-sufficient body of persons united together in one community for the defense of their rights and for other purposes. In this sense 'state' means the whole people united together in one body politic. It must be an organization of the people for political ends. It must permanently occupy a fixed territory. It must possess an organized government capable of making and enforcing the law within the community. * * * A community cannot be considered a 'state' if the government is permanently incapable of enforcing its own laws." Ex parte Corliss, 114 N. W. 962, 980, 16 N. D. 470.

It is not merely the Legislature, or the executive, or the judiciary, but it is the entire body of the people, who together form the body politic known as the "state." This meaning is applicable in the rule that "the extent to which the people of a municipality shall be allowed to directly participate in the governmental function of legislating therefor in local or municipal affairs is * * * purely a question of state policy, in the determination of which the state is not restricted by any provision of the federal Constitution." In re Pfahler, 88 Pac. 270, 274, 150 Cal. 71, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1092, 11 Ann. Cas. 911 (citing Penhallow v. Doane's Adm'rs [Pa.] 3 Dall. 54, 19 Fed. Cas. 151, 1 L. Ed. 507; Brown v. State, 5 Colo. 496).

District of Columbia and territories

A citizen of a territory is not a "citizen of a state," so as to confer federal jurisdiction on the ground of diverse citizenship. Clark v. Southern Pac. Co., 175 Fed. 122, 125.

"A citizen of one of the territories of the United States is not a 'citizen of a state' within the meaning of the Constitution and judiciary acts." Hence an action by a citizen and resident of the Indian Territory against a citizen of a state is not removable to the federal court for diversity of citizenship. Kansas City S. R. Co. v. McGinty, 88 S. W. 1001, 1003, 76 Ark. 356 (quoting and adopting the language of Dick v. Foraker, 15 Sup. Ct. 124, 155 U. S. 404, 39 L. Ed. 201; citing Hooe v. Jamieson, 17 Sup. Ct. 596, 166 U. S. 395, 41 L. Ed. 1049; Mansfield, C. & L. M. R. Co. v. Swan, 4 Sup. Ct. 510, 111 U. S. 379, 28 L. Ed. 462; Snead v. Sellers, 66 Fed. 372, 13 O. C. A. 518).

A resident of the District of Columbia, although not a "citizen of a state" within the constitutional provision giving the federal courts cognizance of suits between citizens of different states, may maintain a cross-bill in a suit in such a court for relief which is ancillary to that sought in the original suit; the citizenship of the parties in such case being immaterial. Ulman v. Jaeger's Adm'r, 155 Fed. 1011, 1018.

A "state," as used in Rev. St. U. S. § 5339, and U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3627, which provides that a person who commits murder upon the high seas, etc., and out of the jurisdiction of any particular "state" shall suffer death, refers only to the territorial jurisdiction of one of the United States, and not to any other government or political community. A murder committed on board ship lying in the harbor of Honolulu is cognizable in the District Court of the United States for the territory of Hawaii, under section 5339, as one committed in a haven or arm of the sea within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States and "out of the jurisdiction of any particular state." Wynne v. United States, 30 Sup. Ct. 447, 448, 217 U. S. 234, 54 L. Ed. 748.

The language of the judiciary act, providing that the jurisdiction of the Circuit Courts of the United States shall extend to "controversies between citizens of different states" and also to "controversies between a citizen of a state and foreign citizens or subjects," cannot be construed to include a controversy between aliens, or a controversy between citizens of different territories or between a citizen of a state and a citizen of a territory. "Territory" is not a state within the meaning of the act defining the jurisdiction of the federal courts. McClelland v. McKane, 154 Fed. 164, 165 (citing Barney v. Baltimore, 73 U. S. [6 Wall.] 280, 287, 18 L. Ed. 825; Watson v. Bonfils, 116 Fed. 157, 53 C. C. A. 535; Weller v. Hanaur, 105 Fed. 193; Johnson v. Bunker Hill & S. M. & C. Co., 46 Fed. 417; Seddon v. Virginia, T. C. S. & I. Co., 36 Fed. 6, 1 L. R. A. 108).

Foreign state

Act Cong. June 29, 1906, c. 3591, § 7, 34 Stat. 595, amending Hepburn Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, § 20, 24 Stat. 386, provides that any common carrier receiving property for transportation from a point in one state to a point in another state shall issue a receipt or bill of lading therefor, and shall be liable to the lawful holder thereof for any loss, damage, or injury to such property, caused by it or by any connecting carrier, to which the property may be delivered, or over whose line or lines the property may pass, and that no contract, rule, receipt, or regulation shall exempt any such carrier from the liability so imposed. Held, that the word "state" was used in such provision in its limited sense to represent and include only the states of the federal Union, and that such section had no application to a shipment of cotton from a point in Texas to a foreign country. Houston E. & W. T. R. Co. v. Inman, Akers & Inman, 134 S. W. 275, 277.

STATE AID

Pub. Acts 1911, c. 187, provides that every resident Civil War veteran honorably discharged, or his widow, or widowed mother, resident in the state, or pensioned widows, fathers, and mothers, resident in the state, shall be paid by the state as "state aid" the sum of $30 each, annually. Held, as "state aid" to those who do not need it, the statute to whom it is granted, and no public purpose may be subserved by taking property by taxation and giving it under the guise of "state aid" to those who do not need it, the statute is improper as furnishing aid to all classes regardless of their need. Beach v. Bradstreet, 82 Atl. 1030, 1034, 85 Conn. 344.

STATE CIVIL SERVICE

Employees of the board of elections of the city of New York, existing under Election Law, art. 7, providing for a board of elections in every city of the first class, including within its boundaries one or more counties and in other counties, to execute the election laws within their respective cities or counties, empowering the board of aldermen of the city of New York to appoint the board for the city, and making the expenses, including salaries of the board, a charge against the city, are in the "state civil service" within Civil Service Law, § 2, subds. 4, 5, providing that the state civil service shall include all offices and positions in the service of the state or any of its civil divisions, except a city, and that the city service shall include such positions in the service of the city. People ex rel. Werner v. Prendergast, 136 N. Y. Supp. 688, 689, 152 App. Div. 104.

STATE CONSTITUTION

A "state Constitution" is really nothing but a law made directly by the people voting at the polls upon a draft submitted to them. The people of a state, when they so vote, act as a primary and constituent assembly, just as if they were all summoned to meet in one place like the folkmoets of our Teutonic forefathers. It is only their numbers that prevent them from so meeting in one place, and oblige the vote to be taken in a variety of polling places. Hence the enactment of a Constitution is an exercise of direct popular sovereignty, to which we find few parallels in modern Europe, though it was familiar enough to the republic of antiquity, and has lasted until now in some of the cantons of Switzerland. It is the highest legislative assembly recognized in law, invested with the right of enacting or framing the supreme law of the state. Smith v. State ex rel. Hepburn, 113 Pac. 932, 934, 28 Okl. 235; Frantz v. Austry, 91 Pac. 193, 204, 18 Okl. 561 (quoting and adopting the definition in 1 Bryce's Am. Com. 436; Goodrich v. Moore, 2 Minn. 61 [Gil. 49], 72 Am. Dec. 74).

Federal Constitution distinguished

"The principle that the expression of one thing is the exclusion of another * * * is not fully applicable in construing a state as distinguished from a federal Constitution. The latter is an instrument of grants, the former one of limitations, of power. Merely because in the section [of the state Constitution] relating to district courts the power of interchange is given, and the section applicable to county courts is silent, it is neither a logical nor a necessary deduction that the Legislature cannot confer upon county judges the right of interchange." Prudential Ins. Co. of America v. Hummer, 84 Pac. 61, 62, 36 Colo. 208.

STATE COURT

See Courts of the State.

Proceeding in, see Proceeding.

A municipal court, established under Laws 1895, c. 229, as amended, is a "state court," within the meaning of Const. art. 6, § 1, requiring all inferior courts not therein specified to be established by the Legislature by a two-thirds vote. State ex rel. Simpson v. Fleming, 127 N. W. 473, 474, 112 Minn. 136.

The recorder's court of the city of Detroit authorized by the charter to administer the general laws of the state is, when trying an offense under state law, a "state court," and cannot take judicial notice of ordinances of the city of Detroit, though for certain purposes it is a municipal court. People v. Quider, 137 N. W. 546, 548, 172 Mich. 280.

STATE DEBTS

Chapter 49, p. 54, Laws 1903, which authorizes the issuance of $60,000 in bonds for the purpose of procuring funds to erect and equip buildings for the State Normal School at Valley City, and appropriates a sufficient portion of the interest and income dedicated to the support of that institution to repay the principal and pay the interest on the sum so borrowed, is unconstitutional and void for the following reasons: (1) It authorizes the creation of a "state debt" in excess of the state debt limit, in violation of section 182 of the state Constitution; (2) it authorizes the creation of a "state debt," and does not provide for a tax levy to pay the principal and interest, as required by said section; (3) it diverts the interest and income dedicated to the support of this institution to the payment of the "state debt," in violation both of the enabling act and of the state Constitution. State ex rel. Board of University and School Lands v. McMillan, 96 N. W. 310, 311, 322, 12 N. D. 280.

STATE FARM

A farm leased by the state is a "state farm," within Const. art. 10, §§ 223, 226, forbidding the leasing of convicts, and providing that the Legislature may place them on state farms and have them work thereon under state supervision, and may buy farms for that purpose. State v. Henry, 40 South. 152, 155, 87 Miss. 125, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 340.

STATE GOVERNMENT

See Branch of State Government; Full State Government.

Municipal government distinguished, see Municipal Government.

The phrase "state government," in the enabling act authorizing the people of Oklahoma and Indian Territory to form a Constitution and state government, includes counties and townships, and in the absence of any express prohibition on the constitutional convention it had complete power to establish and define the counties in the proposed state, as a necessary incident to the formation of a state government. Power to form a state government clearly implies the power to create and define every county within the limits of the new state. Frantz v. Autry, 91 Pac. 193, 211, 18 Okl. 561; Board of Com'rs of Greer County v. Constitutional Delegate Convention of Oklahoma and Indian Territories, 91 Pac. 239, 240, 18 Okl. 707.

STATE HIGHWAY

All public highways are "state highways," and the state is the sole arbiter of the manner and conditions of their improvement, except as limited by the Constitution. Cummins v. Pence, 91 N. E. 529, 531, 174 Ind. 115.

STATE HOSPITAL

As corporation, see Corporation.

STATE INSTITUTION

The State College of Washington is a "state institution." State ex rel. Johnson v. Clausen, 90 Pac. 743, 744, 51 Wash. 548.

The fact that a charitable institution is by statute given the right to detain a person committed to it by a magistrate or court does not render the institution a "state institution" or a governmental agency. Gallon v. House of Good Shepherd, 122 N. W. 631, 633, 158 Mich. 361, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 286, 133 Am. St. Rep. 387.

Under the Military Code, a national guard armory is a "state institution," within Labor Law (Laws 1897, p. 462, c. 415) § 3, declaring that the provision that eight hours shall constitute a day's work does not apply to employes of state institutions. Burns v. Fox, 90 N. Y. Supp. 254, 255, 98 App. Div. 507.

STATE LANDS

See Classes of State Lands; Public Lands.

STATE OFFICE

See Office under the State.

Civil office under the state, see Civil Officer.

The office of prosecuting attorney must be held a "state office" within Const. art. 19, § 23, providing that no officer of the state, nor of any county, city, or town, shall receive for salary, fees, etc., more than $5,000 net profits per annum, and requiring all sums in excess thereof to be paid into the state, county, or city treasury, notwithstanding that Act Feb. 1, 1875, p. 124, carrying out the provisions of the article as to other state and county officers, construed it as not applying to the office of prosecuting attorney. Griffin v. Rhoton, 107 S. W. 380, 381, 85 Ark. 89.

STATE OFFICER

The term "state officers" is sometimes construed as only the heads of the executive departments of the state elected by the people at large, such as Governor, Lieutenant Governor, State Treasurer, Attorney General, and the like, and it should be so construed when used without circumstances indicating any other intent. In its more comprehensive sense it includes every person whose duty appertains to the state at large. The exact sense in which the term is used in any particular law must often be determined by ordinary rules for judicial construction. State ex rel. Milwaukee Medical College v. Chittenden, 107 N. W. 500, 608, 127 Wis. 468.

The term "state officers," as used in Const. art. 4, § 4, conferring on the Supreme Court original jurisdiction in mandamus as to all state officers, is not limited to those heads of executive departments recognized eo nomine as executive officers in article 3, but embraces the heads of the executive departments, including the insurance commissioner. State ex rel. North Coast Fire Ins. Co. v. Schively, 122 Pac. 1020, 1021, 68 Wash. 148.

An officer appointed or elected for a particular locality, whose duties are of a public or general nature, in the discharge of which the whole state is interested, is a "state officer" in an enlarged sense, and, where it appears that such officer has not been dealt with by the Legislature or the constitutional convention as a local officer, but as a state officer, the court should give effect to the intention and understanding of the framers of the Constitution. State ex rel. Ward v. Romero, 125 Pac. 617, 621, 17 N. M. 88; Butts v. Purdy, 125 Pac. 313, 318, 63 Or. 150; Dillman v. State (Wyo.) 125 Pac. 367, 378.

Const. art. 15, § 7, requiring the Legislature to provide for the trial and removal from office of all "officers of the state," when considered in connection with article 5, § 24, providing for the removal of county officers, relates only to state officers and does not prohibit the removal from office of an officer of a city by recall. Bonner v. Belsterling, 138 S. W. 571-575, 104 Tex. 432.

The term "state officers" may be construed as meaning only heads of the executive departments of the state elected by the people at large, such as Governor, Lieutenant Governor, State Treasurer, Secretary of State, Attorney General, and the like, that being its particular meaning, or given its more comprehensive sense, including every person whose duties appertain to the state at large, according to the legislative intention: that the exact sense in which the term is used in any particular law must often be determined by ordinary rules for judicial construction. Applying the rules that effects and consequences are to be regarded in construing a law, where the words thereof will admit of either of two reasonable meanings, the court held that in the law in question the words "any of the state officers" should be restrained to heads of departments having their official residence at the State Capitol, and expected to keep open office there during business hours, and generally speaking to be there themselves; that is, that the term was used by the lawmakers in its narrow and particular, instead of its broad and general, sense. State ex rel. Williams v. Samuelson, 111 N. W. 712-715, 131 Wis. 499 (citing and approving State ex rel. Milwaukee Medical College v. Chittenden, 107 N. W. 506, 127 Wis. 468).

Judicial Code (Act March 3, 1911, c. 231, § 266, 36 Stat. 1162), provides that no interlocutory injunction restraining the enforcement of any "statute" of a state, by restraining the action of any officer of such state in the enforcement of the statute, shall be issued by any Justice of the Supreme Court, or by any District Court of the United States, or any judge thereof, or by any Circuit Judge thereof acting as a District Judge, on the ground of unconstitutionality, unless the application shall be presented to a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, or to a Circuit or District Judge, and shall be heard and determined by three judges, of whom at least one shall be a Justice of the Supreme Court, or a Circuit Judge, and the other two either Circuit or District Judges, and unless a majority of the three judges shall concur in granting the application, etc. Held, that the words "statute of a state" were used in such act in their ordinary sense as meaning a law directly passed by a state Legislature, and that the words "officer of such state" meant an officer whose authority extended throughout the state; and hence such act was not applicable to a suit by a telephone company to restrain the enforcement of a city ordinance fixing telephone rates to be charged by such company. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Memphis, 198 Fed. 955, 957.

Administrator

An administrator belongs to that class of officers represented by curators, guardians, receivers, referees, and the like, whose duties are private, and whose acts concern private rather than public interests. An administrator is vested with no portion of the sovereign functions of the state to be exercised by him for the benefit of the public, and he is therefore not a "state officer," within the meaning of Const. art. 8, § 12, providing that "no person shall be elected or appointed to any office in this state, civil or military, who is not a citizen of the United States, and who shall have resided in this state one year next preceding his election or appointment." A "public office" is a right and authority created by law, by which an individual is invested with some portion of the functions of government, to be exercised by him for the benefit of the public for a given period of time, either fixed by law or enduring at the pleasure of the creating power. The word "office," as here used, is to be distinguished from its application to such positions as are at most quasi public only, as the charge of an executor, administrator, or guardian, and from the offices of a private corporation. Stevens v. Larwill, 84 S. W. 113, 118, 110 Mo. App. 140 (citing Mechem, Pub. Off. § 1; In re Hathaway, 71 N. Y. 238).

Assistant Attorney General

In order to constitute an attorney employed to assist the Attorney General an officer of the state, the term of his appointment and continuance in office must be coterminous with the term of office of the Attorney General who appointed him, and of the Governor approving the appointment. Terrell v. Sparks, 135 S. W. 519, 521, 104 Tex. 191.

County officer distinguished

In general, a "state officer" is one whose duties and powers are coextensive with the state, while a "county officer" is one whose duties and powers are coextensive only with the county, and the fact that the official acts of an officer are so far extraterritorial that they are binding throughout the state does not make the officer who performs such acts necessarily a state officer. People v. Evans, 93 N. E. 388, 391, 247 Ill. 547.

County, town, or school district officers

A road overseer and members of the county court are not "state officers," within the Constitution, so as to confer jurisdiction on the Supreme Court on appeal in a case wherein they are parties. Hill v. Hopson, 120 S. W. 29, 31, 221 Mo. 103.

Under Laws 1893, p. 25, c. 29, § 3, as amended by Laws 1897, p. 59, c. 67, § 1, giving the highway agent of a town, under direction of the selectmen, charge of the construction and repair of highways within the town, and empowering him to employ men and teams, the highway agent and selectmen are "public officers" of the state, and not private agents of the town, so far as their duties in connection with the construction and repair of highways are concerned. O'Brien v. Town of Derry, 60 Atl. 843, 73 N. H. 198. So a town is not liable for injury to property through the negligence of its highway agent in blowing up ice in a river, under the direction of a selectman, for the purpose of draining water from a highway; his act being that of a public officer in the performance of his duty. Wheeler v. Town of Gilsun, 62 Atl. 597, 598, 73 N. H. 429, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 135 (citing O'Brien v. Town of Derry, 60 Atl. 843, 73 N. H. 198; Hall v. Concord, 52 Atl. 864, 71 N. H. 367, 58 L. R. A. 455; Dourles v. Town of Hopkinton, 40 Atl. 433, 67 N. H. 456; Wakefield v. Town of Newport, 62 N. H. 624; Grimes v. Town of Keene, 52 N. H. 330).

District attorney

The district attorney is an "officer of the state." Taylor v. State, 38 South. 380, 384, 49 Fla. 69.

District judge

A district judge is a "state officer." Grayson v. Perryman, 106 Pac. 954, 956, 25 Okl. 339 (citing Maben v. Rosser, 103 Pac. 674, 24 Okl. 588).

Medical examiners

Rev. St. 1895, art. 946, providing that the Supreme Court may issue writs of mandamus against any "officer of the state government" except the Governor, being article 1012 of Act April 13, 1892 (Laws 1892, p. 21, c. 14), which provides for the organization of the Supreme Court under the amendment of Const. art. 5, and carefully limits the jurisdiction thereof, does not empower the Supreme Court to issue a writ of mandamus against the Board of Eclectic Medical Examiners; they not being state officers within the meaning of the act. Betts v. Johnson, 73 S. W. 4, 5, 96 Tex. 360.

Members of dispensary commission

The members of the South Carolina Dispensary Commission created by Sess. Laws 1907, p. 835, No. 402, with power to wind up the South Carolina State Dispensary, are not "officers of the state" within the ordinary acceptance of the term, and, if officers at all, are officers appointed solely for the performance of specific duties. Fleischman Co. v. Murray, 161 Fed. 152, 158.

Municipal officer distinguished

The distinction between "state officers" and "municipal officers" is that the duties of the former concern the state at large and the general public, although exercised within definite territorial limits, while the functions of the latter relate to a particular community. Ex parte Corliss, 114 N. W. 962, 988, 16 N. D. 470.

Policemen

A policeman is not strictly a "state officer." State ex rel. Quintin v. Edwards, 99 Pac. 940, 944, 38 Mont. 250.

The chief of police of a city of the first class is not a "state officer" within the meaning of Const. art. 19, § 6, providing that no person shall hold or perform the duties of more than one office in the same department of the government at the same time, which provision refers to state offices only. Peterson v. Culpepper, 79 S. W. 783, 785, 72 Ark. 230, 2 Ann. Cas. 378.

Presidential electors

Presidential electors are "state officers," and so one appointed as judge until the next general election of state officers cannot hold over, because at the next general election presidential electors only are to be selected. Hodge v. Bryan, 148 S. W. 21, 23, 149 Ky. 110.

Superintendent of water district

"As a general rule, the term 'state officer' is only applied to those superior executive officers who constitute the head of an executive department of a state." A state superintendent of a water district, appointed by the Governor, is a "state officer" removable under a statute providing that any officer who shall hold his office by appointment by the Governor may be removed by the Governor. State ex rel. Hamilton v. Grant, 81 Pac. 795, 798, 14 Wyo. 41, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 588, 116 Am. St. Rep. 982.

Trustees of city schools

The schools of a city, including high schools, are a part of the state's school system, and their trustees are "officers of the state." City of Louisville v. Commonwealth, 121 S. W. 411, 412, 134 Ky. 488.

STATE PRISON

A sentence to imprisonment in the state reformatory is not a sentence to a term of imprisonment in the "state prison," within Gen. St. 1894, § 4790, providing that a divorce may be decreed when either party, subsequent to the marriage, has been sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison. Dion v. Dion, 100 N. W. 4, 5, 92 Minn. 278.

The London, Ontario, Insane Asylum is not the "state prison" within Comp. Laws Mich. 1897, § 9733, postponing the running of limitations for false imprisonment when the right of action accrues while plaintiff is imprisoned in the state prison until the removal of the disability. Alexander v. Thompson, 195 Fed. 31, 33, 115 C. C. A. 33.

The words "state prison" are frequently used as synonymous with the word "penitentiary," never as meaning a jail, which, as is well known, is a prison appertaining to a county or municipality in which persons convicted of misdemeanors, committed in the county or municipality, are confined for punishment, and the use of the words "state prison" in a verdict reciting that "we, the jury, find the defendant guilty and fix his punishment at three years in the state prison" will be considered a sufficient designation of the state penitentiary. Denham v. Commonwealth, 84 S. W. 538, 539, 119 Ky. 508.

STATE PRISON OFFENSE

Under the federal statutes, the mailing of scurrilous matter printed on a postal card, or exposed on the exterior of a sealed letter, may be criminal; and a crime of that character is punishable by imprisonment, which may be in the penitentiary, and amounts by the common understanding, to a "state prison offense." Middleby v. Effer, 118 Fed. 261, 262, 55 C. C. A. 355.

STATE PUBLIC SCHOOL FOR DEPENDENT CHILDREN

The State Public School for Dependent Children, to be located at the Home for the Friendless, provided for by Laws 1909, is identical with the Home for the Friendless, and appropriations made for that school, whether described as the Home for the Friendless or the State Public School, are specific appropriations as required by Const. art. 3, § 22, declaring that no money shall be drawn from the treasury except in pursuance of a specific appropriation, and that no money shall be diverted from any appropriation. State ex rel. Johnston v. Barton, 122 N. W. 64, 66, 84 Neb. 815.

STATE PURPOSE

The words "state purposes," as used in Const. art. 7, § 9, authorizing a tax levy for state purposes, "is for the running and current expenses in carrying on the different departments and institutions of the state government, which is intended to be upon a cash basis as provided by section 11 of the same article." The tax levy authorized by section 9 of article 7 of the Constitution "for state purposes" is intended to cover the current and running expenses of maintaining and conducting the state government, legislative, executive, and judicial, and operating and maintaining the state institution. Public or bonded indebtedness incurred under section 1 of article 8 for internal improvements and the erection of public buildings and institutions is not comprehended by section 9 of article 7, and a tax levy for the purpose of paying the interest on such indebtedness and bonds and providing a sinking fund therefor does not fall within the limits of the maximum rate of taxation as provided by section 9 of article 7. Gooding v. Proffitt, 83 Pac. 230-232, 11 Idaho, 380.

STATE ROAD

"The terms 'state road' and 'county road' seem to have no precise technical meaning, and it might be permissible to suppose that they were used merely to distinguish highways created directly by the Legislature and those created by the county authorities under general laws. But a better supported view is that any public road lying wholly within one county is a 'county road,' while a 'state road' extends through or into several counties. 'What is known in some sections as a "state road" is a highway laid out by the direct authority of the state, generally between distant places and through different counties, to supply a want felt by a large district of country, which, because of the diversity of interests, the local authorities are not willing to support.' A "state road" is a road running into two or more counties, and is distinguished by this from a "county road," which lies wholly within one county. The first was formerly established by acts of special legislation; the latter by county commissioners, under general laws. Where an act of the Legislature declares all section lines in a certain county to be public highways, and provides that they shall be opened by the board of county commissioners, such section lines thereby become county roads, within the meaning of that term as used in an act providing that any part of a state or county road not opened for travel within a stated time shall be vacated." Board of Com'rs of Cowley County v. Johnson, 90 Pac. 805, 807, 76 Kan. 65 (quoting and adopting definition in State ex rel. Stebbins v. Treasurer of Wood County, 17 Ohio, 184).

"By 'special benefits' is not meant the general advance or benefits resulting to the community in general from the construction of the road, but such benefits as result in particular to the defendants from the location of the road there, such as the location of a depot there, or a convenient sidewalk, or an embankment which protects their lands from overflow, and the like." Vaulx v. Tennessee Cent. R. Co., 108 S. W. 1142, 1145, 120 Tenn. 316.

Code, § 422, subd. 16, empowers the board of supervisors to discontinue any state or territorial highway, and subdivision 17 empowers them to establish or discontinue any county highway through or within the county. Section 751 empowers cities and towns to establish or vacate streets and alleys. Section 48, subd. 5, provides that the words "highway" and "road" include public bridges, and may be held equivalent to the words "county road," "county way," "common road," and "state road." Section 1507 provides that all public streets of villages are a part of the road. Held that, where a plat was made of land dividing it into lots, streets, and alleys prior to the incorporation of a town embracing the land platted, the streets and alleys became county roads subject to the jurisdiction of the board of supervisors, and though after the incorporation of the town the control may have passed to the city council, yet the incorporation of the town having been vacated, the control of the streets and alleys reverted to the board of supervisors. Chrisman v. Brandes, 112 N. W. 833, 835, 137 Iowa, 433.

STATE TAX

"All taxes, whether levied for state, county, or municipal purposes, are 'state taxes.' They can be imposed by no other authority than that of the state. The state appropriates the proceeds to what purposes it sees fit; but, however the proceeds may be appropriated, every tax is a state tax." United New Jersey R. & Canal Co. v. State Board of Assessors, 67 Atl. 438, 443, 75 N. J. Law, 35 (quoting and adopting definition in State Board of Assessors v. Central R. Co., 4 Atl. 578, 48 N. J. Law, 146, and citing Camden & B. R. v. Cook, 32 N. J. Law, 338).

"State taxes" are those assessed and levied by the counties by the direct mandate of the General Assembly, the rate of which is fixed by that body, and, though all taxes levied for school purposes are known as "state taxes," the ordinary taxes levied for school purposes under Acts 1903, c. 247, p. 323, §§ 2, 3, which are collected by the sheriff of each county and paid to the treasurers thereof, are county taxes. Board of Education of Iredell County v. Board of Com'rs of Iredell County, 49 S. E. 47, 48, 137 N. C. 63.

The tax on personal securities as "money at interest," provided by the act of 1879 (P. L. p. 130), and its supplementary acts, making such property taxable, annually, for state purposes at the rate of four mills on each dollar of the value thereof, is a "state tax," though a large part thereof is, under the statute, returned to the counties, and the personal securities upon which such tax is levied cannot be included in the assessed value of the "property therein," within Const. art. 9, § 8, limiting the borrowing power of a city to 2 per cent. upon the assessed value of the taxable property therein. Elliot v. City of Philadelphia, 78 Atl. 107, 110, 229 Pa. 215.

Act 1884 (P. L. p. 142), for the taxation of railroad and canal property, imposes a "state tax," within Act March 4, 1869 (P. L. p. 226), abolishing transit duties, and providing that all corporations theretofore paying transit duties should thereafter pay the tax therein prescribed until the Legislature should "by general law impose a uniform state tax equally applicable to all railroad and canal corporations of this state," and that the corporations should then pay such tax, since by the terms of Act 1884, §§ 9, 10 (P. L. p. 146), the tax is assessed by a state board, is payable into the state treasury, if unpaid, becomes a debt due the state, and is made a lien on the lands and tangible property and franchises in the state, and an action at law or in equity is given to the state for its collection, and this is true notwithstanding the tax is used only in part to carry on the state government and maintain state institutions; a considerable portion of it being required to be paid, by section 11, to the various taxing districts in which the real estate of the railroad and canal corporations, other than the main stem, is located to be used for local purposes. United New Jersey R. & Canal Co. v. Baird, 69 Atl. 472, 474, 75 N. J. Law, 788.

STATE'S ATTORNEY

"The state's attorney is a county officer, and his status as such is fixed by the Constitution which creates his office. He is elected for and within a county to perform his duties therein, and is not distinguished in any manner from the clerks of the courts, sheriff, coroner, and other officers connected with the administration of justice within the county." Cook County v. Healy, 78 N. E. 623, 625, 222 Ill. 310.

STATE

See Crude State; Natural State.

STATE OF INTOXICATION

The words, "drunkenness" and "in a state of intoxication," as used in the statute punishing drunkenness, are words of ordinary signification, and mean the condition following the taking of liquor in excessive quantities, and the court in its instructions need not define the same. Clark v. State, 111 S. W. 659, 660, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 529.

STATE OF USEFULNESS

See Reasonable State of Usefulness.

STATED

An "account stated" is an acknowledgment of an existing condition of liability of the parties, from which the law implies a promise to pay the balance thus acknowledged to be due; the words "stated" and "settled," as applied to accounts, being sometimes used as synonymous. State v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 92 N. E. 814, 816, 837, 246 Ill. 188 (citing 1 Cyc. 364, and cases cited; 1 Words and Phrases, p. 93; 1 Ency. of L. & P. 728, and cases cited; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Clark, 92 Fed. 968, 35 C. O. A. 120; McDow v. Brown, 2 S. C. 95).

STATED MEETING

Rev. St. 1898, § 1990, provides that members of any church which shall have been organized in the state, and which at the time maintains regular worship, may, after due public notice at some "stated meeting," organize a corporation for religious, charitable, or educational purposes. Where there was a factional disturbance, and a part of the members of the church held a meeting at a residence and a part at the church edifice, the meeting held at the regular home or edifice of the society was a "stated meeting" in the statutory sense, whether attended and supported by a majority or minority of the members, and it was not essential to the organization of a corporation that the notice given at such "stated meeting" be also given at the residence where the other meeting was held. Spiritual & Philosophical Temple v. Vincent, 105 N. W. 1026, 1029, 127 Wis. 93.

STATEMENT

See Brief Statement; Careless Statement; Consonant Statement; Grossly Improbable Statements; Materially False Statement; Reckless Statement;

Verified Statement; Voluntary Statement.

Opening statement as pleading, see Pleading.

Such statement, see Such.

The stenographer's receipt attached to the transcript is a sufficient "statement," within rule 21 (104 Pac. ix), providing that the amount paid for the stenographer's transcript shall be taxed as costs only when a statement thereof is filed with the clerk not later than 10 days after the cause is decided. McAfee v. Walker, 108 Pac. 79, 80, 82 Kan. 355.

The word "representation," in an answer in an action on a life insurance policy, averring as to the application for insurance that the false representation of the deceased in relation to his use of liquors afforded legal ground to claim annulment of the contract, was evidently used in that connection merely as synonymous with the word "statement" or "declaration." Brignac v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. of California, 36 South. 595, 601, 112 La. 574, 66 L. R. A. 322.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 806, authorizing appeals from any final judgment, an order of the circuit court remanding a cause transferred to it by a justice of the peace, entered under the authority of section 3951, authorizing the circuit court to remand to the justice a cause which has been transferred as involving title to land, where the court is of the opinion that the "statement" filed does not show that title is in issue, is not a "final judgment," and is not appealable. The term "statement," as used in section 3951, means the verified pleading attempting to put in issue the title. Walker v. Walker, 96 S. W. 418, 419, 119 Mo. App. 503.

The word "schedule" has a meaning as the equivalent to "inventory." An inventory is a list or catalogue of property merely, without attempt to describe the same in detail. A schedule of property for taxation is a list of assessable articles without attempt to describe the same in detail. A "statement" is defined to be "a formal, exact, detailed presentation." A "statement" would contain all that would appear in a schedule or list, but would contain minutiae and matter of description not necessary to a schedule or inventory. Section 49 of the revenue act (3 Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896, p. 3423, c. 120), prescribing a penalty for the failure of a railroad to file a statement with the county clerk, refers to the statement or schedule showing the property held for right of way and the length of tracks and turnouts and tracts of land through which the road runs (which property is afterwards described as "railroad track"), which is required to be filed by section 41 of the act, and cannot be extended by implication to include the failure to report the value of the railroad track annually, or to return the lists of rolling stock required to be returned by section 44, or to the failure to make the list or schedule of personal property or real estate, which is required to be listed by section 46. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. People, 75 N. E. 368, 370, 217 Ill. 164.

Mechanic's Lien

A statement filed by a materialman substantially complied with Ky. St. 1903, § 2468, requiring a claimant to file a "statement showing the amount due, with credits and set-offs," though it did not show the full amount of the original bill nor the credits thereon, but simply set out a claim for the amount which was the balance due on the material. Dobson v. Thurman (Ky.) 101 S. W. 310, 311.

The "statement" mentioned in Rev. St. 1898, § 3315, requiring a person furnishing material to a contractor to give notice in writing to the owner setting forth, among other things, "a statement of the labor performed or the materials furnished, the amount due therefor from such principal contractor," means a general statement of material furnished, and a bill of items is not required. Chandler Lumber Co. v. Fehlau, 117 N. W. 1057, 1058, 187 Wis. 204.

STATEMENT OF ACCOUNT

As evidence, see Evidence.

Where, in an action by a bank on an account, the petition contained a specific statement of the account, consisting of checks for money drawn and deposits, a balance being stated as the sum due plaintiff, the petition was in itself a sufficiently itemized "statement of account" as provided by Rev. St. 1899, § 630 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 653), and was not objectionable for failure to have attached thereto an itemized statement thereof. Citizens' Bank of Laredo v. Lowder, 125 S. W. 1180, 141 Mo. App. 603.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The "statement of the case" contains a literal transcript of the testimony taken and reported by a referee to the district court, without any attempt to condense or eliminate immaterial matter. Held, following the rule announced in prior decisions of this court, that such practice is a plain violation of section 7058, Rev. Codes 1905, as well as rule 7 of this court, and does not constitute a "statement of the case." Smith v. Kunert, 115 N. W. 76, 77, 17 N. D. 120.

Bill of exceptions distinguished

There is no substantial difference between a bill of exceptions and a "statement"; consequently a "statement" would be considered although a motion in the trial court was for leave to file a "statement" and the motion to move for a new trial recited that it would be made on a bill of exceptions. Sauer v. Eagle Brewing Co., 84 Pac. 425, 427, 3 Cal. App. 127.

The only difference between a "bill of exceptions" and a "statement of the case," within a statute requiring a party intending to move for a new trial to serve a notice of his intention, designating the ground on which the motion will be made, and whether the same will be made on affidavits or by a "bill of exceptions," or a "statement of the case," is that in a statement of the case the moving party, in addition to setting forth in the body of the document the exceptions which were taken at the trial, must also specify the particular ones upon which he relies in support of his motion, and if the insufficiency of the evidence is the ground of an exception, or is stated in a notice of a motion for a new trial, the particulars in which the evidence is claimed to be insufficient must be specified in either document. Pease v. Fink, 85 Pac. 657, 659, 3 Cal. App. 371.

An order denying a new trial recited that the motion was presented on all the grounds stated in the notice of intention to move for new trial, and upon the statement of the case previously settled. The record contained a bill of exceptions in which the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings was specified, but the order denying the new trial did not clearly state that the grounds on which the motion was based were those specified in the settled statement; the document referred to as a statement of the case being denominated on its face as a "bill of exceptions." Held that, since the expressions "bill of exceptions" and "statement of the case" would be considered synonymous when necessary to accomplish the ends of justice, the recital in the order that the motion was presented on the statement of the case previously settled would be deemed sufficient evidence that the objections set forth in the statement were the grounds of the motion, so as to authorize a consideration of the evidence on appeal, though the copy of the notice of intention printed in the transcript was not authenticated by a bill of exceptions, and therefore could not be considered, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 661, 951, 952. Dennis v. Gordon, 125 Pac. 1063, 1064, 163 Cal. 427.

STATEMENT OF DEMAND

A bill of particulars or specification of items referred to in and annexed to a "state of demand" is a part of such "state of demand." Leonard v. Ware, 4 N. J. Law, 150.

STATEMENT OF FACT

An agreed "statement of facts," made for purpose of the trial, and not certified by the court as provided by article 1293, cannot be treated as a statement of facts within Rev. St. 1895, art. 1382, authorizing the Court of Civil Appeals for good cause shown to permit the filing of statements of fact after the expiration of the statutory time. Chickasha Mill. Co. v. Crutcher (Tex.) 141 S. W. 353, 356.

Opinion distinguished

"To distinguish 'opinions' from 'statement of facts,' the general rule is if the vendor, knowing them to be untrue, makes statements with the intention of misleading the vendee, and if the latter, relying upon them, is misled to his injury, or if he induces the vendee not to make inquiries with respect to value, or any extrinsic facts affecting values, or makes statements in such a manner that the vendee, instead of being put on inquiry, is put off his guard, it has been held that a substantial right to recover damages is created, or the vendee may, at his option, avoid the contract. To effect this, however, the representations must, as a rule, be coupled with other circumstances, as where they are fraudulently made of particulars in relation to the estate which the vendee has not equal means of knowing, and where he is induced by the vendor's artifice to forbear inquiries which he would otherwise have made; but whether a representation as to value is merely an expression of opinion or belief, or an affirmation of fact to be relied on, is a question for the jury, and should properly be left to their decision. Again, while the purchaser must rely upon his own judgment in questions of value, yet, in regard to any extrinsic facts affecting the quality or value of the subject of the contract, he may rely upon the assurances of the vendor; and if he does so rely, and those assurances are fraudulently made to induce him to enter into the contract, he may maintain an action for the injury sustained." Oneal v. Welsman, 88 S. W. 290, 292, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 592 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Warvelle, Vendors, § 946).

STATEMENTS AND REPRESENTATIONS

A complaint in an action to enforce an alleged resulting trust of a half interest in mining claims, alleging that in an interview plaintiff said that, if the claims were taken up, plaintiff would be entitled to a half interest therein, to which defendant agreed, and that plaintiff relied on such "statements and representations," and in consequence of such reliance conducted defendant to the mines, showed him their situation, and in pursuance thereof defendant wrongfully located the mines in the name of himself and another, and refused to allow plaintiff any interest therein, sufficiently alleged that the disclosure of the mines was procured by means of a previous agreement to which defendant was a party, to the effect that, if the mines were located, they should be so located that plaintiff should be entitled to a half interest therein. Stewart v. Douglass, 83 Pac. 699, 701, 148 Cal. 511.

STATION

See, also, Depot.

The words "M.'s Station," used in a railroad charter as a designation of the railroad's terminus, "should be held to mean a locality, and not a fixed and definite point." Collier v. Union R. Co., 83 S. W. 155, 158, 113 Tenn. 96.

As railroad depot

In the United States the words "depot" and "station," as used in connection with railroads, are synonymous. In re Atlantic & St. L. R. Co., 62 Atl. 141, 143, 100 Me. 430.

The word "station," as used in relation to a railroad, in its narrow sense means merely the building or place prepared for the reception and discharge of passengers, but in a larger sense includes the place at which the company habitually stations its trains. Jacquelin v. Erie R. Co., 61 Atl. 18, 20, 69 N. J. Eq. 432.

The word "station," as used in Const. art. 9, § 26, means a place where railroad trains regularly stop for the convenience of passengers and taking in freight, and the word "depot" means a building for the accommodation and protection of passengers or freight. Midland Val. R. Co. v. State, 119 Pac. 413, 414, 29 Okl. 777.

As used in Rev. St. 1895, art. 4562, which makes provision for the accommodation of both passengers and freight at "stations," the word "stations" means places at which passengers and property are received for transportation, or delivery after transportation. Railroad Commission of Texas v. Chicago, R. I. & G. R. Co., 117 S. W. 794, 796, 102 Tex. 393.

By the word "station," as used in a deed to a railroad company providing that, if it failed to maintain a "station" on the land conveyed, title should revert to the grantor, the land having been deeded to the company for a right of way and depot purposes in consideration of the establishment by it of a "station" at the point in question, a regular "station" is intended. Hamel v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 107 N. W. 139, 140, 97 Minn. 334.

While a depot building or the presence of a station agent is not indispensable to constitute a place a "station," the point where a switch is maintained for the exclusive accommodation of a mill, rock quarry, or mine is not a "station," though trains do sometimes stop at such point to receive or discharge passengers or freight as a matter of especial accommodation. Foster v. Kansas City S. R. Co., 87 S. W. 57, 58, 112 Mo. App. 67.

Chapter 69, p. 179, of the Acts of 1891, section 71a of chapter 54 of Code of 1899, requiring railway companies and persons operating railroads to provide and keep, among other things, for the accommodation of travelers, suitable water-closets at all "stations," does not contemplate the maintenance and keeping of such retiring places at what are commonly known as "flag stations," were open platforms in connection with which no station buildings, offices, or agents are kept. State v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 56 S. E. 518, 61 W. Va. 367.

A place on a railroad where passengers and freight are regularly received and discharged, irrespective of whether a depot and station agent are maintained there, and though unincorporated, is a "station," within the rule permitting railroads to leave a sufficient space open about stations for the safe and commodious transaction of business, notwithstanding the statute requiring railroads to fence their tracks. McGuire v. St. Louis, M. & S. E. R. Co., 87 S. W. 564, 565, 113 Mo. App. 79.

Railroad ground, on which a switch was laid, was not open for use by the public. Passengers were permitted to get on and off trains at that point, but could not procure tickets there for any station on the road or buy one for this point. Packages of freight were sometimes thrown off there for the accommodation of the consignees, but there was no agent to take charge of such freight when thrown off. It was not a regular stopping place for trains for any purpose, especially for taking on and discharging either freight or passengers. Held, that it was neither a "station" or "depot." Duncan v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 85 S. W. 661, 663, 111 Mo. App. 193 (citing Webst. Dict.; 2 Bouv. Law Dict. [Rawle's Ed.] 1031).

"Just what is a 'station,' within the meaning of the law (exempting railroads from fencing at stations), is a hard matter to determine. * * * It will not depend upon an office and agent being maintained, but depends more upon the business done, not with one or two or three individuals, firms, or companies, but with the public, and whether or not trains stop regularly or on signal to receive and discharge passengers and freight, and whether inducements are held out and accommodations afforded to the public to enter into reciprocal business relations." Where the evidence shows that trains stopped on signal to receive and discharge passengers, that freight was shipped in and out for the general public who desired, even though in small quantities, that a siding was maintained on which others than a mill located at that point loaded and shipped, and that a gravel pile was provided as a platform, indicating a willingness on the part of the railroad to do business, and that inducements had been and were held out to the public to do business thereat, and that the public had accepted such inducements, it constitutes a "station," within the meaning of the law. Acord v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co., 87 S. W. 537, 543, 113 Mo. App. 84.

Yards included

The term "station," as used in the railroad business, means the whole track within the limits of the station yard, and not the buildings merely or the immediate vicinity where they are located. Morrisette v. Canadian Pac. R. Co., 56 Atl. 1102, 1105, 76 Vt. 267.

STATION GROUNDS

The depot or "station grounds" of a railroad company is the place where passengers get on or off the train, and where freight is loaded and unloaded, including all grounds reasonably necessary or convenient to that purpose, together with the necessary tracks, switches, and turnouts thereon, or adjacent thereto, necessary for handling and making up trains, storage of cars, etc., and so much of the main track outside the switches as is necessary for the proper handling of trains at the station. Wilmot v. Oregon R. Co., 87 Pac. 528, 530, 48 Or. 494, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 202, 120 Am. St. Rep. 840, 11 Ann. Cas. 18 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2005 et seq.; Grosse v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 65 N. W. 185, 91 Wis. 482; Groudin v. Duluth & S. S. & A. Ry. Co., 59 N. W. 229, 100 Mich. 598).

"Station grounds" or depot grounds, at convenient points along the line of railroads, embrace not only the land of the right of way but additional land of such extent as existing and prospective conditions seem to require, but the land originally appropriated should not be arbitrarily held to limit railroads or the public, and in every case, in determining what are station and depot grounds, three conditions must concur. The grounds must be necessary, convenient, and be actually used by the railroad in transacting business. They therefore include sufficient land for safe and convenient approaches and exits for passenger and freight transportation, for the location of depot buildings, warehouses, etc.; and an important criterion as to what land is necessary and convenient is the amount and character of business done at the station. In re Atlantic & St. L. R. Co., 62 Atl. 141-143, 100 Me. 430 (citing Davis v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 26 Iowa, 549; Smith v. C. M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 15 N. W. 303, 60 Iowa, 512).

STATION OR STATION HOUSES

The words "station or station houses," in V. S. 3989, as amended by Acts 1902, No. 68, § 6, providing that when, in the judgment of the railroad commissioners, it appears that any addition to or change in the stations or station houses, or any change of the location of the station or station houses, or additional or new stations or station houses, should be afforded, they may order the same made, means the buildings at the point where a station had already been established, and not the place itself, and adds to the law, instead of declaring the law which was previously enacted. V. S. 3890 (P. S. 4469), provides that railroad companies shall establish and maintain depots or station houses at such points as the Supreme Court shall adjudge the public good requires. Held that, under that section and under section 3989, as amended by Acts 1902, No. 68, § 6, the power to establish a station at a certain point was in the Supreme Court, and that the power of the commissioners was only in regard to buildings at a point where a station had already been established. In re Order of Railroad Com'rs, 65 Atl. 82, 84, 79 Vt. 266.

STATIONER

STATIONERY

See Fancy Stationery.

As materials, see Materials.

A sale of a building "including vault, safe, stationery, and all bank fixtures contained therein" does not include revenue stamps the use of which was no longer required by law, as the word "stationery" does not include stamps of any kind. Gregory v. Keller, 137 Ill. App. 441, 444.

The terms "stationery" and "all other necessary articles," in Rev. Code 1892, § 296, providing that the board of supervisors shall furnish the county officers with necessary stationery, furniture, and "all other necessary articles," embrace necessary postage used in the public business. The word "stationery" itself is indeterminate, and is to be interpreted in the light of custom and reason. It is hardly conceivable that the law-making power designed all officers, great and small, to pay, out of their salaries, the postage on state or county official business. Downing v. Hinds County, 36 South. 73, 84 Miss. 29.

Under Code 1896, § 3384, providing that the judge of probate must be allowed reasonable expenses for suitable "stationery," etc., the word "stationery" itself is indeterminate. Webster defines "stationery" to be "such articles as are usually sold by stationers, as paper, ink, quills, pens, blank books, etc." The Standard defines it to be "writing materials in general, including paper, envelopes, blank books, pens, ink, etc.; a term of somewhat indefinite extent, sometimes restricted to note paper and envelopes; as, 'His stationery bears a crest.'" Under the name of "stationery" are embraced all writing materials and implements, together with the numerous appliances with the desk and of mercantile and commercial offices. Crook v. Commissioners' Court of Calhoun County, 39 South. 383, 144 Ala. 505.

STATUARY

"What productions are to be deemed professional productions of a 'statuary' or a sculptor it is difficult to state in general terms, so as to embrace every article of the kind." Merritt v. Tiffany, 10 Sup. Ct. 52, 132 U. S. 167, 169, 33 L. Ed. 299.

"Painting a marble statue does not alter its original substance, or give the subject a new definition or meaning. Some marble statues, the work of a great sculptor, have been slightly painted under his own direction for the purpose, as supposed, of imparting a more lifelike appearance to the statue, and of possibly thereby enhancing its value. But the statue remained a statue nevertheless." The word "statuary" is defined by Rev. St. p. 478, § 2504, as limited to "professional productions of a statuary or of a sculptor only. Plaster casts of clay models, though painted and gilded and produced in unlimited quantities, are 'casts of sculpture' which, under the Tariff Act of 1897, are entitled to free entry where specially imported in good faith for the use and by the order of any society incorporated or established solely for religious, physiological, scientific, educational, or literary purposes, and are not dutiable as 'statuary.'" Benziger v. United States, 24 Sup. Ct. 189, 194, 192 U. S. 38, 50, 48 L. Ed. 331.

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 454, 30 Stat. 194, the definition there given the term "statuary," as used in this act," governs the provision for "statuary" in section 3, 30 Stat. 203, and the reciprocal commercial agreements negotiated as provided in said section. Altman & Co. v. United States, 172 Fed. 161, 162.

A "cistern" in several pieces, with figures sculptured thereon in almost full relief, is "statuary," within the meaning of that term as used in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 454, 30 Stat. 194. United States v. American Exp. Co., 139 Fed. 89.

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 454, the provision for "statuary * * * wrought * * * from metal" does not require metal to be the only component, or even the component of chief value. It is enough if it so greatly predominate as to characterize the entire work. Tiffany & Co. v. United States, 154 Fed. 168; United States v. Tiffany & Co., 160 Fed. 408, 411, 87 C. C. A. 360.

A bronze and ivory statue of a high degree of artistic excellence is "statuary," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 454, 30 Stat. 194, defining that term as including "only such statuary as is cut, carved, or otherwise wrought by hand from a solid block or mass of marble, stone, or alabaster, or from metal." Tiffany & Co. v. United States, 154 Fed. 168.

The provision for "statuary" in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 3, 30 Stat. 203, and in the reciprocal commercial agreement with Italy, negotiated under said section, has the same meaning as in section 1, Schedule N, par. 454, of said tariff act (30 Stat. 151), where it is prescribed that the "term 'statuary' as used in this act shall be understood to include only such statuary as is cut, carved, or otherwise wrought by hand from a solid block or mass of marble, stone or alabaster, or from metal." Bronze statuary, not being covered by this definition, is therefore not covered by said reciprocal agreement. C. B. Richard & Co. v. United States, 158 Fed. 1019, 86 C. C. A. 671; Id., 151 Fed. 954.

A bronze bust cast by artisans from the artist's model is dutiable, upon importation from France, at 45 per cent. ad valorem, under the Tariff Act of 1897, par. 193, which covers articles or wares not specially provided for in the act, composed wholly or in part of metal, and whether partly or wholly manufactured, and is not classifiable as "statuary," under the commercial reciprocal agreement with France, negotiated in accordance with, and under the authority contained in, section 3 of that act, to make reciprocal agreements with reference, among other articles, to "paintings in oil or water colors, pastels, pen and ink drawings, and statuary," since the tariff act defines statuary as including only such as is cut, carved, or otherwise wrought by hand from a solid block of marble, stone, or alabaster, or from metal, and such as is the professional production of a statuary or sculptor. B. Altman & Co. v. United States, 32 Sup. Ct. 593, 597, 224 U. S. 583, 56 L. Ed. 894.

STATUS

"Status" means standing, state, or condition, and as applied to a claim can mean nothing more. Reynolds v. Pennsylvania Oil Co., 89 Pac. 610, 612, 150 Cal. 629 (citing And. Law Dict. 968).

Right not synonymous

The word "status," as applied to the relationship of parent and child, husband and wife, or other like relation, is not synonymous with the word "right," but is to be construed as meaning "relationship," and hence the word "status" does not necessarily imply the existence of the right of inheritance. Calhoun v. Bryant, 133 N. W. 266, 271, 28 S. D. 266.

STATUTE

See Contrary to the Form of the Statute; Declaratory Statute; Directory Statute; Matters in Statute; Personal Statute; Private Statute; Reference Statute; Remedial Statute; Subject (Of Statute).

Ex post facto statute, see Ex Post Facto. Object of statute, see Object.

See, also, Act (In Legislation); Preamble; Title.

A resolution of the General Assembly authorizing a poor tort debtor to take the poor debtor's oath, with the same effect as if he had been committed to jail for a contract debt, is not a "statute," within the meaning of Gen. St. R. I. cap. 22, § 19, which prescribes the time when statutes shall take effect. Barry v. Viall, 12 R. I. 18.

Where an indictment concludes by charging an offense as having been committed "against the form of the statute," the indictment will be sustained, though the offense is the creation of several "statutes." State v. Wilbor, 1 R. I. 199, 204, 36 Am. Dec. 245.

Judicial Code (Act March 3, 1911, c. 231, § 266, 36 Stat. 1162) provides that no interlocutory injunction restraining the enforcement of any "statute" of a state, by restraining the action of any officer of such state in the enforcement of the statute, shall be issued by any Justice of the Supreme Court, or by any District Court of the United States, or any judge thereof, or by any Circuit Judge thereof acting as a District Judge, on the ground of unconstitutionality, unless the application shall be presented to a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, or to a Circuit or District Judge, and shall be heard and determined by three judges, of whom at least one shall be a Justice of the Supreme Court, or a Circuit Judge, and the other two either Circuit or District Judges, and unless a majority of the three judges shall concur in granting the application, etc. Held, that the words "statute of a state" were used in such act in their ordinary sense as meaning a law directly passed by a state Legislature, and that the words "officer of such state" meant an officer whose authority extended throughout the state; and hence such act was not applicable to a suit by a telephone company to restrain the enforcement of a city ordinance fixing telephone rates to be charged by such company. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Memphis, 198 Fed. 955, 957.

Municipal ordinance

A city ordinance is not a state statute, within the meaning of Act June 18, 1910, c. 309, § 17, 36 Stat. 557, requiring the presence of three judges for the hearing of an application for an interlocutory injunction restraining the enforcement of such a statute. Sperry & Hutchinson Co. v. Tacoma, Wash., 190 Fed. 682, 683.

"The validity of city ordinances may be attacked for a number of reasons, such as that they were not properly published by a duly authorized municipal corporation, or that they are not within the inherent or delegated powers of the municipality, or that they do not relate to a subject within the scope of the municipal government, or that they are in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States or the state, or contrary to the charter or general principles of the common law, or because they are unreasonable or are not properly passed by the legislative branch of the municipal government, or because of uncertainty or want of proper form, or because not enacted in good faith and for a legitimate purpose of the local government." A city ordinance is not a "statute," within the meaning of section 88 of the practice act, and a suit involving the validity of an ordinance is appealable to the Appellate Court, and not to the Supreme Court, unless a construction of the Constitution or a statute is also involved. People ex rel. v. Harrison, 79 N. E. 164, 165, 223 Ill. 540 (citing Wood v. Chicago, 68 N. E. 712, 205 Ill. 70; McQuillan, Mun. Ord. § 14, and cases there cited).

STATUTE AFFECTING SAFETY OF PERSONS

In this action to recover from the insurer in a liability insurance contract the amount paid by the insured in the settlement of an action brought against him, made after the insurer had denied liability under the contract and refused to defend the action, it is held the accident was not caused by "the failure of the insured to observe a 'statute affecting the safety of persons,'" was covered by the contract, and the insurer, in denying liability and refusing to defend the action after notice, breached the contract. Butler Bros. v. American Fidelity Co., 139 N. W. 355, 357, 120 Minn. 157, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 609.

The phrase "statute in pari materia" is applicable to private statutes or general laws made at different times and in reference to the same subjects. State v. Frederickson, 63 Atl. 535, 537, 101 Me. 37, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 186, 115 Am. St. Rep. 295, 8 Ann. Cas. 48 (citing Black, Interp. Laws, p. 6).

STATUTE OF LIMITATION

STATUTE OF MERTON

What is called the "statute of Merton" arose out of certain facts peculiar to the history of England in connection with certain dependencies which it had at that time over sea, particularly Normandy, Aquitaine, and Anjou. The rule in those provinces and elsewhere on the Continent was that the subsequent marriage of the parents of an illegitimate child would make the child legitimate, and hence capable of inheriting. The question was constantly arising in the ecclesiastical court, and seems to have produced considerable uncertainty as to the true rule that should obtain. The matter was submitted by the bishops to the Parliament, with the request that the rule making the antenatus legitimate by the subsequent marriage of its parents should be declared as the law of England. The Parliament refused, and, on the contrary, declared that it was, and always had been, the law of England that none were legitimate heirs except those born in lawful wedlock. This declaratory statute had thus arisen for the purpose of solving, so to speak, the very matter in doubt, and was regarded, in the celebrated English case of Birtwhistle v. Vardill, 7 Clarke & Finnelly, 895, as settling it and placing it beyond any question of comity. It was, as said by Lord Chief Justice Tindal, in the case just referred to, a matter of positive law, and a rule of property inhering in the lands, as it were. In other words, the statute was passed to cover precisely the question mooted. Finley v. Brown, 123 S. W. 364, 122 Tenn. 316, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1285.

STATUTE OR ENGLISH MILE

A "statute or English mile" was adopted as the standard of land measurements in the thirty-fifth year of the reign of Elizabeth, 1593. The "statute mile" measures 5,280 feet on the land. Lazell v. Boardman, 69 Atl. 97, 99, 103 Me. 292, 13 Ann. Cas. 673.

STATUTORY ARBITRATION

STATUTORY BOND

"Common-law bonds" and, "statutory bonds" are to be distinguished, in that the latter conform to a statute, while the former do not, though so intended. City of Mt. Vernon v. Brett, 86 N. E. 6, 10, 193 N. Y. 276.

The chief distinction between a "statutory bond" and a statutory undertaking is that in a statutory bond the principal must be a party, but in a statutory undertaking the person on whose behalf it is executed need not be a party. Russell v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 94 Pac. 501, 502, 37 Mont. 1.

A bond by one arrested on a bastardy warrant, conditioned to secure the attendance of accused, not only on the day originally set for hearing, but on subsequent days to which the hearing might be continued, and conditioned on his abiding the order of court, is not a "statutory bond," within Rev. Laws, c. 82, §§ 4, 6, authorizing the release of accused on giving bond for his appearance before the court at a time specified in the bond, and authorizing the taking of a bond to secure appearance at subsequent hearings, but is valid as a common-law bond, not contrary to public policy, and founded on a sufficient consideration, and the default of accused in court is a breach of the undertaking, and entitles plaintiff to at least nominal damages. Howe v. Grimes, 97 N. E. 371, 372, 211 Mass. 33.

STATUTORY CRIME

Embezzlement as, see Embezzle—Embezzlement.

STATUTORY DEDICATION

A "statutory dedication" is to be distinguished from a common-law dedication in this: That a statutory dedication operates by way of grant. The law surrounds the act of dedication with all the formalities and solemnities necessary to the creation of a grant. The plat must be signed, acknowledged, and recorded. Without a substantial compliance with the statute by the proprietor of a city or addition thereto, the estate in the streets intended to be conveyed would not pass to the city in trust. A common-law dedication, on the other hand, operates by way of estoppel, in pais, rather than by way of grant. City of Leadville v. Coronado Min. Co., 86 Pac. 1034, 1036, 37 Colo. 234 (citing City of Denver v. Clements, 3 Colo. 472, 480).

The distinction between a "statutory dedication" and a common-law dedication is that the former proceeds from a grant whilst the latter operates by way of an estoppel in pais. There is no particular form or ceremony necessary in the dedication of land to a public use. An implied common-law dedication arises from some act or course of conduct from which the law will imply an intention, on the part of the owner of the property, to dedicate it to the public use. "An implied dedication is one arising, by operation of law, from the acts of the owner. It may exist without any express grant, and need not be evidenced by any writing, nor, indeed, by any form of words, oral or written. It is not founded on a grant, nor does it necessarily presuppose one, but it is founded on the doctrine of equitable estoppel. The law considers it in the nature of an estoppel in pais, and holds it irrevocable." Roundtree v. Hutchinson, 107 Pac. 345, 346, 57 Wash. 414, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 875 (citing Elliott, Roads & S. [2d Ed.] §§ 121, 123; Cincinnati v. White, 31 U. S. [6 Pet.] 431, 8 L. Ed. 452).

STATUTORY DUTY

"A 'statutory duty' is no more imperative in law than a common-law duty. A penalty may be imposed upon the offender for a breach of statute, but it does not change the relation between the parties except to the extent that one entering the employ of another may assume, in the absence of knowledge, that the terms of the statute have been complied with." Laws Colo. 1897, p. 258, c. 69, requiring all railroad companies to securely block all frogs and switch rails, does not deprive a railroad company, when sued for injury to an employé resulting from its failure to observe such law, of the right to defend on the ground of assumption of risk. Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Norgate, 141 Fed. 247, 254, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 981, 5 Ann. Cas. 448.

STATUTORY LIABILITY

A "statutory liability" is one that depends for its existence on the enactment of the statute and not on the contract of the parties. Bigby v. Douglas, 51 S. E. 606, 607, 123 Ga. 635.

The right of an abutting owner to recover for damages caused by a change of street grade is given by Const. art. 1, § 22, providing that private property shall not be damaged for public use without compensation, and not by Comp. Laws 1907, § 282, authorizing the recovery of damages to abutting property by change of an established grade of a street, so that a cause of action for such damages is not based on a "statutory liability" within section 2877, subd. 1, limiting the time for bringing actions for statutory liability. Webber v. Salt Lake City, 120 Pac. 503, 504, 40 Utah, 221, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1115.

STATUTORY LIEN

A "statutory lien" is a "remedy given by law which secures the preference provided for, but which does not exist, however equitable the claim may be, unless the party brings himself within the provisions of the statute, and shows a substantial compliance with all of its essential requirements." A mechanic's lien claim, stating that it is for "outside work on house and painting of inside blinds, $100," does not substantially comply with Comp. Laws, § 3885, requiring the claimant of a mechanic's lien to file a statement setting forth the terms, time given, and conditions of the contract, and is insufficient to support a lien. Porteous Decorative Co. v. Fee, 91 Pac. 135, 136, 29 Nev. 375 (quoting and adopting the definition in Phil. Mech. Liens, § 9).

STATUTORY OBLIGATION

"A 'statutory obligation,' which does not rest upon the consent of the parties, is clearly quasi contractual in its nature." In re United Button Co., 140 Fed. 495, 502 (quoting Keener, Quasi Cont. p. 16).

STATUTORY PROCEEDING

A claim is a "statutory proceeding," which is authorized to be interposed where a levy has been made on property, but the statute contemplates that this shall be done by some person who claims the property and shall make oath thereto. Rowland v. Gregg & Son, 50 S. E. 949, 950, 122 Ga. 819.

STATUTORY RAPE

See Rape.

STATUTORY RECEIVER

The man who is appointed receiver upon the return day of the order to show cause, or upon the appearance of the corporation upon the filing of the bill, is the "statutory receiver." He is appointed after the summary final hearing prescribed by the statute has been held. Gallagher v. Asphalt Co. of America, 58 Atl. 403, 408, 67 N. J. Eq. 441.

STATUTORY REMEDY

A petition for a review of a civil action is a "statutory remedy" to be granted only "in the special cases" named in the statutes. Rev. St. 1903, c. 91, § 1. Donnell v. Hodsdon, 67 Atl. 143, 102 Me. 420.

STATUTORY RIGHT TO REDEEM

There are now two kinds of equities of redemption, one statutory, and the other the original right of redemption, which relieved the debtor of the harsh forfeiture of his estate for nonpayment of the mortgage debt within the time stipulated. "The statutory right to redeem" differs essentially from the equity of redemption proper. It is not an estate in the mortgaged property, but is a mere personal privilege of redeeming the property within a certain time after the mortgage has been foreclosed. But it exists only in such cases and in favor of such persons as are designated in the statute by which it is created." Ky. St. 1903, § 1709, provides that when a execution defendant owns the legal title to land incumbered by a purchase-money lien, or the legal title in any real or personal estate, and shall have created a bona fide incumbrance thereon by mortgage, deed of trust, or otherwise, before an execution has created a lien on the same, the interest of the defendant may be levied on and sold subject to such incumbrance. Held, that the interest of an owner who had conveyed realty by a deed absolute on its face, taking a written defeasance, was subject to execution. Ebelharr v. Tennyly, 80 S. W. 459, 460, 118 Ky. 43.

STATUTORY TRUST

A trust created under a statute authorizing a trust to be created in perpetuity for the purpose of caring for and keeping in repair a cemetery, burial lot, or monument, is a "statutory trust," in contradistinction to a charitable trust. Mason v. Bloomington Library Ass'n, 86 N. E. 1044, 1046, 237 Ill. 442, 15 Ann. Cas. 603.

STATUTORY UNDERTAKING

The chief distinction between a statutory bond and a statutory undertaking is that in a statutory bond the principal must be a party, but in a "statutory undertaking" the person on whose behalf it is executed need not be a party. Russell v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 94 Pac. 501, 502, 37 Mont. 1.

"A 'statutory undertaking' is not a common-law recognizance or bond. It is simply statutory contract to pay money under certain conditions. To be enforceable, it must have been taken in substantial compliance with the terms of the statute authorizing it, and, if not so taken, it cannot be enforced as a common-law undertaking, and the sureties are entitled to stand on their contract according to its terms." Malheur County v. Carter, 98 Pac. 489, 493, 52 Or. 616.

STATUTORY WRIT OF ERROR OR APPEAL

"A 'writ of error at common law,' being a command from a superior to an inferior court of record commanding the inferior court, in some cases itself to examine the record, in others to send it to the superior court to be examined, that some alleged error might be corrected, was the commencement of a new action, and hence the application for the writ and the writ itself had to point out clearly, not only the cause in which the error lay which was sought to be corrected, but the parties thereto, that they might be summoned to appear in the reviewing court. But the 'statutory writ of error or appeal,' which is sued out as a matter of right in the court rendering the judgment on which the error is predicated, is in no sense the commencement of a new proceeding or action, but is a mere continuation of the pending proceeding or action, being its transfer from a lower to a higher court for further proceedings." Philadelphia Mortgage & Trust Co. v. Palmer, 73 Pac. 501, 502, 32 Wash. 455.

STAY

An oral direction by the judge, when directing entry of judgment, granting ten days' "stay," is generally to be regarded as meaning merely a stay of execution. Gersman v. Levy, 108 N. Y. Supp. 1107, 1110, 58 Misc. Rep. 174.

The upright posts of a staging are kept in their perpendicular position by means of boards called "stays." Solari v. Clark, 72 N. E. 958, 187 Mass. 220, 68 L. R. A. 243.

STAY OF PROCEEDINGS

The mere filing of a motion for new trial with the clerk of court, and serving a copy on the attorney for the adverse party, did not operate as a "stay of proceedings" pending the motion, under circuit court rule No. 33 (108 N. W. xx), providing that a motion to set aside a verdict, made in open court and entered in the clerk's minutes, shall operate as a stay of proceedings until the motion is disposed of. Colle v. Kewaunee, G. B. & W. R. Co., 135 N. W. 536, 540, 149 Wis. 96.

"Originally a supersedeas was a writ directed to an officer commanding him to desist from enforcing the execution of another writ, which he was about to execute or which might come into his hands. In modern times the term is often used synonymous with a 'stay of proceedings,' which of itself suspends the enforcement of a judgment." In Oregon a writ of supersedeas is unknown, though a certificate of probable cause issued by the trial judge or by a justice of the Supreme Court is tantamount thereto, the effect of which is to suspend the enforcement of the judgment until it can be reviewed on appeal. State v. Small, 90 Pac. 1110, 1111, 49 Or. 595 (quoting Dulin v. Pacific Wood & Coal Co., 33 Pac. 123, 98 Cal. 304, 306, and citing State v. Armstrong, 74 Pac. 1025, 45 Or. 25).

STAY ORDER

The provision of the chancery act of New Jersey (Revision, p. 119, § 80), prohibiting an injunction to restrain legal proceedings, after verdict or judgment, at the instance of the defendant therein, unless the money be paid into court, or a bond given according to the statutory requirement, is peremptory and includes a temporary injunction called a "stay order." Phillips v. Pullen, 16 Atl. 915, 45 N. J. Eq. 157.

STAY PROCEEDINGS ON A JUDGMENT

The words "stay proceedings on a judgment," in Civ. Code, § 295, providing that, on dissolution of an injunction to stay proceedings on a judgment, the damages shall be assessed by the court, and judgment shall be rendered against the party who obtained the injunction for the damages assessed, mean the same thing as the like words in section 285, providing that an injunction to stay proceedings on a judgment shall not be granted in an action brought in any other court than that in which the judgment was rendered, and they include an injunction to stay proceedings on an execution issued on a judgment no less than to stay the judgment itself in other respects, and the remedy given by section 295 is exclusive. Mason, Gooch & Hoge Co. v. Mechanics' Lien & Trust Co., 82 S. W. 290, 292, 118 Ky. 707.

STAY WITH AND CARE FOR

The words "to stay with and care for," used to express consideration of a contract to make a will, have no fixed legal signification, and where testator built a house on certain land, and plaintiff went there to live, and testator agreed that, if plaintiff would stay with and care for him, he would leave him the land, it indicated personal association, care, and attention, not including the furnishing of groceries, other necessities, and medical attention, and, the parties themselves having so interpreted the contract, it would be accepted as the true meaning. Bless v. Blizzard, 120 Pac. 351, 352, 86 Kan. 230.

STEADYING BOARD

The office of a "steadyding board" in a packing plant is to hold the hog in position while the splitter cleaves it in two. Rend-

Hch v. Hammond Packing Co., 80 S. W. 683, 106 Mo. App. 717.

STEAL

See Horse Stealing; Private Stealing.
Hog stealing, see Hog.
See, also, Filch.

The word "steal" is a term of art, and includes criminal taking or conversion by way either of larceny, embezzlement, or by obtaining by false pretenses. Commonwealth v. King, 88 N. E. 454, 457, 202 Mass. 379.

A statement by one person to another in the presence of others that "when you get ready to steal any more of my oats, let me know," charges a theft. Ladwig v. Heyer, 113 N. W. 767, 768, 136 Iowa, 196.

In an action for slander by a daughter against her father, where the slanderous words charged in the petition were, "Bet, did you get my money? I knowed when you were standing there at the head of my bed taking my money," and an amended petition alleged that the words were "Bet, you got my money. I know damn well you did. You were at the head of my bed last night, and took it," and a second amended petition alleged the words to be "Bet, you stole my money. I know damn well you did. You were at the head of my bed last night and took it," and plaintiff's evidence was unsatisfactory as to why she did not rely on the words set out in the second amended petition, in the two others, and the evidence of her only witness, who was present when the words were spoken, was not conclusive as to what words were used, even if the word "steal" was used in view of the relationship and situation of the parties—it was a question for the jury whether the father meant to charge his daughter with the crime of larceny, since colloquially the word "steal" is often used where no intimation of a crime is intended. Beams v. Beams, 129 S. W. 298, 299, 138 Ky. 818.

As actionable per se

Where a complaint alleged that defendant charged plaintiff with breaking into a house and stealing coal, defendant's language was slanderous per se. "The natural and obvious import of the word 'steal' is that of larceny. If it were qualified by the context so as to show the article said to have been taken not to be the subject of larceny, as apples from a tree, grass from the field, or coal from a mine, it might, in the absence of a statute declaring such act to be criminal (Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2017), be held to impute a trespass only, but to charge one with stealing coal from a house raises no such implication." Short v. Acton, 71 N. E. 505, 33 Ind. App. 361 (citing Dunnell v. Fiske [Mass.] 11 Metc. 551).

As felonious taking

Webster defines "steal" as "to take and carry away feloniously; to take without right or leave, and with intent to keep wrongfully; as to steal the personal goods of another." Baldwin v. State, 35 South. 220, 221, 46 Fla. 115.

The primary meaning of the word "steal" is "to take and carry away feloniously; to take without right or leave and with intent to keep wrongfully." State v. Minnick, 102 Pac. 605, 607, 54 Or. 86 (quoting and adopting the definition in Webst. Dict.).

"The word 'steal' or 'stealing,' in a criminal statute, when unqualified by the context, signifies a taking which at common law would have been denominated 'felonious.'" Gardner v. State, 26 Atl. 30, 33, 55 N. J. Law, 17.

The elements of "stealing" at common law are the wrongful or fraudulent taking and removal of the personal property by trespass with the felonious intent to deprive the owner thereof and to convert the same to the taker's own use. An indictment which alleges the unlawful and felonious taking and the unlawful and felonious intent to deprive the owner of the property and to convert the same to the taker's use is sufficient. Barbe v. Territory, 86 Pac. 61, 62, 16 Okl. 562.

An indictment for larceny, which merely alleges that accused "feloniously did steal, take and carry away" property described, without alleging the intent to convert it, is sufficient, since the word "steal" means in common and legal parlance the felonious taking and carrying away of the personal goods of another. State v. Perry, 126 S. W. 717, 94 Ark. 215.

Under Comp. Laws 1909, § 2554, making it burglary to break and enter any building, etc., with intent to steal therein, the word "steal" involves a felonious intent on the part of the taker to deprive the owner of property and to convert it to the taker's use; while any trespass involving the taking of personal property with intent to deprive another thereof is "larceny," within section 2557, making it burglary to enter any building, etc., with intent to commit any felony, larceny, or malicious mischief. Sullivan v. State, 123 Pac. 569, 570, 7 Okl. Cr. 307.

As larceny

The definition of Webster and other lexicographers of the verb "to steal" is "to take and carry away feloniously," and the words "steal" and "larceny" are synonymous. Satterfield v. Commonwealth, 52 S. E. 979, 980, 105 Va. 867.

The word "steal" has a uniform significance, and in common as well as legal parlance means the felonious taking and carrying away of the personal goods of another, and in a criminal statute, when unqualified by the context, signifies a taking which at common law would have been deemed felonious, and imports the common-law offense of larceny. State v. Richmond, 128 S. W. 744, 745, 228 Mo. 362.

Larceny is only another name for "stealing" or theft. State v. Fair, 76 Pac. 731, 733, 35 Wash. 127, 102 Am. St. Rep. 897.

To "steal" a domestic animal, in violation of Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 2480, punishing stealing of live stock, is larceny in the sense in which the word "larceny" is used in section 5224, providing that, when property taken in one county by larceny has been brought into another, the jurisdiction of the offense is in either county; the words "steal," "larceny," and "theft" having the same meaning. Cox v. Territory, 104 Pac. 378-380, 2 Okl. Cr. 668 (citing Hughes v. Territory, 56 Pac. 708, 8 Okl. 28; And. Law Dict.; Webst. Int. Dict.).

As used in Criminal Code, § 114, making it criminal to steal money or other property, the word "steal" includes all the elements of larceny at common law. If the original taking of the property is with the consent of the owner, the crime of larceny is not committed. Cohoe v. State, 113 N. W. 532, 533, 79 Neb. 811.

Where defendant charged that plaintiff had "stolen from the town," and there was no prefatory averments or innuendo explaining the words "had stolen," they would be construed in accordance with their common acceptance to import larceny, and were therefore slanderous per se. Flint v. Holman, 73 Atl. 585, 82 Vt. 297.

The word "steal," as used in an indictment for abstracting mail matter from the mails, in violation of Rev. St. § 5469, alleging that defendant did "steal" and take from out of the mail the package described, is not used to designate technical larceny, but means simply to take without right or leave, and the use of that word sufficiently charges wrongful intent. United States v. Trosper, 127 Fed. 476, 477.

An information for receiving stolen goods, knowing the same to have been stolen, which alleges that accused received goods, knowing that the same had been taken and carried away from the owner with the intent on the part of the thief "to permanently deprive the owner" of the use thereof, etc., is fatally bad for failing to allege that accused knew that the property had been stolen; the word "stolen" meaning that a larceny has been committed, while the words "to permanently deprive the owner" of his property may not necessarily mean that a crime has been committed. State v. Mayer, 107 S. W. 1085, 1086, 209 Mo. 391.

Theft synonymous

"Steal" and "theft" have the same meaning. Cox v. Territory, 104 Pac. 378, 380, 2 Okl. Cr. 668.

STEALTH

"Stealth," in the statute defining larceny (St. 1893, § 2371; Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St.

1903, § 2465) as the taking of personal property accomplished by fraud or stealth, and with intent to deprive another thereof, is the taking of property secretly, and without the knowledge or consent of the owner. Flohr v. Territory, 78 Pac. 565, 573, 14 Okl. 477.

STEAM

In giving the board of railroad commissioners supervision over railroads operated by "steam," the statute by implication denies them power over railroads operated only by electricity. Kansas City, Outer Belt & Electric R. Co. v. Board of Railroad Com'rs, 84 Pac. 755, 756, 73 Kan. 168.

STEAM BOILER

See Sectional Steam Boiler.

Ordinary steam heating plants used for heating buildings occupied in part for business and in part, for residence purposes are not within Gen. Laws 1899, p. 92, c. 91, providing for the licensing of persons operating "steam boilers" and steam machinery of any kind. State ex rel. Urbach v. Justus, 102 N. W. 452, 453, 94 Minn. 207.

STEAM EGG COAL

"Egg coal," as known to the trade, is coal run over screens with a 3-inch mesh, and another screen with a 1½-inch mesh. There are two grades of egg coal; the higher grade, known as "domestic egg coal," being made by running the coal over the screens twice, and the lower grade, known as "steam egg," by running the coal over the screens but once. There is more slack in the lower grade than in the higher grade, and the higher grade is more expensive. Indiana Fuel Supply Co. v. Indianapolis Basket Co., 84 N. E. 776, 777, 41 Ind. App. 658.

STEAM ENGINE

A city ordinance making it unlawful to operate or move any "steam engine" over the streets except on tracks and on special permit from the mayor, designating the streets over which the same may be transported, applied alike to all persons engaged in the operation of steam rollers, engines, etc., and was neither discriminatory nor unreasonable. Municipal Pav. Co. v. Donovan Co. (Tex.) 142 S. W. 644, 647.

STEAM FARM ENGINE

A "steam farm engine" consists of a horizontal boiler with a drop-fire box, and a horizontal engine attached to the top of the boiler, mounted on four wheels for convenience of transportation, and having the smokestack hinged so that it can be lowered when the machine is being moved. Wilson v. Union Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 58 Atl. 799, 800, 77 Vt. 28.

STEAM KICKER

A "steam kicker" is an appliance for rolling logs, which consists of iron bars about four feet in length, situated a few feet apart along the log deck; one end being attached to machinery beneath the deck, and the other end extending through the floor of the deck to the edge of the log way, and thus being capable, when set in motion, of pushing the logs along the deck. Olson v. Humbird Lumber Co., 92 Pac. 897, 48 Wash. 136.

STEAM MACHINERY

A meat hasher held not "steam machinery" within section 11 of child labor act, forbidding the employment of children to operate "steam machinery." Swift & Co. v. Renard, 128 Ill. App. 181, 187.

Ordinary steam heating plants, used to heat buildings used for both residence and business purposes, are not within a statute providing for licensing persons operating steam boilers and "steam machinery" of any kind. State ex rel. Urbach v. Justus, 102 N. W. 452, 453, 94 Minn. 207.

STEAM RAILROAD

A belt line railroad, maintained in a city by two connecting railroad lines, for the purpose of affording better facilities for receiving and transferring freight from one line to the other, and from various manufacturing establishments located on such belt line, from which switches were constructed, was a "steam railroad" operated within the state, within Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 5173a et seq., requiring switches on such railroads to be indicated by a signal light, so attached as to indicate safety when the switch is closed and danger when open, and requiring such light to be kept burning at night and on dark and foggy days. Toledo, St. L. & W. R. Co. v. Bond, 72 N. E. 647, 649, 35 Ind. App. 142.

STEAM ROLLER

Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2044, providing that any person using a "traction or road engine" on a public street in an incorporated town or city shall send a person in advance not less than 50 yards to warn approaching teams, does not apply to a "steam roller" used in making or repairing city streets. City of New Albany v. Stier, 72 N. E. 275, 277, 34 Ind. App. 615.

STEAM SHOVEL

As materials, see Materials.

STEAM VESSEL

See Coastwise Steam Vessel.

Every vessel propelled by machinery is considered a "steam vessel," within the meaning of the navigation rules. The Nimrod, 173 Fed. 520, 525.

STEAMER

A steam ferryboat carrying passengers is a "steamer," and subject to the provisions of

Rev. St. § 4472, which prohibits any steamer carrying passengers from carrying certain dangerous articles as freight or stores. The Nassau, 188 Fed. 46, 47, 110 C. C. A. 184.

STEARIC ACID

"Stearic acid," sometimes called stearin, is the solid constituent of fatty substances, as of tallow and olive oil, converted into a crystalline mass by saponification with alkaline matter, and abstraction of the alkali by an acid. Standard Paint Co. v. Bird, 175 Fed. 346, 352.

STEEL

See Scrap Steel; Sheet Steel in Strips. Articles composed in part of steel, see Articles Within Tariff Act.

"Steel" is a product, or, perhaps, more accurately, a species, of iron, refined of some of its grosser elements, intermediate in the amount of its carbon between wrought and cast iron, and tempered to a hardness which enables it to take a cutting edge, a toughness sufficient to bear a heavy strain, and elasticity which adapts it for springs and other articles requiring resiliency, as well as a susceptibility to polish, which makes it useful for ornamental and artistic purposes." Carnegie Steel Co. v. Cambria Iron Co., 185 U. S. 403, 410, 22 Sup. Ct. 698, 46 L. Ed. 968.

The provision for "steel in all forms and shapes," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 135, 30 Stat. 161, does not include completed articles, such as horseshoe calks and ball bearings, to which nothing needs to be done to fit them for immediate use. Maldonado & Co. v. United States, 172 Fed. 170, 100 C. C. A. 282; Id., 176 Fed. 737, 100 C. C. A. 282.

A so-called "steel table," engraved, weighing nearly six tons, measuring 12 feet by 4 feet by 6 inches, and mounted like a table top on a frame, held to be within the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 135, 30 Stat. 161, for plates and steel in all forms and shapes. Morris v. United States, 140 Fed. 774.

Sheets consisting of a plate of iron or steel with a sheet of nickel welded thereto, the material being rolled to the desired thickness after welding, are not "sheets of iron or steel, common or black," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 131. Boker v. United States, 180 Fed. 959, 960.

STEEL PLATES

The provision for "steel plates" in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 135, 30 Stat. 161, while not covering all steel articles that are known as plates, includes so-called monogram dies and plates used in engraving, which, besides being called plates, are within the dictionary definitions of "plates." United States v. Sellers, 160 Fed. 518, 519.

STEEL TUBES

STEEL WIRE

See Round Steel Wire.

STEEL WOOL

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 137, 30 Stat. 161, the provision for "articles manufactured from * * * wire," cannot be restricted to manufactured articles which contain the round wire in its integrity; and "steel wool," consisting of filaments shaved from steel wire, and constituting a finished commercial article, is embraced in said provision. Buehne Steel Wool Co. v. United States, 159 Fed. 107, 109, 86 C. C. A. 297.

"Steel wool," consisting of the filaments or shavings produced by passing toothed knives over steel wires, is dutiable under paragraph 135, Schedule C, § 1, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, 30 Stat. 161, relating to "steel in all forms and shapes," rather than under paragraph 193, 30 Stat. 167, as articles composed of steel "not specifically provided for." Buehne v. United States, 140 Fed. 772, 773.

STEER

The distinction between a "cow" and a "steer" must be recognized in construing the statute relating to larceny; the one being a full-grown female of the Bovine genus, and the other being a castrated male of the same genus. Mobley v. State, 49 South. 941, 942, 57 Fla. 22, 17 Ann. Cas. 735.

STEERER

See, also, Bunco Steering.

A "steerer" is one of plausible manner and address, who gains the confidence of one intended to be fleeced. People v. Simmons, 109 N. Y. Supp. 190, 194, 125 App. Div. 234.

STELLIONATE

In Scots and civil law the word "stellionate" denotes all such crimes in which fraud is an ingredient, as have no special names to distinguish them, and are not defined by any written law, and hence Pen. Code 1895, § 670, providing that one using any deceitful means or artful practice other than those mentioned in the Code by which an individual or the public is defrauded and cheated shall be punished as for a misdemeanor may be said to be the statute against stellionates. Foster v. State, 68 S. E. 739, 740, 8 Ga. App. 119.

STEPDAUGHTER

"Dictionaries and text-books with unanimity define a 'stepdaughter' to be the child of a wife or husband by a former marriage, and, if this definition be regarded as controlling, the illegitimate child of the husband or wife before their marriage would not become the stepchild of the other party to the marriage contract. But Civ. Code 1895, § 2413, declaring the marriage of a man with his stepdaughter incestuous, is founded on the Roman law. It is for the protection of the most important unit of society, the family, that incest is pronounced a crime. If a man marry the mother of an illegitimate daughter and take the daughter into his care and custody, he becomes charged with a duty towards her, and his disregard of morality and decency in having sexual intercourse with her is a crime transcending a mere misdemeanor and has the elements which constitute incest." Lipham v. State, 53 S. E. 817, 818, 125 Ga. 52, 114 Am. St. Rep. 181, 5 Ann. Cas. 66.

STEPFATHER

The man who marries the mother of an illegitimate daughter becomes the "stepfather" of such child, within the meaning of Pen. Code 1895, § 380, and Civ. Code 1895, § 2413, defining incest. Lipham v. State, 53 S. E. 817, 125 Ga. 52, 114 Am. St. Rep. 181, 5 Ann. Cas. 66.

STEPPING ASIDE

To render the wrong of the agent that of the principal—respondeat superior—the fact that it was done in the course or period of employment is not sufficient; it must be in the prosecution of the principal's business, not by stepping aside therefrom to serve a personal end. The element of "stepping aside," mentioned in the last foregoing, which is essential to break the nexus between the principal, the agent and the employer of such principal, needs only change of mental attitude from that of serving the principal to that of serving a personal end; no particular interval of time is necessary. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. v. Schreiber, 135 N. W. 507, 513, 150 Wis. 42, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 314, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 823.

STERLING SILVER

Articles of the fineness of sterling silver are universally described as silver, and an indictment charging the receipt of certain ounces of silver, knowing it to be stolen, would be sustained by evidence showing that the articles were made of an alloy of silver and copper, in such proportions as to form what is called "sterling silver," but is not sustained by proof of receipt of silver spoon, fork, etc., blanks; the original shape of the metal having been so altered as to impart to the pieces of metal characteristics which would be more prominent as means of identifying them than the substance of which they were composed. *State v. The word "stick" is a synonym for the word "club." State v. Richard, 53 South. 669, 671, 127 La. 413.

"Sticking" lumber is the process of placing thin strips of wood between layers of boards or timber, in order to secure a proper circulation of air and the consequent seasoning of the lumber without warping or decay. Hutchins v. Blaisdell, 75 Atl. 291, 292, 106 Me. 92.

With reference to an instruction to an employé to unclog an oat roller by the use of a stick, a "stick" was defined, following Webster, as "a small shoot, branch, separated, as by cutting, from a tree or shrub; * * * any long and comparatively slender piece of wood, whether in natural form or shaped with tools; a rod; a wand; a staff"—and it was declared that wood was ordinarily meant, and that one would not infer, save under peculiar circumstances, that by the word "stick" a piece of iron was intended. Wilder v. Great Western Cereal Co., 104 N. W. 434, 436, 130 Iowa, 263.

STICKER MACHINE

The "sticker machine" is designed for the purpose of receiving strips of rough lumber at one end and turning it out at the other as a complete molding finished on all sides by a single operation. Such a machine consists usually of an iron table or platform, over which the material passes, about 8 feet in length,  $3\frac{1}{2}$  feet in height, and the same in width, open on the sides. At the south end is the countershaft, power pulley, and pulleys to operate the feed and knives. The operator stands at the south end and feeds the unfinished strips into the machine through guides. It passes first through the feed rolls, immediately after which it is operated on by the first set of knives, fastened to what is called the "top head." There are four of these heads, called, respectively, the "top head," the two "side heads," and the "lower head." These heads are blocks of iron or steel, about 8 inches long and 4 inches square, on two corners of which are set knives. They are attached to a short shaft, on the other end of which is a pulley, on which is the belt running to the power pulley. The top head is necessarily above the table with its shaft and pulley. After passing the top head, the material passes along the guide, and is operated upon first by one side head and then by the other. These side heads are of the same construction as the top head, but they necessarily are in a vertical position, projecting above the table; the pulley being beneath. The material then passes to the under head, which with its pulleys is under the table; the knives being allowed to project slightly above the table through an opening therein, which may be made to vary in width from  $2\frac{1}{2}$  to 6 inches. The finished material then passes out at the rear of the machine. The power is applied to and removed from the feed rolls and heads by means of levers at the right of the operator at the south end of the machine; one lever operating the feed rolls and another the heads. Gardner v. Paine Lumber Co., 101 N. W. 700, 702, 123 Wis. 338.

STILL DUE

Rev. St. 1908, § 518, preserves the lien of a chattel mortgage for 30 days after maturity without possession taken, and section 520, subsequently enacted, provides that the lien of any recorded chattel mortgage to secure any indebtedness may "at any time within 30 days after the maturity of the last installment of the indebtedness secured thereby" be extended as to the unpaid portion thereof by filing a sworn statement of the total payments on the debt and the amount remaining unpaid, that it is "still due" the mortgagee or his assignee, and that the mortgagee consents to an extension. Held, in view of section 518, that the word "due" was used in the sense that the debt was subsisting or outstanding, that the words "still due" referred to a time subsequent to a time when the debt was known or taken to be due, and that the expression "at any time within 30 days after the maturity of the last installment of the indebtedness secured thereby" required that such sworn statement be filed within 30 days after the maturity of the indebtedness, and that a statement on the date of maturity was premature and did not extend the lien as against a purchaser after the expiration of the 30 days. Ferris v. Chambers, 117 Pac. 994, 995, 51 Colo. 368.

STILL WINE

"Still" wines are produced from the natural saccharine juice of fruits, and do not contain starch or maltose, which is a product of starch. They are always fermented in closed casks in the absence of air, and contain from  $7\frac{1}{2}$  to 16 per cent. of alcohol. United States v. Nishimiya, 137 Fed. 396, 398, 69 C. C. A. 588.

Sake is dutiable as "still wine" by similitude, being "similar" to that article in material and use within the meaning of the similitude clause in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 7, 30 Stat. 205, which prescribes the classification of unenumerated articles "similar * * * in material, * * * use," etc., to enumerated articles. The resemblance in material arises from the fact that the predominant substance in both articles is alcohol, and that there is a substantial similarity in their alcoholic strength; the percentage of alcohol being about 18 in sake and from 11 to 16 in still wine. The resemblance in use arises from the fact that both articles are drunk for purposes of exhilaration, and are capable of producing intoxication. United States v. Komada & Co., 162 Fed. 465, 469, 89 C. C. A. 385.

STIPULATE—STIPULATION.

See As Stipulated For.

A "stipulation" is an agreement as to terms. Beck v. Budd, 88 N. E. 785, 786, 44 Ind. App. 145.

"A 'stipulation' is an agreement of an attorney entered into for the purpose of binding his clients so far as he may do so." In re More's Estate, 77 Pac. 407, 408, 143 Cal. 493 (citing Code Civ. Proc. § 283; And. Dict. title "Stipulation").

A "stipulation" concerning a pending cause is unlike an ordinary contract, since it requires no consideration nor mutuality, and may bind those incapable of binding themselves out of court, and is subject to the supervision of the court. In an action in equity, a decree was entered dismissing the bill, "as per the following stipulation now filed herein," followed by an instrument purporting to specify the terms of a settlement between the parties, and signed by the attorneys for the respective parties. Held, that the instrument, aside from the order of dismissal, was neither a decree, nor a consent decree, having the force of a prior adjudication, nor was it a mere contract between the parties, but it was a "stipulation" entered into for the purpose of terminating the pending litigation upon terms agreed upon by the parties. People ex rel. v. Spring Lake Drainage and Levee Dist., 97 N. E. 1042, 1047, 253 Ill. 479.

A building contract, providing that the owner on a certificate by the architect of the contractor's failure to perform any of the agreements may on three days' notice terminate the contract and complete the work, and that the expense incurred by the owner shall be certified by the architect, whose certificate shall be conclusive, does not provide against the contingency of abandonment of the work by the contractor, and where the contractor abandons the work the owner may complete it without obtaining the architect's certificate; the word "agreements" being synonymous with the word "stipulations." Heidbrink v. Schaffner, 127 S. W. 418, 421, 147 Mo. App. 632.

STIPULATED DAMAGES

A contract for "stipulated damages" constitutes a penal obligation, and one who sues to recover on the stipulation is not entitled to claim interest even from the date of his writ. Moseley v. Johnson, 56 S. E. 922, 923, 144 N. C. 274 (citing Devereux v. Burgwin, 33 N. C. 490).

Damages for the breach of a contract may be restricted or altogether excluded by the contract, but, being in derogation of law, such contracts are to be strictly construed. "Stipulated damages" can only be where there is a clear and unequivocal agreement which stipulates for the payment of a certain sum as liquidated satisfaction fixed and agreed upon by the parties for the doing or not doing of certain acts particularly expressed in the agreement. Harrison v. Murray Iron Works Co., 70 S. W. 261, 263, 96 Mo. App. 348 (citing Bish. Cont., § 404; Fisher v. Barrett, 58 Mass. [4 Cush.] 381).

STIPULATED FACT

A "stipulated fact" brings such fact upon the record, and calls upon the court to apply the law to the fact. Such fact stands on a par with any fact alleged in a complaint and admitted by the answer thereto. Courts, in furtherance of justice, will vacate a stipulation entered into under a mistake, or when the same has been obtained by deceit or fraud. Prescott v. Brooks (N. D.) 94 N. W. 88, 95.

STIPULATION POUR AUTRUI

A person can become a party to a contract by accepting a stipulation made in his favor by the contractants; he remaining a third person and stranger to it until, by accepting the stipulation, he becomes a party. Such a stipulation is called in the civil law a "stipulation pour autrui"; autrui meaning some one else, or a third person (that is to say, a person not party to the contract). Allen & Currey Mfg. Co. v. Shreveport Waterworks Co., 37 South. 980, 982, 113 La. 1091, 68 L. R. A. 650, 104 Am. St. Rep. 525, 2 Ann. Cas. 471.

STOCK

See Clear Stock; On Stock; Rolling Stock; Turn Stock.

Mark on stock, see Mark.

Other stock, see Other.

The word "stock" is defined by the Century Dictionary as "the stock, stem, or trunk of a tree or other plant; the main body or fixed and firm part; a stem in which a graft is inserted, and which is its support; also a stem, tree, or plant that furnishes slips or cuttings." United States v. American Exp. Co., 158 Fed. 808, 809, 86 C. C. A. 68.

In England the word "stock," as used in the statement in Eversley's Law of the Domestic Relations (2d Ed. 1896) 293, 294, that a valid gift is accomplished by a transfer by the husband into the wife's name of "stock," though previously purchased, is not limited to corporate shares, but included also certain public and private obligations, usually known with us as bonds. Tucker v. Curtin, 148 Fed. 929, 934, 78 C. C. A. 557.

As domestic animals

Code 1907, § 5476, provides that, when any stock is killed or injured or other property damaged by any railroad, the burden of showing absence of negligence shall be on the railroad company. Held, that the term "stock" does not include a dog, but that it is included in the word "property," and, the statute being sufficiently broad to include a street railroad, the burden of proof, in an action against a street railroad company for killing plaintiff's dog, was on defendant to show absence of negligence. Selma Street & Suburban Ry. Co. v. Martin, 56 South. 601, 602, 2 Ala. App. 537.

Where a contract provided that each party was to pay one-half of all the labor required in conducting a farm owned by one, which the other was to take charge of, and that each was to furnish one-half the "stock," tools and feed, teams, etc., the word "stock" did not mean merely work stock, but included feeding animals. Green v. Hart (Ky.) 87 S. W. 315, 316.

As goods or merchandise in trade

Live cattle as goods, wares, and merchandise, see Goods.

See, also, Stock of Goods.

The common use of the word "stock," when applied to the goods in a mercantile house, refers to those which are kept for sale. A cash register, which is not a part of the goods kept for sale, does not come within the designation of "stock of goods, wares, or merchandise," within the meaning of an act making it the duty of the sellers of a stock of goods, wares, or merchandise in bulk to furnish an affidavit to the buyers giving a list of their creditors at the time of sale and declaring the sale fraudulent and void in the absence of such affidavit. Albrecht v. Cudihoe, 79 Pac. 628, 629, 37 Wash. 206.

A fire policy on a stock of merchandise for a specified sum, and on store and furniture and fixtures for a specified sum which stipulates that the entire policy shall be void if the subject of insurance be incumbered by chattel mortgage, is not invalidated, as to the insurance on the furniture and fixtures, by the execution of a chattel mortgage on the "stock of merchandise" and improvements, the mortgage not covering the furniture and fixtures; "stock," in mercantile law, being defined as "the goods which a tradesman holds for sale or traffic," and "merchandise" being defined to be "the objects of commerce." Spring Garden Ins. Co. of Philadelphia v. Brown (Tex.) 143 S. W. 292.

A share of the capital "stock" of a corporation is the interest or right which the owner has in the management of the corporation, in its surplus profits, and, upon dissolution, in all of its assets remaining after the payment of its debts. Lipscomb's Adm'r v. Condon, 49 S. E. 392, 393, 395, 56 W. Va. 416, 67 L. R. A. 670, 107 Am. St. Rep. 938 (citing Clark, Cor. 1141).

"Stock" in corporation law, instead of being the evidence of indebtedness, is a right to partake, according to the party's subscription or ownership, of the surplus profits made from the use and disposal of the property of the corporation. A share of stock is the interest which the shareholder has in the corporation, which is the right to participate in the profits and, on dissolution, in the division of the assets. Sweetsir v. Chandler, 56 Atl. 584, 587, 98 Me. 145.

"Stock" in a corporation is only evidence of the right of the holder or owner to share in the proceeds of the corporation's property, and a share of stock only represents an aliquot part of the corporation's property, or the right to share in its proceeds to that extent, when distributed according to law and equity. Hall & Farley v. Alabama Terminal & Improvement Co., 56 South. 235, 241, 173 Ala. 398.

"Moneys and credits" cannot be classified as "corporation stock," so as to make the assessment thereof valid, under a Code provision that loan and trust companies shall be assessed upon the value of corporation stock, and, in arriving at the value of such stock, the amount of their capital actually invested in real estate owned by them shall be deducted from the value of such shares, and such real estate shall be assessed as other real estate, and the property of such corporation shall not be otherwise assessed. Wahkonsa Investment Co. v. City of Ft. Dodge, 100 N. W. 517, 519, 125 Iowa, 148.

As capital

"Stock" of a corporation is capital, and the stock certificate only evidences that the holder has invested his means as a part of the capital. Weaver Power Co. v. Elk Mountain Mill Co., 69 S. E. 747, 748, 154 N. C. 76.

"Stock" is the share capital of a corporation or commercial company; the fund employed in carrying on of some business or enterprise divided into shares of equal amount, and owned by individuals who jointly form a corporation. Continental Securities Co. v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 165 Fed. 945, 963.

Capital, in whatever form invested, appropriate to the purpose of the company, and not merely the shares held by stockholders, must be regarded as meant by the word "stock," as used in a provision of a railway charter that the stock of the company and its branches shall be exempt from taxation for seven years, and after that shall be subject to a tax not exceeding a given per cent. upon the net proceeds of their investments, in view of the recognition in other provisions of the charter of the distinction between capital stock and "shares," and of at least 60 years' legislative and executive acquiescence in reading this partial exemption as applicable to the capital stock of the company, and of a series of decisions of the highest state court, holding either that the whole of the capital was exempt, in whatever form invested, or so much of the investment as corresponded in value to the authorized capital stock. Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Wright, 132 Fed. 912, 914; Wright v. Georgia R. & Banking Co., 30 Sup. Ct. 242, 244, 216 U. S. 420, 54 L. Ed. 544 (quoting Bouv. Law Dict.).

"Lager beer" or "stock beer" is an un-equivocal term, designating a light German beer, so called because it is stored for ripening before being used. People ex rel. Lance v. O'Reilly, 114 N. Y. Supp. 258, 261, 129 App. Div. 522 (quoting and adopting definition in Cent. Dict.).

A contract restraining defendant from dealing in stock cattle or horses for speculative purposes in the vicinity of M. was not so uncertain as to preclude specific performance because the term "stock cattle" was not one of universal meaning; parol evidence being admissible to explain the term, which in the absence of an allegation of mistake, would be presumed to have been used according to the common understanding of cattlemen in general. Wilson v. Delaney, 113 N. W. 842, 843, 137 Iowa, 636.

STOCK CORPORATION

See Stock Insurance Company.

A "stock corporation" is in essence an aggregation of individuals, a statutory partnership with assignable membership and limited liability of the members, so that the doctrine of equitable estoppel applies fully to all the internal concerns of such companies. Breslin v. Fries Breslin Co., 58 Atl. 313, 316, 70 N. J. Law, 274.

Laws 1892, p. 1801, c. 687, § 3, declares a "stock corporation" to be one "having a capital stock divided into shares and which is authorized by law to distribute to the holders thereof dividends or shares of the surplus of the corporation." People ex rel. Venner v. New York Life Ins. Co., 97 N. Y. Supp. 465, 466, 111 App. Div. 183.

Under General Corporation Law, Laws 1890, p. 1061, c. 563, § 2, defining a "stock corporation" as one having capital stock divided into shares, a building association formed under Laws 1851, p. 234, c. 122, and having capital stock divided into shares, is a stock corporation within Stock Corporation Law, Laws 1890, p. 1066, c. 564, defining the liabilities of stockholders of stock corporations. Leighton v. Leighton Lea Ass'n, 114 N. Y. Supp. 918, 921, 62 Misc. Rep. 73.

A corporation organized under laws 1851, c. 122, which by section 1 authorizes any number of persons, not less than nine, to incorporate to accumulate a fund to purchase realty, or make improvements on lands, or aid its members in acquiring realty, and to accumulate a fund to be returned to its members not receiving advances for acquiring realty, when the funds amount to a certain sum per share, is a nonstock corporation within General Corporation Law (Laws 1890, c. 563, as amended by Laws 1895, c. 672) § 3, subd. 2, providing that a "stock corporation" is one having a capital stock divided into shares, and which is authorized to distribute to the holders dividends or shares of the surplus profits, and that a corporation is not a stock corporation because of having issued certificates, called "certificates of stock," which are merely certificates of membership, and which is not authorized by law to distribute dividends or share profits from its operations. Leighton v. Leighton Lea Ass'n, 130 N. Y. Supp. 935, 940, 146 App. Div. 255.

A building association, organized under Laws 1851, p. 234, c. 122, as amended, for the purpose of aiding its members in acquiring real estate, making improvements thereon, and the accumulation of a fund to be returned to its members who do not obtain advances on their shares when the funds to the credit of the share shall amount to $100, the par value thereof, is not a stock corporation as defined by General Corporation Law, Laws 1892, p. 1801, c. 687, § 3, subd. 2, defining a "stock corporation" as one having stock divided into shares, but is a membership corporation, in which the corporation entity discharges its duties by acting as trustee for funds contributed by the members to mature the shares and seeing that the moneys contributed by the members under their mutual agreements are properly used in maturing the shares, and the demands of equity can only be satisfied by holding each member to his contract, not so much with the corporation as with the individual members. Preston v. Reinhart, 96 N. Y. Supp. 851, 852, 109 App. Div. 781.

STOCK DIVIDEND

A "stock dividend" is an issue by a corporation of new shares of its own stock to its shareholders. Union & New Haven Trust Co. v. Taintor, 83 Atl. 697, 699, 85 Conn. 452.

It is the characteristic feature of a "stock dividend" that the property of the corporation itself remains unchanged, but that each one of the new shares of the increased capital stock represents a smaller fractional interest than before in the total amount of the corporate property; and hence a dividend declared out of a corporation's surplus or accumulated profits, though payable in the stock of another corporation, which diminished the property of the dividing corporation by what was given to the stockholders, was not properly a "stock dividend." Gray v. Hemenway, 98 N. E. 789, 790, 212 Mass. 239.

A "stock dividend" is not in the ordinary sense a dividend; a "dividend" being a distribution of the profits to stockholders as the income from their investment, while a "stock dividend" is merely an increase in the number of shares, such increase representing the same property that was represented by the smaller number of shares. A corporation on December 16th declared a 4 per cent. semiannual dividend and a 6 per cent. extra dividend and a 50 per cent. stock dividend, payable to the stockholders of record on January 2d following. After the dividends were declared, but before they were due, plaintiff, a stockholder, sold four shares to defendant, the parties agreeing that the seller should receive the "January dividend," and the amount of the regular semiannual dividend due in January was added to a sight draft attached to the certificates of stock sent to a bank to be delivered upon payment therefor. Neither party had heard of extra cash dividend nor of stock dividend declared. Held, that the "January dividend" reserved included only the cash dividends, and the buyer was entitled to the increased stock represented by the so-called "stock dividend." Lancaster Trust Co. v. Mason, 68 S. E. 235, 236, 152 N. C. 660, 136 Am. St. Rep. 851 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6664).

STOCK DROVER

A "stock drover" is any person driving live stock through any county in the state and by Rev. St. Wyo. 1899, § 2005, it is made the duty of such drover to prevent his live stock from trespassing upon the property of another. Haskins v. Andrews, 76 Pac. 588, 590, 12 Wyo. 458.

STOCK, FIXTURES, AND ACCOUNTS

A bill of sale by a partner to his copartner of all his interest in the "stock, fixtures and accounts," in a going retail business, did not include an unknown and unsuspected liability of an embezzler of property of the firm; and, in the absence of facts warranting an extension of the construction of the words, it did not convey an interest in an amount subsequently recovered by the copartner from the embezzler, either as reimbursement, as damages, or as a price of immunity from prosecution. Hubbard v. Ferry, 123 N. W. 142, 143, 141 Wis. 17, 135 Am. St. Rep. 27.

STOCK INSURANCE

"Mutual insurance" "is essentially different from 'stock insurance,' and much of the litigation that has grown out of this species of insurance has been owing to inattention to this difference. Its original design was to provide cheap insurance by means of local associations, the members of which should insure each other. Such associations are in their nature adapted only to local business. They need many by-laws and conditions that are not required in stock companies; and it is necessary and equitable that each person who gets insured in them should become subject to the same obligations towards his associates that he requires toward himself." J. P. Lamb & Co. v. Merchants' Nat. Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 119 N. W. 1048, 1049, 18 N. D. 253 (quoting with approval from May, Ins. § 146).

STOCK INSURANCE COMPANY

A "stock insurance company" is one wherein the stockholders contribute all the capital, pay the losses, and take the profits. State v. Willett, 86 N. E. 68, 70, 171 Ind. 296, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 197.

STOCK IN TRADE

Under Pub. St. 1901, c. 55, § 7, cl. 6, providing for the taxation of "stock in trade" defined to include raw materials and manufactures of any manufactory, logs, and lumber reckoned at the average value thereof for the year, and chapter 56, § 16, providing for the taxation of logs and lumber at the full value in the town where located on April 1st, logs of a foreign wood pulp and paper manufacturer stored on its land in New Hampshire for use in its manufacturing business are properly taxed as stock in trade, and logs or lumber not properly stock in trade are taxable under chapter 56. International Paper Co. v. Town of Walpole, 74 Atl. 180, 181, 75 N. H. 320.

The bulk sales law (Act May 13, 1905 [Laws 1905, p. 284]) provides that a sale of any portion of a stock of merchandise otherwise than in the ordinary course of trade or in the regular prosecution of the seller's business, or a sale of an entire stock of merchandise in gross, will be presumed to be fraudulent as against creditors of the seller, unless the seller and purchaser shall at least five days before the sale make a full inventory, and unless the purchaser shall within the same time in good faith make full inquiries of the seller as to the names and residences of his creditors and shall notify them of the proposed sale, etc. Held, that the words "stock of merchandise" in the statute are used in the common and ordinary acceptance of those terms, meaning the goods which a merchant holds for sale, and are equivalent to "stock in trade" as ordinarily understood among merchants. Charles J. Off & Co. v. Morehead, 85 N. E. 264, 266, 235 Ill. 40, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 167, 126 Am. St. Rep. 184, 14 Ann. Cas. 434.

STOCK LAW

Loc. Laws 1900-01, p. 2646, § 1, provides that a majority of the electors of any precinct in F. county may file a petition with the probate judge stating that they desire a "stock law" for the precinct, and he shall enter it as a stock-law precinct. Section 3 provides that any person injured by any live stock running at large in violation of this act shall have a lien, etc. Section 4 provides that any person injured by stock running at large contrary to the act may take up such stock, etc. Held, that the words "stock law" could only refer to some stock law existent in the state at the time of the passage of the act, and where there was no stock law in existence at that time the words were meaningless, and as there was nothing in the statute indicating what means must have been used to confine stock, or under what condition stock could run at large, which could only be learned by reference to some undesignated and wholly indeterminate stock law, the statute is uncertain, vague, indefinite, and ineffectual, in so far as it undertakes to declare any right for persons injured by reason of stock running at large and damaging crops. Savage v. Wallace, 51 South. 605, 607, 165 Ala. 572.

STOCK LEDGER

A "stock ledger" is a stock book kept by a corporation in which the names and addresses of the stockholders and the number of shares held by them, respectively, are contained. In re Election of Directors of United States Cast Iron Pipe & Foundry Co., 65 Atl. 849, 850, 74 N. J. Law, 315.

STOCK LOAN

"Stock loans" are loans to members exercising the right to borrow 90 per cent. of the withdrawal value of their stock by pledging their stock as security. Fitzgerald v. State Mutual Building & Loan Ass'n, 79 Atl. 454, 455, 76 N. J. Eq. 137, 139 Am. St. Rep. 743.

STOCK OF GOODS

Any stock, see Any.

Defendant contracted with plaintiff and another to sell them a stock of goods consisting of merchandise and trade fixtures contained in a store, plaintiff to pay a certain sum down and a further sum to be determined by the amount of the invoice of "said stock of goods." Held, that the term "stock of goods" embraced the fixtures as well as merchandise, and they were to be invoiced at wholesale prices. Hendrickson v. Anderson, 120 N. W. 765, 766, 23 S. D. 78.

STOCK OF GOODS, WARES, AND MERCHANDISE

Bar fixtures, safes, desks, cash registers, cigar cases, pool tables, refrigerators, and the like, used in connection with a business to which they are appropriate, in facilitating the operation of such business and the sale of the goods connected therewith, and included in a sale with the goods, are a part of a "stock of goods, wares, and merchandise," within the meaning of the act of 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 93), regulating the sale of stocks of goods, wares, and merchandise in bulk. Parham & Co. v. Potts-Thompson Liquor Co., 56 S. E. 460, 461, 127 Ga. 303.

A cash register, which is not a part of the goods kept for sale, is not within Laws 1901, p. 222, c. 109, making it the duty of the sellers, on a sale of their "stock of goods, wares or merchandise" in bulk, to furnish an affidavit to the buyers, giving a list of their creditors at the time of the sale, and declaring the sale fraudulent and void in the absence of such affidavit; and the cash register is not subject to attachment in the hands of the buyers at the suit of a judgment creditor of the sellers, though no affidavit was made when the sale was consummated. Albrecht v. Cudihee, 79 Pac. 628, 629, 37 Wash. 206.

Pierce's Code, § 5346, declares that it shall be unlawful to purchase any "stock of goods, wares, or merchandise" in bulk for cash or on credit, without requiring the vendor or his agent, before payment is made, to give to the buyer a sworn statement of the names and addresses of his creditors, etc. Held, that a sale of the business and appliances of a boarding house and restaurant was not exempt from the provisions of such section, and that a failure to comply therewith rendered the sale invalid as to the seller's creditors. Plass v. Morgan, 78 Pac. 784, 785, 36 Wash. 160.

STOCK OF MERCHANDISE

A sale of all the property belonging to a livery stable business is not a sale of a "stock of merchandise," within the Bulk Sales Law. Everett Produce Co. v. Smith Bros., 82 Pac. 905, 906, 40 Wash. 566, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 331, 111 Am. St. Rep. 979, 5 Ann. Cas. 798 (citing and adopting Albrecht v. Cudihee, 79 Pac. 628, 37 Wash. 206, and citing and distinguishing Plass v. Morgan, 78 Pac. 784, 36 Wash. 160).

The phrase "stock of merchandise," as used in St. 1903, p. 276, c. 415, relating to the sale in bulk of any part of the whole of a stock of merchandise, properly and naturally describes articles which the seller keeps for sale in the usual course of his business. It does not naturally describe fixtures. It would hardly be within the usual course of business for a storekeeper at any time to sell his fixtures, and it is not to be presumed that the Legislature intended to prohibit the sale of a fixture, unless such intent is clearly expressed. The natural reading of the statute makes it applicable, as has been said, only to the articles which, in the ordinary course of his business, the seller keeps for sale, and that must be taken to be its legal meaning. Gallus v. Elmer, 78 N. E. 772, 773, 193 Mass. 106, 8 Ann. Cas. 1067.

The bulk sales law (Act May 13, 1905 [Laws 1905, p. 284]) provides that a sale of any portion of a stock of merchandise otherwise than in the ordinary course of trade or in the regular prosecution of the seller's business, or a sale of an entire stock of merchandise in gross, will be presumed to be fraudulent as against creditors of the seller, unless the seller and purchaser shall at least five days before the sale make a full inventory, and unless the purchaser shall within the same time in good faith make full inquiries of the seller as to the names and residences of his creditors and shall notify them of the proposed sale, etc. Held, that the words "stock of merchandise" in the statute are used in the common and ordinary acceptance of those terms, meaning the goods which a merchant holds for sale, and are equivalent to "stock in trade" as ordinarily understood among merchants. Charles J. Off & Co. v. Morehead, 85 N. E. 264, 266, 235 Ill. 40, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 167, 126 Am. St. Rep. 184, 14 Ann. Cas. 434.

STOCK OF SUGAR AND MOLASSES

The phrase "stock of sugar and molasses," in a policy of insurance on a stock of sugar and molasses deposited in the sugar manufactory on a sugar plantation, on which there is a growing crop, embraces such stock in whatever form existing and which might be in the factory at the time the risk attached under the policy stipulating that the risk was to attach in two months and four days after the date of the policy. Royal Ins. Co. v. Mil- ler, 26 Sup. Ct. 46, 49, 199 U. S. 353, 50 L. Ed. 226.

STOCK ON HAND

Where an insurance policy required the assured to take a complete itemized inventory of "stock on hand" at least once in each calendar year, the "stock on hand" means the stock of goods on hand, and not the fixtures in the store, or the building itself. Continental Ins. Co. v. Cummings, 81 S. W. 705, 707, 98 Tex. 115.

STOCK SIGNAL

"Stock signals" are several short blasts or sounds of a locomotive whistle. Anson v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co., 94 S. W. 94, 95, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 437.

STOCK TICKER

See Gambling Device.

STOCK TRANSFER STAMPS

As property, see Property.

STOCKBROKER

As mercantile pursuit, see Mercantile.

In many states in transactions involving the sale of stock on margins, the broker is held to be the agent of the customer, but in California the relation between a broker and customer is that of vendor and vendee. Under a constitutional provision that contracts for the sale of shares of corporation stock on margins to be delivered in future shall be void, and any money paid thereon may be recovered where the stock is purchased on margin, and the customer afterwards pays the broker the amount of the broker's advances and receives the certificates, the transaction becomes valid, and no action will lie against the broker to recover back the money paid on the stock so delivered. Conrad v. Lepper, 81 Pac. 307, 311, 13 Wyo. 473.

STOCKHOLDER

See Bona Fide Stockholder; Majority of Stockholders; Withdrawing Stockholders.

See, also, Shareholder.

"Stockholders" are those who appear on the books of a bank as owners of shares and who are entitled to manage its affairs. Knickerbocker Trust Co. v. Myers, 133 Fed. 764, 770 (citing Magruder v. Colston, 44 Md. 349, 22 Am. Rep. 47).

Civ. Code, § 322, declaring one to be a "stockholder" whose name appears on the books of the corporation as such, applies only to one who knowingly or voluntarily permits his name to so appear. Welch v. Gillelen, 82 Pac. 248, 249, 147 Cal. 571.

The word "stockholders," under the terms of the charter of a mutual insurance company, includes every person who had contributed to the fund on hand, whether holding any unexpired insurance or not. Huber

v. Martin, 105 N. W. 1031, 1038, 127 Wis. 412, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 653, 115 Am. St. Rep. 1023, 7 Ann. Cas. 400.

An executor of a deceased stockholder is a "stockholder," within Stock Corporation Law (Laws 1892, p. 1824, c. 688), and entitled to inspect the stock book and to information as to the affairs of the corporation. In re Hastings, 106 N. Y. Supp. 938, 939, 56 Misc. Rep. 45.

The term "stockholder" is not synonymous with that of subscriber. Each has a distinct, definite, technical meaning. The latter is employed to denote one who becomes bound by a subscription to the capital stock of a corporation. Reid v. De Jarnette, 51 S. E. 770, 771, 123 Ga. 787.

Usually the holders of preference shares are "stockholders" of a company, subject to the rights and liabilities attaching to that relation, and the principal privilege they enjoy is priority of claim to dividends as against the holders of common shares, which priority is the prominent characteristic of preferred stock. Kidd v. Puritana Cereal Food Co., 122 S. W. 784, 787, 145 Mo. App. 502 (citing Kent v. Quicksilver Min. Co., 78 N. Y. 159).

A "stockholder" in a corporation is a creditor of the corporation to the extent of his contribution to the capital stock, and in that sense the capital stock is a liability of the corporation. Weaver Power Co. v. Elk Mountain Mill Co., 69 S. E. 747, 748, 154 N. C. 76.

The holder of a contract purporting to be for the purchase and sale of a diamond issued by what is commonly called a "tontine company" is not a "stockholder" in such company, and cannot secure the appointment of a receiver for such company because of the mismanagement of its affairs by its officers. Mann v. German-American Inv. Co., 97 N. W. 600, 603, 70 Neb. 454.

As used in Laws 1903, p. 141, c. 93, imposing a penalty on an officer of a corporation who makes exaggerated reports "to the stockholders or to other persons dealing with such corporation," the word "stockholders" does not designate that entire class, but only those dealing with corporations. State v. Merchant, 92 Pac. 890, 892, 48 Wash. 69.

The holder of a "voting trust" certificate is the beneficial owner of the stock represented by it in the hands of the "voting trustees." Being the beneficial owner, he is a "stockholder," within the meaning of section 65 of the corporation act (Laws 1896, p. 298, c. 185), and is entitled to institute the proceedings provided by that section for the winding up of an insolvent corporation. United States Independent Tel. Co. v. O'Grady, 71 Atl. 1040, 1041, 75 N. J. Eq. 301.

Under Rev. St. Ohio 1908, § 3259, which provides that the term "stockholder" shall apply not only to persons who appear by the books of the corporation to be such, but also to an equitable owner of stock, although on the books it appears in the name of another, an action to enforce an assessment made under section 3260d may be maintained against both the equitable owner of stock of an insolvent corporation and the legal owner, in whose name the stock stands on the books. Irvine v. Blackburn, 198 Fed. 360, 361.

One who permitted his name to appear as a stockholder in a bank, and who qualified as a director on the faith of his interest in the bank to the extent of 10 shares, and who subsequently severed his connection with the bank by doing everything in his power to render his surrender of the shares of stock effectual as between himself and the president thereof, is not a "stockholder," as between himself and the president, nor as between himself and the bank. Willoughby v. Kelly, 91 Pac. 874, 876, 190 Okl. 123.

Persons were "stockholders," and not "creditors" of a corporation, where they received stock under a resolution in the handwriting of one of them, directing its issuance to them for advances, and retained it over four months, when they attached the certificates to their respective claims filed with the corporation's receiver; the papers in a suit by one of such persons in which the receiver was appointed reciting that they were "stockholders," and not disclosing the amount of such advances as debts of the corporation, though a schedule of the corporation's debts was set out. Iserman v. International Stoker Co., 86 Atl. 605, 606, 72 N. J. Eq. 708.

Where complainant transferred all his stock in defendant company to another corporation in exchange for the stock of the latter, and received back from it a single share, which he indorsed in blank and returned, such stock being transferred to him for the sole purpose of enabling him to qualify as a director in defendant company, he was not a "stockholder" thereof, within P. L. 1896, p. 296, c. 185, § 65, authorizing a "stockholder" of an insolvent company to sue to have the corporation placed under disabilities by injunction in respect to the exercise of its franchise and for the appointment of a receiver. Hoopes v. Basic Co., 61 Atl. 979, 980, 69 N. J. Eq. 679.

Under the statute providing that directors of a corporation shall be stockholders unless otherwise specified in the certificate of incorporation or by-laws, and under a certificate of incorporation providing that no person shall be a trustee of the corporation who is not a holder or owner of at least one share of the corporation's capital stock, the word "stockholder" was not used in the sense of stockowner, and hence one who was a stockholder of record, though not a beneficial owner, was qualified to hold the office of trustee.

Civ. Code 1895, § 408 (Rev. Codes, § 3822), defined "stockholders" as the owners of shares in a corporation which has a capital stock. Rev. Codes, § 3887, provides that any corporation whose capital stock is not assessable may, with the written consent of three-fourths of its "stockholders" spread upon its records, make its stock assessable. A corporation whose capital stock was nonassessable, upon a vote of 96 out of 301 individual stockholders who owned more than three-fourths of all the capital stock, recorded that its stock had been changed from nonassessable to assessable stock. Held, that "stockholders," as used in the provision making stock assessable, referred to the owner of the stock and not to the shares themselves, and that the vote of the 96 stockholders, being less than three-fourths, was without effect. Smith v. Iron Mountain Tunnel Co., 125 Pac. 649, 651, 46 Mont. 13.

Civ. Code, § 322, in relation to the liabilities of stockholders, provides that each stockholder is individually liable for such proportion of the corporate liabilities as his stock bears to the whole of the stock, and that the term "stockholder" applies to every equitable owner of stock, although the same appear on the books of the company in the name of another. Held that, where shares of stock appeared on the corporate books in the name of one as trustee for another, the former, as between himself and the corporation, was a "stockholder," and liable to the corporation for the amount of an assessment on an unpaid subscription; section 322 being applicable only to actions against stockholders by creditors of the corporation. Union Sav. Bank of San Jose v. Willard, 88 Pac. 1098, 1099, 4 Cal. App. 690.

A person who holds shares of stock in pledge, although the shares are assigned in blank by the registered owner, does not become a "stockholder" until the shares are transferred to him on the books of the corporation; and a mere pledgee, who has not become a registered stockholder, is not entitled to participate in, or to be notified of, the proceedings to effect a consolidation of two or more companies. Cleveland City Ry. Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 67 N. E. 1075, 1079, 68 Ohio St. 582.

Under Gen. Corp. Law, § 20, requiring the record holder of stock pledged to him to issue a proxy to the pledgor to vote, and under Stock Corporation Law, § 54, making the pledgor of stock liable as stockholder, such a pledgor is a "stockholder," within Stock Corporation Law, § 29, providing a penalty for a corporation's refusal to permit a stockholder to inspect its stockbook. Booth v. Consolidated Fruit Jar Co., 114 N. Y. Supp. 1000, 1001, 62 Misc. Rep. 252.

Under Civ. Code, § 322, defining the term "stockholder" as applying not only to such persons as appear by the books of the corporation to be such, but also to every equitable owner of stock, etc., a pledgee of corporate stock, who allows himself to appear on the books of the corporation as the owner of the stock, is a "stockholder," within the section, and within Const. art. 12, § 3, making stockholders individually liable for corporate debts; but a pledgee of stock, who directs the secretary of the corporation to issue to him a new certificate in his name as pledgee, is not a stockholder because the secretary, without the knowledge of the pledgee, entered his name on the corporate books as a stockholder and issued stock in his name as such. Shattuck & Desmond Warehouse Co. v. Gillelan, 99 Pac. 348, 350, 154 Cal. 778.

An agreement showing an intention to become a stockholder in a corporation is sufficient, though there is no formal agreement; and where a number of persons already stockholders agree among themselves in writing to take up the unissued stock, pursuant to a proposal of the board of directors, to issue the stock to them on certain terms, the delivery of the agreement to the secretary constituted an acceptance of the proposal, so as to make such persons "stockholders" as to the unissued stock. Const. art. 12, § 3, and Civ. Code, § 322, make each stockholder of a corporation individually liable for such proportion of its debts incurred while he was a stockholder as the shares owned by him bear to the whole of the subscribed shares of the corporation, and the Code section also provides that the term "stockholder" as used therein applies, not only to such as appear by the corporate books to be such, but to every equitable owner of stock though it is on the books in another's name. Const. art. 12, § 14, requires books to be kept by the corporation wherein shall be recorded the amount of the capital stock subscribed, the names of the owners, and the amount of stock owned by each. Held, that the stockholders were not bound to see that not only their own names, but also the names of all other stockholders, were entered on the books as such, and that it would not be presumed that the corporation had entered the names of all stockholders on its books, so as to prevent a stockholder from showing other subscriptions than those shown by the corporate books, when sued on his statutory liability under section 322, so as to reduce the amount of such liability; the terms "owner" and "stockholder" in the statute including the real owner, though his name does not appear on the corporate books as owner. The statutory liability of one not the real owner of stock, but who appears on the corporate books as an owner, is based upon his estoppel to deny ownership. The issuance of certificates of stock is not necessary to make one a "stockholder" in a corporation. Hughes Manufacturing & Lumber Co. v. Wilcox, 108 Pac. 871, 872, 13 Cal. App. 22.

A "class suit" is one in which one or more members of a numerous class, having a common interest, sue in behalf of themselves and all other members of that class. Such suits are sometimes called "creditors' suits" and sometimes "stockholders' suits." Seminole Securities Co. v. Southern Life Ins. Co., 182 Fed. 85, 96.

STOCKJOBBER

An individual who makes it his continuous occupation or life business to buy and sell securities is called a "stockjobber" or "sharejobber." Vanderbilt University v. Cheney, 94 S. W. 90, 93, 116 Tenn. 259.

A city ordinance, prohibiting the erection of any building within fire limits, except buildings constructed of "brick" or "stone," does not prohibit the construction of a concrete building, since "concrete" is either a species of brick, or is an artificial stone; and the ordinance is not in conflict with Rev. St. 1895, art. 523, authorizing cities to establish fire limits, and to prohibit the construction of buildings therein, except buildings of fireproof materials. Ex parte Morris, 120 S. W. 1007, 1008, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 533.

STOOD BY, AIDED, ABETTED, OR ASSISTED

An instruction in the language of Kirby's Dig. §§ 1560, 1561, 1563, that a defendant who "stood by, aided, abetted, or assisted" another in the commission of a felony may be convicted, is not erroneous as authorizing a conviction if he merely stood by, but did not aid or abet or assist. Burnett v. State, 96 S. W. 1007, 80 Ark. 225.

STOOD MUTE

Where the record disclosed that, accused having been arraigned at the bar in open court, and the information having been read to him, he stood mute, whereupon a plea of not guilty was entered by order of the court, the recital that "he stood mute" imported that he was requested to plead and declined to do so. People v. Fisher, 108 N. W. 280, 281, 144 Mich. 570.

STOP

See Emergency Stop; Payment Stopped; Service Stop.

STOP ORDER

A "stop order" is a direction by a purchaser to his broker to sell the stock purchased at the best available price if it should touch the price named in the order, while it is being held by the broker; but it does not impose an obligation on the broker to hold it until it reaches that price, as it is a measure of protection which the purchaser provides for himself against loss beyond a certain point in a fluctuating market. Richter v. Poe, 71 Atl. 420, 424, 109 Md. 20, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 174.

STOP STILL

Where a street car company was entitled to an instruction that it was not guilty of negligence unless a car had "stopped" when a passenger attempted to alight, the use of the term "stopped still" was no abuse of the right, as there is really no difference in the meaning of the expressions except that perhaps the latter is the more emphatic. Peck v. St. Louis Transit Co., 77 S. W. 736, 737, 178 Mo. 617.

STOP TO FILL

A written contract for the transportation of horses, not a car load, which stipulates for their transportation from a designated point to another point for delivery to a connecting carrier for delivery to the point of destination, with the privilege of "stop" at a city "to fill," is unambiguous, and means that the horses will be held at the city to enable the shipper to fill the car with other horses, and it does not permit the shipper to unload and feed for two weeks, to make the horses more suitable for market, and parol evidence to explain it is inadmissible. Banks v. Chicago

STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU

The "right of stoppage in transitu" exists where the goods have not been paid for and the buyer is insolvent and may be exercised before the expiration of the term of credit or the maturity of the buyer's note, at any time before the goods come to the possession of the buyer. F. H. Smith Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 122 S. W. 342, 344, 145 Mo. App. 394.

The right of "stoppage in transitu" is an extension of the right to a lien for the price anterior to actual delivery, which lien the seller can enforce by seizing the goods in the possession of a carrier at any time prior to actual delivery into the possession of the buyer. Willis v. Glenwood Cotton Mills, 200 Fed. 301, 305.

All authorities agree that the right of "stoppage in transitu" is nothing but an extension of the vendor's lien on the goods for the payment of the purchase money. The transit is held to continue from the time the vendor parts with the possession until the purchaser acquires it; that is to say, from the time the vendor has so far made delivery that his right of retaining the goods and his right of lien are gone to the time when the goods have reached the actual possession of the buyer. The stoppage in transitu is called into existence for the vendor's benefit after the buyer has acquired title and right of possession and even constructive possession, but not yet actual possession, and the insolvency of the purchaser is a sufficient justification for exercising the seller's right, though the sale be unconditional and time be given to the purchaser. This right of stoppage is not precluded until the goods have actually reached the buyer or under circumstances equivalent thereto. The right is based on the equitable rule that one man's property shall not be taken to pay another man's debt. It arises from the discovery by the vendor during the transitus of the insolvency of the vendee, and the ordinary effect of its exercise is to vest in each party to the contract of sale the rights he had before the possession of the goods sold was delivered to the carrier. Letts-Spencer Grocery Co. v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 122 S. W. 10, 11, 138 Mo. App. 352 (citing Schwabacher v. Kane, 13 Mo. App. 126; Estey v. Truxel, 25 Mo. App. 238; *Kearney Milling & Elevator Co. v. Union Pac. Ry. ### STORAGE BATTERY

A "primary battery" is one in which chemical action takes place directly to produce electromotive force, while in a "secondary battery" the electromotive force is produced by a chemical action set up after a current of electricity has been passed through the cell for some time. Secondary batteries are commonly called "storage batteries." In re Charles Town Light & Power Co., 183 Fed. 160, 165.

STORAGE TRACK

The term "storage tracks" is applied to side tracks of a railroad used for the storing of cars by incoming trains to be incorporated in subsequent outgoing trains. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. of Texas v. Pope, 86 S. W. 5, 98 Tex. 535.

While a storehouse may under some circumstances come within the meaning of the word "store" as used in Rev. St. 1883, c. 6, § 14, providing that all personal property employed in trade, etc., shall be taxed in the town where so employed on the 1st day of April of each year, provided that the owner so employing it occupies any store, shop, mill, etc., for the purpose of such employment, the word "storehouse" does not come within the meaning of the word "store," where a finished manufactured product is placed in a storehouse for the purpose of storage, and not for the purpose of trade. Inhabitants of New Limerick v. Watson, 57 Atl. 79, 81, 98 Me. 379.

STORE AND KEEP IN POSSESSION

The words "store and keep in possession," as used in 26 St. at Large, p. 60, prohibiting the unlawful accepting, receiving, storing, and keeping in possession alcoholic liquors contrary to law, involve the idea of continuity or habit, and have no different construction or meaning in counties where the sale of liquor is prohibited from that which they have in counties where liquors are lawfully sold through dispensaries. State v. Green, 71 S. E. 847, 848, 89 S. C. 132.

STORED—STORING

An automobile which is merely kept at a garage to be taken out and used at the pleasure of the owner is not "stored," so as to give a lien for storage as to a warehouseman. Smith v. O'Brien, 94 N. Y. Supp. 673, 675, 46 Misc. Rep. 325.

Where a steamship company had a right to use a wharf belonging to a certain warehouse, and also to use the warehouse, and placed the cargo of a vessel in the warehouse from which it was stolen, the cargo was not "stored," in a technical sense, so as to render the warehousemen liable as such; it not having been delivered to them and a warehouse receipt taken. Evans v. New York & P. S. S. Co., 163 Fed. 405, 406.

STORED IN BULK

"Stored in bulk" means "having the cargo loose in the hold or not inclosed in boxes, bales, or casks." Such words, as used in Ky. St. § 4224, imposing a tax on oil depots wherein oils are stored in bulk, are to be construed as referring to oil stored in large oil tanks holding hundreds or thousands of barrels of oil, which are in common use, and not to oil stored in barrels in warehouses or sheds. Standard Oil Co. v. Commonwealth, 82 S. W. 1020, 1022, 119 Ky. 75 (citing Webst. Dict. Unab.).

STOREHOUSE

In a prosecution for burglary from a building adjacent to a grocery store in which the surplus stock was deposited, the building was properly designated in the indictment as a "storehouse." State v. Turnbaugh, 85 N. E. 1060, 1061, 79 Ohio St. 63.

The word "storehouse" is defined to be a house in which things are stored; a building for the storing of grains, foodstuffs, or goods of any kind; a magazine; a repository; a warehouse. A vat 6 or 8 feet deep and 6 feet in diameter, constructed of heavy oak timbers which are sunk in the ground, having a hinged cover secured in place by a lock, and which is used for storing hides awaiting sale, is a "storehouse," within Criminal Code, § 48, relating to burglary. Steele v. State, 113 N. W. 798, 80 Neb. 9, 127 Am. St. Rep. 741.

Elevator

A "storehouse" "is a building for keeping goods of any kind, especially provisions; a magazine; * * * a warehouse." The word "storehouse," as used in Comp. St. 1899, c. 77, art. 1, § 39, relating to railway taxation, and providing that all machine and repair shops, general office buildings, storehouses, and also all real and personal property outside of the right of way and depot grounds, shall be listed for purposes of taxation by the officers of the companies with the precinct assessors where the property may be situated, includes an elevator. *Adams County v. #### Storeroom

See Storeroom.

STOREROOM

As dwelling house, see Dwelling House.

As private residence, see Private Residence.

The "storeroom" contemplated by a policy of burglary insurance, provided that, if the assured is the occupant of an apartment, the insurance covers goods in a locked storeroom provided for the exclusive use of the assured, by the landlord in the same house, etc., is a room in an apartment or flat house, set apart and having conveniences, such as shelves, hooks, etc., for storage purposes, and is not, for instance, a bedroom used by the tenant in part for storing his goods; nor is it a separate laundry under lock and key in the basement of a flat house, set aside for the use of the assured, and used by him for laundry purposes, cooking, storing of vegetables, and wherein he stored trunks packed with winter clothing. If the policy included a bedroom or laundry room in which goods are stored, then the use of any room in an apartment or flat by the tenant to store his and his family's unused apparel, although the room is used for other purposes, if it had a lock door with a key, comes within the definition of storeroom, as used in the policy. Michaels v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 105 S. W. 783, 784, 128 Mo. App. 18.

In a burglary trial, where the information alleged the breaking into a storehouse belonging to a mining corporation, that some of the witnesses stated that the ore stolen was stored in a storeroom, instead of a storehouse, or in the storeroom of the shafthouse, instead of the storeroom of the storehouse, was immaterial, and there was no variance, the evidence as a whole showing that the buildings were similar to those on other mining properties, and that the building or that portion broken into was used to store machinery, supplies, and ore, thus making it a storehouse; the word "storehouse" being defined by Webster as a building for keeping goods of any kind, a repository, a warehouse, and a "storeroom" as a room in a storehouse or repository; a room in which articles are stored. Tollifson v. People, 112 Pac. 794, 797, 49 Colo. 219.

real estate in the district in proportion as the area of each piece of real estate in the district is to the area of all the real estate in the district, exclusive of highways, provides a valid method of assessment as each lot in the district is benefited by being relieved from the dangers and damages which may be occasioned from storm waters. City of Denver v. Bye, 85 N. E. 36, 37, 42 Ind. App. 592.

STORY TOLD

An instruction directed that, in determining the weight of the testimony, the jury should consider any interest of the witnesses in the result of the case; their conduct and demeanor while testifying; their apparent fairness or bias; their opportunities for seeing or knowing the things about which they testify; the reasonableness of the "story told" by them, and all the evidence and circumstances proved tending to corroborate or contradict them, "if any such appears." Held, that such instruction was not erroneous in the use of the words "story told" and "appears"; the words "story told" being used in the sense of the testimony given on the trial; and the word "appears" to mean the fairness or bias of the witness as disclosed by his conduct on the stand; his manner of testifying, etc. Nicholson v. State, 106 Pac. 929, 931, 18 Wyo. 298.

STOVE

STOVEPIPE

The word "stovepipe," as used in a city ordinance regulating the passage of stovepipe through any wall, partition, flooring, or ceiling, should be construed to refer to a pipe made of either sheet iron or heavy tin usually used to connect the stove with the chimney, or flue, of brick, fire clay, or terra cotta, and not to include the flue itself. S. R. Fowle & Son v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 61 S. E. 262, 264, 147 N. C. 491.

4 WDS. & P. 2D SER.—45

STOWAWAY

A "stowaway," within rule 23 of the Commissioner General of Immigration relating to the disposition of alien stowaways, is one who steals his passage. United States ex rel. v. Williams, 193 Fed. 228, 230.

STOWMAN

A "stowman" is one engaged in loading and unloading freight cars, whose duty is to stay in the car and unload freight from trucks brought to him by a truckman, and to store it safely and compactly for transportation. Brisco v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 109 S. W. 93, 95, 130 Mo. App. 513.

STRAIGHT

Election Law, § 368, rule 9, providing that any "straight" line, crossing another straight line at any angle within a party circle or within the voting spaces, shall be deemed a valid voting mark, should be liberally construed, so that a tremulous line drawn by an infirm elector, or an irregular or curved line drawn by an elector with poor eyesight or with muscles untrained to the use of a pencil, or any single line but once crossing another single line in such a way as to substantially comply with the statute, though the line was retraced, and the pencil has not been kept exactly on the line at parts removed at the point where the lines cross, should not be held void. Fallon v. Dwyer, 90 N. E. 942, 943, 197 N. Y. 336.

STRAIGHT TIME

Where the rate of paying for services is to be for "straight time," all the time that elapses, without deduction for time lost by wet weather or other causes not the willful act of the person performing the services, is meant. Maurice v. Hunt, 97 S. W. 664, 665, 80 Ark. 476.

STRAND

See Three Strands or Cords.

A single thread is a "strand." A string is a "strand," and one of a number of flexible things, as grasses, strips of bark, or hair when used to be twisted or woven together, is called a "strand." Haskell Golf Ball Co. v. Perfect Golf Ball Co., 143 Fed. 128, 130.

STRANGER

The word "strangers," when used following other designations of persons, is generally intended to exhaust the whole category of persons within the range of the subject under discussion, not included in the terms which preceded it, and has the same meaning as if it read "all persons." The word "stranger," as used in Act No. 109 of 1906, entitled "An act to levy taxes on all inheritances, and imposing a tax on inheritances falling to ascendants, descendants, collateral relations, and strangers," is intended to exhaust the whole category of persons who might be called to the inheritance, and applies to all who have not in fact or by law the status of legitimate ascendants, descendants, or collateral relations. Succession of Baker, 55 South. 714, 717, 129 La. 74, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1181.

As one not liable for the debt

"The terms 'stranger' and 'volunteer,' as used with reference to the subject of subrogation, mean one who in no event resulting from the existing state of affairs can become liable for the debt, and whose property is not charged for the payment thereof, and cannot be sold therefor." Hoffman v. Habighorst, 91 Pac. 20, 21, 49 Or. 379.

As one not a party

In a complaint against the collector of internal revenue, to recover the amount of taxes exacted by him from plaintiffs, who are shipping agents, as due under the revenue act on copies of charter parties in their possession, and alleged by them to have been obtained for the information of themselves and their customers, an allegation that plaintiffs, such firm, were "strangers to said charter parties and the matter to which the same related," is not sufficient to show that plaintiffs were not the agents or representatives of one or the other of the parties to such instruments, and properly chargeable with the tax; the word "strangers" meaning that plaintiffs were not parties to the charter parties. Simpson v. Treat, 126 Fed. 1003, 1006.

STRANGER IN BLOOD

Act Cong. June 13, 1898, c. 448, 30 Stat. 448, as amended imposing a succession tax, classified legatees and distributees with reference to their degree of blood relationship to the deceased, and regulated the taxes accordingly. In the first class were placed the lineal issue or lineal ancestor, brother or sister of the decedent; in the second the descendants of a brother or sister; in the third the brother or sister of the father or mother or a descendant; in the fourth class, the brother or sister of the grandfather or grandmother or a descendant; and in the fifth all beneficiaries found to be in any other degree of collateral consanguinity, or who may be a stranger in blood to the person dying seised of the property. Held, that an adopted child, though under the laws of the state entitled to all the rights of heirship of a child born in lawful wedlock, was not a "lineal issue" within the first class, but was a "stranger in blood" within the fifth class. Kerr v. Goldsborough, 150 Fed. 289, 291, 80 C. C. A. 177.

STRAP

STRATUM

As a geological term "bed" is synonymous with "vein" or "stratum," but the term "coal bed" may be used to mean "quarry." Hoysradt v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 151 Fed. 321-331.

STRAW

STRAW BOSS

A "straw boss" is a boss without any authority. Momence Stone Co. v. Groves, 64 N. E. 335, 336, 197 Ill. 88.

"A 'straw boss' is a term to indicate that, in the absence of the real boss, the former was clothed with his authority * * *." St. Louis & N. A. R. Co. v. Midkiff, 87 S. W. 446, 447, 75 Ark. 263.

In an action against a railroad for negligently causing the death of plaintiff's decedent, evidence that the second foreman or "straw boss" of defendant's construction crew was charged with the duties of indicating to the train crew by signaling when the construction crew was ready for the train to move and where the dirt thereon was to be unloaded, it not appearing that he had any other authority over the train crew, did not show that such foreman was engaged in the operation and management of the train, with absolute control and management of the movements thereof, so as to render defendant liable for his negligent failure to either discover deceased or warn him of his danger. Forge v. Houston & T. C. R. Co., 90 S. W. 1118, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 81.

STRAW BRAID

A small amount of cotton thread in "straw braids" will not remove such articles from the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 409, 30 Stat. 189, for braids composed "wholly" of straw, where the thread is only used for temporarily tying the ends of the braids to prevent them from unraveling. Samuel Schiff & Co. v. United States, 140 Fed. 63.

STRAW BRAIDS OR PLAITS

Certain merchandise, consisting of wide braids or plaits of straw, fastened together so as to form rectangular strips measuring about 18 by 36 inches, held not dutiable as hats partly manufactured, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11 § 1, Schedule N, par. 409, 30 Stat. 189, but as "straw braids or plaits," "suitable for making or ornamenting hats," etc., under the same paragraph. Samuel Schiff & Co. v. United States, 140 Fed. 63, 64.

STRAW MAN

A "straw man," in the parlance of real estate dealers, is a mere conduit or medium for convenience in holding and passing title. Van Raalte v. Epstein, 99 S. W. 1077, 1079, 202 Mo. 173.

By the term "man of straw" is meant one of no substance, one in name only, an irresponsible person having no property to respond in damages, who loans himself out to others to sign contracts as a purchaser, knowing he is acting a lie. Houtz v. Hellman, 128 S. W. 1001, 1003, 228 Mo. 655.

STREAM

See Floatable Stream; Running Stream; Standard Development of Stream; Surface Stream; Thread of a Stream; Underground Stream.

Improvement of stream, see Improvement.

Navigable stream, see Navigable.

The primary meaning of "stream" is "a course of running water, a river, rivulet, or brook" (quoting and adopting Cent. Dict.). The word "stream," within a statute relating to the formation of land upon the banks of a river or stream, is used in the same sense as "river," and as a more comprehensive term. Western Pac. R. Co. v. Southern Pac. Co., 151 Fed. 376, 398, 80 C. C. A. 606.

Percolating water, oozing through the soil beneath the surface in an undefined and unknown channel, is not within the provisions of Rev. St. Ariz. 1887, par. 3190, § 1, par. 3201, § 3, for the appropriation of water from rivers, creeks, or "streams" of running water. Howard v. Perrin, 26 Sup. Ct. 195, 197, 200 U. S. 71, 50 L. Ed. 374.

Water oozing from a spring through a soft and spongy ground, and flowing into a pond, does not constitute a "stream," within the meaning of a lease demising the pond of water and the water of the stream leading thereto. Dickey v. Maddux, 93 Pac. 1090, 1091, 48 Wash. 411 (citing Farnham, Waters and Water Courses, p. 1561, § 458).

The legal distinction between a "stream of water" and a "water course," if any, is shadowy and unsubstantial; if the drain in controversy was not a water course, it was surely not a stream of water. Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 5153, authorizing railroads to construct roads across any stream of water, water course, etc., a drainage ditch fed by no spring or water course, and used and constructed solely for expediting surface drainage, is not a water course, which the railroad is obliged to preserve and restore to its former state. New Jersey, I. & I. R. Co. v. Tutt, 80 N. E. 420, 422, 168 Ind. 205.

As a boundary

A stream along the middle of which runs the boundary between counties is within Revisal 1908, § 1318, subsec. 29, providing that the cost of constructing a bridge over "a stream which divides one county from another" shall be defrayed by the counties in proportion to the number of taxable polls of each. Penn. Bridge Co. v. Com'rs of Chatham County, 65 S. E. 895, 151 N. C. 215.

The word "stream," as used in Comp. St. 1901, c. 78, § 87, declaring that bridges over streams which divide counties, and bridges over streams on roads on county lines, shall be built at the equal expense of such counties, is used in a general sense, and includes rivers and smaller courses of water. In this statute the Legislature used the word in the sense of a course of running water, a river, rivulet, or brook. Dodge County v. Saunders County, 100 N. W. 934, 935, 70 Neb. 451. Under the statute providing for the maintenance and repair of bridges across "streams" that divide counties, it was held that the fact that a bridge across a river, where it divided two counties, was not one continual structure, but consisted of two separate portions separated by an island, one of which portions was entirely in one county, would not, under the circumstances, relieve the other county from the burden of contributing to the repair of the entire structure under the statute; the contention being that, the island being entirely within the limits of one county, the portion of the bridge in that county was not over a "stream" that divided counties, within the meaning of the statute. Dodge County v. Saunders County, 110 N. W. 756, 758, 77 Neb. 787.

Defined channel

"A 'stream' does not cease to be a water course and become mere surface water because at a certain point it spreads over a level meadow several rods in width, and flows for a distance without defined banks before flowing again in a definite channel." Blohowak v. Grochoski, 96 N. W. 551, 553, 119 Wis. 189 (quoting and adopting definition in Gould Wat. [3d Ed.] § 264).

A "stream of water" has a defined channel. It has banks and is very distinct from the percolation of subsurface water which oozes in veins or filters through the earth's strata. An "underground stream of water" differs from a surface stream only with respect to its location above or below the surface. When a lower proprietor complains of the use of water by an upper proprietor, which he claims to come to his premises by an underground stream, he must show that it is a stream of water flowing in a marked or well-defined channel, in contradistinction to subsurface percolating water. Stoner v. Patten, 63 S. E. 897, 898, 132 Ga. 178.

"A 'street' is a highway in a city or town used by the public for the purpose of travel, either by means of vehicles or on foot." Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. v. Atlanta, B. & A. R. Co., 54 S. E. 736, 746, 125 Ga. 529 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6684).

All highways in a municipality are "streets," as distinguished from a public county road. Wiggins v. Skeggs, 54 South. 756, 757, 171 Ala. 492.

A "street," when properly vacated, ceases to be a street, and the rights of the public therein are divested, and it becomes private property on which, the city having granted the right, a street railway company may operate its road without the consent of abutting owners and without liability to pay them damages therefor. Tomlin v. Cedar Rapids & I. C. R. & Light Co., 120 N. W. 93, 94, 141 Iowa, 599, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 530.

In the widest, and likewise the most correct, sense, a "street" is a means of intercommunication between the people of a city for traffic, and for the conduct of personal and social intercourse, and also for the convenient use of dwellings and business houses abutting thereon; its primary purpose is for passage, it is true, but that such passage need not be alone that of people, animals, or wheeled conveyances, or of things that run on the ground; that a message sent through the air on electric wires, over the street, takes the place of one sent by a man or boy walking, or on horseback, or conveyed by a vehicle, along the street; not only is the same service performed by the telephone, but in a manner far better and more quickly. Telephone poles and wires erected in the street do not constitute an additional burden on the fee of abutting owners, for which they are entitled to compensation. Frazier v. East Tennessee Tel. Co., 90 S. W. 620, 622, 115 Tenn. 416, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 323, 112 Am. St. Rep. 856, 5 Ann. Cas. 838.

"An examination of the authorities will show that the terms 'street,' 'avenue,' 'road,' 'public road,' 'county road,' etc., are used loosely and indiscriminately in legislation and judicial decisions relating to public highways, and little reliance can be placed on the particular term used to describe any given way. Undoubtedly the term 'street' or 'avenue' commonly apply to a public highway in a village, town, or city, and the term 'road' to suburban highways, but there may be roads in a city or town and streets or avenues in the country." Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 3803 (Pierce's Code, § 7854), provides that any "county road" or part thereof, which remains unopened for public use for a space of five years after the order is made or authority granted for opening the same, shall be vacated and the authority for building it barred by the lapse of time. Held that, as boards of county commissioners have executive jurisdiction over all public highways within their respective counties and without the limits of incorporated cities and towns, such section was applicable to streets dedicated through platted land outside the limits of any incorporated city or town. Murphy v. King County, 88 Pac. 1115, 1116, 45 Wash. 587.

The term "street," in its broadest sense, means not only a road or public way in a city, town, or village, but means the whole surface and so much of the depth as is or can be used for the ordinary purposes of a street. It comprises a depth which authorizes the urban authority to do what is done in every street, namely, to raise the street and lay down sewers. It includes, therefore, the surface and so much of the depth as may not unfairly be used as streets are used. City of Leadville v. Bohn Mining Co., 86 Pac. 1038, 1039, 37 Colo. 248, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 422, 11 Ann. Cas. 443 (citing Elliott, Roads & Streets [2d Ed.] § 16).

"Street" includes the surface and so much of the depth as may not unfairly be used as streets are used. An owner of land, who opened a street and acquiesced in the act of the Legislature establishing a town, owns the soil of the "street" subject to the public easement to use the street for municipal purposes, and he may enjoin the town from putting down a well in the street to strike the vein of mineral water supplying a well on his land, not for the purpose of obtaining water merely, but to supply the mineral water free to all; the attempt of the town being an attempt to take the owner's property for public use without compensation, and a judgment for damages affording inadequate relief. Hamby v. City of Dawson Springs, 104 S. W. 259, 260, 126 Ky. 451, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1164.

Where land within a city including a street had been used together for a race track for many years without reference to the street or the original subdivisions, or the platted lots, the entire property being also used year after year for circus purposes without reference to street or lots, and the street never having been used by the public for street purposes at any time, so that there was nothing to preclude defendant from asserting title to the strip originally platted as a street, it did not constitute a public "street," and was therefore subject to special assessments for improvements. Granite Bituminous

S. street was 50 feet wide. Abutting lots had been sold for the erection of buildings fronting on it. It was improved as a highway for the accommodation of those going to and from that part of the city. Held, that it was a "public street," within the statutes, and an improvement of it was not an internal improvement, the cost of which should be borne by the entire property in the square. Steinacker v. Gast (Ky.) 89 S. W. 481 (citing Elliott, Roads & S. § 23; 2 Cyc. p. 133).

Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 549c, makes it the duty of every railroad company to place and keep that portion of its roadbed and right of way over or across which any public street may run in proper condition for use of the traveling public, etc. Held, that a "public street" within such act is one laid out and established by the municipality or one in which the public, by some of the methods known to law, has acquired a public easement. City of Atlanta v. Texas & P. R. Co., 120 S. W. 923, 924, 56 Tex. Civ. App. 226.

Land condemned by a city for street purposes is by such act converted into a "public street," though not then opened to the public for use as a street. Brown v. Scruggs, 125 S. W. 537, 539, 141 Mo. App. 632 (citing Ruppenthal v. St. Louis, 88 S. W. 616, 190 Mo. 213).

Dedication and acceptance required

Merely platting a body of land into lots and "streets," without more, is insufficient to lay off and open such streets, since the survey serves only to define the location of the streets, and, the portions of land on such plat intended for public use become streets when they are put into condition for travel and the public is invited to use them. Until the street is so open for public travel, the land does not partake of the character of a highway. Robins v. McGehee, 56 S. E. 461, 463, 127 Ga. 431.

"While the mere dedication by the owner of a platted addition does not make public thoroughfares of the 'streets' shown on the plat, the acceptance by the city, either by the passage of an ordinance of acceptance or by the exercise of control over the streets, will make them public thoroughfares." Brown v. Scruggs, 125 S. W. 538, 539, 141 Mo. App. 632.

The word "street," as used in Code, §§ 917, 919, relating to the platting of land, and declaring that when a plat has been acknowledged and recorded the acknowledgment and recording shall be equivalent to a deed in fee simple of such portion of the premises platted as is set apart for streets and other public purposes, is used to designate the spaces left between the lots for public travel. The title thereto does not vest in the city or town prior to its acceptance, and until then it is not deemed a road or public thoroughfare. Chrisman v. Omaha & C. B. R. & Bridge Co., 100 N. W. 63, 65, 125 Iowa, 133.

Alley

An alley is not necessarily a "street," and the public have not necessarily a right to its use. Milliken v. Denny, 47 S. E. 132, 133, 135 N. C. 19.

An "alley" is a narrow "street," and a city which has accepted an alley is bound to keep it in reasonably safe condition for travel. Asbury v. Kansas City, 144 S. W. 127, 128, 161 Mo. App. 496.

The words "streets and alleys" are constantly used in collocation and in legislation; there being no difference between them, except an indefinite difference in width. J. Burton Co. v. City of Chicago, 86 N. E. 93, 95, 236 Ill. 383, 15 Ann. Cas. 965.

The word "street" has been defined as "a public way or road, whether paved or unpaved, in a village, town, or city, ordinarily including a sidewalk or sidewalks, and a roadway having a house or town lots on one or both sides; a main way in distinction from a lane or alley." Cent. Dict. A paved alley 16 feet wide, passing through the middle of a block, is not a "street," within Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7283d, prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors by virtue of a license in any room unless it is arranged either with window or glass door, or so that the whole of it may be in view of the street. State v. Harrison, 70 N. E. 877, 878, 162 Ind. 542.

Boulevard

A "boulevard" is a "street" in a city, within P. L. 1903, p. 659, § 27, making the consent of the common council or other governing body a condition precedent to the right of a railroad to cross city streets or highways at grade. Board of Chosen Freeholders of County of Hudson v. Central R. Co. of New Jersey, 59 Atl. 303, 307, 68 N. J. Eq. 500.

Bridge

A bridge along and over a street is a part of the "street." Village of Sandpoint v. Doyle, 95 Pac. 945, 947, 14 Idaho, 749, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 497.

A railroad company entering a city and crossing a street at grade, an ordinance was passed providing that the grade of the street be raised so as to enable the railroad company to construct its railroad tracks under the street, and the change of grade, made in pursuance of the ordinance, was accomplished by the construction of a bridge. By a previous ordinance of the city a street railway company was granted the right to lay double tracks upon this street on the condition that the owners thereof should keep the portion of the street covered by its tracks and two feet on either side thereof in repair. With respect to a second street of the city, another street railway company was by ordinance authorized to construct double tracks upon the same, on the same condition as to repair as that imposed in the first grant of authority. A bridge connecting portions of that street and forming the only means of passage from one portion to another had at that time been constructed by the city. Neither the charters of these two street railway companies nor the ordinances of the city made any reference to bridges as distinguished from streets, and under the respective grants of authority to use such streets the two street railway companies laid their tracks upon these two bridges. Held, that the two bridges were parts, respectively, of the two streets, within the meaning, of the word "streets" as used in the ordinances imposing on the owners of the street railways, as a condition of their right to use the streets, the duty to repair the same. Northern Cent. R. Co. v. United Rys. Co., 66 Atl. 444, 447, 105 Md. 345.

Country highway or road

In respect to the rights of the public in highways, held under valid dedications and acceptances, and the power of the Legislature over the same, there is no distinction in this state between the "streets" of incorporated cities and towns and country roads. Hardman v. Cabot, 55 S. E. 756, 758, 60 W. Va. 664, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 506, 9 Ann. Cas. 1030.

County boulevard

Railroad Law, § 26, provides that when any railroad shall cross any street or highway in any city it shall be either above or below grade, unless the common council or other governing body of the city shall grant permission to cross at grade, and section 9 declares that a railroad may construct a branch line of a certain character by following the provisions of the act, provided it shall obtain the consent of the municipal authorities thereto. Held, that the Hudson County Boulevard constructed by boulevard commissioners, as authorized by Gen. St. p. 2882, was "a street in a city" within the terms of the railroad law, and hence a railroad was entitled to cross the same on obtaining the consent of the city council, without the consent either of the boulevard commission or of the board of chosen freeholders, who are vested with control of the boulevard. Board of Chosen Freeholders of County of Hudson v. Central R. Co. of New Jersey, 59 Atl. 303, 308, 68 N. J. Eq. 500.

A space within a city street, set apart between the sidewalk and a roadway for a grass plot, is a part of the "street," for defects in which the city is liable. Townley v. City of Huntington, 70 S. E. 368, 68 W. Va. 574, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 118.

Private way

The word "street," as used in a city charter providing that the assessment districts for street improvements should be established by drawing a line midway between the street to be improved and the next parallel or converting street on each side thereof, means a public street, and does not include a private way, which had remained open and unobstructed for more than 10 years, during which time it had been used as a street by the public, when the title to it was vested in trustees for the exclusive use of certain property owners, and expressly reserved by an indorsement in a plat for the exclusive use of the property owners. Collier's Estate v. Western Paving & Supply Co., 79 S. W. 947, 954, 180 Mo. 362.

As used in Railroad Law, § 62, providing that the authorities of any village, town, or city within which a street, avenue, or highway crosses, or is crossed by a railroad at grade, may petition the public service commission for discontinuance of the grade crossing and the separation of travel, etc., the words "street, avenue, or highway" import ways of a public character only, and proceedings are authorized for the discontinuance of grade crossings only where a public street, avenue, or highway crosses a steam surface railroad at grade, and the railroad commissioners have no authority to charge a village with a part of the expense of eliminating crossings over streets or ways which were exclusively private. *In re New York Cent. & H. The word "streets," as used in the charter of the city of Red Wing (Spec. Laws 1864, c. 6, subd. 4, § 2, subd. 26), authorizing the council to abolish streets, does not apply to a public levee, though a levee has many of the characteristics of a public street. *Betcher v. aloosa, 121 N. W. 542, 544, 143 Iowa, 704, L. R. A. (N. S.) 853.

"Streets" and highways are public property. The streets, including the sidewalks, run from side to side and end to end to public. C. J. Sullivan Advertising Co. v. City of New York, 113 N. Y. Supp. 893, 61 Misc. Rep. 425.

A "street" is a road or public way in a town, or village. St. Louis v. S. W. R. v. Underwood, 86 S. W. 804, 805, 74 Ark. (quoting and adopting the definition in St. Roads & S.).

A "street" is a road or public way in a city, or village, and the purpose for which it is laid out and made use of determines its character. Nelson County v. City of Bardstown, 99 S. W. 940, 941, 124 Ky. 636 (quoting and adopting the definition in 2 h. Mun. Corp. § 1277).

A "street" is a highway, but a "highway" is not necessarily a street; a street being a highway in an incorporated town or city. Strange v. Board of Com'rs of Grant, 91 N. E. 242, 247, 173 Ind. 640.

A "street" is a public thoroughfare or way, established for the accommodation of the public generally, in passing from place to place and for such other incidental uses as are ordinarily made of public streets, such as laying drains, sewers, gas and water pipes, and the like. Slaughter v. Meridian Light & Co., 48 South. 6, 9, 95 Miss. 251, 25 L. R. A. (S.) 1265 (citing Theobald v. L. N. O. R. Co., 6 South. 230, 66 Miss. 279, 4 L. 735, 14 Am. St. Rep. 564).

Where a tract of land outside of a city is divided into lots and ways of ingress and egress are called "streets," in a suit for damages resulting from digging a cut across such way, it was held that to refuse a request defining a street as a public way in a city, town, or village, is to refuse the usual definition of a street, and in structuring that, if there was no street as defined, there could be no recovery. Wille & N. R. Co. v. West End Heights Co., 69 S. E. 564, 135 Ga. 419.

Rural highways may * * * be aptly and conveniently denominated "streets" and the public ways of a town or city properly and conveniently be called "streets." Pub. Laws 1903, p. 621, c. 375, directing the commissioners of Haywood county, under specified conditions, to sell the land of Waynesville township for improvement of roads of that township, does not by its repeal of Priv. Laws 1885, c. 127, § 1 (Waynesville Town Charter), or confer on the commissioners power to change or alter the streets of the town of Waynesville. Waynesville v. Satterthwait, 661, 664, 136 N. C. 226 (quoting Ellis v. Streets, § 7).

Const. art. 7, § 28, grants to the county the exclusive original jurisdiction in all matters relating to roads and the disbursement of moneys for county purposes, and in other cases necessary to the internal improvement and local concerns of the county; and Const. Amend. 5, adopted January 13, 1899, gives the county court power to levy a road tax of not exceeding three mills, if the majority of the qualified electors of the county shall have voted therefor at a general election preceding such levy, but makes no provision who shall receive or expend the amount collected, except that it shall be used in the respective counties only to make and repair public roads. Const. art. 12, § 3, empowers the Legislature to pass laws for the organization of towns and cities, and Kirby's Dig. § 5456, grants to municipal councils the power to lay out, improve, and repair streets within their corporate limits. Act approved May 30, 1911 (Sp. & Priv. Acts 1911, p. 1003), requires two-fifths of the road tax collected on property within the city of Texarkana to be used on roads and bridges outside of the city limits according to discretion of the county judge, and the remaining three-fifths to be used exclusively for streets and highways within the city limits, and that the collector of Miller county pay three-fifths of such fund to the city treasury, and section 2 of the act extends its provisions to the tax collected in such city for 1910. Held, in an action to compel the collector to pay into the city treasury three-fifths of the road tax collected for 1910 on the property within the city, that the streets of the city were "public roads of the county" of which the city was a component part, although "streets" did not include roads, and that, in view of the powers of towns and cities, the act apportioning the road tax between the city and the county was not in conflict with the grant of exclusive original jurisdiction to county courts in all matters relating to roads. Sanderson v. Texarkana, 146 S. W. 105, 107, 103 Ark. 529.

Sidewalk included

"The term 'street,' in its broad sense, includes both the roadway for vehicles and the sidewalk for pedestrians." Gallagher v. City of Jefferson, 101 N. W. 124, 126, 125 Iowa, 324.

A sidewalk is not included in the term "street" within the meaning of the statute of Pennsylvania relating to the paving and grading of streets. In re Shady Avenue, 34 Pa. Super. Ct. 327, 331.

The word "street," in an ordinance ordering a street to be improved at the cost of abutting property, means the entire width of the public way, and includes the sidewalk. Morton v. Sullivan (Ky.) 96 S. W. 807, 808.

Except in special instances where the context indicates otherwise, "a street" is included in the term "highway" and a sidewalk is as much a part of the highway as is the roadway for driving or the street itself, and the obligation to keep the street in repair includes the sidewalk. City of Chicago v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co., 146 Ill. App. 403, 432.

An electric light company, having the right to use "streets," can lay its conduits under sidewalks; they being parts of the "streets." Allegheny County Light Co. v. Booth, 66 Atl. 72, 74, 216 Pa. 564, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 404.

"A sidewalk is simply a part of the 'street' which the town authorities have set apart for the use of pedestrians. * * * The abutting proprietor has no more right in the sidewalk than in the roadway." Hester v. Durham Traction Co., 50 S. E. 711, 713, 138 N. C. 288, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 981 (citing and adopting City of Ottawa v. Spencer, 40 Ill. 211; City of Chicago v. O'Brien, 111 Ill. 532, 53 Am. Rep. 640).

"While the term 'street' in ordinary legal signification includes all parts of the way—the roadway, the gutters, and the sidewalk—yet the term 'sidewalk' has come to be generally used in this country for the purpose of designating a footway for passengers at the side of a street or road." Marion Trust Co. v. City of Indianapolis, 75 N. E. 834, 836, 37 Ind. App. 672.

"The term 'street' in ordinary legal signification, includes all parts of the way—the roadway, the gutters, and the sidewalks"—and therefore a sidewalk is a part of a street, and the statute delegating to villages the power to construct the sidewalks indicates that such sidewalks are to be constructed in a street and not upon abutting lots. Smith v. Hofeldt, 112 N. W. 605, 79 Neb. 276.

The word "street," as used in San Francisco City Charter, art. 6, c. 2, § 16, declaring that, where any portion of the roadway of any street or alley or any portion of any sidewalk shall be out of repair, the board of public works shall require the owners or occupants of adjoining property to repair said portion of said street, avenue, alley, court, or place, etc., is used in its full and broad significance to include the sidewalks which are always a part of it, so as to confer on the board jurisdiction to repair defective sidewalks or to award a contract for repairing thereof. Heath v. Manson, 82 Pac. 331, 332, 147 Cal. 694.

An instruction, in an action to compel removal of a telephone pole from the sidewalk in front of premises, that neither the Legislature nor the city council could authorize the substantial impairment of the beneficial enjoyment of the property outside that taken for the streets and highways, and that the supervision and control was limited to that portion used by the public generally, and known as the street or highway, was not objectionable as excluding the city from the sidewalks under the rule that a city's "street" is the highway from property line to property line. Merchants' Mut. Tel. Co. v. Hirschman, 87 N. E. 238, 244, 43 Ind. App. 283.

"As stated, a 'street,' in the legal acceptance, includes the portion provided for the passage of vehicles, and also the sidewalks provided for the use of pedestrians." The decision of municipal authorities as to location in the street of machinery operating safety gates at a railroad crossing will be interfered with by the courts only where the machinery is so located as to necessarily interfere with the use of a street as a public highway; and, where the machinery was so located as to leave 39 feet of unobstructed space in the highway, it did not interfere with the use thereof. Siebert v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 87 S. W. 995, 999, 188 Mo. 657, 70 L. R. A. 72 (citing Miller v. New York, 3 Sup. Ct. 228, 109 U. S. 385, 27 L. Ed. 971; Gates v. Kansas City Bridge & Terminal Ry. Co., 19 S. W. 957, 111 Mo. 28; Julia Bldg. Ass'n v. Bell Telephone Co., 88 Mo. 258, 57 Am. Rep. 398; Gay v. Mutual Union Tel. Co., 12 Mo. App. 486; Dubach v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 1 S. W. 86, 89 Mo. 483; Lockwood v. Wabash R. Co., 26 S. W. 698, 122 Mo. 86, 24 L. R. A. 516, 43 Am. St. Rep. 547; and distinguishing Schopp v. City of St. Louis, 22 S. W. 898, 117 Mo. 131, 20 L. R. A. 783).

That part of the charter of the city of Lewiston which provides that said city shall be liable to any one for any loss or injury to person or property growing out of any casualty or accident happening to any such person or property on account of "any 'street' or public ground therein" is broad enough to and does include the sidewalks on the streets. McLean v. Lewiston, 69 Pac. 478, 479, 8 Idaho, 472 (citing Giffen v. Lewiston, 55 Pac. 545, 6 Idaho, 231).

Where, in an action against a telephone company for injuries to a driver on a street by coming in contact with an unprotected guy wire, the evidence showed that the wire was on what would have been the sidewalk, had a sidewalk been constructed, and that the entire street from lot line to lot line was open for travel, an instruction based on the theory that there was evidence justifying a finding that the wire was on a public street was not erroneous, since the word "street," as commonly understood, means a highway used by the public for travel, either by means of vehicles or on foot, and embraces all the area between the lots on either side. Davidson v. Utah Independent Telephone Co., 97 Pac. 124, 125, 34 Utah, 249 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, pp. 6689, 6690).

Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 8962, is entitled "An act concerning actions against cities and towns on account of injuries from defective highways and bridges." Section 1 of such act provides that no action for damages for injuries from any defect in any street, alley, highway, or bridge shall be maintained unless written notice of the time, place, cause, and nature of the injury shall be given. Held, that while a "street" is a distinctive public highway, and a public highway is not necessarily a "street," the act is not violative of Const. art. 4, § 19, providing that the subject of every act shall be expressed in its title, in that the title refers merely to highways and bridges, while the body of the act includes streets and alleys, as the term "highways" is generic and includes streets, alleys, and other public ways, and the term "street" includes sidewalks, unless associated with language restricting its meaning. Gribben v. City of Franklin, 94 N. E. 757, 758, 175 Ind. 500.

Sanborn's St. Supp. 1906, § 1210e, provides the manner of dealing with special assessments for any of the purposes mentioned in section 1210d, or for setting aside any special assessment, certificate, bond, tax sale, or certificate based thereon, where found invalid because of a defective assessment of benefits and damages. Section 1210d provides for constructing any "sewer, or grading, graveling, planking, macadamizing, paving or repaving any street or alley, or part thereof, or the curbing of or sodding along any sidewalk, or the paving of any gutter in any city." Milwaukee City Charter, c. 7 (Laws 1874, c. 184) § 2, provides for the grading, planking, paving, etc., to the center of any street or alley, and the grading, planking, paving, sodding, and curbing of any sidewalk, and paving of any gutter. Held that, while the word "street," in its general sense, included sidewalks, section 1210d, in referring to "any street or alley, or part thereof," did not include sidewalks, so that section 1210e would not apply to sidewalk improvements in the city of Milwaukee. Abbot v. City of Milwaukee, 134 N. W. 137, 138, 148 Wis. 26.

Hendersonville Town Charter, § 9 (Laws 1901, p. 220, c. 97), provides that when the commissioners shall decide to pave the streets, or any of them, the question shall be submitted to and decided by a majority of those voting upon the proposition at an election held as for other municipal purposes. Section 6 provides that lot owners may be required to pave the sidewalks under certain circumstances and pay for it, and, if they fail to do so, after proper notice, the commissioners may have them paved and charge the amount to the respective owners. Held, that while the commissioners might pave the sidewalks of certain individual owners who have been duly notified, from the current revenue, such action amounting only to an item to be charged in the current expenses of the town, an undertaking embracing a general scheme for paving the sidewalks of the town; or an indefinite number of them, and for incurring a town indebtedness of $18,000 therefor, was beyond the scope of section 6, and was a paving of streets, within section 9, which must be submitted to the voters, especially as the term "streets" may include both sidewalks and driveways. Commissioners of Hendersonville v. C. A. Webb & Co., 61 S. E. 670, 671, 148 N. C. 120.

Determined by use

Where a place has been used for many years as a public highway with a well-defined footway or sidewalk divided from the driveway by a curb and a depression in the surface of the ground, the place was a "public street." Casey v. United States Exp. Co., 63 Atl. 365, 366, 214 Pa. 1.

A "street" in a city used by all the inhabitants thereof is called a "public street." Pittsburg, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Robson, 68 N. E. 468, 471, 204 Ill. 254.

A street in a town crossing a railroad dedicated to public use and used for 25 years by the general public, on which the railroad company has for years itself maintained a crossing for vehicles and foot passengers and directed a whistling post calling for warning signals and a warning board at the crossing having on it the words: "Look out for locomotive. Railroad crossing"—and sometimes worked for repair by town labor, is a public "street," within the meaning of Code 1899, c. 54, § 61, though no order of the town council can be produced showing acceptance by the town of such dedication or the establishment or recognition of the street by the council. Ray v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co., 50 S. E. 413, 414, 57 W. Va. 333.

STREET AND HOUSE NUMBER

Rem. & Bal. Code, § 6292, provides that persons signing a local option petition shall state their post office address, the name of the precinct in which they reside, and, in case the subscriber is a resident of a city, the street "and" house number, if any, of his residence, and that no signature shall be valid unless such requirements are complied with. Held, that the words "street and house number, if any," of his residence, did not exempt the signer from giving either in case he had no house number, even if he did reside on a street, but that the word "and" required that the section be construed as though it read "street number if any, and house number, if any." State ex rel. Czerny v. Superior Court of King County, 127 Pac. 207, 209, 70 Wash. 592.

STREET CAR

See Summer Street Car.

As car, see Car.

As public conveyance, see Public Conveyance.

"Street cars," accurately speaking, are cars which traverse the streets of a town or city and carry passengers who get off and on at various points along the line. They have been considered as vehicles of street travel. Piedmont Cotton Mills v. Georgia Ry. & Electric Co., 62 S. E. 52, 62, 131 Ga. 129.

Ordinances making it unlawful to operate or run any "street car" unprovided with a car fender of the most improved design and construction, and providing that no "electric car" shall be propelled or operated without having one conductor and one motorman thereon, require a fender, conductor, and motorman only on motor cars, and not on trailers. Von Diest v. San Antonio Traction Co., 77 S. W. 632, 633, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 577.

Rev. St. 1899, § 2864, provides that whenever any person shall die from the negligence of any officer, agent, or employé whilst running or managing any locomotive, "car," or train of cars, etc., or of any driver of any "public conveyance" whilst in charge of the same as driver, the master, or he who owns such railroad, locomotive, car, or other public conveyance at the time, shall forfeit for every person or passenger so dying the sum of $5,000. This was amended by the act of 1905, which specifically mentioned "street cars." Held that, irrespective of the act of 1905, said section applied to street railroads. The "public conveyance" mentioned in the statute may be composed of steam engines and cars. The cars may be propelled by horse power, by electricity, or by steam. The conveyance may be a coach, propelled by horse power, or it may be an automobile. The words of the statute, "whilst running, conducting, or managing any locomotive, 'car,' or train of cars," are to be construed as though the statute read, "whilst running, conducting, or managing any car," or "whilst running, conducting, or managing any train of cars." This construction of the statute makes it obvious that a "street car" is included in the term "public conveyance." Higgins v. St. Louis & S. R. Co., 95 S. W. 863, 865, 197 Mo. 300.

STREET CORNER

As public place, see Public Place.

STREET EASEMENTS

As property, see Property.

STREET IMPROVEMENT

See Permanent Street Improvement.

As public utility, see Public Utility.

The word "improvement" is a relative term, and its meaning must be ascertained from the context and the subject-matter of the instrument or writing in which it is used. As used in the phrase "for continuing the improvement of the boulevard," expressing the purpose of an appropriation, the word does not mean or apply to the opening of the street but to bettering its condition after it had been opened. In other words, the "improvement of the boulevard" consisted in grading, curbing, macadamizing, etc. Wolf

Chemical Co. v. City of Philadelphia, 66 Atl. 344, 347, 217 Pa. 215.

Under a statute providing that damages are recoverable only where improvements of a "street" have been made according to the initial grade, it has been held that property is so "improved" wherever it is so improved that it can be comfortably and conveniently used for the purpose to which it is devoted, while a street on which it abuts is maintained at that grade. Richardson v. Sioux City, 113 N. W. 928, 930, 136 Iowa, 436 (citing Conklin v. City of Keokuk, 35 N. W. 444, 73 Iowa, 343).

Code, § 792, provides that the cost of paving a street may be assessed to the abutting property, and Code Supp. 1907, § 792a, provides that the cost, so assessed, shall not exceed the special benefits conferred by the improvement. Section 817 declares that the cost of street improvements at intersections may be assessed against the property abutting or fronting on that portion of the street so improved in proportion to the linear feet fronting or abutting on such improvement. Held, that the word "improvement," as so used, includes the entire work under construction on a particular street, and is not limited to the work done directly in front of the particular parcel of ground, so that the cost of paving street intersections was properly treated as a part of the whole improvement and taxed to the entire property abutting on the part of the street improved. Perry v. City of Albia, 136 N. W. 681, 155 Iowa, 550.

Bridge

Under an amendment to the Constitution ratified by Act Feb. 20, 1905 (24 St. at Large, p. 935), providing that a city might increase its bonded indebtedness for the improvement of "streets," the construction of a bridge in place of a previous bridge, which spanned a river, dividing a city street, is an "improvement" of the street, and bonded indebtedness may be incurred to pay for such improvement. Bruce v. City Council of Greenville, 71 S. E. 817, 89 S. C. 241.

Sprinkling

Street sprinkling is not an "improvement" conferring special benefits on abutting property in the sense of contributing to its value, and a special tax therefor cannot be sustained. City of Owensboro v. Sweeney, 111 S. W. 364, 367, 129 Ky. 607, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 181, 130 Am. St. Rep. 477.

STREET IMPROVEMENT DISTRICT

A "street improvement district" is a single portion of a city set off as specially benefited by the improvement. Southwick v. City of Santa Barbara, 109 Pac. 610, 612, 158 Cal. 14.

STREET NUMBER

See Street and House Number.

"The 'street numbers' of houses in our cities do not indicate the numerical order of the houses, but are mere arbitrary symbols which have indeed a convenient relation to numerical order, but nothing more." An incitement which designates a house by its "street number" need not set forth that number in words at length. State v. Castle, 66 Ill. 1059, 1060, 75 N. J. Law, 187.

STREET RAILROAD

See Existing Street Railways.

Operating street railway, see Operate.

Properly speaking, "street railways," under the statute, are only such as are authorized to occupy and use the streets of a city or town under franchise from the municipality. Lewis v. Omaha & C. B. S. Ry. Co. (Iowa) 138 N. W. 1092, 1094.

That an electric railway carries mail, persons, and property would not render it a commercial, and not a "street, railway." Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Houston Electric Co., 122 S. W. 287, 290, 57 Tex. Civ. App. 170.

A "street railway" is defined as "a railroad constructed upon the surface of the public street in towns or cities; a tramway," and "a railroad on the surface of the streets for the convenience of passengers; a surface railroad, as in a city," and "is one constructed and operated on and along the streets of a city or town, or to and from its suburbs." Simoneau v. Pacific Electric R. Co., 115 Pac. 320, 323, 159 Cal. 494.

A "street railroad" is constructed on a street for the purpose of conveying passengers and to accommodate street travel, making frequent stops to take on and let off passengers and without regular stations. It conforms to the grade of the street, and its fundamental purpose is to accommodate local street travel. Gillette v. Aurora Rys. Co., 81 N. E. 1005, 1008, 228 Ill. 261 (citing Harvey v. Aurora & G. Ry. Co., 51 N. E. 163, 174 Ill. 295; Dewey v. Chicago & M. Electric Ry. Co., 56 N. E. 804, 184 Ill. 426).

The words "street railway," as used in statutes, have reference "to the then known and used railways, the rails of which were laid to conform to the surface of the street, and the construction of which did not of necessity exclude the public from the use of part of the street." Snouffer v. Cedar Rapids & M. City Ry. Co., 92 N. W. 79, 87, 118 Iowa, 287 (quoting and adopting definition in Freiday v. Sioux City Rapid Transit Co., 60 N. W. 656, 92 Iowa, 191, 26 L. R. A. 246).

A road is a "street railroad" where large double truck cars are operated over it through contiguous towns, nearly all the lines are within the corporate limits, no interstate cars are run over the line involved, the company is permitted by its franchise to carry mail, persons, and property, under Laws 1901, p. 461, c. 207, relating to street railways, passengers are carried only, the company was organized under general street railway laws and uses electricity as motive power, the lines were built throughout on public streets and highways, the cars stop at all street crossings, and between such crossings where the distance is great, or convenience of passengers requires it, to take on or let off passengers, the tracks are maintained at a level with the streets, and where five-cent fares can be charged from any point on the lines to any other point within the state, etc. Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Hammond, W. & E. C. Electric R. Co., 83 N. E. 650, 652, 42 Ind. App. 66.

"Street railways" superseded stage coaches, omnibus lines, and, in large measure, hacks, in carrying passengers to and from points in cities and towns and to suburban places. They went originally only to points reached by public highways. The public convenience and safety alike demanded that the grade of such highways should not be altered to meet the needs of a new method of conveyance which used these highways jointly with travelers by other modes. They did not need to go upon private property. The law did not contemplate that they should. Besides, the value of private property adjacent to these highways practically forbade its acquisition, if the law had permitted it, for use as a right of way. Being thus limited in their sphere of operation and powers, the term "street railway," in legal and popular acceptance, at first included only surface roads built upon streets and public highways for the carriage of passengers in and about cities and towns and adjacent suburban places. Under the influence of changed conditions of population and social life, these surface roads on the streets and highways began to serve the wants of the people in places not in any city or town, but in the vicinity thereon, and sometimes reached out to places not upon any public highway. Montgomery Amusement Co. v. Montgomery Traction Co., 139 Fed. 353, 357.

As common carrier

See Common Carrier.

Elevated railroad

Mueller Law 1903 (Laws 1903, p. 285) § 1, authorizing cities to own, operate, or lease street railways, applies to elevated as well as surface street railways. Barsaloux v. City of Chicago, 92 N. E. 525, 527, 245 Ill. 598, 19 Ann. Cas. 255.

As highway

See Highway.

Interurban railroad

An electric railway is none the less a "street railway" within city limits, under ordinances authorizing it to use certain streets, etc., because when it leaves the city it becomes an interurban railway. Jeffers v. City of Annapolis (Md.) 68 A. 361, 363.

An interurban electric railway is classed as a "street railroad" by the statutes, and after securing the right to do so, as required by law from the proper local authorities, can construct branches from its main line. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Urbana, B. & N. Ry. Co., 26 Ohio Cir. Ct.  $\kappa$ . 180, 194.

A railway company which performs the service of an ordinary street railroad in a city under a franchise granted by the city is, as to such service, a "street railroad," though it is also an interurban railroad engaging in carrying passengers beyond the limits of the city, and the fact that the State Railroad Commission has assumed jurisdiction over it does not prevent it from being subject to the franchise so far as it operates a system within the city. State ex rel. Denison v. Seattle, R. & S. R. Co., 116 Pac. 638, 640, 64 Wash. 167.

The general characteristic of a "street railroad" is that it is built upon and passes along streets and avenues for the convenience of those moving from place to place thereon. Its fundamental purpose is to accommodate street travel, and not travel to or from points beyond the city's lines. An electric railway company chartered under the general railway act, and authorized to operate between two cities and transport its passengers, mail, express, and other matter, is a "commercial railroad," and not a "street railroad." City of Aurora v. Elgin, A. & S. Traction Co., 81 N. E. 544, 547, 227 Ill. 485 (citing Harvey v. Aurora & G. Ry. Co., 51 N. E. 163, 174 Ill. 295; South Beach Ry. Co. v. Byrnes, 23 N. E. 486, 119 N. Y. 141; Diebold v. Kentucky Traction Co., 77 S. W. 674, 117 Ky. 146, 63 L. R. A. 637; Zehren v. Milwaukee Electric Railway & Light Co., 74 N. W. 538, 99 Wis. 83, 41 L. R. A. 575, 67 Am. St. Rep. 844; Rahn Township v. Tamaqua & L. St. Ry., 31 Atl. 472, 167 Pa. 84).

"Street railways" are artificial highways designed to accommodate the inhabitants of municipalities, large or small, to enable them to pass from one portion of their territory to another and to stop at convenient and frequent points according to the regulations of the company. Ordinarily they are constructed upon the surface of the streets and in conformity with the grades thereof. They have a local purpose to serve in transmitting passengers from one portion of a city or town to another and over its streets. The fact that tracks of a railroad or railway are laid in and wholly confined to the streets of a city does of itself determine that they are the tracks of a street passenger railway company." Sparks v. Philadelphia & C. R. Co., 61 Atl. 881, 882, 212 Pa. 105.

Railroad distinguished

As railroad, see Railroad—Railway.

There is a well-defined distinction between the definition of the words "railroad" and "street railway." The one is a word of general and extended meaning, applying to all roads incorporated under the general law, and has always been held to impose an additional servitude upon a public way for which abutting owners are entitled to compensation. The other is local in its signification, referring to transportation of a character entirely different from that of a general railroad, and has been held to add no burden as an additional servitude. Ecorse Tp. v. Jackson, A. & D. Ry., 117 N. W. 89, 91, 153 Mich. 393.

The Century Dictionary defines a "street railway" as a railroad constructed upon the surface of a public street in towns and cities, and the American & English Encyclopedia of Law states that "the distinctive and essential features of a 'street railway,' as distinguished from other railroads, are the location of the road upon the surface of streets and highways, its mode of operation, and its use for the carriage of passengers." In re Minneapolis & St. P. S. R. Co., 112 N. W. 13, 16, 101 Minn. 132.

Where a company organized under the general railroad law built a road in the streets of a city, as organized by an ordinance thereof, to carry freight from manufacturies not otherwise accessible by steam railroads, and the road was operated as a steam railroad in connection with the road of the lessee, it was subject to taxation as a "railroad" and not as a "street railway." City of Detroit v. Detroit Mfrs. R. R., 113 N. W. 365, 366, 149 Mich. 530.

The law recognizes several kinds of railroads and railroad companies, and recognizes a distinction between a railroad and a "street railroad." Statutes using the general term "railroad" may or may not apply to a "street railroad." Where the word "railroad" is used in a suit to determine whether it is intended to embrace in its meaning a "street railroad," the connection in which it is used must be considered. Sams v. St. Louis & M. R. R. Co., 73 S. W. 686, 690, 174 Mo. 53, 61 L. R. A. 475.

"Street railways" differ in some respects in point of fact, in their operation, from the operation of the ordinary railroad and rules and regulations governing one class should be sometimes modified as regards the other; but it by no means follows from that fact that both classes could not and should not be made to fall under the general term "railroad," leaving the one term or the other to be made to apply where, by reason of some special circumstance, it would appear proper or necessary which had been intended to be referred to. We think the term "railroad" is a broader term than "street railroad" or "street railway"; but that it does not exclude the latter kind of railroads, unless, from the context of the law, it should appear that the General Assembly intended to exclude or to refer specially to the latter class. The word

"railroad" is the generic term, while the words "street railroad" apply to a "species" under the general term. The power of a railway to cross highways and other railroads is necessarily implied from the law authorizing its construction. In this particular, railways for the local transportation of passengers, such as street and electric lines, cannot be justly differentiated from commercial railroads. A street railway and an electric railroad designed to run beyond the municipal limits may be incorporated under the same charter. Shreveport Traction Co. v. Kansas City, S. & G. Ry. Co., 44 South. 457, 458, 462, 119 La. 759.

"Railroads now exist in great variety, as regards motors and motive power, the size and style of cars and coaches, and methods of operation and construction. It is probable that these variations will be multiplied in the coming years. It is doubtful whether any permanent and satisfactory classification can now be made. There has been a general concurrence, however, in embracing all railroads in two divisions or classes: (1) Commercial railroads, and (2) street railroads. Commercial railroads embrace all railroads for general freight and passenger traffic between one town and another or between one place and another. So far they have not been successfully operated, to any extent at least, except by steam. They are usually not constructed upon the public streets or highways, except for short distances. 'Street railroads' embrace all such as are constructed and operated in the public streets for the purpose of conveying passengers, with their ordinary hand luggage, from one point to another on the street." Wilder v. Aurora, De Kalb & R. Electric Traction Co., 75 N. E. 191, 206, 216 Ill. 493 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Lewis, Em. Dom. § 110a).

Underground railway

Mueller Law 1903 (Laws 1903, p. 285) § 1, authorizing cities to own, operate, or lease street railways, applies to underground and elevated, as well as surface, "street railways." Under Mueller Law 1903 (Laws 1903, 285) § 1, authorizing cities to own, operate, lease street railways, the city of Chicago acquire or build street railway subways. Saloux v. City of Chicago, 92 N. E. 525, 245 Ill. 598, 19 Ann. Cas. 255.

An underground tunnel railroad with a portion of its route beneath East river, much of it built on private property, is a "street railway" within Laws 1886, p. c. 642, re-enacted in Laws 1890, pp. 1108, c. 565, §§ 91, 92, 93, relating to street ce railroads. New York & L. I. R. Co. v.

O'Brien, 106 N. Y. Supp. 909, 121 App. Div. 819; Id., 85 N. E. 1113, 192 N. Y. 558.

STREET RAILROAD CORPORATION

The Public Service Commissions Act provides that the term "street railroad corporations" includes receivers. Section 59 provides that an action to recover a penalty or forfeiture under the act may be brought in any court of competent jurisdiction in the state in the name of the people. Act Cong. Aug. 13, 1888, c. 866, § 3, provides that every receiver of any property appointed by a federal court may be sued without previous leave of the court. Held, that the state Supreme Court has jurisdiction of an action against federal receivers of a street railway corporation to recover the prescribed penalty for failure to make and file the annual report required by law. People v. Joline, 121 N. Y. Supp. 857, 860, 65 Misc. Rep. 394.

STREET RAILROAD TRACK

The words "car track," used in referring to a person as standing on the car track of a street railroad, clearly refer to the space necessarily covered by the cars in passing. Crosby v. Portland R. Co., 100 Pac. 300, 305, 53 Or. 496.

STREET RAILWAY COMPANY

As public service corporation, see Public Service Corporation.

As railroad company or corporation, see Railroad Company; Railroad Corporation.

The term "street railroad company" is distinguishable from "commercial railroad company." Town of Arlington v. Central of Georgia Ry. Co., 56 S. E. 1015, 1016, 127 Ga. 721 (citing City Council of Augusta v. Central R. R., 78 Ga. 119).

"A 'street railway company' is a kind of railroad company, but it does not follow that it is affected by every statute concerning railroad companies. That is a question to be determined in each case by a study of the whole body of legislation bearing upon the question." "Gen. St. 1902, § 3861, providing that every 'railroad company,' before applying to the commissioners for their approval of the location of its road, shall deposit with the state treasurer a specified sum for each mile of its proposed road, when considered in connection with the facts that it was enacted in 1882, when 'street railroads' were operated by horses, and that it was placed in the Revision of 1902, in the chapter relating to 'steam railroads,' and not referred to in the subsequent chapter relating to 'street railroads,' and when considered in connection with sections 3680, 3687, and 3844, authorizing 'railroad companies' to acquire land necessary for the construction of their roads, and authorizing every 'street railway company' to purchase land for its road, and regulating the conditions and methods of exercising the power of eminent domain given to 'steam railroads,' does not apply to a 'street railway company' authorized by its charter to take land in the manner provided for taking land for 'steam railroads,' and it need not deposit with the treasurer of the state any sum for each mile of its proposed road before it can maintain proceedings to condemn land for its road." Stafford Springs St. R. Co. v. Middle River Mfg. Co., 66 Atl. 775, 777, 80 Conn. 37.

Under Rev. Laws, c. 14, §§ 44, 46, imposing an excise tax on the earnings of "street railway companies," and chapter 111, § 1, defining a street railroad as one operated by motive power, other than steam, and the charter of a railway company operating in Boston giving it authority to use all kinds of power employed by street railways, providing cars might be drawn by steam power during the nighttime, subject to the regulation of the board of aldermen, a corporation so chartered is a street railway company subject to the tax, though it used nothing but steam as a motive power, but in nearly all other respects was like a street railway. McDonald v. Union Freight R. Co., 76 N. E. 655, 656, 190 Mass. 123.

STREET RAILWAY PURPOSES

An electric railway, operating beyond the limits of a city, and into a town incorporated for the mere maintenance of a park adjacent to the city, was a street railway, within a power reserved in the lease of the land used for the park, reserving to the lessors the right to grant a right of way through the land "for street railway purposes." Montgomery Amusement Co. v. Montgomery Traction Co., 139 Fed. 353, 357.

STREET SURFACE RAILROAD

An underground tunnel railroad, with a large portion of its route beneath East river, and much of it built on private property, is not a "street surface railroad," within Laws 1886, p. 919, c. 642, re-enacted in Laws 1890, pp. 1108, 1109, c. 565, §§ 91, 92, 93, relating thereto. New York & L. I. R. Co. v. O'Brien, 106 N. Y. Supp. 909, 917, 121 App. Div. 819.

Laws 1890, p. 1113, c. 565, art. 4, entitled "street surface railroads," § 101, provides that "no corporation constructing and operating a railroad under the provisions of this article or of chapter 252, page 309, of the Laws of 1884" (relating to street surface roads), shall charge any passenger more than 5 cents for one continuous ride from any point on its road, or on any road, line, or branch operated by it, or under its control, to any other point thereof, or any connecting branch thereof within the limits of any incorporated city, or more than one fare within the limits of any such city for passage over its main line and any branch or extension thereof, if the right to construct such branch or extension was acquired under the provisions of such chapter or this article. Section 104 requires the issuance of transfers to any point on any railroad operated by it. Held, that a road incorporated as a "street surface railroad," which leases and operates connecting elevated and steam surface railroads, does so under article 3, § 78, which applies to all railroads, and it may charge more than one fare for a continuous passage over its road and the elevated and steam surface roads, as it operates such roads under their respective charters, and its right in this respect is not changed by changing its motive power from steam to electricity. People v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 79 N. E. 838, 839, 187 N. Y. 48.

STREET USE

In considering the various uses to which highways are subjected, the courts have classified them as "street uses" and "municipal uses." A "street use" is one which is connected with the right of passage, and tends in some way to preserve or make more secure and easy its exercise. To this use or easement a rural highway is as much subject as a city street. If the street or highway has been subjected to a use which is primarily a street or highway use, the extension of such use to purposes, municipal in nature, but not connected directly with the right of passage, does not impose an additional burden on the land subject to the public easement of travel, whether the highways be rural or urban. If, however, the use be independent of the right of passage, then it cannot be considered a street use, and as to urban streets or rural highways, whenever the fee of the road is in the abutting owner, it imposes a new burden beyond the public easement. The laying of water mains in a public highway is a proper exercise of an urban easement which imposes no new burden upon the fee of the street. Richards v. Citizens' Water Supply Co., 125 N. Y. Supp. 116, 119, 140 App. Div. 206 (citing and adopting Palmer v. Larchmont Electric Co., 52 N. E. 1002, 158 N. Y. 231, 43 L. R. A. 672; Osborne v. Auburn Tel. Co., 82 N. E. 428, 189 N. Y. 393; Trustees of Presbyterian Soc. in Waterloo v. Auburn & R. R. Co. [N. Y.] 3 Hill, 567; Van Brunt v. Town of Flatbush, 27 N. E. 973, 128 N. Y. 50; Eels v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 38 N. E. 202, 143 N. Y. 133, 25 L. R. A. 640; Bloomfield & R. Natural Gaslight Co. v. Calkins, 62 N. Y. 386).

STREET-WALKING

"Street-walking" is the parading in the streets by lewd women, to the encouragement or advertisement of their means of livelihood. Callaway v. Mims, 62 S. E. 654, 657, 5 Ga. App. 9.

STREETS WITHIN SAID LIMITS

The city of Columbia having been laid out the title to the land and streets vested in commissioners, for the use of the state, as provided by Act March 22, 1786 (4 St. at Large, p. 751). By Act Dec. 19, 1816 (6 St. at Large, p. 53), the commissioners were required to convey to the Columbia Academy all the unsold land lying in the outer town of Columbia east of B. street, south of S. street, west of H. street, and north of L. street; and also such lots or squares as include the marsh north of S. street, and eastward of the town; and that "the streets within said limits" be vested in trustees, who should have power to dispose of them, reserving a right of way to such persons as might become owners of lots, squares, or portions of lands within such limits. Held, that the description of some of the lots to be conveyed as lying south of S. street, and others as lying north of the street, did not imply an intention to exclude that street lying between the lots so conveyed, but that the words "the streets within said limits" included that part of S. street lying between the lots north and south of it designated in the act, and therefore passed a title to such part of the street, which was thereafter subject to conveyance. Allvorden v. Nelson, 71 S. E. 982, 983, 89 S. C. 368.

STREET WORK

"Street work" is a phrase of common usage, and has a well-defined signification. The words mean exactly what they indicate upon their face, namely, work upon a street—work in repairing or making a street. Town of Mill Valley v. House, 76 Pac. 658, 659, 142 Cal. 698.

"Street work," used in Vrooman Act, relating to the building and construction of streets, highways, etc., of a city or town, has been defined to mean "work upon a street—work in repairing or making a street." City of San Diego v. Potter, 95 Pac. 146, 148, 153 Cal. 288 (citing Mill Valley v. House, 76 Pac. 658, 142 Cal. 698).

The phrase "street work" is of common usage and has a well-defined signification. The words mean exactly what they indicate upon their face, namely, work upon a street—work in repairing or making a street. A contract for lighting the streets and public places of a town is not a contract for street work, within the meaning of an act requiring such contracts to be let to the lowest responsible bidder. Tanner v. Auburn, 79 Pac. 494, 37 Wash. 38.

STRESS

The word "stress" means pressure, strain. Huntington, A. & B. S. Transp. Co. v. Western Assur. Co., 57 S. E. 140, 61 W. Va. 324.

STRESS OF WEATHER

"Stress of weather" means constraint imposed by continued bad weather, as to be driven back to port by "stress of weather." It is a stranding where the ship is forced by the wind into a mud bank, or where, having her head, she is forced by the wind to so change her position that at the ebbing of the tide she is stranded and springs a leak. Under a policy of marine insurance providing that no claim shall be made for loss or expense resulting from grounding unless caused by stress of weather, the wind, causing stranding of a steamboat insured, comes under the term "stress of weather," though such wind is not a tornado or unusual in the section where the stranding occurs. Huntington, A. & B. S. Transp. Co. v. Western Assur. Co., 57 S. E. 140, 61 W. Va. 324.

STRETCHER

In masonry three courses of brick laid parallel to the wall are technically called "stretchers." Where, in an action for injury to an employé by bricks, laid as a stretcher the day before in a wall, giving way when he placed his foot thereon while laying a wall on top of the bricks, there was some evidence that the manner of laying the bricks was unusual, the question whether the place was safe or not was for the jury. Meehan v. Hogan, 104 N. Y. Supp. 417, 418, 54 Misc. Rep. 241.

STRICT

STRICT CONSTRUCTION

A "strict construction" of a statute is a close adherence to the literal or textual interpretation, and a case is excluded from its operation unless the language of the statute includes it; while a statute "liberally construed" may be extended to include cases clearly within the mischief intended to be remedied, unless such construction does violence to the language used. Iagler v. Bye, 85 N. E. 36, 37, 42 Ind. App. 592.

The rule that a criminal provision must be strictly construed means only that the court must not bring cases within the provision of such a statute that are not clearly embraced by it, nor by narrow, technical, or forced construction of words exclude cases from it that are obviously within its provisions. What must be sought for always is the intention of the Legislature, and the duty of the court is to give effect to that intention as disclosed by the words used. Guided by such a rule of construction, a combination by stockholders in two competing interstate railway companies, to form a stockholding corporation which should acquire a controlling interest in the capital stock of each of such railway companies, violates the anti-trust act of July 2, 1890. Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 24 Sup. Ct. 436, 465, 193 U. S. 197, 48 L. Ed. 679.

The expression "strict construction," as used in the rule applicable to the construction of penal statutes, means that the scope of the statute shall not be extended by implication beyond the literal meaning of its terms, and not that the language of the terms shall be unreasonably interpreted.

Moore v. Western Union Tel. Co., 148 S. W. 157, 159, 164 Mo. App. 185.

"Strict construction" of a statute is a construction according to its letter, which recognizes nothing that is not expressed, takes the language used in its exact and technical meaning, and admits no equitable considerations or implications. Priest v. Caplitan, 139 S. W. 204, 209, 236 Mo. 446.

The rule that penal statutes will be strictly construed means that their penalties will not be extended to cases not plainly within their language, and, on the other hand, a strained construction will not be adopted which would exclude from their operation cases plainly within their scope; and hence with those qualifications such statutes should be clearly and reasonably construed. Mitchell v. State, 80 Atl. 1020, 1022, 115 Md. 360.

The term "strict construction," in regard to a return of service of process by an officer, means that the return cannot be aided by presumptions or intendments, but must show on its face that every requisite of the statute has been complied with. Regent Realty Co. v. Armour Packing Co., 86 S. W. 880, 882, 112 Mo. App. 271.

"Strict construction," as applied to statutes, means that they are not to be so extended by implication beyond the legitimate import of the words used in them as to embrace cases or acts not clearly described by such words, and to bring them within the prohibition or penalty of such statutes. It does not mean that words shall be so restricted as not to have their full meaning, but that everything shall be excluded from the operation of statutes so construed which does not clearly come within the meaning of the language used." State v. Aetna Banking & Trust Co., 87 Pac. 268, 269, 34 Mont. 379.

"In law, 'strict construction' excludes mere implications, but does not require a literal and blind adhesion to mere words. Thus the rule that attachments can only be sustained on strict compliance with the terms of the statute has been construed to mean by a substantial compliance therewith." Bowman v. Little, 61 Atl. 657, 101 Md. 273.

STRICT FORECLOSURE

A consent judgment declared that defendant has an equity to redeem land on the payment to plaintiff of a specified sum, and, in case of the failure to pay the same within the time limited, "defendant shall stand debarred" absolutely of all equity in the premises. Held, that the words "defendant shall stand absolutely debarred" of all equity in the land do not amount to a "strict foreclosure," and defendant has the right to redeem. Bunn v. Braswell, 51 S. E. 927, 930, 139 N. C. 135.

STRICT INTERPLEADER

A bill of "strict interpleader" is one in which complainant asserts his possession of some fund, or something in which he claims no personal interest, but in which other persons whom he makes defendants set up conflicting claims, and complainant cannot safely determine to which claim he should yield; and the fact that a complainant also seeks independent affirmative relief differentiates his case from cases of strict interpleader. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Hamilton (N. J.) 70 Atl. 677, 678.

STRICT PROOF

The rule that, where the establishment of a marriage would invalidate a subsequent marriage and illegitimize issue, the former marriage must be established by "strict proof" means that it must be established to a moral certainty. Bowman v. Little, 61 Atl. 657, 1084, 101 Md. 273.

STRICTLY CHOICE

Where defendants offered to sell plaintiff two cars "choice" potatoes at a specified price, an acceptance requiring the potatoes to be strictly choice did not constitute a variance from the terms of the offer, in view of evidence that there was no difference between the grade "choice" and "strictly choice" potatoes. Ennis Brown Co. v. W. S. Hurst & Co., 82 Pac. 1056, 1059, 1 Cal. App. 752.

STRICTISSIMI JURIS

The rule that the liability of a surety is "strictissimi juris" means that, when the meaning of a contract of indemnity or guaranty has once been judicially determined under the rule of reasonable construction applicable to all written contracts, then the liability of the surety, under his contract, as so interpreted or construed, is not to be extended beyond its strict meaning. Covey v. Schlesswohl, 114 Pac. 292, 50 Colo. 68.

STRIKE

See General Strike; Particular Strike.

A "strike" is cessation of work by employees in an effort to obtain more desirable terms. Iron Molders' Union No. 125 of Milwaukee, Wis., v. Allis-Chalmers Co., 166 Fed. 45, 52, 91 C. C. A. 631, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 315.

A "strike" by laborers is merely a combination to quit work, and is not of itself illegal, nor is the announcement by the workmen of their intention to strike illegal. Albro J. Newton Co. v. Erickson, 126 N. Y. Supp. 949, 951, 70 Misc. Rep. 291.

In the absence of a contract obligation, an organized union of employees may strike, which is done by their ceasing their employment by concerted action, and the "strike" may be based on the refusal of the employer to comply with the employes' demand for the betterment of wages, conditions, hours of labor, the discharge of one employé, the engagement of another, or other considerations which in good faith may be believed to tend toward the advancement of the employes. Pierce v. Stablemen's Union, Local No. 8,760, 103 Pac. 324, 327, 156 Cal. 70.

An extensive strike among the anthracite coal miners of the country during the period covered by a contract of sale of bituminous coal, occasioning, in part, a very serious shortage of cars, was not a "strike" within the clause of the contract exempting seller from the duty to furnish coal during any portion of the time when prevented by strikes; it being intended to apply to strikes affecting the handling of the output of the seller's own mine. Consolidated Coal Co. of St. Louis v. Jones & Adams Co., 83 N. E. 851, 852, 232 Ill. 326.

A "strike," which is the combined effort of workmen to obtain higher wages, or other concessions from their employers, by stopping work at a preconcerted time until their demands are complied with, is lawful, where the purpose of the strike is to obtain some benefit to the strikers; and so, where the members of a union threatened to call a strike unless workmen who refused to remain in the union were discharged, that act is not an unlawful interference with the rights of the nonunion employes, the purpose of the threatened strike not being to injure the non-union employé, but to protect the union, and so being different from a boycott, the primary object of which is to inflict injury upon another. Kemp v. Division No. 241, Amalgamated Ass'n of Street and Electric Ry. Employes of America, 99 N. E. 389, 393, 255 Ill. 213, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 347.

That the refusal of the miners to work in the dangerous and unminable part of the mine, they being continually at work in the other parts, is not a "strike," within the meaning of the saving clause of a mining lease relieving the lessee from payment of the specified minimum royalty in case of strikes. New York Coal Co. v. New Pittsburgh Coal Co., 99 N. E. 198, 208, 86 Ohio St. 140.

A general strike of longshoremen, preventing the timely discharge of a shipment is within the strike clause of a bill of lading providing that the ships shall not be responsible for "strikes and stoppage of labor." The Toronto, 168 Fed. 386, 391.

In mining law

The course of the vein longitudinally, as it passes through the country, is its "strike," and where the dip of the vein is vertical, or practically vertical, the line of its ore bodies may mark the line of its strike. Grand Central Min. Co. v. Mammoth Min. Co., 83 Pac. 648, 649, 29 Utah, 490.

STRIKE FROM DOCKET

As dismissal, see Dismissal.

STRIKE OUT

See Motion to Strike Out.

St. Louis City Ordinance No. 24,582 was entitled an ordinance to amend section 505 of the Revised Code of St. Louis by "striking out" said section and inserting in lieu thereof a new section, to be known by the same number, in relation to the sale and custody of skimmed milk, and providing penalties for the violation thereof, and then provided that section 505 was "amended by striking out" said section and inserting in lieu thereof the following new section bearing the same number, proceeding to provide a new standard for skimmed milk to be sold within the city. Held, that the term "strike out" as so used meant to "force out"; to "blot out"; "to efface"; "to erase"; and as so construed connected itself with the definition of repeal; and hence there was a repeal of section 505 by express terms, within City Charter of St. Louis, art. 3, § 28, providing that an ordinance conflicting with general ordinances of prior dates shall not be valid until the prior ordinances, or the conflicting parts thereof, are repealed by express terms. City of St. Louis v. Kellman, 139 S. W. 443, 446, 235 Mo. 687.

STRIKING DISTANCE

As element of obstruction on railroad track, see Obstruct—Obstruction.

STRING FUSE

"String fuse," used by miners, is fuse wound with string. Wilita v. Interstate Iron Co., 115 N. W. 169, 170, 103 Minn. 303, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 128.

STRINGER

The term "stringers," used in relation to a bridge, is used interchangeably with "joists," and does not include cross-pieces, or braces, or suspension rods running from the cross-pieces to the trusses, but only the longitudinal pieces running from end to end under the floor of the bridge. Town of Queensbury v. Hudson Val. Ry. Co., 135 N. Y. Supp. 200, 204, 75 Misc. Rep. 197.

STRIP

See Beaver Strips.

A "strip" of glass is a narrow piece comparatively long, and as used in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11 § 1, Schedule B, par. 110, 30 Stat. 158, imposing a certain duty on strips of glass, includes prismatic gauge glasses about 5¼ inches long, 1½ inches wide, and five-eighths of an inch thick. United States v. Ashcroft Mfg. Co., 176 Fed. 736, 100 C. C. A. 281 (citing Stand. Dict.).

STRONG*STRONG BEER

"'Strong beer' is a term now practically obsolete. It was once in familiar use as the name of a species of beer made of malt and hops, and so called in order to distinguish it from 'small beer,' which was compounded of molasses and yeast with the addition of either ginger or spruce, and which contained a very small percentage of alcohol. The 'strong beer' seems to have been rich in the intoxicating principle, chemical analysis (in one of the reported cases) showing the presence of alcohol in the proportion of 8 per cent., and the courts had no difficulty in determining that such beverage was intoxicating liquor, within the meaning of the statutes on that subject. But, as it differed from the lager beer of modern commerce both in the process of its manufacture and in the proportion of alcohol contained (the latter being a very much lighter fluid), the courts appear to be unwilling to be bound, in their judicial dealings with beer of to-day, by the precedents relating to the beer of a past generation. At least there are some decisions, particularly in New York, not explainable on any other hypothesis." Potts v. State, 97 S. W. 477, 478, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 368, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 194, 123 Am. St. Rep. 847 (quoting Black, Intox. Liq. pp. 21, 22, § 17).

STRONG HAND

See With Strong Hand.

STRUCK JURY

See, also, Special Jury.

Under V. S. 1127 (P. S. 1477), providing that a person drawn as juror from a town containing more than 200 inhabitants shall be disqualified from serving again for two years, a plea in abatement filed at the October term, alleging that on a date before the March term a certain juror was summoned as juror, and attended, qualified, and acted as such through the term, "without this, that said [juror] was during said last-mentioned session of said court summoned as a petit juror to serve at said session of court," was demurrable, because not showing that the juror was not drawn as a special or struck juror; the allegation that he was "drawn" not being sufficient for this purpose. In view of sections 1134, 1137 (1484, 1487), speaking of a "struck jury" as "drawn" and calling it a "special jury." State v. Waterman, 62 Atl. 1016, 1017, 78 Vt. 379.

STRUCTURAL IRON

Where steel parts have been assembled and united into complete window sashes, they have been too far advanced in manufacture to permit their inclusion within the provision of the Tariff Act, relating to "structural shapes" of iron or steel fitted for use, but must be rated as manufactures of metal. Ackerson v. United States, 172 Fed. 303.

STRUCTURE

See New Structure; Permanent Structure; Substructure; Superstructure.

Any other structure, see Any Other.

Cut as part of railroad structure, see Railroad—Railway.

Other structure, see Other.

Under Rev. St. 1892, § 2793, requiring the assessor to examine all buildings and structures, and section 2730 providing that the terms "real property" and "land" shall include, not only land itself, but also all buildings, structures, and improvements thereon, the assessor must return a list of new structures and affix a value thereto, and where the owner of a building during the preceding year remodeled and reconstructed it internally, and also reconstructed with new material some or all of its walls so as to substantially enhance the value of the premises, the new parts and the remodeling and improvement of the old should be listed, valued, and returned by the assessor as new structures, for the word "structure" in the statute is not confined to a structure independent of any other existing building, but the word includes that which is built or constructed, an edifice or building of any kind, any piece of work artificially built up or composed of parts joined together in some definite manner. Lewis v. State, 69 N. E. 980, 983, 69 Ohio St. 473 (citing Cent. Dict.; Stand. Dict.).

Boiler

A "structure" is defined to be "a building of any kind, but chiefly a building of some size and magnificence; an edifice." While the word "structure" may cover a great variety of form and construction, yet when used in connection with the words "house" and "building," it is evidently intended to simply describe a variety of building. The word "structure," as used in Labor Law, Laws 1897, p. 467, c. 415, § 18, which provides that a person employing another to perform labor of any kind in the erection or alteration of a house, building, or structure shall not furnish for the performance of such labor any scaffolding which is unsafe or improper, does not include a boiler which is portable and may be readily moved from place to place, such a boiler rather being an appliance in the business for which it is used. Conley v. Lackawanna Iron & Steel Co., 88 N. Y. Supp. 123, 125, 94 App. Div. 149.

Building

Barge Canal Act (Laws 1903, c. 147) § 4, as amended, providing for the appropriation by the state of lands, "structures," and waters for canal purposes, relates only to the acquisition of land, with structures and waters appurtenant thereto, and does not include a sawmill erected and maintained by an individual on state land adjacent to the Erie Canal; and a contractor to perform the work of enlargement required by the barge canal in the vicinity of the mill, who demolishes the mill under the direction of the state engineer, is not liable to the owner thereof, but the owner must litigate the question of compensation before the Board of Claims under Code Civ. Proc. § 264. Watson v. Empire Engineering Corp., 137 N. Y. Supp. 231, 233, 77 Misc. Rep. 543.

Car

Labor Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 31) § 18, provides that a person employing or directing another to perform labor in the repairing of a house, building, or "structure" shall not furnish, erect, or cause to be furnished or erected, for such labor, scaffolding, "hoists," stays, or other mechanical contrivances which are unsafe, and which are not such as to give proper protection to a person so employed or engaged. Held that, where a car repairer was injured by the breaking of the handle of a ratchet jack with which the body of a freight car had been hoisted to permit repairs on the trucks, as the body was being lowered, the jack, while not a "hoist" within the statute, is nevertheless a "mechanical contrivance" furnished by the railroad company for plaintiff's use, and the car was a "structure" as to which the jack was being used; and hence the defective jack was within the statute. Corbett v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 135 N. Y. Supp. 137, 139, 151 App. Div. 159.

A passenger car undergoing repairs is a "structure," within Labor Law (Laws 1897, p. 467, c. 415, § 18), providing that a person employing another to perform labor in the erection, repairing, altering, or painting of a house, building or "structure" shall not furnish or erect any improper or defective scaffolding, etc. The word "structure" should not be construed as limited by the words "house" and "building," but was intended to embrace all "structures" which, like unto a house or building, require the use of scaffolds, hoists, stays, or ladders in their construction, alteration, or repair. Caddy v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 110 N. Y. Supp. 162, 163, 125 App. Div. 681; Id., 88 N. E. 747, 195 N. Y. 415, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 30.

Derrick

Defendant engaged in sewer construction maintained as a part of its equipment a stiff-leg derrick supported by guy cables running from the top of the mast to anchorages in the ground. The guy cables were usually tested every morning, as there was danger that they might be loosened, which would cause the derrick to fall, but such examination was not made on the morning when intestate, a hoisting engineer, was killed by the fall of the derrick due to the loosening of the bolts on the spliced cable. Held, that such derrick was a "structure" within Labor Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 31) § 18, prohibiting any employer from furnishing unsafe mechanical contrivances, the word "structure" including "that which is built or constructed," "any production or piece of work artificially built up or composed of parts joined together in some definite manner, whether above or below ground," and that the fall of the derrick due to a failure to inspect the splicing for more than 24 hours constituted actionable negligence. Stevens v. Stanton Const. Co., 137 N. Y. Supp. 1024, 1025, 153 App. Div. 82.

Labor Law (Laws 1901, c. 257) § 1 (Sunborn's St. Supp. 1906, § 1636—81), provides that a person employing another in labor of any kind in erecting, repairing, altering, or painting of a house, building, or structure shall not furnish, for the performance of such labor, scaffolding, hoists, stays, ladders, or other mechanical contrivances which are unsafe, and which are not so constructed, placed, and operated as to give proper protection to the life and limb of a person so employed. Held that, as "structure," as used in such act, included work below as well as above ground, and the word "erecting" was used in its broad sense to mean the creating of a particular thing out of its parts, an action for injury to an employé by the collapse of a derrick used to lower sections of water main pipe into place in a trench dug to receive it was within the statute; the derrick being within the prohibited instrumentalities, the setting up of the water main an "erection," and the putting in of new pipes an "altering," and the waterworks system a "structure" within the meaning of the act. Kosidowski v. City of Milwaukee, 139 N. W. 187, 188, 152 Wis. 223.

Under Code 1899, c. 75, § 3, providing that every materialman furnishing any material for the construction of any house or other structure shall have a lien to secure the payment of the value of any material on such house or other structure and on the interest of the owner in the land on which the same may stand, an oilwell derrick erected by a lessee for the purpose of the lease is a "structure" on which materialmen are entitled to a lien for materials furnished. Showalter v. Lowndes, 49 S. E. 448, 56 W. Va. 462, 3 Ann. Cas. 1096 (citing Loonle v. Hogan, 9 N. Y. 435, 61 Am. Dec. 683, note; Lyon v. McGuffey, 4 Pa. 126, 45 Am. Dec. 675, note).

Fill

A deed for a lot eight feet below the street contained a condition that the purchaser would not build any "structure or building" within four feet of the sidewalk. Held, that filling up the lot with dirt up to the sidewalk would be putting a "structure" within four feet of the sidewalk. Clement's Adm'rs v. Putnam, 35 Atl. 181, 68 Vt. 285.

Machine

Raw material used to construct a machine or other structure, if resolved into its original elements as lumber, etc., could be shipped as such; but the machine or structure would be classified as a "structure." Hardaway v. Southern Ry. Co., 73 S. E. 1020, 1025, 90 S. C. 475, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 266.

Passageway

"Structures" used in mining operations as passageways for miners working in a drift come within the rule making a mineowner liable for injuries to his employes, caused by a defect in the material or construction of a structure which could have been avoided by using ordinary care. Jackson v. Yak Mining, Milling & Tunnel Co., 119 Pac. 1058, 1060, 51 Colo. 551.

Railroad tracks

The lowering of tracks of elevated and trolley roads on the terminal of a bridge is within the labor law (Laws 1897, p. 461, c. 415), requiring the use of safe and suitable mechanical contrivances, so constructed, placed, and operated as to give proper protection to one employed in performing labor in the repairing or altering of a "structure." Flanagan v. F. W. Carlin Const. Co., 118 N. Y. Supp. 953, 956, 134 App. Div. 236.

Sign

A sky sign erected on the roof of a building for the purpose of advertising is a "structure," within the meaning of New York charter and ordinances providing for the regulation of the erection of buildings and structures, and hence subject to control thereby. City of New York v. M. Wineburgh Advertising Co., 107 N. Y. Supp. 478, 483, 122 App. Div. 748; Kobbe Co. v. City of New York, 107 N. Y. Supp. 489, 122 App. Div. 755.

Spillway

Plaintiff bid a certain price per cubic yard for the construction of an earthen dam according to specifications defining the dam as an earthen "structure," and which used the word "structure" in defining the elevation and slope of the work to refer only to the dam as such, and which also provided that the contractor should excavate the earth at one end of the dam to form a spillway, placing the earth taken from the spillway into the dam, and which further provided that the contractor should make his bid cover a price per cubic yard for all work put in the structure. Held, that the word "structure" did not include the spillway, but that, as the contractor by placing the material taken therefrom into the dam would not lose anything, he was not entitled to recover for excavating the spillway. McMillen v. Mart (Tex.) 149 S. W. 270, 272.

Vessel

A sea-going vessel in dry dock undergoing repairs, while being painted, is a "structure," within Labor Law, § 18, regulating the scaffolding to be erected for the use of persons employed in painting a house, building, or structure, etc. Gruner v. Texas Co., 117 N.

Y. Supp. 741, 742, 133 App. Div. 413. And so is a vessel in attaching iron plates at which workmen are employed. Herman v. P. H. Fitzgibbons Boiler Co., 120 N. Y. Supp. 1074, 1075, 136 App. Div. 286.

STUDENT

A franchise granted an electric railroad company provides that "school children" going to and returning from school shall ride for half fare. Rem. & Bal. Code, §§ 4317, 4333, and 4366 speak of those attending the State University, the State College, and normal schools as "students," and in chapter 8, § 4406, where common schools are defined, the Legislature adopts the word "children." In section 4714, under the title "Compulsory Education," the law refers to "child" or "children." Held that, as the common acceptance of the words "school children" is children attending the common school, it must be considered that the parties had that in mind at the time of the granting of the franchise, so that students at the State University and of business colleges would not be entitled thereunder to ride for half fare. State ex rel. City of Seattle v. Seattle Electric Co., 128 Pac. 220, 221, 71 Wash. 213, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 172.

Student in office of attorney

Under the rule of practice requiring that an applicant for admission to the bar, who has not received a classical education or studied at a law school, must have "studied law three years in the office of an attorney and counselor at law," an applicant who had filed notice in the clerk of court's office that he had registered as a law student in the office of an attorney of the court, and who for three years thereafter received instruction from such attorney, and studied under his direction, was not entitled to take an examination for admission to the bar, where, during such three years, he was not in attendance at the office during the daytime, but was employed during the working hours of the day as clerk in a department store. ## STUMP

STUMPAGE

The word "stumpage" is defined to mean timber standing in the tree, and the standing timber on land is commonly called "stumpage." It is also a term used to express the compensation paid by the purchaser for stand-g timber to be cut and removed by him. Apusci v. Clark, 106 Pac. 436, 438, 12 Cal. 44.

"Stumpage" being a term used to express a price paid by the purchaser for standing trees to be severed from the soil and converted into timber or logs by the purchaser, notice a claim for "stumpage" is not notice of a lien. Ray v. A. Schmidt & Co., 66 S. 1035, 1036, 7 Ga. App. 380 (quoting 7 Words & Phrases, p. 6703).

STUMPAGE SCALE

Where a company is authorized to collect tolls on logs driven over its dams at a fixed rate "stumpage scale," and the parties to a contract do not agree upon a surveyor or scaler to determine the quantity of logs driven, there is an implied contract that they would be bound by a scale made according to the method customarily adopted by surveyors or scalers and between landowners, operators and recognized as the "stumpage scale." Madunkeunk Dam & Imp. Co. v. E. Allen Clothing Co., 66 Atl. 537, 538, 102 257.

STUMPAGE VALUE

The "stumpage value" of a tree is merely the value of a tree of standing timber. Stanley v. Livingston, 71 S. E. 878, 879, 9 Ga. App.

In an action for the value of logs wrongfully taken from the plaintiff's land, the "stumpage value" which is the value on the land at the time of cutting was the lowest and most favorable measure of damages applicable, and was properly applied. Quigley Lumber Co. v. Rhea, 76 S. E. 330, 334, 114 71.

STYLE AND NATURE

A statute requiring a justice to enter in a docket, the "style and nature of the action" is not met by a recital on "breach of contract" or "action of covenant." Stokes v. Stokes, 4 N. J. Law, 159.

SUBAGENT

When an agent employs another person to assist him in transacting the affairs of his principal, the person so employed is a "subagent"; and authority to appoint a subagent is implied where, from the nature of the agency, such employment is necessary, here the agent has authority to employ agents he will not be liable for the acts or omissions of the subagent, unless in the meantime he is guilty of fraud or co-operation with the subagent in such acts or omissions and this rule seems to be in accordance with Civ. Code, §§ 1690-1701, providing that an agent, unless specially forbidden to do so, can delegate his powers when the act is purely mechanical, or is such that the agent himself cannot perform it, or when it is in accordance with the usage of the place or when such delegation is specially authorized; and if the agent employs a subagent without authority he makes such subagent his agent; but a subagent lawfully appointed represents the principal in the same manner with the original agent. Fanset v. Garden City State Bank, 123 N. W. 686, 688, 24 S. D. 248.

Where one, employed by defendant as general help on her farm, and authorized to cut and haul logs to plaintiff's sawmill, employed another to help cut and haul logs, such other was the agent of defendant, whose knowledge of plaintiff's rule that yard logs or logs containing iron would not be sawed would be imputed to defendant, rendering her liable for the breaking of a saw, due to its striking iron in a yard log delivered. Merritt v. Huber, 114 N. W. 627, 628, 137 Iowa, 135.

SUBCONTRACT

A "subcontract" is one made under a previous contract. Ryndak v. Seawell, 76 Pac. 170, 173, 13 Okl. 737.

SUBCONTRACTOR

A "subcontract" is defined to be "a contract by one who has contracted for the performance of labor or service with a third party for the whole or part performance of that labor or service." The term "subcontractor," therefore, is not inappropriate to designate one who has contracted with the principal contractor to perform the whole as well as a part of the service which the latter has undertaken to perform. Smith v. Wilcox, 74 Pac. 708, 709, 44 Or. 323 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.).

A "subcontractor" is one who has entered into a contract, express or implied, to perform an act, with a person who has already contracted for its performance. Fosburgh Co. v. Hampden County, 90 N. E. 851, 854, 204 Mass. 494.

A "subcontractor" is an undercontractor, one who takes under the original contract, and is to perform in accordance with such original contract. People, for Use of Davis, v. Campfield, 114 N. W. 659, 660, 150 Mich. 675.

One who did grading on a railway roadbed, which work was orally sublet to him through his father by the original contractor, the subcontract being made for his benefit, and he using his own grading outfit and paying the laborers with his own money, was a "subcontractor" within the laborers' lien law, giving a subcontractor a lien for material furnished and labor performed in construction of a railroad. Owen v. Cox, 126 N. W. 658, 659, 86 Neb. 851.

A party agreeing to do work for a contractor according to the plans and specifications of the original contract is a "subcontractor" within the meaning of Pub. Acts 1905, No. 187, providing that such subcontractor shall give notice of his claim to the board of city officers authorizing the construction work, before he can recover on the contractor's bond, required to be given by the act. People, for Use of Buhl Sons Co., v. Finn, 127 N. W. 704, 705, 162 Mich. 481.

A firm employed by subcontractors to work on any part of a railroad bed covered by the subcontract on which they might be directed to work was not a "subcontractor" within a provision of the contract of employment, providing that all subcontracts should be written on forms identical with the original contract and a duplicate delivered to the chief engineer of the company, so as to invalidate the firm's contract of employment and deprive it of a lien, under R. v. St. 1899, § 4239 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2324), allowing liens against railroads in favor of persons doing work in constructing and improving roadbeds or furnishing materials for them, provided such work is performed in accordance with a contract with the railway or its subcontractors. Rankin v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 129 S. W. 755, 758, 150 Mo. App. 32.

Lien Law (Laws 1897, p. 516, c. 418) § 2, defines a "subcontractor" as one who enters into a contract for the improvement of real property with a contractor, and defines a "materialman" as any person other than a contractor who furnishes material for the improvement. Held, that one agreeing with contractor to install a system of temperature regulation in a building, involving both the performance of labor and furnishing of materials was a subcontractor within the statute. Herrmann & Grace v. City of New York, 114 N. Y. Supp. 1107, 1112, 130 App. Div. 531.

Under Laws 1897, p. 514, c. 418, § 3, giving a lien to a "contractor, subcontractor, laborer, or materialman, who performs labor or furnishes material for the improvement of real property," the terms "contractor," "subcontractor," "laborer," and "materialman," while they refer primarily to the man who has a formal contract with the owner, or a subcontractor, with the contractor, or who performed manual labor or furnished material, also embrace the man who buys the labor and material which enter into the improvement. Kerwin v. Post, 104 N. Y. Supp. 1005, 1007, 120 App. Div. 179.

A "subcontractor," under the mechanic's lien law (Gen. St. 1909, § 6246 [Code Civ. Proc. § 651]), is one who takes from the contractor a specified part of the work; but a day "laborer" works under an agreement with the contractor, and is, in one view, also a subcontractor. Rankin v. Rankin, 122 Pac. 1120, 1122, 86 Kan. 899.

A laborer working by the day is not a "subcontractor" within the rule that a subcontractor is bound to accept payment as provided in the principal contract, but is entitled to a mechanic's lien as a laborer, under the express provisions of Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 8295. Johnson v. Spencer, 96 N. E. 1041, 1042, 49 Ind. App. 166 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 3964).

A building contract requiring the contractor to file receipts with the superintendent and owner showing that each subcontractor had been paid in full to the amount of the estimates, as per the certificate of the previous month, etc., does not require the superintendent or the owner to exact receipts for all claims for labor and material, a "subcontractor" being one who takes from the principal contractor a specific part of the work, and does not include laborers or materialmen. Y. M. C. A. of North Yakima v. Gibson, 108 Pac. 766, 769, 58 Wash. 307.

As materialman

See Materialman.

A "subcontract" is one made under a previous contract, and a "subcontractor" is one who takes a portion of a contract from the principal contractor. Where M. enters into a contract with R., agreeing to furnish all material and construct a building for R., and S., a materialman, having knowledge of the contract of M., makes a contract in relation thereto with M. to furnish the material for such building with the understanding that the material is to be used by M. in the construction of the building for R., S. thereby becomes a subcontractor, within the meaning of the mechanic's lien law, and, if the material is actually used in the construction of the building, S. is entitled to a mechanic's lien as a subcontractor. Ryndak v. Seawell, 76 Pac. 170, 173, 13 Okl. 737.

One furnishing all the stone for a building is a materialman, and not a "subcontractor," taking from the principal contractor a specific part of the work, though the stone is finished and ready for use at the time of its delivery, and so is entitled to a lien for materials, independently of Act March 6, 1909 (Acts 1909, c. 116), giving a lien to subcontractors. Foster Lumber Co. v. Sigma Chi Chapter House of De Pauw University, 97 N. E. 801, 803, 49 Ind. App. 528.

There can be such relation as a subcontractor to a subcontractor; and the fact that subcontractors were materialmen did not prevent them from being "subcontractors" with all of the lien rights as such. Knapp Bros. Mfg. Co. v. Kansas City Stock Yards Co. of Missouri, 152 S. W. 119, 122, 108 Mo. App. 146.

A company which merely sold steam radiators to the contractors, but performed no work on the building, was a "materialman," and not a "subcontractor," within Lien Law (Laws 1897, p. 516, c. 418) § 2, defining those terms. Herrmann & Grace v. City of New York, 114 N. Y. Supp. 1107, 1112, 130 App. Div. 531.

A written order for oak flooring, placed with defendant by the general contractor, contained the words, "Charge contract L-981-C-5," and another order to defendant recited that it covered the furnishing and delivery at the owner's switch of oak flooring for a contract known in the contractor's office as "1,981," which was the contract between the general contractor and the owner. Lien Law (Laws 1897, p. 515, c. 418) § 2 defines a "subcontractor" as one who enters into a contract with a contractor for the improvement of real property, and defines a "materialman" as any person other than a contractor who furnishes material for such improvement. Held, that defendant was a materialman, and not a subcontractor; the mere knowledge that the material was used by the contractor in the performance of a certain contract being insufficient to make him a subcontractor. Hedden Const. Co. v. Proctor & Gamble Co., 114 N. Y. Supp. 1103, 1105, 62 Misc. Rep. 129.

Where plaintiff furnished materials for defendant's building under a contract with defendant, and not with the contractor, plaintiff was not a "subcontractor" defined by Kirby's Dig. § 4993, to include all persons furnishing work or material, except under contracts directly with the owner, etc., but was an original contractor, and therefore entitled to a mechanic's lien without giving the notice required of subcontractors by section 4976. Leifer Mfg. Co. v. Gross, 124 S. W. 1039, 1041, 93 Ark. 277.

Where a contract for the carpenter work of a building required "Davis or other equal steel stiffeners" for window frames, and the contractor sublet the contract for the installation of the window frames, and relator agreed to furnish, but not to install, the stiffeners in accordance with measurements furnished him by the subcontractor, and not in accordance with the specifications of the original contract, relator was a "materialman," and not a "subcontractor," and was therefore entitled to recover on the contractor's bond given under Comp. Laws, §§ 10743-10745, requiring contractors of public buildings to give security for the payment of material furnished therefor. People, for Use of Davis, v. Campfield, 114 N. W. 659, 660, 150 Mich. 675.

Labor Law (Laws 1897, p. 462, c. 415, § 3) as amended by Laws 1899, p. 1172, c. 567, Laws 1900, p. 638, c. 298, and Laws 1906, p. 1394, c. 506, providing that every contract with the state or a municipal corporation, involving the employment of laborers, workmen, or mechanics shall stipulate that no such laborer, etc., in the employ of the contractor, subcontractor, or other person doing or contracting to do the whole or a part of the work embraced in the contract, shall be permitted or required to work more than eight hours a day, or be paid less than the prevailing rate of wages of the locality in which the work is to be done, and shall be void unless such stipulation is observed, does not include labor employed in the production of raw material necessary for municipal buildings and works, and a manufacturer supplying manufactured doors, windows, and other manufactured woodwork to a contractor for the erection of a municipal building in the city of New York was not a "subcontractor" within the meaning of the act, and hence the fact that such manufacturer employed workmen more than eight hours a day, and paid them less than the prevailing rate of wages in New York City, did not affect the validity of the contract; the fact that the contractor agreed to forfeit payments if he violated the law being immaterial. Bohnen v. Metz, 111 N. Y. Supp. 196, 198, 126 App. Div. 807.

Subcontractor of subcontractor

A "subcontractor" of a subcontractor is not entitled to a lien under a statute relating to liens of mechanics and others, and confining the lien to artisans, laborers, contractors, and "subcontractors." Vandenberg v. P. T. Walton Lumber Co., 92 Pac. 149, 150, 19 Okl. 109.

A "subcontractor" is one who contracts with a principal contractor to do work embraced in the latter's contract; that is, obviously, some one who contracts to execute some integral part of the work covered by the scheme of the principal contract. A "subcontractor" is one who takes a part or the whole of the work from the principal contractor. Thus one who contracts with a subcontractor to have the sole hauling, at a certain amount per hundredweight, of all the cement needed for the structure, not being bound to personal service, and the amount of work requiring assistants, is not an employé but a "subcontractor" of the subcontractor, and therefore not within Rev. St. 1898, §§ 3314, 3315, giving a lien to a principal contractor, subcontractor, or employé of either who performs any work or labor for, in, or about the erection or construction.

Farmer v. St. Croix Power Co., 93 N. W. 830, 834, 117 Wis. 76, 98 Am. St. Rep. 914 (quoting and adopting definitions in Stand. Dict. and Cent. Dict.).

Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7265, declares that all persons who shall perform labor in building bridges or other structures in the construction or repair of any railroad, whether under a contract with the railroad corporation, or a contract with any person, corporation, or company engaged, as lessee, contractor, "subcontractor," or agent of such railroad company, in constructing or repairing any such railroad, shall have a lien. Held, that such section conferred a lien on laborers employed for railroad construction by a subcontractor in the second degree; such work being performed in pursuance of recognized authority originally emanating from such railroad corporation. Pere Marquette R. Co. v. Baertz, 74 N. E. 51-55, 36 Ind. App. 408; Pere Marquette R. Co. v. Smith, 74 N. E. 545, 36 Ind. App. 439.

SUBDISTRICT

Code Supp. 1907, § 1989a23, provides that if any person owns lands within a drainage district which has been assessed for benefits, and which is separated from the ditch by the land of others, and shall desire to drain his land across the land of such others into the ditch, and shall be unable to agree on the terms on which he may enter on their lands and construct such ditch, he may file a petition, asking the board of supervisors to establish a subdistrict within the limits of the original district to secure more complete drainage, describing the lands to be affected, and that all other proceedings shall be the same as provided for the establishment of original districts. By Acts 33d Gen. Assem. c. 118, § 22, it was provided that additional lands within any district which were benefited by an improvement might be included therein. Held, that the terms "subdistrict" and "original district" in section 1989a23 were used in contradistinction to each other, the term "original district" not having been used in the earlier statute in contradistinction to the annexed territory provided for by section 1989a54, as added by Acts 33d Gen. Assem. c. 118, § 22; and hence the phrase "within the limits of the original district" in section 1989a23 must be deemed as applicable to annexed territory as to the lands originally included in the district, so that it is not necessary to the annexation of territory to a district that it shall have been within the original territory. Bird v. Board of Sup'rs of Harrison County, 135 N. W. 581, 584, 154 Iowa, 692.

See Legal Subdivision; Political Subdivision.

Stock Law Act (Acts 1903, p. 432) § 2, authorizes the holding of elections for the establishment of stock laws, and provides a "precinct" as the minimum territory for which an election is authorized to be held for that purpose. Act Sept. 29, 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 437) § 16, relating to the termination of an existing stock law, authorizes a petition "to secure an order for an election to repeal existing stock laws signed by a majority of the landowners of the county or precinct or subdivision whose land lies outside of any incorporated city or town." Held, that the term "subdivision," as used in section 16, should be construed to mean a "subdivision" already existing and definitely fixed by some law, so that the commissioners' court of a county had no jurisdiction to order an election for the disestablishment of an existing stock law in a precinct, in so far as it affected a portion only of such precinct. Caudle v. Commissioners' Court of Talladega County, 39 South. 307, 308, 144 Ala. 502.

The word "subdivision," as used in the amendment adopted in 1891 to Const. 1876, art. 16, § 20, providing that the Legislature shall enact a law whereby the voters of "any county, justice precinct, town or city by a majority vote from time to time may determine whether the sale of intoxicating liquors shall be prohibited within the prescribed limits," by inserting after the word "city" the parenthetical clause "or such subdivision of a county as may be designated by the commissioners' court," does not refer to the county, justice precinct, city or town. The amendment simply contemplated authority to hold local option elections in subdivisions not previously mentioned, and it was not intended, by using the word "subdivision," to give a different meaning or standing to those already enumerated, or in any manner to qualify them. The commissioners' court has no authority to combine subdivisions of a county for the purpose of a local option election. Ex parte Mills, 79 S. W. 555, 556, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 224.

A school district is not a "subdivision," within Const. art. 16, § 20, providing that the Legislature should enact a law whereby the voters of any county, justice's precinct, etc., or such other subdivision of a county, may by a majority vote determine whether the sale of intoxicants shall be prohibited within the prescribed limits; and a local option election held in a school district is without authority of law and void. Ex parte Haney, 103 S. W. 1155, 1156, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 634; Ex parte Banks (Tex.) 103 S. W. 1156.

The word "subdivision," as used in the Constitution, means some known political subdivision of a county, and is restrictive of the power of the Legislature to create or carve out other subdivisions for local option purposes. Election precincts not being of a permanent character, but subject to annual changes, and not constituting political subdivisions of a county for purposes of government or election of officers, are not such subdivisions of a county as may be designated by the commissioners' court for the holding of local option election. Eldred v. State, 80 S. W. 529, 530, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 582.

SUBDIVISION OF STATE

County as, see County.

Municipal corporation as, see Municipal Corporation.

SUBJECT

See Foreign Citizen or Subject; Single Subject.

According to Webster's Dictionary, the word "subject" means "liable, subordinate, obedient, submissive." As used in a lease for two years, which provided that at its expiration the lessee should have the option of renewing it "from one to five terms of two years each, subject only to a sale of such property," the words "subject to sale" related to the word "option" and not to the words "from one to five terms of two years each," so that a sale of the property before the expiration of the last renewal period did not terminate the lease, especially where, before the expiration of the first term, the lease was renewed for two years, and thereafter for two more terms of two years each; the lessees giving notes for the monthly rent and the lessors collecting them up to the time of the sale of the property. People's Bank & Trust Co. v. Tessler Hardware Co., 45 South. 624, 626, 154 Ala. 103.

According to Webster's Dictionary, the word "subject" is synonymous with the word "liable," and the word "liable" denotes something external which may befall us. "Subject" refers to evils which arise chiefly from external necessity and are likely to so arise; hence the word "subject" applies more to what is accidental, and the word "liable" to things from which we often inevitably suffer. The word "subject," as used in Const. art. 1, § 5, declaring that all oaths shall be taken "subject" to the pains and penalties of perjury, means that persons who take an oath are "liable" to the pains and penalties of perjury, if that oath is violated. Since Pen. Code 1895, art. 34, declares that no person shall in any case be convicted of an offense committed before he was nine years old, a person under nine years of age cannot be a witness in a case involving life or liberty. Frazier v. State (Tex.) 84 S. W. 360, 362.

According to Webster, the word "liable" denotes something external which may befall us; "subject" refers to evils which arise chiefly from internal necessity, and are likely to do so. Hence the former applies more to what is accidental; the latter to things from which we often or inevitably suffer." Therefore the provision of the general drain law that an application for the establishment of a drain shall be signed by not less than ten freeholders, five or more of whom shall be owners of land "liable" to assessment for benefits in the construction of such drain, means that at least five of the signers must be persons who may properly be assessed for benefits, and, as so construed, is not subject to the objection of being impossible of enforcement. Albert v. Gibson, 105 N. W. 19, 21, 141 Mich. 698 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4110).

The words "under" and "subject" in a deed import that the grantee takes subject to an incumbrance, the amount of which has been deducted from the price, and a covenant is inferred that the grantee will protect the grantor therefrom. Faulkner v. McHenry, 83 Atl. 827, 828, 235 Pa. 298, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 1151.

A trust company, agreeing to hold bonds for another "subject" to the lien which it has on them, and to any proceeding taken to realize on default, and to hold them as trustee, "subject to and after satisfying therefrom all" of its claims, has no duty to perform which prevents it from purchasing the bonds on default. Shepard & Morse Lumber Co. v. Hurd, 112 N. Y. Supp. 401, 403, 128 App. Div. 28.

Subjects connected with testamentary disposition

Where instructions in a will contest charged that, if testator was laboring under an insane delusion on "subjects connected with the testamentary disposition of his property" and the natural objects of his bounty when he made his will, he was not of sound mind, the words quoted meant any person, matter, or thing connected with the testamentary disposition of his property, and included the persons to whom devises were made as well as the things devised. Snell v. Weldon, 90 N. E. 1061, 1073, 243 Ill. 496.

SUBJECT (Of Action)

See, also, Subject-Matter.

"The 'subject' of an action is the thing; the wrongful act for which damages are sought; the contract which is broken; the act which is sought to be restrained; the property of which recovery is asked." Lasater v. Norfolk & C. R. Co., 48 S. E. 642, 643, 136 N. C. 89, 1 Ann. Cas. 456.

The phrase "subject of action," as used in the statute in respect of possessory and proprietary actions, whether involving real or personal property, embraces plaintiff's primary right, together with the specific property itself. McArthur v. Moffet, 128 N. W. 445, 446, 143 Wis. 564, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 264.

As cause of action

The phrase "subject of the action" is different from "cause of action," and signifies the ultimate or primary title, right, or interest which a plaintiff seeks to enforce or protect; not merely the wrong to be redressed in the particular case. This is the meaning of the words "subject of action," as used in the statute relating to counterclaims, and declaring that counterclaims are claims connected with the subject of the action. In replevin for chattels mortgaged to secure payment for a binder which plaintiff sold defendant, but afterwards took from him with his consent, the subject of the action is neither the chattels mentioned in the complaint nor their unlawful detention by defendant, but plaintiff's claim against the defendant on the notes and chattel mortgage. Plaintiff's right to the property depends entirely on whether the notes have been paid and the lien of the mortgage thereby destroyed. The indebtedness was therefore the subject of the action, and its existence the fact in dispute. Therefore a counterclaim on a money demand may be set up for affirmative relief as well as to defeat the plaintiff's claim, and a counterclaim alleging that plaintiff's claim to the chattels arose from a chattel mortgage given to secure payment for the binder, and that he had already been overpaid, and demanding judgment for the amount overpaid, was proper, being connected with the subject of the action. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Hill, 79 S. W. 745, 750, 104 Mo. App. 544.

The phrase, "cause of action," has reference to an action at law, and is not synonymous with the phrase, "subject of the action," which relates to proceedings where specific relief is sought rather than a judgment against the person. Stewart v. Templeton, 106 Pac. 640, 641, 55 Or. 364.

Rev. St. § 5063, provides that, if no objection be taken either by demurrer or by answer, the defendant shall be deemed to have waived the same, except only the objections that the court has no jurisdiction of the subject of the action, and that the petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The phrase "subject of the action" is not strictly synonymous with "cause of the action," although they are often used interchangeably. The subject-matter of an action is the abstract subject of judicial inquiry; for example, the infliction of a penalty for violation of a statutory duty. The subject of an action, in its strict sense, is the subject-matter applied to a particular case, as the right of the plaintiff in the case to recover a penalty for violation of the statute. Baltimore & O. R. R. v. Hallenberger, 81 N. E. 184, 186, 76 Ohio St. 177 (citing Black, Dict.; Chicago & A. Ry. Co. v. Sutton, 30 N. E. 291, 130 Ind. 405; Hunt v. Hunt, 72 N. Y. 217, 230, 28 Am. Rep. 129; Bliss, Code Pl. [3d Ed.] § 126; Pow. Code Rem. [4th Ed.] § 369).

In section 5623 of the statute (Comp. Laws 1909), which provides that several causes of action may be united in the same petition, where they arise out of the same transaction, or transactions connected with the same subject of action, the term "cause of action" means a redressible wrong. Its elements being the wrong and the relief provided. The "subject of action" is a primary right and its infringement. The term "transaction" is used in the first clause with reference to, and expressive of, all the acts, or groups of related acts, which go to make up one entire project, system, or deal, referred to as a "transaction," and in the latter clause it is used to include and encompass only such acts, or groups of acts, as in themselves constitute separate, redressible wrongs; and such wrongs (transactions) are connected with the same "subject of action" whenever they affect, grow out of, or constitute separate infringements of, the same primary right. Stone v. Case, 124 Pac. 960, 963, 34 Okl. 5, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1168.

As facts constituting cause of action

The words "subject of action," in Code Civ. Proc. § 691, relating to counterclaims connected with the subject, should be construed, not as relating to the thing itself about which the controversy has arisen, but as referring rather to the origin and grounds of the plaintiff's right to recover or obtain the relief asked. Potter v. Lohse, 77 Pac. 419, 420, 31 Mont. 91 (citing Collier v. Ervin, 3 Mont. 142).

The words "subject of the action," in the statute, should be construed, not as relating to the thing itself about which the controversy has arisen, but as referring rather to the origin and ground of the plaintiff's right to recover or obtain the relief asked. An action in claim and delivery for furniture of plaintiff lessee seized by defendant lessor under an alleged lien for rent being for the wrongful taking of the property, the cause of action alleged in defendant's counterclaim for water, rent, plumbing, etc., or damages to the building, did not arise out of the same transaction, and was not connected with the "subject of action." Osmer v. Furey, 81 Pac. 345, 349, 32 Mont. 581.

"The words 'subject of the action' mean the facts constituting plaintiff's cause of action." In re Harper, 175 Fed. 412, 421.

The "subject" of plaintiff's action is his right and the invasion of that right by defendant. It is nothing more or less than the facts constituting the plaintiff's cause of action. Telulah Paper Co. v. Patten Paper Co., 112 N. W. 522, 524, 132 Wis. 425; Brahm v. M. C. Gehl Co., 112 N. W. 1097, 1099, 132 Wis. 674.

The phrase "subject of the action," in Code Civ. Proc. § 501, allowing a counterclaim where it is connected with the subject of the action, means the plaintiff's principal, primary right, to enforce which the action was brought. Steinmetz v. Cosmopolitan Range Co., 94 N. Y. Supp. 456, 47 Misc. Rep. 611.

"Subject of the action," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 501, providing that a counterclaim must be connected with the subject of the action, mean the facts constituting the cause of action. Van v. Madden, 116 N. Y. Supp. 1115, 1117, 132 App. Div. 535.

SUBJECT (Of Insurance)

An insurance policy on household goods, which provided that it should be void if the "subject of insurance," being personal property, should be or become incumbered by a chattel mortgage, is not rendered void by a mortgage on a part of the property at the time the policy was executed, where the value of the unincumbered portion exceeds the amount of the insurance on all the goods, as "subject of insurance" means all property covered by the policy. Mecca Fire Ins. Co. of Waco v. Wilderspin (Tex.) 118 S. W. 1131, 1132.

SUBJECT (Of Statute)

See, also, Substance.

As used in the constitutional provision that an act shall contain but one subject, the term "subject" is to be given a broad and extended meaning, so as to allow the Legislature full scope to include in one act all matters having a logical or natural connection. To constitute duplicity of subject, an act must embrace two or more dissimilar and discordant subjects that by no fair intentment can be considered as having any legitimate connection with or relation to each other. In re Atwell's Estate, 101 N. W. 946, 947, 93 Minn. 462.

The word "subject," as used in a constitutional requirement that only one subject should be embraced in an act, and that it should be described in the title, is very indefinite. A phrase may state the subject in a very general or indefinite manner, or with minute particularity. Act Dec. 10, 1900 (Laws 1900-01, p. 239), providing that all grants, rights, privileges, and franchises which the city council of M. has heretofore granted or attempted to grant to any railroad company, and which have been accepted and utilized for railroad purposes, be and the same are hereby legalized, ratified, and confirmed, does not contain more than one subject, in violation of the Constitution. State ex rel. Attorney General v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 48 South. 391, 393, 158 Ala. 208 (citing Ex parte Pollard, 40 Ala. 77).

A provision in a legislative enactment that it should be suspended until the passage of certain other legislation is not a part of the "subject" of the act within the purview of Const. 1901, § 45, providing that each law shall contain but one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title. State v. Montgomery (Ala.) 59 South. 294, 298.

An ordinance regulating the speed of trains, prohibiting the obstruction of streets and sidewalks by them, making it unlawful for those not employed thereon to get on or off while in motion, and making the acts criminal and providing punishment therefor, does not contain more than one "subject" within Code, § 681, providing that no ordinance shall contain more than one subject. Trout v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co., 126 N. W. 799, 800, 148 Iowa, 135.

As matter acted on

As used in Const. art. 4, § 19, requiring that every act shall embrace but one subject and matters properly connected therewith, which subject shall be expressed in the title, the word "subject" refers to the thing about which the legislation is had, and the word "matters" includes subordinate and incidental things relating to the same general subject. The title of an act was "An act to amend sections 1, 4, and 5, of an act entitled 'An act concerning street railroad companies, granting additional rights and powers therein specified and matters relating thereto, and declaring an emergency.' * * *" The general subject of the act was street railroad companies, and a provision giving power to acquire ground for the construction of lines for the transmission of electricity for light, heat, and power, and was not violative of the constitutional provision. Mull v. Indianapolis & C. Traction Co., 81 N. E. 657, 659, 169 Ind. 214 (citing State v. Gerhardt, 44 N. E. 469, 145 Ind. 439, 33 L. R. A. 313; Maule Coal Co. v. Partenhelmer, 55 N. E. 751, 57 N. E. 710, 155 Ind. 101; Parks v. State, 64 N. E. 862, 159 Ind. 211, 59 L. R. A. 190).

As object

The word "subject" is broader than the word "object," and one subject may contain many objects. Ex parte Hernan, 77 S. W. 225, 226, 45 Tex. Cr. R. 343.

Provision distinguished

Const. art. 4, § 13, providing that no act shall embrace more than one subject, which shall be expressed in the title, prevents the joining in one act of incongruous and unrelated matters, since the word "subject" is not synonymous with the word "provision," and is not directed against the title, but the act itself; and any act may contain many provisions for the accomplishment of the legislative purpose provided they legitimately tend to effectuate the object of the act, and, where all the provisions relate to one subject indicated in the title, and are parts of or incident to it, or reasonably connected with it, the act is valid. People v. McBride, 84 N. E. 865, 868, 234 Ill. 146, 123 Am. St. Rep. 82, 14 Ann. Cas. 994.

Related matters included

The word "subject," within Const. art. 4, § 13, which requires the subject of an act to be expressed in the title, means the matter or thing forming the groundwork of the act, and may contain many parts which grow out of it and are germane to it, and which, if traced back, will lead the mind to it as the generic head. People v. Sargent, 98 N. E. 959, 961, 254 Ill. 514; Board of Com'rs of Marion County v. Scanlan, 98 N. E. 801, 802, 178 Ind. 142.

The title of Acts 1906, p. 549, entitled "An act relating to revenue and taxation, providing for license taxes on compounded, rectified, adulterated, or blended distilled spirits, and providing penalties for violations of its provisions," expresses but "one subject," within Const. § 51, requiring that an act shall relate to only "one subject" which shall be expressed in the title; the constitutional provision receiving a reasonable and not a technical construction. Brown-Foreman Co. v. Commonwealth, 101 S. W. 321, 323, 125 Ky. 402.

The caption of Acts 1899, c. 94, entitled "A general act relating to negotiable instruments, being an act to establish a law uniform with the laws of other states on that subject," is broad enough to cover the entire field of the negotiable instrument law, and embraces a section declaring that cancellation made unintentionally or under a mistake, without authority of the holder, is inoperative, and that, where an instrument or signature thereon appears to have been canceled, the burden of proof lies on the party who alleges that the cancellation was made unintentionally or under a mistake or without authority, and the act is valid within Const. art. 2, § 17, providing that no bill shall become a law which embraces more than "one subject," which shall be expressed in the title. Gilley v. Harrell, 101 S. W. 424, 426, 118 Tenn. 115.

Substance synonymous

The word "substance," as used in the Constitution providing that the notice of the intention to apply for the passage of a local law shall state the substance thereof, is not synonymous with "subject" or mere purpose, but it means the essential or material part, essence, abstract, compendium, meaning. Ex parte Black, 40 South. 133, 134, 144 Ala. 1.

SUBJECT-MATTER

See, also, Subject (Of Action).

The "subject-matter" is defined by Black as "the thing in controversy." "Subject-matter" as applied to jurisdiction, is the matter or thing which it is desired to reach by legal proceedings. Holmes v. Mason, 115 N. W. 770, 80 Neb. 454.

The phrase "subject-matter," as used in the inquiry as to jurisdiction, means the thing in issue, or the authority of a court to exercise judicial power over the class of cases or proceedings to which the one under consideration applies. Wayne v. Alspach, 118 Pac. 1033, 1035, 20 Idaho, 144.

The "subject-matter of a suit," when reference is made to questions of jurisdiction, means the nature of the cause of action, and the relief sought. State ex rel. McManus v. Muench, 117 S. W. 25, 29, 217 Mo. 124, 129 Am. St. Rep. 536 (citing Hope v. Blair, 16 S. W. 597, 105 Mo. 85, 24 Am. St. Rep. 366).

The term "subject-matter of the action," which was in use before the Code, is defined as "the cause, the object, the thing in dispute," and, when applied to an action where conflicting claims to realty were in issue, meant the real property itself. McArthur v. Moffet, 128 N. W. 445, 446, 143 Wis. 564, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 264.

"Subject-matter of the action" rather describes the physical facts of the things, real or personal, the money, lands, chattels, and the like in relation to which the suit is prosecuted." In a suit in a federal court of equity to establish and protect rights in the waters of a stream against other separate appropriators of waters from the same stream, all of whom are citizens of different states from complainant, the court may entertain cross-bills by any or all of the several defendants setting up priority of right as against complainant or their codefendants, since they relate to the subject of the original suit, which is the water of the stream, and, being ancillary to the original suit, the court has jurisdiction to determine the issues raised thereby without regard to the citizenship of the parties thereto. Ames Realty Co. v. Big Indian Min. Co., 146 Fed. 166, 170 (quoting and adopting the definition in Pom. Code Rem. § 369).

Cause of action synonymous

"Cause of action," in the sense used in the common-law rule that a plea of abatement must show that a prior action is pending before the same parties for the same cause, is not synonymous with "subject-matter." A plea in abatement has not been changed by the Code, but remains as at common law, and must show that a prior action is pending between the same parties for the same cause, as distinguished from actions for different causes, though depending in whole or in part on the same subject-matter. Tyler v. Standard Wine Co., 102 N. Y. Supp. 65, 67, 52 Misc. Rep. 374.

Under Kirby's Dig. § 6005, providing that all persons having an interest in the subject of an action, and in obtaining the relief demanded, may be joined as plaintiffs, etc., the "subject-matter of the action" is not the "cause of the action," nor the object of the action, but rather describes physical facts, the things real or personal in relation to which the suit is prosecuted, and hence, as in a mortgage foreclosure suit, all the mortgagees have an interest in the subject-matter of the action, and, in obtaining the relief demanded, a senior and junior mortgagee may join in a foreclosure complaint. Porter v. Hamill, 128 S. W. 570, 571, 95 Ark. 97.

The term "cause of action" is not synonymous with "subject-matter," within the rules governing pleas in abatement, for pendency between the same parties of another action for the same cause, and the pendency of an action on an insurance policy is not a bar to an action by the insurer to reform the policy for mistake. National Fire Ins. Co. of Hartford v. Hughes, 81 N. E. 562, 563, 189 N. Y. 84, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 907.

The "subject-matter of the action," in personal injury suits, is the circumstances and the facts out of which the cause of action arises. McAndrews v. Chicago, L. S. & E. R. Co., 162 Fed. 856, 858, 89 C. C. A. 546.

Property distinguished

When conferring jurisdiction of nonresidents upon courts, a sharp distinction has always been drawn between the word "property" and the term "subject-matter" of the action. The latter term signifies the nature of the cause of action and of the relief sought. It relates to the right to prosecute the particular suit and to obtain the relief demanded, while the word "property" is used in quite a different sense as denoting something tangible, or at least something which may be subjected to the process of the court, as in the case of attachment or garnishment. It is the res, and not the mere right, in the particular action, to sue for damages. Duckworth v. Mull, 55 S. E. 850, 854, 143 N. C. 461.

SUBJECT-MATTER INVOLVED

Under the statute (Laws 1905, c. 724, § 32) authorizing the acquisition by the city of New York of land for a water supply, and providing for allowances for counsel fees "not in excess of Code Civ. Proc. § 3253," and section 3254, providing for an additional allowance of not more than 5 per cent. on the value of the subject-matter, the allowance must be computed on the award of the commissioners, without reference to interest under the statute from the date of the vesting of the title in the city; the "subject-matter involved" at the time of the appointment of the commissioners and the beginning of their work being the market value of the property at the time it was taken and the title vested in the city. In re Board of Water Supply of City of New York, 133 N. Y. Supp. 213, 214, 75 Misc. Rep. 150.

SUBJECT TO See Under And Subject To.

According to the Century Dictionary, to be "subject to" is "to become subservient to," or "subordinate to," and to "control" is defined as "to exercise a directing, restraining, or governing influence over; to direct; to counteract; to regulate." Coffey v. Superior Court of Sacramento County, 82 Pac. 75, 79, 147 Cal. 525.

An agreement between defendants, who were creditors of an insolvent brokerage firm, and plaintiff's testator, provided that the latter would make such advances to the firm as he might desire to enable it to continue business, and that defendants would at all times "subject" their claims against the firm to the repayment by the firm of the advances. Held, that the agreement bound defendants to subordinate their rights to the testator's right to preferential payment in case of distribution of the assets of the firm in liquidation, but did not bind them to hold as trustees for the testator moneys voluntarily paid them out of the firm's profits after he ceased making advances, and hence defendants could not be required to repay the same to plaintiffs, whose judgment against the firm for the advances remained unsatisfied. Duryea v. Lohrke, 121 N. Y. Supp. 138, 141, 136 App. Div. 555.

Subject to arrival

Plaintiff offered to sell defendants, subject to arrival, one car load of refined powdered white arsenic from a lot "we have engaged for November shipment from Europe to New York," for arrival there early in December, at a specified price per hundred, which offer defendants accepted in terms. Held, that the words "subject to arrival" referred to the goods which were the subject of the contract, implying a condition that, unless the goods did arrive, the seller was not responsible for nondelivery and the purchaser not liable for the price; and hence, the goods never having been shipped from Europe because of the European seller's breach of contract, defendant could not recover damages for plaintiff's failure to deliver. Penn-American Plate Glass Co. v. Harshaw, Fuller & Goodwin Co., 90 N. E. 1047, 1051, 46 Ind. App. 645.

Subject to countermand

See Not Subject to Countermand.

Subject to dower

Where a levy on land described it as all that tract of land in a specified county, on which H. lived at the time of his death, containing 1,666 $\frac{2}{3}$  acres, subject to the widow's dower in 701 acres, the words "subject to the widow's dower" indicated that the fee in the whole tract was levied on, and was to be sold subject only to the life estate of the widow in that portion of the land which had been set aside to her as dower. Hawkins v. Johnson, 62 S. E. 285, 289, 131 Ga. 347.

Subject to easement

A contract to convey land "subject to an easement" meant that the deed should contain a clause describing a reservation of an easeinent. Johnson v. Sherwood, 73 N. E. 180, 186, 34 Ind. App. 490.

Subject to execution

St. § 4130, provides that the sheriff shall give a revenue bond for the collection of taxes, and that in no case shall sureties be accepted who are not jointly worth, subject to execution, a sum equal to the aggregate amount of money which the sheriff will probably receive, and that the commonwealth, etc., shall have a lien on the sheriff's real estate, which shall not be discharged until the money for which he may be liable shall have been paid. Held, that the words "subject to execution" had no reference to the county's lien on the sheriff's real estate, and hence such lien was not subject to the sheriff's homestead exemption. Baker v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland (Ky.) 73 S. W. 1025, 1026.

Subject to fire

It is not necessary to prove that there have been fires on land to show that the land is "subject to fires" within the statute as to the removal of inflammable material from a right of way passing through forest lands or lands subject to fire; but the kind of growth and material on it would determine the question. Higgins v. Long Island R. Co., 114 N. Y. Supp. 262, 264, 129 App. Div. 415.

Subject to garnishment

As used in Civ. Code Ga. 1895, § 4719, providing that, if the court shall decide that the fund in the hands of a garnishee was subject to garnishment had the garnishment not been dissolved, the court shall then render judgment against the defendant and his securities, the phrase "subject to garnishment" referred to such fund as might be brought in subjection to garnishment, and hence applied only to demands resting in contract, which the defendant could enforce in an action at law. A. Klipstein & Co. v. Allen-Miles Co., 136 Fed. 385, 391, 69 C. C. A. 229.

Subject to investigation

The phrase "subject to legal investigation," in a sale of real estate at auction subject to legal investigation, means that the purchaser would buy with the privilege reserved on his part to decline the bargain if he discovered on examination of the abstract that the title of the vendor of the property was defective. Middleton v. Findla, 25 Cal. 76, 81.

Subject to mortgage

Taking a deed containing a recital that the premises are "subject to a mortgage" does not import a promise on the part of the purchaser to pay the mortgage debt. Capitol Nat. Bank v. Holmes, 95 Pac. 314, 316, 43 Colo. 154, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 470, 127 Am. St. Rep. 108 (citing 1 Jones, Mortg. § 865; Strong v. Converse, 90 Mass. [8 Allen] 557, 85 Am. Dec. 732; Campbell v. Knights, 24 Me.

332; Weed Sewing Machine Co. v. Emerson, 115 Mass. 554; Belmont v. Coman, 22 N. Y. 438, 78 Am. Dec. 213).

Where a conveyance of land is expressly qualified as being "subject to a mortgage," the covenants in the deed, though absolute, apply only to the equity of redemption, which is all that such a deed purports to convey. A deed described the land conveyed, as "subject * * * to one certain trust deed incumbrance, * * * which said incumbrance has been assumed by" a third person, and contained a general covenant of warranty against all incumbrances except for taxes for a designated year, which the grantee agreed to pay. It was held that the covenant of warranty was not a covenant that the third person would pay the trust deed at maturity, but applied only to the estate conveyed, which was an equity of redemption; the statement that the incumbrance had been assumed by the third person being at most an added identification of the incumbrance. Miller v. De Graffenried, 95 Pac. 941, 942, 43 Colo. 306, 15 Ann. Cas. 981.

Subject to objection

The phrase "subject to objection," used by the court in response to objections, may mean, in a literal sense, that the evidence objected to is subject to (i. e., controlled by) the objection, or that it was admitted temporarily, and the objection held in the breast of the court sub judice, to be afterwards disposed of during the trial, or it may mean that the court notes the objection and considers it unnecessary and declines to rule on it. Such rulings, if rulings they be, are vague in legal intendment, and are shorn of all precision. Morrison v. Turnbaugh, 91 S. W. 152, 155, 192 Mo. 427.

Subject to overflow

In section 2 of the Drainage Laws of 1905, p. 306, c. 215, providing that "any drainage district may include lands within the county subject to overflow from the same natural water course, whether the same be situated partly within and partly without or wholly within or without any incorporated city," the expression "subject to overflow" is not a restriction of the power to include lands which, although not subject to actual overflow, are nevertheless subject to injury and damages from the overflow of other lands. Roby v. Shunganunga Drainage Dist., 95 Pac. 399, 400, 77 Kan. 754.

Subject to penalty

In a contract for the building of a structure to be completed by a certain date, a provision that the contractor should be "subject to a penalty" of $100 per day for any delay beyond such time is not to be construed as fixing the measure of recovery for such a breach, where there is no reason why the actual damages cannot be ascertained. Stephens v. Phoenix Bridge Co., 139 Fed. 248, 249, 71 C. C. A. 374.

Subject to reservation

Where a deed created a water power easement by reservation and subsequent conveyances under which complainant acquired title were "subject to" reservations in the original deed, the words "subject to" were words of qualification only, showing the grantor's purpose not to grant an absolute title, but one subject to the rights reserved in the original deed, and did not give to the reservation any force or meaning beyond that given by the deed containing it, so that, the easement having terminated by the destruction of certain buildings on which it depended, complainant was not estopped by his deed from interfering with defendant's alleged continued right to the use of the easement. Percival v. Williams, 74 Atl. 321, 327, 82 Vt. 531.

Subject to restriction

The deed to a lot contained the restrictions that the front of any residence built thereon should not be less than 40 feet west of the east line of the lot, and that no other building except a residence should be built on the front half of the lot; but the deed contained no restrictions as to the back half of the lot. Subsequently defendant came into possession of part of the back half of the lot by a deed providing that the conveyance should be "subject to" the restrictions in the former deed. Held, that such restrictions, not originally referring to the back half of the original lot, were not made applicable thereto by defendant's deed; the phrase "subject to" meaning under the control, power, or dominion of, or subordinate to, and, not being words of contract, imposing upon defendant no contractual obligations. Van Duyn v. H. S. Chase & Co., 128 N. W. 300, 301, 149 Iowa, 222.

Subject to same risks

Where defendant reinsured wheat alleged to have been contained in a certain warehouse, when, in fact, it was an elevator, subject to a higher rate of premium, a subsequent clause in the policy that it was "subject to the same risks," valuations, conditions, and adjustments as might have been taken by the reinsured did not render defendant liable on such policy. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Aachen & Munich Fire Ins. Co., 84 Pac. 253-256, 2 Cal. App. 690.

Subject to taxes

An agreement to convey land "subject to taxes" meant that the deed should contain a clause describing a reservation of taxes in the covenant against incumbrances. Johnson v. Sherwood, 73 N. E. 180, 186, 34 Ind. App. 490.

Subject to tenancy

Where the present landlords and their predecessors in title accepted deeds "subject to existing tenancies," and found tenants in actual possession, they must be presumed to have ascertained and know the nature, extent, and terms of these tenancies, and of the leases under which they were held; for the fact of an existing tenancy necessarily presupposes a lease of some kind. Anderson v. Conner, 87 N. Y. Supp. 449, 451, 43 Misc. Rep. 384.

SUBJECTIVE SYMPTOMS

Objective symptoms are those which the surgeon discovers from a physical examination of his patient, while "subjective symptoms" are those he learns from what his patient tells him. Dean v. Wabash R. Co., 129 S. W. 953, 957, 229 Mo. 425.

SUBLEASE

See, also, Subtenant.

A covenant in a coal lease against assigning or subleasing without the consent of the lessor, when relied on as a ground of forfeiture, will be given a strict construction in equity, and a contract between such a lessee and a mining company, by which the latter was given possession of the lessee's plant and equipment and agreed to mine the property and load the coal in cars for the lessee, which retained the ownership and paid for the work, was merely a working contract, and not a "sublease" within the meaning of such a covenant. St. Louis Union Trust Co. v. Galloway Coal Co., 193 Fed. 106, 115.

Assignment distinguished

See Assignment.

SUBLETTING

Assignment distinguished, see Assignment.

The employment by a farm tenant of a third person to work thereon, to whom is given possession of a house on the premises, does not constitute a "subletting" of any part of the premises, within the provision of the lease prohibiting a subletting without the written consent of the landlord. Vincent v. Crane, 97 N. W. 34, 35, 134 Mich. 700.

A "subletting" is where the lessee demises the whole or a part of the premises for a portion of the unexpired term. Thus where a lessee relet two rooms of the demised premises to another, such rooms and the rest of the premises being occupied thereafter by different families, there was a subletting of the property within Rev. St. 1895, art. 3250, prohibiting a tenant from subletting without the consent of the landlord, which operated as a forfeiture of the lease, and entitled the landlord to recover possession. Hudgins v. Bowes, 110 S. W. 178, 179.

SUBMERGED LAND

As land, see Land.

As tide land, see Tide Lands.

SUBMISSION

See Final Submission.

"'Submission to arbitration' may be defined as the agreement by which parties refer disputed or doubtful matters pending between them to the final decision and award of another party, whether one person or more; the party to whom the reference is made is called an 'arbitrator'; the arbitration is the investigation and determination of the matters of difference between the contending parties by the arbitrator so chosen; and the 'award' is the decree or judgment of the arbitrator, and is generally conclusive in its effect." Millsaps v. Estes, 50 S. E. 227, 228, 137 N. C. 535, 70 L. R. A. 170, 107 Am. St. Rep. 496.

Under an agreement for appraisal made pursuant to the terms of a standard fire insurance policy, one appraiser learned the opinion of the other as to the amount of loss, and thought he would be unable to agree upon that amount, and subsequently conferred with the umpire with a view to agreement with him. Later, upon the other appraiser expressing satisfaction with the umpire's figures, the first appraiser suspected collusion and withdrew from the appraisal. Held, that his conduct amounted to a "submission" of the matter to the umpire, his withdrawal came too late, and an award by the umpire and the other appraiser was binding. Garrebrant v. Continental Ins. Co., 67 Atl. 90, 93, 75 N. J. Law, 577, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 443.

SUBMIT

See Duly Submitted; Properly Submitted.

The more usual definition of the term "submit" is "to commit to the discretion of another." Board of Education of Cherokee County v. Board of Com'rs of Cherokee County, 63 S. E. 724, 729, 150 N. C. 116.

Where it is announced by the justice at the conclusion of trial "Decision reserved," the case is "submitted" within Municipal Court Act (Laws 1902, p. 1557, c. 580) § 230, allowing the justice for rendering judgment 14 days from the time the case is submitted. Moschauer v. Jenkins, 112 N. Y. Supp. 1038, 1039, 128 App. Div. 825.

A justice's docket showed that the evidence in an action was heard on August 5th, on which date the attorneys on both sides agreed to file a brief, and the court took the cause under advisement, that on August 7th plaintiff's attorney filed a brief and on August 12th defendant's attorney filed a brief, and that on the same day judgment was entered. Held that, construing the record as a whole, it did not show that the cause was "submitted to the justice for final action" on August 5th within the meaning of Code, §

4522, requiring judgment to be rendered within three days after such submission, but did show a postponement of such submission by agreement until after the filing of briefs. Moir v. Bourke (Iowa) 137 N. W. 921, 922.

In Liquor Tax Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 34), § 13, providing that, if the four propositions shall not have been properly submitted at the biennial town meeting, they shall be submitted at a special town meeting duly called, to "submit" means to present and leave to the judgment of the qualified voters. In re Norton, 134 N. Y. Supp. 1030, 1032, 75 Misc. Rep. 180.

SUBMIT AND TRY

See Regularly Submit and Try.

SUBMITTED TO ELECTORS

Const. § 168, provides that changes in the boundaries of organized counties shall be submitted to the electors of the county or counties to be affected, and be adopted by a majority of all the legal votes cast at such election. Held: That the phrase "shall be submitted to the electors" means that all persons qualified to vote in the county, or counties, affected shall in a legal manner be given an opportunity to vote; that whether or not they exercise their right in no way affects the fact of submission; that the word "electors" means all persons possessing the qualifications as to residence, age, and citizenship, as prescribed by section 121, as necessary to entitle them to vote; that the phrase "votes cast" means the total of the separate votes, or expressions of voters' preference for or against such a change, and should be limited to mean the votes cast on that proposition. Held, further, that to effect such change requires merely a majority of the votes cast upon the question of a change, and not a majority of the highest number of votes cast for any candidate, or upon any proposition voted upon at the election, since to hold otherwise would be to give as much effect to the act of an elector who did not vote on such change as that of one who voted in the negative. State v. Blaisdell, 119 N. W. 360, 362, 18 N. D. 31.

SUBORDINATE

A "subordinate," as the term is used in a statute dividing the employes of railroad companies into superiors and subordinates, is an employe who has no power to direct or control in the branch or department in which he is employed. Kane v. Erie R. Co., 142 Fed. 682, 685, 73 C. C. A. 672.

SUBORDINATE OFFICER

Under the civil service law (Laws 1895, c. 313), the tax commissioner in the city of Milwaukee is the "head of a principal department," having power to appoint the ward assessors as his "subordinates" and the power to remove them, anything in the city charter, existing at the date of the enactment, to the contrary notwithstanding. State ex rel. Hayden v. Arnold, 138 N. W. 78, 84, 151 Wis. 19.

An inspector of police, an officer provided for by Greater New York Charter (Laws 1901, p. 118, c. 466) § 276, is a "subordinate officer," within section 300 and police rule 280, authorizing such an officer to prefer charges in writing against a patrolman without verification on information furnished by another person. People ex rel. Rosenberg v. Greene, 91 N. Y. Supp. 803, 804, 101 App. Div. 33.

A "subordinate officer," within the civil service law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 7), is one subject to the direction and control of a superior officer; and special agents appointed under Liquor Tax Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 34) § 7, providing that such agents shall, under the direction of the commissioner and as required by him, investigate, etc., are subordinate officers. In re Weaver, 131 N. Y. Supp. 144, 145, 72 Misc. Rep. 438.

SUBORNATION OF PERJURY

See Attempt at Subornation.

"Subornation of perjury" is the procuring of the commission of perjury by inciting, instigating, or persuading a witness to swear falsely. State v. Johnson (Del.) 84 Atl. 1040, 1041.

Where the crime of perjury is committed at the instigation or procurement of another, it is "subornation of perjury" by the party instigating it. State v. Shaffner (Del.) 69 Atl. 1004, 1005, 6 Pennewill, 576.

The crime of "subornation of perjury" consists of the commission of perjury by the person suborned and willfully procuring him to commit perjury by the suborner. Bell v. State, 63 S. E. 860, 5 Ga. App. 701.

To render one guilty of "subornation of perjury," he must not only have caused a false oath to be taken, but must have known at the time that the false oath was taken willfully, corruptly, and knowingly, so as to constitute perjury on the part of the person taking it. State v. Trook, 88 N. E. 930, 931, 172 Ind. 558 (citing United States v. Evans, 19 Fed. 912; Commonwealth v. Douglass, 46 Mass. [5 Metc.] 241; Stewart v. State, 22 Ohio St. 477; 2 Whart. Cr. Law, § 1329; 2 Bishop, Cr. Law, § 1197 [2]).

"Subornation" is in its essence "perjury," and the perpetrator of the offense a sort of an accessory before the fact, but the statute creates them as distinct offenses, and a different quantum of evidence is essential to sustain the conviction of one than the other. Under an indictment for perjury, the accused cannot be convicted of subornation of perjury. Being distinct offenses, involving essentially different acts on the part of the accused, proof of one ought not to be received in justification of an alleged libel, charging a person with having committed the other. State v. Lomack, 106 N. W. 386, 387, 130 Iowa, 79 (citing Commonwealth v. Douglass [Mass.] 5 Metc. 241; People v. Evans, 40 N. Y. 1).

Under Mills' Ann. St. § 1270, providing that if one falsely swears in a matter material to the issue, or suborns another person to swear falsely, he shall be guilty of perjury or subornation thereof, as the case may be, the crime of "subornation of perjury" cannot be committed unless the matter falsely sworn to is material. McClelland v. People, 113 Pac. 640, 641, 49 Colo. 538, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1069.

According to the Oregon statute (B. & C. Comp. § 1875), one who procures any other to commit the crime of perjury is guilty of "subornation of perjury." State v. Jewett, 85 Pac. 994, 996, 48 Or. 577.

Procuring entryman to make false affidavits constituted "subornation of perjury," as defined by Rev. St. 5393. Nickell v. United States, 161 Fed. 702, 707, 88 C. C. A. 562.

SUBPOENA

Service of Subpoena, see Service (In Practice).

A "writ of subpoena" in equity is a command that something be done and is an order of court. Leas & McVitty v. Merriman, 132 Fed. 510, 513.

The "summons" referred to in Civ. Code 1902, § 3130, providing for certain fees of witnesses in the courts of common pleas and probate, for every day's attendance on "summons," is not a mere verbal or written notice from the party, but is the "subpoena" referred to in section 2861, authorizing the issuance of subpoenas for witnesses, and requiring a subpoena to state at whose request the witness is summoned. "Summons" and "subpoena" mean the same thing. Hence a party may not tax witness fees against the adverse party unless the witnesses were subpoenaed. Atherton v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 64 S. E. 411, 82 S. C. 474.

According to the Idaho statute (Rev. St. 1887, § 6035), a "subpoena" is "the process by which the attendance of a witness is required." Under section 6039 a witness who resides in an adjoining county and more than thirty miles from the place of trial is not obliged to attend in response to a subpoena, but the privilege of disobeying the subpoena is personal to the witness, and where he waives the privilege and attends and testifies, he is entitled to his mileage for actual and necessary travel within the state, the same as any other witness who has attended under compulsory process. Anderson v. Ferguson-Bach Sheep Co., 86 Pac. 41, 42, 12 Idaho, 418, 10 Ann. Cas. 395.

According to Code Civ. Proc. § 1985, a "subpœna" is a process "by which the attendance of a witness is required." It is the means provided by which a party may compel a witness to appear in court at the trial whether he is willing or not. The only object of the subpœna, and its only office, when complied with, is to secure his testimony by personal attendance. Since the party making a request for the attendance of a witness is liable for the statutory fee, in case the witness attends, such party is entitled to tax costs for such attendance, though the witness was not subpœnaed. Linforth v. San Francisco Gas & Electric Co., 99 Pac. 716, 717, 9 Cal. App. 434. It is a writ or order directed to a person and requiring his attendance at a particular time and place to testify as a witness. Where a subpœna regular on its face is issued out of a court of general jurisdiction, and it procures the attendance of the witness at the time and place appointed, and he is sworn and submits to a partial examination without objection, he waives any defect or irregularity in the issuance of the subpœna, and he cannot sustain the action of a judge of the superior court in refusing to direct him to complete the deposition by raising the question of the sufficiency of the subpœna for the first time in an original proceeding in the appellate court for a writ of mandate to compel the judge to require the witness to complete the deposition. In re Scott, 96 Pac. 385, 387, 8 Cal. App. 12.

As mandate

See Mandate.

As process

See Process.

SUBPŒNA AD TESTIFICANDUM

"Subpœna ad testificandum" is an expression, whatever the official hand clothed with the right to issue it, of inherent power possessed by courts having power to hear and determine controversies, to call for proofs of the facts involved and to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses before them; and process, for such purposes, is essentially judicial. Jackson v. Mobley, 47 South. 590, 592, 157 Ala. 408.

SUBPŒNA DOCKET

A "subpœna docket," in which clerks of circuit courts are required by Code 1896, § 934, subd. 6, to enter subpœnas issued, etc., is not a part of the final record in a cause, but a memorial, more permanent than the writs themselves, of the steps taken to procure testimony. Jackson v. Mobley, 47 South. 590, 592, 157 Ala. 408.

SUBPŒNA DUCES TECUM

As mandate, see Mandate.

A party is not entitled, under a "subpœna duces tecum," to have brought into court a mass of books and papers that he may search them through to gather evidence. The subpœna must specify, with as much precision as is fair and feasible, the particular documents desired. American Car & Foundry Co. v. Alexandria Water Co., 70 Atl. 867, 869, 221 Pa. 529, 128 Am. St. Rep. 749, 15 Ann. Cas. 641 (quoting and adopting 3 Wigmore, Evidence [1904] § 2200, and citing and adopting cases and authorities Cowles v. Cowles [Pa.] 2 Pen. & W. 139; Wills v. Kane [Pa.] 2 Grant, Cas. 47).

A "subpœna duces tecum" is an ancient writ. An order issued under Laws 1906, No. 75 (P. S. 4252-4256), directing a corporation to produce before a grand jury certain books and papers, is in effect the same as a "subpœna duces tecum," except that it applies to a corporation. In re Consolidated Rendering Co., 66 Atl. 790, 794, 80 Vt. 55, 11 Ann. Cas. 1069.

The familiar process by which the production of documents in the hands of third persons is secured is the "subpœna duces tecum." One upon whom such process is served is bound to produce the required document. The production thus compelled does not, however, signify a delivery of the papers into the hands of the party calling for their production or of his counsel, or a submission of them to his examination; neither does such a consequence necessarily follow. The production which the possessor of the papers is required to make consists of bringing them into court and putting them into its control. Having by this act complied with the order of production, the producer may ask the court to pass upon any claim of privilege, or to make a personal inspection of the document or documents, to determine their relevancy or their relevant parts before their submission to counsel, and to make any proper order for the protection in such submission of the interests of the producer, as, for example, by withholding from the view of counsel any irrelevant matter which he ought not to be permitted to examine. Banks v. Connecticut R. & Lighting Co., 64 Atl. 14, 15, 79 Conn. 116.

SUBPŒNAED

The allegation, in an indictment for conspiracy to prevent witnesses from attending a trial, that the witnesses were legally "subpœnaed" which under Code, § 5493 is accomplished by delivering a copy of the subpœna and showing the original to the witness, is only by way of inducement to the substance of the charge; and the variance between the allegation and the proof that a copy of the subpœna duly issued had been placed in the hands of each witness, who understood that he was required to attend court as a witness at the time and place indicated therein, was immaterial. State v. Hardin, 120 N. W. 470, 473, 144 Iowa, 264, 138 Am. St. Rep. 292

SUBROGATION

See Conventional Subrogation.

"Subrogation" is the substitution of one person in place of another, whether as a creditor or as the possessor of any rightful claim, so that he who is substituted succeeds to the rights of the other in relation to the debt or claim and its rights, remedies, or securities. The doctrine is one of equity and benevolence. Its basis is the doing of complete, essential, and perfect justice between the parties, without regard to form, and its object is the prevention of injustice. It does not necessarily rest on contract or privity, but upon principles of natural equity, and does not depend upon the act of the creditor, but may be independent of him, and also of the debtor. It applies whenever any person other than a mere volunteer pays a debt or demand which in equity or good conscience should have been satisfied by another, or where a liability of one person is discharged out of a fund belonging to another, or where a person is compelled, for his own protection or that of some interest which he represents, to pay a debt for which another is primarily liable. Robertson v. Sullivan, 59 South. 846, 847, 102 Miss. 581 (quoting 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6722).

The doctrine of "subrogation" rests fundamentally on the equitable principle that, where a party is compelled to pay a debt for which another is liable, and which that other in good conscience ought to pay, the payment should invest the party paying with the creditor's rights and remedies against the other debtor. Lackawanna Trust & Safe Deposit Co. v. Gomerlinger, 84 Atl. 757, 760, 236 Pa. 179.

"Subrogation" is the substitution of a new for an old creditor; more generally the act of putting, by transfer, a person in the place of another. The right is not founded on contract, but is a creation of equity, and is enforced for the purpose of accomplishing substantial justice. Holland Banking Co. v. See, 130 S. W. 354, 356, 146 Mo. App. 269.

"Subrogation" contemplates some original privilege on the part of him to whose place substitution is claimed; and, where no such privilege exists, there is nothing on which to base the right. Teter v. Teter, 63 S. E. 967, 65 W. Va. 167.

"Subrogation" exists to enable a party secondarily liable who has paid the debt to benefit by the securities or remedies which the creditors hold against the principal debtor. Paton v. Robinson, 71 Atl. 730, 733, 81 Conn. 547.

The right of "subrogation" is independent of any contractual relation between the parties, and may be exercised wherever one party pays a debt for which another is primarily answerable, or which in equity should have been discharged by another, except in case of one who has officiously and as a mere volunteer paid the debt of another for which neither he nor his property was answerable, or where it would work an injustice to the rights of another. Vasser v. City of Liberty, 110 S. W. 119, 121, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 111 (citing 6 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 920).

"Subrogation" is the doctrine of equity jurisprudence wherein a party, who has indemnified another in pursuance of his obligation to do so, succeeds, and is entitled to the cession of all means of redress held by the party indemnified against the one who caused the loss. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Great Lakes Engineering Works Co., 184 Fed. 426, 431, 107 C. C. A. 20, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 60.

"Subrogation" takes place where one pays a debt which another was justly liable to pay, and the payment is made to discharge the property of the person paying from an incumbrance. The right of subrogation is not founded upon contract, express or implied, but upon principles of equity and justice, and is broad enough to include every instance in which one party, not a mere volunteer, pays a debt for another, primarily liable, and which in good conscience and equity should have been paid by the latter. Alberti v. Moore, 93 Pac. 543, 548, 20 Okl. 78, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1036 (citing Lowrey v. Byers, 80 Ind. 443; Davis v. Schlemmer, 50 N. E. 373, 150 Ind. 472, 479; Cole v. Malcolm, 66 N. Y. 363; Boisot, Mech. Liens, § 263; Phil. Mech. Liens, § 260).

"Subrogation" is an equitable and not a legal right. Its foundation, it is said, is on equity and benevolence. It is a doctrine which will be applied, or not, according to the dictates of equity and good conscience, and considerations of public policy. When the case is one of the subrogation of the individual to public rights and remedies, the situation assumes an aspect not presented, where the substitution relates to private rights. Sperry v. Butler, 53 Atl. 899, 901, 75 Conn. 369.

"Subrogation" is a remedy which equity seizes upon in order to accomplish what is just and fair between the parties, when the party seeking the aid of the court and the benefit of the rule has been no mere volunteer, and when his action is based upon general equitable rules. "The doctrine of subrogation is that one who has been compelled to pay a debt which ought to have been paid by another is entitled to exercise all the remedies which the creditor possessed against the other and to indemnity from the fund out of which should have been made the payment which he has made to the creditor. It is a mode which equity adopts to compel the ultimate discharge of a debt by him who in equity and good conscience ought to pay it, and to relieve him whom only a creditor would ask to pay, although, as between debtor and creditor, the debt may be extinguished; yet, as between the person who has paid the debt and the other parties, the debt is kept alive so far as may be necessary to preserve the securities." Brinckerhoff v. Holland Trust Co., 159 Fed. 191, 200 (quoting and adopting Sheld. Subr. § 11).

"The scope of the right of 'subrogation' consists in the immediate transfer, by operation of law, to the promisor in suretyship of all the rights of the creditor against the principal whenever the promisor pays the debts or satisfies the obligation. This right of subrogation is independent of any agreement and rests upon principles of natural justice and equity." Union Stone Co. v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Hudson County, 65 Atl. 466, 471, 71 N. J. Eq. 657 (quoting Stearns, Law of Suretyship, p. 462, § 261).

"Subrogation" is an equity. It is derived from the civil law. "'Subrogation' is the equity by which a person who is secondarily liable for a debt, and has paid the same, is put in the place of the creditor, so as to entitle him to make use of all the securities and remedies possessed by the creditor in order to enforce the right of exoneration as against the principal debtor, or of contribution against others, who are liable in the same rank with himself." State ex rel. Moore v. Perkins, 38 South. 196, 198, 114 La. 301 (quoting Bish. Eq. § 335).

Assignment distinguished

If one person, not a mere interloper, but having an interest in the matter, pay the note and satisfy the mortgage of another, the question whether he becomes an assignee of the note and mortgage is one of fact and intention of the parties. If, however, overriding equities so require, one who satisfies an incumbrance upon his land may be subrogated to the rights of the lienholder, or may be entitled to an equitable assignment of such rights. "Subrogation" and equitable assignment are acts of the law as distinguished from assignment by acts of parties. We must be careful to distinguish between an assignment of the mortgage debt and a mere right of subrogation to the lien of the mortgage creditor. Assignment is the act of the parties, and depends generally upon intention. Where the nature of the transaction is such as imports a payment of the debt and a consequent discharge of the mortgage, there can, of course, be no assignment, for the lien of the mortgage is extinguished by the payment. A mortgage creditor cannot be compelled to assign the debt and mortgage upon receiving payment. All that he can be required to do is to give an acquittance and release. The exception to this rule, if it can be so termed, is found in those cases where the party making the payment occupies the position of surety to the debt, or is in some way personally bound for its payment. Such a person may, in equity, require an assignment or transfer, not only of the mortgage itself, but of all the securities held by the creditor, for his protection and indemnity, and, although no such assignment or transfer is actually made, a court of equity will treat it as having been done. But, if the party making the payment does not occupy the position of surety for the debt, as a general rule he cannot claim to be entitled as assignee unless by agreement with the creditor. Subrogation is, however, a very different thing from an assignment. It is the act of the law, and the creature of a court of equity, depending, not upon contract, but upon the principles of equity and justice. It presupposes an actual payment and satisfaction of the debt secured by the mortgage. But, although the debt is paid and satisfied, a court of equity will keep alive the lien for the benefit of the party who made the payment, provided he, as security for the debt, has such an interest in the land as entitles him to the benefit of the security given for its payment. Lynds v. Van Valkenburgh, 93 Pac. 615, 620, 77 Kan. 24 (citing Binford v. Adams, 3 N. E. 753, 104 Ind. 41; Gatewood v. Gatewood, 75 Va. 407, 410).

As a creature of equity

"'Subrogation' is of equitable origin, not dependent upon contract, and is always invoked to prevent injustice. It will never be permitted to work to the prejudice of the rights of others or produce injustice." Moring v. Privott, 60 S. E. 509, 511, 146 N. C. 558.

The doctrine of "subrogation" has its origin in equity; its purpose is indemnity; and its object is attained when the insurer has been fully compensated. The doctrine cannot be invoked to consummate injustice; it does not permit one party to secure an unfair advantage over the other; it does not permit the insurer to speculate, or profit or drive an unconscionable bargain. When he is paid in full, equity requires the return of the balance to the insured in payment of his uncompensated loss. Where a ship sunk by collision and abandoned to the insurer, being an actual total loss, is insured by a valued policy, and the stipulated sum is paid to the owner, who subsequently recovers her actual value, which exceeds her insurance value as damages from the vessel responsible for the collision, the insurer is only entitled to be reimbursed from such recovery by receiving back the amount it has paid out, with interest, and the insured is entitled to the remainder in payment of his uncompensated loss. The Livingstone, 130 Fed. 746, 749, 65 C. C. A. 610.

"'Subrogation' is a doctrine of equity jurisdiction, which does not depend on privity or contract, express or implied, except in so far as the known equity may be supposed to be imported into the transaction and, thus raise a contract by implication. It is founded on the facts and circumstances of each particular case and on the principles of natural justice. In general, it will be applied wherever any person, other than a mere volunteer, pays a debt or demand which in equity or good conscience should have been satisfied by another, or where a liability of one person is discharged out of a fund belonging to another, or where one person is compelled for his own protection, or that of some interest which he represents, to pay a debt for which another is primarily liable, or wherever the denial of the right would be contrary to equity and good conscience. Subrogation being the creature of equity, it will not be permitted where it would work injustice to the rights of those having equal or superior equities. Thus it will not be enforced against a bona fide purchaser for value without notice, or in favor of a person guilty of fraud, or for the benefit of one who would thereby be enabled to derive an advantage from, or to establish his claim through, his own wrong or negligence or inequitable or illegal conduct. Nor will it be enforced at the expense of a legal right, or where resort to a usurious agreement or security would be necessary for its establishment." German Savings & Loan Soc. v. Tull, 136 Fed. 1, 6, 69 C. C. A. 1 (citing Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Middleport, 8 Sup. Ct. 625, 124 U. S. 534, 31 L. Ed. 537; Prairie State Nat. Bank v. United States, 17 Sup. Ct. 142, 164 U. S. 227, 41 L. Ed. 412; First Nat. Bank v. City Trust, Safe Deposit & Surety Co. of Philadelphia, 114 Fed. 520, 52 C. C. A. 313).

"The doctrine of 'subrogation' is not administered by courts of equity as a legal right, but the principle is applied to subserve the ends of justice, and to do equity in the particular case under consideration. It does not rest on contract, and no general rule can be laid down which will afford a test in all cases for its application. Whether the doctrine is applicable to any particular case depends upon the peculiar facts and circumstances of such case." Thus, where plaintiff lent S. money with which a valid mortgage lien was paid off, and in good faith took a mortgage on the property, executed by S. and the woman with whom he was living as husband and wife, it was held that plaintiff had a lien on the property for the money loaned and so used, either by virtue of his mortgage or that, by subrogation, he has such lien by virtue of the lien so paid. Held, further, that plaintiff was not a mere volunteer, and that claimants may not avoid his mortgage and retain the benefit of the release of the prior valid lien. Gordon v. Stewart, 96 N. W. 624, 630, 4 Neb. (Unof.) 852 (citing South Omaha Nat. Bank v. Wright, 63 N. W. 126, 45 Neb. 23).

"Subrogation" is a doctrine primarily of equity jurisprudence, although its principles are now often applied in courts of common law, especially in those states in which equitable remedies are administered through the forms of law. It is a substitution, ordinarily the substitution of another person in the place of a creditor, so that the person in whose favor it is exercised succeeds to the rights of the creditor in relation to the debt. More broadly, it is the substitution of one person in the place of another, whether as a creditor or as the possessor of any other rightful claim." Where the probate court directed the administrator of an estate to borrow money and complete a building which had been commenced by the decedent, and for the construction of which no contract existed at the decedent's demise which could be carried out, the person loaning the money could be subrogated only to such rights as the contractors had; and, as no legal basis existed for the establishment of a mechanic's lien, he acquired no right by subrogation to any such lien. Waldermeyer v. Loebig, 81 S. W. 904, 906, 183 Mo. 363.

As either legal or conventional

"Subrogation" is a remedy made use of by courts of equity as an efficient aid to justice, and, in the main, does not depend on a contractual obligation, though a man may acquire the right to a conventional subrogation by contract. This happens when one liquidates a demand secured by lien or guaranty, and takes an assignment of it, or agrees with the creditor that any security held by the latter shall continue available for the collection of the demand." Crane v. Noel, 78 S. W. 826, 828, 103 Mo. App. 122.

Persons entitled to relief

The doctrine of "subrogation" is applicable to all cases wherein a party who has indemnified another in pursuance of his obligation so to do succeeds, and is entitled to the cession of all means of redress held by the party indemnified against the party who has occasioned the loss. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Great Lakes Engineering Works Co., 184 Fed. 426, 431, 107 C. C. A. 20, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 60 (citing Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. New York & N. H. R. Co., 25 Conn. 265, 65 Am. Dec. 571).

The doctrine of "subrogation" will be applied, in general, wherever any person, other than a mere volunteer, pays a debt or demand which, in equity and good conscience, should have been satisfied by another. "Subrogation," as a principle of equity jurisprudence, is generally confined to the relation of principal and surety and guarantors, or to a case where a person is compelled to remove a superior title to that held by him in order to protect his own, and also to cases of insurers. Whilst these general heads include the doctrine and principles of subrogation, that doctrine has been steadily expanding and growing in importance and extent in its application to various subjects and classes of persons. This equitable principle is enforced solely for the accomplishment or substantial justice, where one has an equity to invoke which cannot injure an innocent person. The right of subrogation which springs from the mere fact of the payment of a debt, and which is included under the heads first above stated, is what is termed legal subrogation, and exists only where included within those classes. But, in addition to this principle of legal subrogation, there exists another principle, which is termed conventional subrogation, which results from an equitable right springing from an express agreement with the debtor, by which one advances money to pay a claim for the security of which there exists a lien, by which agreement he is to have an equal lien to that paid off, whereupon he is entitled to the benefit of the security which he has satisfied with the expectation of receiving an equal lien. It is the agreement that the security shall be kept alive for the benefit of the person making the payment which gives the right of subrogation, because it takes away the character of a mere volunteer. Since the equitable doctrine of subrogation was ingrafted on the English equity jurisprudence from the civil law, it has been steadily growing in importance, and widening in its sphere of application. It is a creation of equity, and is administered in the furtherance of justice. It is applied to give the party who actually pays the debt the full benefit and advantage of such payment. It has been long settled, and it is not controverted, that the doctrine applies where a junior incumbrancer discharges the prior incumbrance, and where the surety pays the debt of his principal, and in cases of like character. A just limitation of the application of the doctrine is that it does not apply to payments made by a mere volunteer or stranger. In re McGuire, 137 Fed. 967, 968 (citing Home Sav. Bank v. Bierstadt, 48 N. E. 161, 168 Ill. 618, 61 Am. St. Rep. 146; Rachal v. Smith, 101 Fed. 159, 164, 42 C. C. A. 297, 302).

"Subrogation," as a principle of equity jurisprudence, is generally confined to the relation of principal and surety or guarantors, or to a case where a person is compelled to remove a title superior to that held by him in order to protect his own and also to cases of insurers. The doctrine has, however, been steadily expanding and growing in importance and extent in its application to various subjects and classes of persons. The principle is enforced solely for the accomplishment of substantial justice, where one has an equity to invoke which cannot injure an innocent person. The right of subrogation springing from the mere fact of payment of a debt and included under the heads first above stated is termed "legal subrogation" and exists only where included within those classes. There exists, however, another principle, termed "conventional subrogation," which results from an equitable right springing from an express agreement with the debtor by which one advances money to pay a claim for the security of which there exists a lien, by which agreement he is to have an equal lien to that paid off, whereupon he is entitled to the benefit of the security which he has satisfied. Where a party loaned money on land subject to two mortgages under an agreement that the loan was to be used to pay off the first mortgage, and that the second mortgage would be discharged and a new mortgage made subject to his mortgage, and in pursuance of the agreement he paid the first mortgage and took a satisfaction thereof, he was entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the first mortgagee. Bank of Ipswich v. Brock, 83 N. W. 436, 438, 13 S. D. 409.

Payment by one who stands in the relation of surety, although it may discharge the security, as respects the creditor, has not that effect as between the debtor and the surety; the surety being subrogated or assigned to all the securities and rights of the principal debtor, the equitable doctrine of "subrogation" not being limited in its operation to the relation of formal suretyship. Wallace v. Jones, 72 Atl. 769, 770, 110 Md. 143.

One who in the discharge of a secondary liability pays an obligation is entitled by "subrogation" to the securities of him who is primarily liable, although the primary and secondary liabilities are not incurred at the same time. When one in discharge of a secondary liability pays an obligation secured by mortgage upon real estate, his right to "subrogation" is not defeated by the cancellation and surrender of the mortgage without a stipulation that his right shall be preserved. Smith v. Folsom, 88 N. E. 546, 547, 80 Ohio St. 218 (quoting and adopting definition in Neilson & Churchill v. Fry, 16 Ohio St. 553, 91 Am. Dec. 110).

"Subrogation" is merely an equitable assignment, or an assignment by operation of law. The right to recover damages for the negligent destruction of property by fire together with the right to have the jury assess interest in its discretion, as they are authorized by statute to do in actions for the breach of obligations not arising from contract, is assignable and passes by subrogation to an insurance company to the extent of the proportion of the loss paid by it to the property owner. Caledonia Ins. Co. v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 79 Pac. 544, 545, 32 Mont. 46.

"The remedy of 'subrogation' is no longer limited to sureties and quasi sureties, but includes so wide a range of subjects that it has been called the 'mode which equity adopts to compel the ultimate payment of a debt by one who in justice, equity, and good conscience ought to pay.'" Certain breweries formed a mutual association for insurance against loss from liability for personal injuries, and a claim for personal injuries having been made against one of the members, the insurer was notified to defend, and in compliance with the notice undertook the defense of the action, which resulted in a judgment against the insured. To save itself from having to pay the judgment, the insurer procured a surety to execute an appeal bond, and, after the bond was executed, the insurer withdrew from the case on the ground that the insured was in default of assessments. The surety proceeded to perfect the appeal, and also sought and procured a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, and finally compromised the case without the appeal having been heard. The surety was entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the insured against the insurer for the amount paid on the settlement of the claim; it appearing that the settlement was a reasonable one, was made in good faith and for the benefit of the insured. City Trust, Safe Deposit & Surety Co. v. Haaslocher, 91 N. Y. Supp. 1022, 1027, 101 App. Div. 415 (quoting and adopting the definition in Arnold v. Green, 23 N. E. 2, 116 N. Y. 566).

"Subrogation" is a creature of equity invented to prevent a failure of justice." Hence, where a husband, after the death of his wife, discharged a mortgage upon her lands, and thereafter sold the lands to one, believing he obtained full title, the purchaser is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee in ejectment by the wife's heirs. Olson v. Peterson, 128 Pac. 191, 194, 88 Kan. 350 (quoting Safe Deposit & Trust Co. v. Thomas, 53 Pac. 472, 59 Kan. 470).

The right of "subrogation" is peculiarly a doctrine of equity jurisprudence and is founded on natural justice and the facts and circumstances of each particular case. The doctrine is variously applied to sureties who pay debts of their principal and may be subrogated to the securities, liens, etc., held by the creditor; to creditors who may be subrogated to securities and liens held by sureties; to persons interested in incumbered estates who pay off the incumbrances; and to persons paying or advancing money to discharge incumbrances on other's property, under an agreement that he may hold the discharged incumbrance as security for repayment. One entitled to subrogation is substituted in the place of the original holder of the right, with no greater rights or equities than he had. The rights acquired by a party entitled to subrogation cannot be extended beyond the rights of a party under whom subrogation is claimed. Subrogation contemplates some original privilege on the part of him to whose place substitution is claimed, and where no such privilege exists, or where it has been waived by the creditor, there is nothing on which the right can be based. While a surety who pays the debt of his principal is subrogated to the rights of the holder of the claim, he takes such rights subject to all disqualifications and limitations which attached to them in the hands of his predecessor.

Where the right of mortgagees to enforce their lien is barred by limitation, the right of one entitled to be subrogated to their lien is also barred, and the fact that such person is an infant is immaterial. Brown v. Nelms, 112 S. W. 373, 381, 382, 86 Ark. 368 (citing 4 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1419; Rodman v. Sanders, 44 Ark. 504).

While the original debt, whether in the form of a judgment or a bond, is discharged by the payment, the surety becomes a simple contract creditor of his debtor; and to this new relation equity attaches what is called the "right of subrogation," which is defined to be the substitution of one person in the place of another, whether as a creditor or the possessor of any other rightful claim, and the substitute is put in all respects in the place of the party to whose rights he is subrogated; the principle having been adopted from the civil law by courts of equity. It is treated as a creature of equity, and is so administered as to secure real and essential justice, without regard to form, and independent of any contractual relations between the parties to be affected by it. It is broad enough to include instances in which one party pays the debt for which another is primarily answerable, and which in equity and good conscience should have been discharged by the latter. It has been held that the sureties of an insolvent clerk of a court, upon a breach of trust by their principal, will in equity be entitled to all the remedies and securities that belong to a cestui que trust, or creditor, against one who co-operated in the breach of trust. Fidelity & Deposit Co. v. Jordon, 48 S. E. 496, 497, 134 N. C. 236 (citing Sheld, Subr., p. 2, and 2 Beach, Mod. Eq. Jur. §§ 797, 798).

"Subrogation" is an equitable assignment. When equity and good conscience requires the assignment to be made, subrogation, if necessary, will be allowed. It is not a matter of strict right, but is purely equitable in its nature, dependent upon the facts and circumstances in each particular case, and intended to serve the purpose of compelling the ultimate discharge of a debt or obligation by him who in good conscience ought to pay it. The doctrine is sufficiently broad to entitle a surety who has paid the debt of his principal to the remedies which the creditor had, not only against the principal, but against others. A year after the issuance of such orders, they were presented to the county treasurer and paid, with interest. Upon the discovery of their fraudulent character, the county brought suit against the auditor on his bond, and by the final judgment of the Supreme Court of the state recovered a judgment, which was paid by the surety. Held, that the bank was primarily liable to the county for the amount received from its treasurer as money had and received to the county's use, and that the surety of the auditor, having paid the debt to the county, was entitled by equitable subrogation to enforce its right of recovery against the bank. National Surety Co. v. State Sav. Bank, 150 Fed. 21, 26, 84 C. C. A. 187, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 155, 13 Ann. Cas. 421.

The right of "subrogation" (that is, the substitution for the common creditor of a surety, who has been compelled to pay his principal's debt) originated in the civil law and, though unknown to the common law, was in time adopted and applied in a modified form by the court of chancery in England. The substitution was intended to be complete and afford the debtor, who paid, the right to use his creditor's hand for the enforcement of contribution from his codebtors. In the application of this principle by the English courts, an obstacle was encountered in the rule of the common law that makes the payment of a debt operate as an absolute extinguishment thereof, and denies the right to a surety, who pays, to prevent the destruction of the debt, either by a direct assignment from the creditor or by any other means. The English courts of equity recognized this practice and, treating the debt as extinguished by payment, evolved the idea of founding an equitable right, not upon the creditor's actions, but upon the fact of payment. They held that, notwithstanding the debt itself was nonexistent, the fact that a surety had paid the debt gives him in equity the right to be substituted for the creditor as to all liens and securities incidental to the debt. It has been found that the English rule is inadequate to meet the requirements of equity and justice in all cases. There are rights, remedies, and liens so indissolubly bound up with the debt itself that their destruction attends that of the debt. To obviate such injustice, resort was had to the civil law, and the rule relating to the extinguishment of the debt was restricted in its application to the relation between the creditor and debtors and held to be of no effect upon the rights of the debtors among themselves. Though a judgment creditor held no securities for his debt, a surety of the judgment debtor having satisfied the judgment, there was an equitable assignment to him, and he might maintain an action against his cosurety after the running of limitations against the statutory actions for contribution and within the period within which the judgment creditor might have asserted his rights against the principal. Burrus v. Cook, 93 S. W. 888, 889, 117 Mo. App. 385.

"Subrogation" is a doctrine of equity jurisprudence, and it does not depend on privity or contract, except in so far as the known equity may be supposed to be imported into the transaction and thus raise a contract by implication. Where a curator, with the sanction of the probate court, executed a mortgage on his land to obtain money to satisfy a pre-existing incumbrance under which the land was about to be sold, and the lender expressly refused to accept a transfer of the old incumbrance, and insisted upon the making of a new mortgage, she was not entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee in the first mortgage. Capen v. Garrison, 92 S. W. 368, 369, 193 Mo. 335, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 838.

Under the doctrine of "subrogation," one who has been compelled to pay a debt which should have been paid by another is entitled to all the remedies which the creditor possessed against the other and to indemnity from the fund out of which should have been made the payment which he has made to the creditor. The remedy is not limited to sureties or quasi sureties, but extends to cases where a person not a volunteer pays a debt which in equity and good conscience he ought not to pay, for the purpose of protecting property in which he is interested. Where a judgment was recovered against a partner, after his retirement from a firm, for a firm debt for which he was not liable, and, when execution was issued and payment demanded from him, he informed the sheriff that the continuing partner was liable on the debt and that his property should be first levied on, and in order to prevent a levying on his own property, he gave a check for the amount due on the judgment, which check was subsequently made good by money advanced by his wife, to whom the judgment was assigned after levying on the continuing partner's assets, and the continuing partner became a bankrupt, while the levy was in force, the assignee of the judgment and execution was entitled to "subrogation" to the rights of the judgment creditor and was entitled to have the proceeds of the property, levied on in the hands of the bankrupt's trustee, applied in settlement of the amount such assignee advanced as against the trustee and general creditors of the bankrupt. In re Bruce, 158 Fed. 123, 129.

"Subrogation," which is defined as the substitution of another person in place of a creditor to whose rights he succeeds in relation to the debt is an equitable result purely and depends on facts to develop its necessity that justice may be done. While a surety upon payment of his principal's debt is ordinarily entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the creditor in all the securities held by him this right depends upon the superiority of his equities, for equality of equities, which is essential to contribution, is fatal to subrogation. Where a bond was given to secure the discharge of an attachment, and subsequently the same parties, with other sureties, gave a supersedeas bond, the sureties on the supersedeas bond, on affirmation of the judgment and payment thereof, were not subrogated to the judgment creditor's rights against the surety on the attachment bond. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, v. Bowen, 98 N. W. 897, 898, 123 Iowa, 356, 6

"Subrogation" in equity is that principle which substitutes a person who has paid a debt for which another is bound to all the rights and remedies of the creditor against that third party, provided he is not a mere volunteer, but made payment because his duty with respect to the contract or his interest with respect to the property or securities concerned compelled him. Thus, if a surety pays the debt of his principal, he is subrogated to the benefit of all securities, funds, liens, and equities which the creditor has against the principal. Since cosureties have the right to call on each other for contribution, a surety compelled to pay the debt of the principal is subrogated to the right of the creditor, not only against the principal, but against the cosurety also. In re Rock Hill Cotton Factory Co., 47 S. E. 728, 729, 68 S. C. 436.

"Equitable subrogation" implies that there is no adequate remedy at law." Where a purchaser under an ineffectual foreclosure of mortgages, having paid them off, is entitled to the rights and remedies of the mortgagees, it constitutes a clear case of equitable subrogation. "Subrogation is allowed by courts of equity to secure justice. Ordinarily it takes place when one has paid a debt which some one else ought to pay; in such cases, sometimes the person so paying succeeds to the securities which the original creditor held for his debt." But an attaching creditor of mortgaged chattels, who has paid off the mortgage, cannot have equitable subrogation to the mortgagee's rights and a foreclosure, where the statute provides a method of reimbursement in the attachment suit. Carstenbrook v. Wedderien, 94 Pac. 372, 374, 7 Cal. App. 465 (quoting and adopting Randall v. Duff, 40 Pac. 20, 107 Cal. 33).

Where in a former suit it was held that plaintiff was entitled to "subrogation" to the rights of a mortgagee, to the extent of the mortgage on the premises, which plaintiff had paid prior to failure of title, such right was not enforceable in an action for breach of warranty, subrogation being the substitution of one person in the place of another, so that where a purchaser's title to land fails he will be subrogated to the rights of holders of liens or incumbrances which he has paid, or which has been paid out of the purchase price. Tilghman Lumber Co. v. Matheson, 70 S. E. 1033, 1035, 88 S. C. 432.

Where the purchaser at foreclosure sale redeems from tax sales made before foreclosure, he is entitled to be "subrogated" to the rights of the state as against a judgment creditor of the mortgagor redeeming from foreclosure. Northern Inv. Co. v. Frey Real Estate & Inv. Co., 81 Pac. 300, 33 Colo. 480, 108 Am. St. Rep. 104.

SUBSCRIBE—SUBSCRIPTION

Date of subscription, see Date.

For book as written instrument, see Written Instrument.

Attest distinguished

To "subscribe" within Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 93, § 317, providing that wills shall be in writing signed by testator and attested and subscribed in his presence by two or more credible witnesses, means that the witnesses shall sign their names to the same paper for the purpose of identification, and implies that attestation has been performed. Brengle v. Tucker, 80 Atl. 224, 226, 114 Md. 597.

The word "subscribed," as used in statutes relating to the execution of wills in conjunction with the word "attested," does not add to the meaning of the latter word as a matter of law or fact, as the word "attested," being derived from the Latin words "ad" and "testari," meaning to witness or bear witness, implies the act of subscribing as well as observing. International Trust Co. v. Anthony, 101 Pac. 781, 785, 45 Colo. 474, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1002, 16 Ann. Cas. 1087.

As execute

To "subscribe" means to write one's name beneath or at the end of an instrument. The statute as to conveyance of lands (Real Property Law [Laws 1896, p. 593, c. 547, §§ 208, 241]) provides that "a grant in fee, or of a freehold estate, must be subscribed by the person from whom the estate or interest is intended to pass, or by his lawful agent," "and when duly acknowledged or proved," as therein found, the deed may be recorded. Since the word "executed," in Liquor Tax Law (Laws 1896, p. 60, c. 112, § 17, subd. 6), as amended by Laws 1897, p. 220, c. 312, providing that the consent of property owners on an application for a liquor tax certificate shall be in writing, "executed," and acknowledged as deeds entitled to be recorded, is synonymous with the word "subscribed," names attached to a consent, but which precede the consenting clause therein, are insufficient. In re Griffin, 106 N. Y. Supp. 24, 26, 56 Misc. Rep. 21 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6729).

Mark

A note executed by an illiterate promisor by his mark is sufficient, and need not be attested. Civ. Code 1896, § 1, defining "signature" or "subscription" as including mark when one cannot write, his name being written near it and witnessed by one who writes his own name as a witness, is inapplicable to the execution of notes; and a note is validly executed by one who cannot write his name by his affixing thereunto an X-mark between an initial of his own name and his surname, written by the payee, the name of a witness, who also could not write his name, being written by the payee. McGowan v. Collins, 46 South. 228, 229, 154 Ala. 299.

Under sections 2965 and 6492 of Comp. Laws 1909, in order for one, who cannot write, to execute a written instrument by mark, the person who writes the name of the maker must also write his own name on the instrument as a witness to the signature, except in the case of a paper executed before a judicial officer; and when the name of the maker is written by one person, and a wholly different person writes his name as a witness, this does not constitute a "signature." Sims v. Hedges, 123 Pac. 155, 156, 32 Okl. 683.

Place of signing

"Subscribe" means the signing or writing of one's name beneath or at the end of the instrument; the word being derived from the Latin word "subscribo." Attorney General ex rel. Cannon v. Clarke, 59 Atl. 395, 396, 26 R. I. 470 (quoting James v. Patten, 6 N. Y. [2 Seld.] 12, 55 Am. Dec. 376).

The word "subscribe" means "to set under or to write under, as opposed to a signature at some other place. It refers rather to the place of signature than to the manner thereof; that is to say, the signature must be at the end of the instrument rather than at some other place." Loughren v. B. F. Bonniwell & Co., 101 N. W. 287, 125 Iowa, 518, 106 Am. St. Rep. 319.

The word "subscribe," as used in a statute requiring testamentary witnesses, as well as the testator, to "subscribe" the will with their names, means that they should write their names at the close of the will. In re Seaman's Estate, 80 Pac. 700, 703, 146 Cal. 455, 106 Am. St. Rep. 53, 2 Ann. Cas. 726 (citing Soward v. Soward, 62 Ky. [1 Duv.] 126).

The word "subscribed," as used in section 74, c. 73, Comp. St. 1903 (Cobbey's Ann. St. 1903, § 10258), relating to contracts between real estate brokers and landowners, is synonymous with the word "signed," and does not require the signature to be at the foot of the instrument. Myers v. Moore, 110 N. W. 989, 990, 78 Neb. 448 (citing In re Walker's Estate, 42 Pac. 815, 110 Cal. 387, 30 L. R. A. 460, 52 Am. St. Rep. 104; California Canneries Co. v. Scatena, 49 Pac. 462, 117 Cal. 447).

Real Property Law (Laws 1896, c. 547, § 208), requiring that a conveyance of land shall be "subscribed," means signed at the end, instead of the writing of the name in any part of the conveyance. Leask v. Horton, 79 N. Y. Supp. 148, 39 Misc. Rep. 144.

The buyer's name need not be "subscribed" to the auctioneer's memorandum of sale in order to satisfy the statute of frauds; it being sufficient if it appears in the body of the memorandum, and the memorandum shows an intention to bind the buyer. Love

v. Harris, 72 S. E. 150, 152, 156 N. C. 88, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 927, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1065.

Printed or stamped signature

A summons containing the printed names of the attorneys satisfies a statute requiring the summons to be "subscribed" by the plaintiff or his attorneys. Warner v. Miner, 82 Pac. 1033, 1034, 41 Wash. 98 (citing and adopting Mezchan v. More, 11 N. W. 534, 54 Wis. 214; Herrick v. Morrill, 33 N. W. 849, 37 Minn. 250, 5 Am. St. Rep. 841; 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6729).

Signature synonymous

See Sign—Signature.

Signature by another

The word "subscribe" in Gen. Laws 1896, c. 11, § 13, providing that each voter may subscribe to one nomination for each office, requires a writing of the voter's name by the voter himself, and not by another by his authority. Attorney General ex rel. Cannon v. Clarke, 59 Atl. 395, 396, 26 R. I. 470.

Typewriting

A contract for the sale of real property may be "subscribed" as required by Real Property Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 50) § 259, in typewriting as well as with pen and ink. Landecker v. Co-Operative Bldg. Bank, 130 N. Y. Supp. 780, 781, 71 Misc. Rep. 517.

A signature in typewriting is sufficient to meet the requirements of St. 1898, § 2308, which provides that a note or memorandum evidencing an agreement for the sale of goods, chattels, etc., for the price of $50 or more, must be in writing and "subscribed" by the parties to be charged. Garton Toy Co. v. Buswell Lumber & Mfg. Co., 136 N. W. 147, 150, 150 Wis. 341.

Writing implied

As used in a note promising to pay the financial agent of a college $200 and interest when $50,000 was subscribed, the word "subscribe" should be taken in its ordinary sense to mean the signing of one's own name beneath or at the end of an instrument, to agree in writing to furnish a sum of money or its equivalent for a designated purpose, the act of a person in signing in writing an agreement to furnish a sum of money for a particular purpose, and does not include an oral agreement by an organization pledging the members to pay $1,000, to the use of the college pursuant to a resolution unanimously passed at a meeting of the organization; it not appearing that either the pledge or the resolution was in writing. Wasson v. Clarendon College & University Training School (Tex.) 131 S. W. 852.

A subscription agreement, reciting that the subscribers agreed to give notes for the amount set opposite their names for a specified purpose, and that the agreement should be void unless a specified sum was subscribed, executed as a preliminary step to the organization of a corporation which was subsequently formed, did not require that subscriptions aggregating the specified amount should be in writing, though "subscribe" or "subscription" involves the idea of a written signature, since by common usage the words are often employed to include an agreement, written or oral, to pay some amount to a designated purpose. Rutenbeck v. Hohn, 121 N. W. 698, 700, 143 Iowa, 13, 136 Am. St. Rep. 731.

The word "subscribe" means "to sign one's name to a letter or other document; to give consent to something written by signing one's name; to assent; to agree; to set one's name to a paper in token of a promise to give a certain sum; to enter one's name for a newspaper, book," etc. Where a subscription paper is headed with merely the title, character, authorship, and price of a book, followed by the word "subscribers," a name written under "subscribers" clearly imports a promise to take a copy of the book and pay the price indicated, and constitutes a "writing obligatory" or "instrument in writing," within the meaning of Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2354, defining forgery. State v. Hazzard, 80 N. E. 149, 150, 168 Ind. 163 (quoting and adopting the definition in Webst. Int. Dict.).

The word "subscription," as used in Acts of 1869, authorizing aid to railroads by counties and townships and postponing the right of railroad companies, until after the appropriation has been levied and collected, and requiring that a "subscription" shall have been made, is used in the sense of a formal written promise. State ex rel. Western Const. Co. v. Board of Com'rs of Clinton County, 76 N. E. 986, 990, 166 Ind. 162.

SUBSCRIBE—SUBSCRIPTION (To Stock)

See, also, Subscriber.

Where corporate stock was given to bondholders of a corporation as a bonus to induce them to purchase the bonds, their acceptance of the stock as such bonus constituted a "subscription" sufficient to carry any liability that might attach thereto. French v. Busch, 189 Fed. 480, 485.

As agreement to pay

"A 'subscription' for stock implies a promise to pay for it, even though the subscription was before incorporation." Nebraska Chicory Co. v. Lednicky, 113 N. W. 245, 248, 79 Neb. 587 (citing 1 Cook, Corp. §§ 71, 75; 1 Mor. Corp. §§ 47, 54).

As contract

A "subscription" to a joint-stock company is not only an undertaking to the company, but with all other subscribers. Such contracts are tripartite, and, even if fraudulent as between two of the parties, they are enforceable for the benefit of the third.

Marles Carved Moulding Co. v. Stulb, 64 Atl. 431, 432, 215 Pa. 91 (quoting and adopting from Graff v. Pittsburgh & S. R. Co., 31 Pa. 489).

Issue distinguished

Const. art. 12, § 3, provides that each stockholder of a corporation shall be individually liable for such portion of the debts incurred while he was a stockholder as the amount of stock owned by him bears to the whole of the subscribed capital stock. Held, that a complaint to enforce stockholders' liability under such section, alleging that the whole capital of the corporation was divided into 60,000 shares, of which about 37,735 shares were "issued," was not equivalent to an allegation that only that number of shares were "subscribed," and that the complaint was therefore fatally defective for failure to allege the whole number of shares subscribed. San Francisco Commercial Agency v. Miller, 87 Pac. 630, 631, 4 Cal. App. 291 (citing San Joaquin Land & Water Co. v. Beecher, 35 Pac. 349, 101 Cal. 70; California Southern Hotel Co. v. Callender, 29 Pac. 859, 94 Cal. 120, 28 Am. St. Rep. 99; Mitchell v. Beckman, 28 Pac. 110, 64 Cal. 117; Tulare Sav. Bank v. Talbot, 63 Pac. 172, 131 Cal. 45).

Ownership included

St. 1906, p. 527, c. 463, part 2, § 57, providing that a railroad corporation, except as authorized by the general court or the act, shall not "directly or indirectly subscribe for, take, or hold the stock or bonds of or guarantee the bonds or dividends of any other corporation," prevents a railroad corporation from obtaining without legislative permission any kind of proprietary interest in the stock or bonds of other corporations; the words "subscribe for, take, or hold" intending to include legal ownership of every kind, and the word "indirectly" covering other modes of holding than by taking or holding the legal title, and the words together covering every kind of proprietary interest in the stock or bonds referred to. Attorney General v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 84 N. E. 737, 742, 198 Mass. 413.

SUBSCRIBED AND SWORN TO

The words "subscribed and sworn to * * * before me," in a jurat annexed to an affidavit purporting to verify a petition to prove exceptions taken on a trial, import that the petitioner signed the petition and made oath that the statements therein contained were true, and show a verification of the petition. Lord v. Rowse, 80 N. E. 822, 823, 195 Mass. 216.

The words "subscribed and sworn to before me," in the certificate of an officer before whom an affidavit is made, may be deemed equivalent to the words "sworn to or affirmed" before the officer and "signed in his presence," as used in Wilson's Rev. & Ann.

St. 1903, § 4317. Pallady v. Beatty, 83 Pac. 428, 429, 15 Okl. 626.

SUBSCRIBER

To corporate stock

As partners, see Partnership.

The term "stockholder" is not synonymous with that of "subscriber." It has a distinct, definite, technical meaning. The latter is employed to denote one who becomes bound by a subscription to the capital stock in the corporation. Reid v. De Jarnette, 51 S. E. 770, 771, 123 Ga. 787, 3 Ann. Cas. 1117.

"Subscribers" to a corporation are those who on the formation of a corporation agree mutually to take and pay for the shares of capital stock, and, in the absence of any special provision, they agree with each other to pay therefor the par value of the stock. McDowell v. Lindsay, 63 Atl. 130, 131, 213 Pa. 591.

Though persons securing shares of stock in a corporation at a price less than par expressly contract that their liability shall be limited to the price paid, and do not formally subscribe to the stock, a subscription is presumed from any agreement or act by which the stock is acquired from the corporation, and such persons are "subscribers" within Const. art. 11, § 3, providing that stockholders of all corporations shall be liable for an indebtedness of said corporation to the amount of their stock subscribed and unpaid. McAllister v. American Hospital Ass'n, 125 Pac. 286, 288, 62 Or. 530.

To a book

The term "subscriber" means "one who subscribes; one who contributes to an undertaking by subscribing; one who enters his name for a paper, book, map, or the like." Where a subscription paper is headed with merely the title, character, authorship, and price of a book, followed by the word "subscribers," a name written under "subscribers" clearly imports a promise to take a copy of the book and pay the price indicated, and constitutes a "writing obligatory" or "instrument in writing," within the meaning of Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2354, defining "forgery." State v. Hazzard, 80 N. E. 149, 150, 168 Ind. 163 (quoting and adopting the definition in Webst. Int. Dict.).

SUBSCRIBING WITNESS

See, also, Attesting Witness.

An attesting witness under Act April 26, 1855 (P. L. 328) means a "subscribing witness." Historical Soc. of Dauphin County v. Kelker, 74 Atl. 619, 620, 226 Pa. 16, 134 Am. St. Rep. 1010.

Cobbey's Ann. St. 1903, § 4995, provides that all devises, legacies, and gifts made or given in any will shall be void unless there be two subscribing witnesses. While it is true that the words "subscribing witnesses," used in this section, technically construed, would only apply to a witness to a written will, and not to the attesting witness of an oral testament, yet, if this narrow construction be given the section above quoted, it destroys the effect of the use of the words "all beneficial devises, legacies, and gifts whatsoever made or given in any will," for there can only be technically a subscribing witness to a written will; but, if a construction be given this section in conformity with the manifest intention of the lawmakers, we will treat "subscribing witness" as having been used as synonymous with "attesting witness," or a witness by whose testimony a will must be established. Godfrey v. Smith, 103 N. W. 450, 454, 73 Neb. 756, 10 Ann. Cas. 1128.

SUBSEQUENT

See Condition Subsequent.

As since, see Since.

Next synonymous, see Next Term.

SUBSEQUENT ASSESSMENT

In Pol. Code, § 3815, providing that no redemption of property sold to the state for delinquent taxes shall be permitted without payment of all subsequent assessments, costs, fees, penalties, and interest, "subsequent assessments" mean all taxes levied against the property subsequent to the tax for which the sale was made. Boyer v. Gelhaus, 125 Pac. 916, 918, 19 Cal. App. 320.

SUBSEQUENT CENSUS

The phrase "a subsequent state or United States census," as used in Laws 1900, c. 367, § 1, subd. 7 (re-enacted in Liquor Tax Law [Consol. Laws, c. 34] § 8, subd. 8), means a state or United States census subsequent to 1899, so that the automatic readjustment of rates began with the United States census of 1900, the intent being that the basis of the computation should rest for alternative five-year periods on a preceding state or United States census, state census being taken in 1895 and decennially thereafter, and the rate payable for liquor tax in Brooklyn in advance on September 15, 1910, was determinable on the basis of population shown by the United States census of 1910. In re Ahlers, 127 N. Y. Supp. 61, 65, 141 App. Div. 891; People ex rel. Brady v. Clement, 127 N. Y. Supp. 68, 142 App. Div. 908.

SUBSEQUENT CONDITION

See Sale upon Subsequent Condition.

SUBSEQUENT CREDITOR

As used in Civ. Code S. C. 1902, § 2456, providing that mortgages shall be valid, so as to affect subsequent lien or simple contract creditors, only when recorded within 40 days, but that the subsequent recording shall be notice to all creditors who become such after the date of the recording, the words "subsequent creditors" mean only those who became such after the execution of the mortgage, not including the mortgagee, so that, where a mortgage on the bankrupt's stock was not recorded within 40 days, and before recording other claims arose, exceeding the amount of a fund realized from the sale of the property, the mortgagee was not only not entitled to a lien, but was not entitled to share with such "creditors." Simmons v. Greer, 174 Fed. 54, 656, 98 C. O. A. 408.

SUBSEQUENT INDORSER

As used in Negotiable Instruments Law Laws 1897, c. 612, § 205, providing that a material alteration voids a negotiable instrument, except as against the party who has assented thereto and subsequent indorsers, the words "subsequent indorsers" mean those who indorse subsequent to such alteration. First Nat. Bank of City of Brooklyn v. Gridley, 98 N. Y. Supp. 445, 448, 112 App. Div. 1.

SUBSEQUENT MEETING

Any subsequent meeting, see Any.

SUBSEQUENT PLEADING

"Subsequent pleadings," as used in the rules are pleadings subsequent in logical sequence or order of pleading and not subsequent in time. Rice v. Van Why, 111 Pac. 601, 49 Colo. 7.

SUBSEQUENT PROCEEDING

Entry of Judgment

The entry of judgment is one of the "subsequent proceedings," within Rev. Codes, § 1, providing that after appearance a defendant or his attorney is entitled to notice of all subsequent proceedings of which notice is required to be given. State ex rel. v. District Court of Second Judicial District, 99 Pac. 139, 140, 38 Mont. 119.

SUBSEQUENT PURCHASER

A statute, providing that so long as a claim remains unrecorded it shall not affect subsequent purchasers for value and credit, applies to all creditors and not to "subsequent" creditors only. Price v. Wall's, 33 S. E. 599, 600, 97 Va. 334, 75 Am. p. 788 (citing and adopting Eldson v. Eldson, 29 Grat. 338; March v. Chambers, 71 Grat. 299; Dobyn's Adm'x v. Warlick, Va. 159).

Purchaser from grantor

The "subsequent purchasers" of whom § 3159, Rev. Codes, speaks, are those who acquire title under the same grantor, and it is only the record is constructive notice. Larris v. Reed, 121 Pac. 780, 782, 21 Colo. 164.

Purchaser subsequent to recording

The word "subsequent," as used in Mills Act, p. 593, § 446, providing that deeds and instruments in writing affecting any interest in a real estate shall take effect as to

"subsequent bona fide purchasers" after filing the record, has reference to the recording, and not to the date, of the instrument. Hence where a person, having a mining claim, contracted in writing to convey it to another claiming the same ground, and subsequently the person making the conveyance conveyed his claim to a purchaser, who had no notice of the contract between conflicting claimants, the contract was entitled to priority over the conveyance, where it was recorded without knowledge of the conveyance before the conveyance was recorded. Houlahan v. Finance Consol. Min. Co., 82 Pac. 484, 485, 34 Colo. 365 (citing Doyle v. Teas, 5 Ill. [4 Scam.] 202, 252; Reed v. Kemp, 16 Ill. 445; Brookfield v. Goodrich, 32 Ill. 363; Delano v. Bennett, 90 Ill. 533).

SUBSEQUENT REGISTRATION

Const. art. 2, § 4, subd. "c," provides for the registration of voters having certain qualifications up to January 1, 1898. It requires copies of the registration list to be kept by the clerk of court of the county and Secretary of State, and declares that the certificate of either of such officers shall be sufficient evidence of the citizen's right to subsequent registration, and the franchise under the limitations imposed. Held, that "subsequent registration," as so used, included any registration after the first prior to January 1, 1898, and hence a clerk's certificate of registration under such section was not a substitute for a registration certificate required by Civ. Code 1902, § 185, to entitle the voter to vote at a subsequent election, but was only evidence of his right to register and obtain the necessary certificate. State ex rel. Birchmore v. State Board of Canvassers, 59 S. E. 145, 146, 78 S. C. 461, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 850, 13 Ann. Cas. 1133.

SUBSEQUENT TERM

The word "subsequent," in the act requiring commissioners appointed by the orphans' court to set off dower to make their report at the next or subsequent term after their appointment, has the same meaning as "next," and, if either word had been used alone, it would have expressed the same idea. Osborn v. Rogers, 19 N. J. Eq. 429, 431.

SUBSTANCE

See Infectious Substance; Noxious Portion or Substance.

Disallowed in substance, see Disallow—Disallowance.

Other mineral substance, see Other.

"Substance," as employed in the constitutional requirement that notice of intention to introduce a local act shall state the "substance" of the proposed law, cannot be said to be synonymous with "subject" or a mere purpose, but means the essential or material part, essence, abstract, compendium, meaning. Law v. State, 38 South. 798, 799, 142 Ala. 62

(quoting and adopting definition in Wallace v. Board of Revenue of Jefferson County, 37 South. 321, 140 Ala. 491); Ex parte Black, 40 South. 133, 134, 144 Ala. 1; State ex rel. Hanna v. Tunstall, 40 South. 135, 137, 145 Ala. 477; State ex rel. Van Deusen v. Williams, 39 South. 276, 277, 143 Ala. 501; Wallace v. Board of Revenue of Jefferson County, 37 South. 321, 322, 140 Ala. 491.

Form distinguished

See Form.

SUBSTANTIAL

"Substantial" means "belonging to substance; actually existing; real; * * * not seeming or imaginary; not illusive; real; solid; true; veritable." Elder v. State, 50 South. 370, 374, 162 Ala. 41 (citing Webst. Int. Dict.).

SUBSTANTIAL CAUSE OF ACTION

A complaint on a note, not due when suit is brought does not state a "substantial cause of action," within Code 1907, § 4143, prohibiting vacation of the judgment for matter not previously objected to, if the complaint states a substantial cause of action. Ritter v. Hoy, 55 South. 1034, 1 Ala. App. 643.

SUBSTANTIAL CHANGE

Amendment

A "substantial change" in a pleading within B. & C. Comp. § 2247, permitting the circuit court, in furtherance of justice and upon terms, to allow the pleadings to be amended so as not to substantially change the issue tried in the justice's court, or introduce any new cause of action, is such a change as necessitates different proof to prove the amended averments than that necessary to prove the original; an amendment which merely rearranges or more fully sets out the facts originally alleged being proper. Morrison v. Gardner, 111 Pac. 243, 246, 57 Or. 438.

In an action for slander, it is not error to permit filing of amendment charging the utterance of other slanderous words from those alleged, where the new cause of action is of the same general character as that contained in the original petition, and where defendant has ample time to meet such amendment; it not "substantially changing" the cause of action within Comp. Laws 1909, § 5679. Trower v. Roberts, 120 Pac. 617, 619, 30 Okl. 215.

SUBSTANTIAL COMPLIANCE

A "substantial compliance," which means a compliance with the essential requirements, is a sufficient compliance with a penal municipal ordinance, requiring street railways to maintain fenders upon the front ends of cars. Fitzgibbons v. Galveston Electric Co., 136 S. W. 1186, 1187.

"Substantial compliance," with reference to contracts, means that, although the conditions of the contract have been deviated from in trifling particulars not materially detracting from the benefit the other party would derive from a literal performance, he has received substantially the benefit he expected, and is therefore bound to pay. St. Louis, Memphis & S. E. R. Co. v. Houck, 97 S. W. 963, 966, 120 Mo. App. 634.

SUBSTANTIAL CONTRIBUTION

An instruction that, where the negligence of an employé actually contributes to the results, his negligence would not be compared, provided it was a "substantial contribution" to the accident, was not objectionable on the theory that any negligence on decedent's part was sufficient to defeat the action, since negligence, unless "substantial," could not be said to contribute directly and proximately to the injury. Toledo, St. L. & W. R. Co. v. Kountz, 168 Fed. 832, 840, 94 C. C. A. 244.

SUBSTANTIAL CONTROVERSY

Where a temporary injunction restraining the performance of a contract is granted on the giving of a bond and dissolved on final hearing, the fact that the contract has expired by its own terms prior to the taking of an appeal is not ground for dismissal, since the liability on the injunction bond presents a "substantial controversy" beyond the costs, which can only be reviewed by hearing the appeal. Click v. Sample, 83 S. W. 932, 73 Ark. 194.

SUBSTANTIAL DISPUTE

See Real and Substantial Dispute.

Where in supplementary proceedings K. appeared, at the hearing of a motion to punish the judgment debtor for contempt in refusing to turn over certain property to a receiver, by the same attorney that appeared for the judgment debtor, without filing a written claim, or supporting it by documentary evidence or otherwise, there was no "substantial dispute" as to right of possession, within Code Civ. Proc. § 2447, providing that, where the judgment debtor has in his possession personal property belonging to him, and his right to possession thereof is not substantially disputed, the judge may require the debtor to turn over such property. Charles D. Durkee & Co. v. Bonnell, 125 N. Y. Supp. 790, 791.

SUBSTANTIAL ENCRoACHMENT

Under the rule that a vendee is justified in refusing to accept title to the property, if there are "substantial encroachments" thereon, encroachments on the street of 16 and 17 inches by the show windows of two buildings erected on the property contracted to be sold are not "substantial encroachments." Klim v. Sachs, 92 N. Y. Supp. 107, 108, 102 App. Div. 44.

SUBSTANTIAL ERROR

The determination of the board of assessors that an entire sewer system should be taken as a whole, and that the lateral connecting sewers or enlarged or changed sewers along any line should be included in the entire cost, and paid for by the territory deemed benefited, being a matter committed to their exclusive judgment, even if the court should consider another method more equitable, would not amount to a "substantial error" in the proceedings giving a right to a reduction of the assessment under Greater New York City Charter, Laws 1901, c. 466, § 959, giving such right where the cost of a local improvement has been unlawfully increased by a "substantial error." In re Shafter, 122 N. Y. Supp. 769, 772, 138 App. Div. 35.

SUBSTANTIAL EVIDENCE

By "substantial evidence" is not meant that which goes beyond a mere "scintilla" of evidence, since evidence may go beyond a mere scintilla and yet not be substantial evidence. Substantial evidence must possess something of substance and relevant consequence and not consist of vague, uncertain, or irrelevant matter, not carrying the quality of proof or having fitness to induce conviction. Substantial evidence is such that reasonable men may fairly differ as to whether it establishes plaintiff's case, and, if all reasonable men must conclude that it does not establish such case, then it is not substantial evidence. Jenkins & Reynolds Co. v. Alpena Portland Cement Co., 147 Fed. 641, 643, 77 C. C. A. 625 (citing Minahan v. Grand Trunk Western Ry. Co., 138 Fed. 37, 70 C. C. A. 463; Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 12 Sup. Ct. 679, 144 U. S. 408, 36 L. Ed. 485).

SUBSTANTIAL INCLOSURE

Where plaintiff, claiming title to a lot, incloses it on three sides with a fence, so that it makes a complete inclosure in connection with an adjoining lot, the owner of which makes no claim to the first lot, but has given his individual covenant of quiet enjoyment in an executor's deed thereof, there is a "substantial inclosure" of the lot, within Code Civ. Proc. §§ 370, 372, providing that such an inclosure constitutes adverse possession. Brown v. Doherty, 87 N. Y. Supp. 563, 566, 93 App. Div. 190.

Defendant purchased an acre tract of salt meadow in January, 1887, but by his deed acquired only an undivided one-fifth of the land, which for at least 30 years had been surrounded by a ditch or ditches, and in part by a branch of a creek. On February 15, 1907, he conveyed the land to plaintiff. Held, that the ditch or ditches, and creek, constituted a "substantial inclosure," so as to give defendant title by adverse possession. Koch v. Ellwood, 123 N. Y. Supp. 502, 503, 138 App. Div. 584.

Where lands are wild and uncultivated, and they are used for pasturage or for obtaining timber or fuel therefrom, or some such similar use, a "substantial inclosure" might consist in a wire fence sufficient to indicate a purpose to claim the ownership and use of the land to the exclusion of all others and to protect the land from trespassing vehicles, riders, or stock. And, although there may be occasional breaks for roads and standing water in a fence inclosing land, yet the fence may be a "substantial inclosure" when it is manifest that there was for the full statutory period a conspicuous effort to maintain a fence around the land commensurate with the attending circumstances for the obvious purpose of exercising rights of ownership of the land and to use the land in a way to which it was suited. Baughner v. Boley, 58 South. 980, 984, 63 Fla. 75, 87.

SUBSTANTIAL INJURY

See Error Not Causing Substantial Injury.

SUBSTANTIAL PARTY

"Substantial parties" are parties who have an interest in the result and ought to be joined if they were within the jurisdiction but whose interests are separable from those of the other defendants. Their absence does not prevent equity from being done to the other defendants. Perkins v. Hendryx, 149 Fed. 526, 528.

SUBSTANTIAL PERFORMANCE

See, also, Substantial Compliance.

"Substantial performance" of a contract is performance, except as to unsubstantial omissions, with compensation therefor, and, when the omissions are slight and unintentional, compensation is substituted pro tanto for performance to prevent the hardship of a failure to recover for that which was well done, and, while the rule may be applicable to a contract to print and furnish illustrated advertising catalogues ordered from a sample, it cannot be invoked by a seller who, under such a contract and after notice of a defect in the work, furnished catalogues, in which a gloss or coloring process, to be given to the illustrations, did not exactly cover or register with the first impressions, so that the illustrations were blurred to such an extent as to make all the catalogues worthless. Dickinson v. Sheldon, 130 N. Y. Supp. 889, 892, 146 App. Div. 144.

"Substantial performance" of a construction contract permits only such omissions or deviations from the contract as are inadvertent or unintentional, and are not due to bad faith, and do not impair the structure as a whole, but are remediable without doing damage to other parts of the structure and may without injustice be compensated for by deductions from the contract price. Littell v. Webster County, 131 N. W. 691, 694, 152 Iowa, 206.

"Substantial performance" of a building contract is actual performance, and in such case deductions may be made from the contract price for small omissions or defects in the work occurring in good faith. Smith v. Russell, 125 N. Y. Supp. 952, 954, 140 App. Div. 102.

"Substantial" as well as "complete performance" means performance according to the terms of the agreement, not the doing of some act which is as advantageous financially to the promisee as the agreed act would have been. Clough v. A. J. Stillwell Meat Co., 86 S. W. 580, 582, 112 Mo. App. 177.

The phrase "substantial performance" is used in two senses. Sometimes it means full performance according to the fair intent of the contract, and permits recovery on the contract without recoupment; sometimes it means something distinctly short of full performance. Viles v. Barre & M. Traction & Power Co., 65 Atl. 104, 105, 79 Vt. 311.

"Substantial performance" of a building contract permits any omission or deviation which is inadvertent, not due to bad faith, not impairing the structure as a whole, remediable without material damage to other parts of the building, and subject to compensation without injustice by deductions from the price. Mitchell v. Caplinger, 133 S. W. 1032, 1033, 97 Ark. 278.

"Substantial performance" means full performance in all the essential elements necessary to the accomplishment of the entire purpose of the contract. Manning v. School Dist. No. 6 of Ft. Atkinson, 102 N. W. 356-364, 124 Wis. 84.

"Substantial performance" with reference to contracts is performance except as to unsubstantial omissions; that is, "unsubstantial defects may be cured, and at the expense of the contractor, not of the owner." One who fails in full performance, and who invokes the doctrine of "substantial performance," must furnish the evidence to measure the compensation for the defects which is the substitute for his failure to do as he agreed. Nesbit v. Braker, 93 N. Y. Supp. 856, 857, 104 App. Div. 393.

"Substantial performance" by one employed to supervise the erection of a building on plans prepared by him, essential to recover the contract price under an allegation of entire performance, means performance, and the deviations permitted must be unimportant and inadvertent, and a finding of substantial damages of nearly 25 per cent. of the contract price for his failure to perform, resulting from his permitting the installation of a plumbing system deviating in essential particulars from the plans, precludes a recovery. Gompert v. Healy, 133 N. Y. Supp. 689, 690, 149 App. Div. 193.

"Substantial performance" means strict performance in all essentials necessary to the full accomplishment of the purposes for which the thing contracted for was designed. Failure as to any of such features, whether in good or bad faith, any departure from the contract, not caused by inadvertence or unavoidable omission, any defect so essential as that the object which the parties intended to accomplish to have a specified amount of work performed in a particular manner is not accomplished, is inconsistent with substantial performance, within the rule permitting a recovery by the builder notwithstanding incompleteness. To constitute "substantial performance" of a building contract, or one to supervise the construction of a building according to specific plans, the building as completed must be the result of good-faith efforts to strictly perform, and must satisfy all essentials to the accomplishment of the owner's purpose. Foeller v. Heintz, 118 N. W. 543, 545, 137 Wis. 169, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 327 (quoting Manitowoc Steam Boiler Works v. Manitowoc Glue Co., 97 N. W. 515, 517, 120 Wis. 1).

A "substantial performance" of a building contract admits of only such deviations as are inadvertent and unintentional, and not due to bad faith, and such as do not impair the structure as a whole, and can be conveniently remedied, and without injustice be paid for by deductions from the contract price. Pippy v. Winslow, 125 Pac. 298, 299, 62 Or. 219.

SUBSTANTIAL REPAIR

The repair of a wooden viaduct, under which railroad tracks ran and over which the street was carried, by changing 40 per cent. of the materials, was a "substantial repair," within the meaning of the ordinance. City of Shreveport v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co., 63 South. 923, 127 La. 677.

SUBSTANTIAL RIGHT

An order of the superior court made in a special proceeding pending an appeal from a justice, vacating the justice's judgment, is final in a proceeding, and, because preventing docketing of the judgment pending the appeal, affects a "substantial right," within Rev. St. 1898, § 3069, making such order appealable. Deuster v. Zillmer, 97 N. W. 31, 34, 119 Wis. 402.

A judgment vacating a town plat is appealable as a final order affecting a "substantial right," within Gen. St. 1894, § 6140, subd. 6, providing for an appeal from a final order affecting a substantial right. Koochiching Co. v. Franson, 98 N. W. 98, 99, 91 Minn. 404.

The right of a prisoner to earn a diminution of his term by his own act is a "substantial one," of which, by law passed subsequent to the commission of the offense, he cannot be deprived. People ex rel. Adams v. Johnson, 90 N. Y. Supp. 134, 136, 44 Misc. Rep. 550.

The error in an instruction as to the burden of proof on a material issue affects the "substantial rights" of the defeated party within Laws 1909, c. 192, § 3072m, requiring the court to disregard errors not affecting the substantial rights of a party. Carle v. Nelson, 130 N. W. 467, 470, 145 Wis. 593.

The term "substantial right," as used in Rev. St. 1892, § 6707, providing that an order affecting a substantial right in an action is a final order which may be vacated, modified, or reversed, involves the idea of a legal right, and that such one is enforced and protected by law, and such a right is involved in an order of the court of common pleas removing a guardian. North v. Smith, 76 N. E. 619, 73 Ohio St. 247 (citing Armstrong v. Herancourt Brewing Co., 42 N. E. 425, 53 Ohio St. 467).

An order denying a motion to remove the trial of an indictment from the County Court to the Supreme Court on the ground that the judge of the County Court has been counsel in the cause, within the prohibition of Code Civ. Proc. § 46, affects a "substantial right," and an appeal lies therefrom. People v. Haas, 93 N. Y. Supp. 790, 791, 105 App. Div. 119.

An order directing a judgment debtor to apply property to the satisfaction of the judgment made in proceedings in aid of execution is an "order affecting a 'substantial right' made in special proceeding after judgment," within Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 4735, providing that such order is final and appealable. Ryland v. Arkansas City Milling Co., 92 Pac. 160, 164, 19 Okl. 435.

An order of the surrogate, refusing to dismiss, upon issue joined, a special proceeding for the revocation of letters testamentary, is not an "order affecting a substantial right," within Code Civ. Proc. § 2570, authorizing appeals from orders of the surrogate or Surrogate's Court in a special proceeding affecting a substantial right. Kelly v. Langevin, 137 N. Y. Supp. 1099, 1100, 153 App. Div. 322.

SUBSTANTIAL STATEMENT

Of assessment

A tax deed based on an assessment to "Priscilla Durham," which recites that the land was assessed to "Petruella Durham," is not a "substantial" statement of the assessment within the requirements of B. & C. Comp. § 3127, defining the effect of tax deeds as evidence. Bradford v. Durham, 101 Pac. 897, 899, 54 Or. 1, 135 Am. St. Rep. 807.

SUBSTANTIALLY

"Substantially" means in substance; in the main; essentially; by including the material or essential part. Town of Checotah v. Town of Eufaula, 119 Pac. 1014, 1019, 31 Okl. 85; Vannest v. Murphy, 112 N. W. 236, 238, 135 Iowa, 123. See, also, Electric Can- dy Mach. Co. v. Morris, 156 Fed. 972, 974; Eisfeld v. Kenworth, 50 Iowa, 389, 390.

An oil and gas lease, describing the premises as all that certain tract of land situated in a certain district on the waters of a designated stream, bounded "substantially" as follows, etc., means bounded "about" or "in the main" as designated and not "wholly" or "completely" so. South Penn. Oil Co. v. Knox, 69 S. E. 1020, 1021, 68 W. Va. 362.

SUBSTANTIALLY AS DESCRIBED

See Operate Substantially as Described.

The use of the phrase "substantially as described" in a clause of a patent cannot import into it an element not claimed nor referred to therein. General Compressed Air & Vacuum Machinery Co. v. American Air Cleaning Co., 177 Fed. 272, 274.

The words "substantially as described," as applied to a description of a device by a patentee who describes his device in his specification, refer to the specification, and the specification must be read to ascertain the actual intention of the patentee to protect him in the use of the patent. Dunlap v. Willbrandt Surgical Mfg. Co., 151 Fed. 223, 235, 80 C. C. A. 575 (citing Seymour v. Osborne, 78 U. S. [11 Wall.] 516, 20 L. Ed. 33).

An element of a combination, although not definitely described in the claims for a patent except by reference to the specification by the words "substantially as described" at the end of each claim, may be read into the claims, where it is fully described in the specifications, and is essential to the operation of the machine. Sanders v. Hancock, 128 Fed. 424, 436, 63 C. C. A. 166.

SUBSTANTIALLY AS SET FORTH

The words "substantially as set forth" at the end of a claim in a process patent have the effect of importing into the claim the particulars of the specification relating to the process to illustrate its operation, but not the function or operation of the mechanism there described, nor can they extend the patent beyond the claim which bounds the patentee's rights. United States Consol. Seeded Raisin Co. v. Selma Fruit Co., 195 Fed. 264, 269, 115 C. C. A. 234.

SUBSTANTIALLY AS SPECIFIED

The rule that the specification of a patent, which forms a part of the same application as its claims, must be read and construed with the latter, not for the purpose of expanding, nor for the purpose of limiting or contracting, the claims, but for the purpose of ascertaining their true meaning and the intention of the parties when they were made and allowed, governs the construction when the words "substantially as specified" are found in the claim, for the claim is founded upon and is explained by the specification, whether these words appear in it or not.

The words "substantially as specified," in a claim, refer to the elements, construction, and operation set forth in the specification. O. H. Jewell Filter Co. v. Jackson, 140 Fed. 340, 344, 72 C. C. A. 304.

The words "substantially as specified," at the end of a claim for a combination, refer to the whole claim, and import nothing into it not already there, either to narrow it so as to escape anticipation, or to broaden it so as to establish infringement. American Can Co. v. Ilckmott Asparagus Canning Co., 142 Fed. 141, 146, 73 C. C. A. 359.

SUBSTANTIALLY SIMILAR

In a statute making a common carrier, who charges any person a greater or less compensation for any service rendered in the transportation of passengers or property than he charges or receives from any other person for doing a like service in the transportation of a like kind of traffic, under "substantially similar circumstances and conditions," guilty of unjust discrimination, the expression quoted refers to those circumstances and conditions which affect transportation and not those which involve personal conditions or contractual relations between one particular shipper and the carrier, but are such things only as are circumstances of carriage generally. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. International Coal Min. Co., 173 Fed. 1, 4, 97 C. C. A. 383.

SUBSTANTIALLY THE SAME

In slander, "although the words proved are equivalent to the words charged in the declaration, yet, not being the same in substance, an action cannot be maintained; and, although the same idea is conveyed in the words charged and those proved, yet if they are not 'substantially the same words,' though they contain the same charge but in different phraseology, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover." Hauser v. Steigers, 119 S. W. 52-54, 137 Mo. App. 560 (quoting and adopting definition in Berry v. Dryden, 7 Mo. 324).

Under Election Law (Laws 1896, c. 909, § 56), providing for party nominations, and the name of two or more different political parties shall not be "substantially the same," the name "Social Democratic Party" is not substantially the same as the name "Democratic Party." In re Social Democratic Party, 91 N. Y. Supp. 941, 944, 45 Misc. Rep. 194.

SUBSTANTIVE LAW

"Substantive law" is that part of the law which creates, defines, and regulates rights as opposed to adjective or remedial law, which prescribes the method of enforcing rights or obtaining redress for their invasion. Mix v. Board of Com'rs of Nez Perce County, 112 Pac. 215, 220, 18 Idaho, 695, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 534.

SUBSTITUTE

As interpleader, see Interpleader.

The word "substitute" means one who or that which stands in the place of another; that which stands in lieu of something else. State v. Fargo Bottling Works Co., 124 N. W. 387, 391, 19 N. D. 396, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 872.

The use of the word "substituted" in an order of court, whereby the trustee in bankruptcy of a defendant, in an action in replevin for goods sold in consequence of defendant's fraud, is substituted as defendant, does not show an intention to wholly discharge defendant from further connection with the case, and plaintiff, having commenced the action against defendant, has the absolute right to such judgment as he may show himself entitled to. Kuh, Nathan & Fisher Co. v. Glucklick, 94 N. W. 1105, 1107, 120 Iowa, 504.

SUBSTITUTE FOR COFFEE

A liquid extract of the coffee bean held not to be dutiable under Tariff Act as "articles used as coffee, or as substitutes for coffee," but as an unenumerated manufactured article. E. C. Hazard & Co. v. United States, 164 Fed. 907, 908.

SUBSTITUTE FOR MALT LIQUOR

To sell, give away, barter, or otherwise furnish an "imitation" or "substitute" for malt liquor does not constitute an offense against the laws of Oklahoma, unless such imitation or substitute contains as much as one-half of 1 per centum of alcohol, measured by volume. Ex parte Hunnicutt, 123 Pac. 179, 185, 7 Okl. Cr. 213.

SUBSTITUTED ADMINISTRATOR

One who, under Laws 1901, p. 303, takes the place of the administrator de bonis non, except with additional powers, being entitled to demand and receive the whole of the personal estate of his decedent, except such portion as shall have been properly paid out and distributed; he being given express power to sue and recover all the assets from any persons, or from the heirs at law or personal representatives chargeable, or their equivalent in value. Hoagland v. Cooper, 58 Atl. 705, 707, 65 N. J. Eq. 407.

SUBSTITUTED TRUSTEE

On the death of a trustee, whereby the trust devolves on the court, it appoints, not a "substituted trustee," but some one as its representative to execute the trust under its direction. There is no authority in the statute for appointing a substituted trustee by that name. In re Gueental, 90 N. Y. Supp. 138, 139, 97 App. Div. 530.

SUBSTITUTION

A provision in a will by which a second legatee is to take at the death of the first

'is "substitution." Succession of May, 34 South. 52, 109 La. 994.

"The term 'substitution' is generally applied to a limitation intended to provide for the death of prior devisees or legatees before the period of distribution." Dent v. Pickens, 58 S. E. 1029, 1035, 61 W. Va. 488 (quoting and adopting the definition in Schaeffer v. Schaeffer, 46 S. E. 151, 54 W. Va. 681).

An essential requisite to a "substitution" is that the thing given be tied up in the hands of the first recipient during his natural life. A "fidel commissum" differs from the "substitution," in that the charge imposed on the first recipient is to be executed during his life. A better founded distinction, perhaps, lies in the fact that in case of a substitution the first recipient and ultimate beneficiary both take title to the thing given directly from the donor, while in the case of the fidel commissum the title vests in the ultimate beneficiary, for whom the first recipient holds and administers the gift as trustee. In re Billis' Will, 47 South. 884, 885, 122 La. 539, 129 Am. St. Rep. 355.

SUBSTITUTION OF TENANTS

A "substitution of tenants" does not necessarily take place merely because the landlord receives payment of rent from an under-tenant, to whom the original tenant has subleased the property; but it requires a contract, express or implied, to bring about such a substitution. Schachter v. Tuggle Co., 70 S. E. 93, 8 Ga. App. 561.

SUBSTITUTIONAL — SUBSTITUTIONARY

A gift to two or more persons or their children is "substitutional," and the children take only their parents' share. Van Houten v. Hall, 64 Atl. 460, 461, 71 N. J. Eq. 626.

SUBSTRUCTURE

In railroad parlance, the "substructure" is the embankment, gates, fills, and other things necessary to make up the roadbed, while the "superstructure" consists of the cross-ties and rails, etc., necessary for the operation of trains over the road. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. United States Iron Co., 101 S. W. 414, 418, 118 Tenn. 194.

SUBTENANT

A "subtenant" is one who leases all or a part of the rented premises from the original lessee for a term less than that held by the latter. Hudgins v. Bowes (Tex.) 110 S. W. 178, 179.

SUBTERRANEAN WATER

As mineral, see Mineral.

SUBURBAN

SUBURBAN RAILROAD

"Suburb," as defined by the Century Dictionary, denotes: "A region or place adjacent to a city; an outlying district of a city; a town or village so near that it may be used for residence by those who do business in the city; in the plural, collectively, environs; surroundings; outskirts; hence any adjuncts of a place." The word "country" sometimes includes suburbs; the ordinary meaning of a "street and suburban railway" is a railway in the city and the suburbs thereof. A railroad would be denominated a street and suburban railroad and could be given the power to run in any part of the country, but, unless it appears that it was the intention to give this power, the ordinary meaning of a street and suburban railroad should be given it, which meaning would be that such railroad would be confined to the city or town and its suburbs. Piedmont Cotton Mills v. Georgia Ry. & Electric Co., 62 S. E. 52, 61, 131 Ga. 129.

A district which lies adjacent to and outside of city limits is "suburban." Railroads which are to run from the limits of a city to outlying cities, towns, and villages are "suburban railroads." In re Minneapolis & St. P. Suburban Ry. Co., 112 N. W. 13, 16, 101 Minn. 132.

A notice to the sheriff to call a jury for the appraisal of damages in proceedings to condemn a railroad right of way, which stated that the right of way was for a "suburban and interurban" line, did not prevent the operation of steam propelled cars or trains upon the right of way without a new condemnation; a "suburban road" not necessarily being one operated by power other than steam. Lewis v. Omaha & C. B. S. Ry. Co. (Iowa) 138 N. W. 1092, 1095.

SUBWAY

As city purpose, see City Purpose.

SUBWAY RAILROAD

As street railroad, see Street Railroad.

SUCCEEDING

See Next Succeeding.

SUCCESS

SUCCESSFUL

Where a contract provided that the defendant was to sell a pumping engine, and a pump jack, and to erect the "machine," and plaintiff was to pay when the machine was "in successful operation," defendant's contract was not complete until that result had been brought about, and that only is "successful" which terminates in the accomplishment of what is wished or intended; hence the engine was not being "successfully operated" where it caused the pump to make a certain number of strokes per minute, without regard to the effect thereof to damage connections with the well. Moore v. Otto Gas Engine Works, 121 N. Y. Supp. 631, 633, 136 App. Div. 713.

SUCCESSFUL CLAIMANT

Owner

Kansas City Charter, art. 5, § 59, provides that, when a purchaser at a tax sale shall be defeated in a suit by or against him for the recovery of land, the "successful claimant" shall be adjudged to pay the person claiming under the tax deed the full amount of the purchase price, interest, and penalties. Held, that the successful claimant within such section was the owner of the property, and that he was a necessary party to the purchaser's suit to recover possession in order to entitle the purchaser to recover the purchase price from him. Russell v. Woerner, 110 S. W. 691, 692, 131 Mo. App. 253.

SUCCESSFUL OR SATISFACTORY

See, also, Satisfactory.

A contract for plaintiff's services as foreman of a molding shop for three years, or as long as he performed his duties "in a successful or satisfactory manner," is performed on the part of the foreman when he does his work in a good, efficient, and workmanlike manner, and, if he does so, the employer has no right to discharge him. Bridgeford & Co. v. Mengher, 139 S. W. 750, 752, 144 Ky. 479.

SUCCESSFUL PARTY

Shannon's Code, § 4938, provides that the "successful party" in all civil actions shall be entitled to full costs, and section 4962 provides that, in any case not embraced in the express provisions of law, the court may make disposition of the costs in its discretion, and section 4961 provides that the law of costs shall be construed remedially. Held that, where defendant in justice's court made no tender, and plaintiff recovered judgment, and on appeal by defendant to the circuit court plaintiff recovered judgment, but for a less amount, neither party was the "successful party," within section 4938, and costs were governed by section 4962. Garrison v. Trotter, 86 S. W. 1078, 1079, 114 Tenn. 526.

Shannon's Code, § 4938, awards to the "successful party" costs, unless otherwise provided by law, and section 4942 declares that on nonsuit, dismissal, abatement by death of plaintiff, or discontinuance the defendant is the successful party. Held that, to entitle defendant to recover costs, it must appear that he was the successful party. Scatcherd v. Love, 166 Fed. 53, 55, 91 C. C. A. 639.

Under a statute declaring that the "successful party" is entitled to costs, a defendant who procures the removal of the case to another court, where it is dismissed on the ground that the court wherein it originated was not legally constituted, is entitled to costs. Pritchard v. Fowler, 40 South. 955, 956, 146 Ala. 187.

SUCCESSFUL VACCINATION

Laws 1897, p. 392, § 92, as amended by Laws 1905, p. 263, c. 142, § 3, making it the duty of a board of school directors to require "successful vaccination" as a condition of school membership, is not too indefinite to be capable of enforcement; a common-sense construction being to treat as successfully vaccinated not only one in whom the customary reaction follows the operation, but one in whom no such reaction follows three several operations, thus evidencing that he cannot be vaccinated. State ex rel. McFadden v. Thorrock, 104 Pac. 214, 216, 55 Wash. 208.

SUCCESSFULLY IMPEACHED

Strictly speaking, the words "successfully impeached," when used in relation to witnesses, means no more than the word "impeached." If a witness is impeached at all, he is "successfully impeached," while an attempt to impeach may, of course, be either successful or unsuccessful. Chicago City R. Co. v. Ryan, 80 N. E. 116, 117, 225 Ill. 287 (citing Powell v. State, 29 S. E. 309, 101 Ga. 9, 65 Am. St. Rep. 277; Smith v. State, 35 S. E. 59, 109 Ga. 479; Commonwealth v. Welch, 63 S. W. 984, 111 Ky. 530; Beedle v. People, 68 N. E. 434, 204 Ill. 197).

SUCCESSION

See Continued Succession; Hereditary Succession; Net Succession; Perpetual Succession; Universal Succession.

"Succession" is the transmission of the rights and obligations of the deceased to his heirs, and it signifies also the estates, rights, and charges, which a person leaves after his death, whether the charges exceed the property, or there is nothing left but the charges, or the property exceeds the charges, and it includes, not only the rights and obligations of the deceased, as they exist at the time of his death, but all that has accrued thereto since the opening of the succession, as also the new charges to which it becomes subject. Civ. Code, arts. 871, 872, 873. Delaneuville v. Duhe, 38 South. 20, 22, 114 La. 62.

Where the idea of planting a crop on a plantation under administration is conceived by the administrator long after the harvesting of the crop that was growing when decedent died, and the crop is planted and harvested still later without authority from the court, the creditors, or the minor heirs, neither the crop nor the obligations incurred in making it is part of the "succession" defined by Civ. Code, art. 872, to embrace the estates, rights, and charges which a person leaves after his death, nor is the crop anything that accrues to the succession within Civ. Code, art. 873, providing that the succession embraces all that has "accrued" thereto since the opening thereof. Maxwell-Yerger Co. v. Rogan, 51 South. 48, 50, 125 La. 1.

The rule that the property of a succession pending administration is owned by the abstract being called "succession" means only that the property is so held for the purpose of administration, and not that the property is so held in hostility to or exclusion of the ownership and legal seisin of the legal heir or of the universal legatee. Tulane University of Louisiana v. Board of Assessors, 40 South. 445, 446, 115 La. 1025.

"A 'succession' is an ideal, a juridical person, independent from those having an interest therein." Succession of Levy, 39 South. 37, 39, 115 La. 377, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1180, 5 Ann. Cas. 871.

"The term 'right of succession' does not mean a right to receive property pursuant to a contract made during life, which would be enforceable at law, and which would contain ample consideration for the promise to pay; but, on the other hand, it means a succession without consideration, either by will or intestacy, from a resident or from a non-resident, or such agreement or arrangement voluntary in its nature as may have been made during life in contemplation of death for the express purpose of evading the statute [Transfer Tax Law (Laws 1896, c. 908, § 221, as amended by Laws 1905, c. 368)], and deferring the enjoyment of the benefits transferred until the testator's death." In re Stebbins' Estate, 103 N. Y. Supp. 563, 566, 52 Misc. Rep. 438.

The word "succession," as used in the title to Laws 1907, c. 49, entitled "An act to provide for succession to the estates of decedents," etc., means the change in legal relations by which one person, called the "successor," comes into the enjoyment of or becomes responsible for one or more of the rights or liabilities of another person called the "predecessor." Gaster v. Gaster's Estate, 137 N. W. 900, 901, 92 Neb. 6.

Civil Code, § 1383, declares: "'Succession' is the coming in of another to take the property of one who dies without disposing of it by will. The state does not come in by way of succession on failure of heirs or next of kin to take an estate of a decedent, but in such event the property, whether real or personal, goes to the state by escheat. In re Miners' Estate, 76 Pac. 968, 970, 143 Cal. 194.

SUCCESSION TAX

See, also, Inheritance Tax.

A "succession tax" is not a burden imposed on property, but is a privilege tax on the right of taking property from another, whether by will or devolution as a matter of law. Knox v. Emerson, 131 S. W. 972, 973, 123 Tenn. 409.

A tax on an interest in land passing by will or law of descent is a "succession tax." In re Macky's Estate, 102 Pac. 1075, 1078, 46 Colo. 79, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1207.

A "succession tax" or "inheritance tax," excise or duty, is a special, not a general, tax. People v. Koenig, 85 Pac. 1129, 1130, 37 Colo. 283, 11 Ann. Cas. 140.

The inheritance tax is variously termed "succession tax," "legacy tax," and "prolate duties"; but, whatever it may be termed, it is not a tax upon property, but upon the right of succession thereto. State ex rel. Foot v. Bazille, 106 N. W. 93, 96, 97 Minn. 11, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 732, 7 Ann. Cas. 1056.

The tax variously called an "inheritance tax," a "legacy tax," a "transfer tax," and a "succession tax" is a "burden imposed by government on all gifts, legacies, and successions, whether of real or personal property, or both, or any interest therein, passing to certain persons (other than those specially excepted) by will, by intestate law, or by deed or assignment made inter vivos, intended to take effect at or after the death of the grantor." Revenue Act 1903 (Laws 1903, p. 323, c. 247), imposing a "succession tax" on legacies, is not a tax on property but on the right of succession, and therefore is not void for nonuniformity. In re Morris' Estate, 50 S. E. 682, 683, 138 N. C. 259 (quoting and adopting definition in Dos Passos [2d Ed.] § 2).

"A collateral inheritance or 'succession tax' is a duty or bonus exacted in certain instances by the state upon the right and privilege of taking legacies, inheritances, gifts, and successions passing by will, by intestate laws, or by any deed or instrument, made inter vivos, intended to take effect at or after the death of the grantor. The burden or the tax is not imposed upon the property itself, but upon the the privilege of acquiring property by inheritance. In nearly all inheritance tax laws the statutes provide for appraising the property to be inherited, but the object of such valuation is not to tax the property itself. It is to arrive at a measure of price by which the privilege of inheritance can be valued." In re Tuohy's Estate, 90 Pac. 170, 171, 35 Mont. 431 (quoting Gelsthorpe v. Furnell, 51 Pac. 267, 20 Mont. 299, 39 L. R. A. 170).

SUCESION LEGITIMA

"Issue," and not "lawful heirs," was meant by the words "sucesion legitima" in a devise of the residue of the testator's estate "in the character of fidel-commissum, and that the other [shares] may [profit by] accretion, in case of death without sucesion legitima," in equal parts to his nieces and a foster child, who was to adopt his surname, coupled with a provision for the education of such foster child, and a request that when her education was finished she should return to live with the said nieces. De Rodriguez v. Vivoni, 26 Sup. Ct. 475, 476, 201 U. S. 371, 50 L. Ed. 792.

SUCCESSIVE

Four successive weeks, see, also, Four.

The words "ten successive days," in a city ordinance providing for the publication for "ten successive days" of a notice for bids for a public improvement, mean publication on 10 successive days when a newspaper may be published without the publisher running the risk of violating Rev. St. 1899, § 2240 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1420), prohibiting labor on Sunday, and a publication in a daily newspaper not published on Sunday of a notice in each successive issue from April 5th and ending April 17th is sufficient though there was no publication on the two Sundays intervening. Porter v. R. J. Boyd Paving & Construction Co., 112 S. W. 235, 239, 214 Mo. 1.

The fact that the county court ordered the notice of a special election under the local option law to be published for four "successive" weeks, instead of for four "consecutive" weeks, as required by Rev. St. 1899, § 3029 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 1736], did not invalidate the election; the words "successive" and "consecutive" being synonymous. State v. Hitchcock, 101 S. W. 117, 118, 124 Mo. App. 101.

Code Civ. Proc. § 639, relating to foreclosure of mortgages by advertisement, provides that notice that a mortgage will be foreclosed by sale must be given by publication for six successive weeks. Civ. Code, § 2445, provides that the phrase "successive weeks" shall be construed to mean calendar weeks, and publication on any day in such weeks shall be sufficient for that week. A notice of foreclosure by advertisement which is published for six successive weeks, once in each week, is a sufficient publication, though but 37 days intervened between the first publication and the day of sale. Thomas v. Issenhuth, 100 N. W. 436, 437, 18 S. D. 303.

"The meaning of 'successive,' as used [in Sayles' Rev. Civ. St. 1897, art. 3301, requiring that the final order of the court putting local option into effect shall be published for four successive weeks, etc.], is well understood, and apprehends that the publication be continuous; that is, without a break. By judicial interpretation, one exception to this continuity has been ingrafted on the statute. That, we believe, is founded in reason, and is based on a breach of the continuity in the publication caused by the act of the law. While the injunction exists, no publication can be made; but, when this is dissolved, the reason for delay or restraint ceases, and the publication should be immediately resumed." Where an order was published in a paper for three weeks consecutively in October, 1901, and was then enjoined, but the injunction was dissolved in May, 1902, by the Court of Civil Appeals, and mandate issued in November, 1902, a subsequent publication for two consecutive weeks in March, 1904, is not a compliance with the statute requiring publication for "four successive weeks." Griffin v. State (Tex.) 87 S. W. 155, 156.

Where an order putting local option into effect was published in a paper for two successive weeks consecutively, and further publication was prevented by injunction for a time, but no further publication was made until 16 months after dissolution of the injunction, when it was again published two weeks consecutively, the order was not published for "four successive weeks," as required by Sayles' Rev. Civ. St. 1897, art. 3301. Stephens v. State (Tex.) 87 S. W. 157.

SUCCESSIVE SENTENCES

"Successive sentences" (that is, one to commence on the expiration of another for distinct offenses) are not cumulative sentences. Harris v. Nixon, 27 App. D. C. 94, 97.

SUCCESSIVELY

"Successively," in Civ. Code, art. 145, providing that the notices of judgment are to be given from month to month for three times successively, means by succession; in a series; one after another; consecutively. Derby v. Dancey, 36 South. 795, 796, 112 La. 891.

SUCCESSOR

The word "successor," in Const. art. 6, subd. "Elections," § 4, providing that every person holding civil office shall, unless removed, exercise the duties of the office until his successor is duly qualified, means a successor legally chosen. Ballantyne v. Bower, 99 Pac. 869, 872, 17 Wyo. 356, 17 Ann. Cas. 82.

Where, in an action by the receiver of a corporation, a bond to discharge an attachment was given to H., receiver of the C. & Z. Co., a corporation, to be paid to H., "his successors and assigns," and the record in the action was sufficient to advise the surety from the beginning that the corporation was the real party in interest, the term "successor" was not limited to another receiver, but also meant succession in corporate control, so that on the termination of the receivership control over the action, in which the bond was given, the corporation was entitled to prosecute an action on the bond. The term "successor," in modern acceptation, has a broader significance than succession in respect to the estate of a decedent. It may mean, in a proper situation, succeeding to a place or a right or an interest or a power, official or otherwise. It may mean succession in corporate control. One corporation may succeed to the control of another, and that control may be succeeded by a receiver, and in turn the corporation first surrendering control may succeed the receiver in control. This is the kind of succession that is intended in an attachment bond given to a receiver made payable to him, "his successors and assigns," and made to safeguard the cause of action in the suit in which the bond was given against loss by reason of discharging the defendant's property from attachment. American Surety Co. v. Campbell & Zell Co., 138 Fed. 531, 535, 71 C. C. A. 55.

The commissioner of water supply, gas, and electricity is the successor of the board of commissioners of electrical subways within the meaning of a contract between the board and a subway company, which provided that the company should reimburse the commissioners or their successors "for all reasonable expenses incurred by them in superintending and inspecting the construction" of all subways constructed thereunder, and which defined the term "successors" as including "any officer or officers of the city of New York, who shall succeed to the powers and duties of the parties of the first part [the commissioners], or any part of such powers and duties, under the provisions of any law now existing or hereafter enacted by the said Legislature, or any other persons or officers hereafter appointed or selected pursuant to any law to succeed to the powers and duties, or any part thereof." People ex rel. Consolidated Telegraph & Electrical Subway Co. v. Monroe, 83 N. Y. Supp. 382, 384, 85 App. Div. 542.

The use of the words "successors and assigns" in a statute in connection with specific grants of power to a railway company does not necessarily imply that the company can assign or lease all its property and its franchises to another company to be exercised by the latter. A municipal ordinance authorizing enumerated street railway companies and their successors and assigns to severally sell, convey, or lease their property rights, privileges, and franchises to any of the companies enumerated, or to a company designated, its successors and assigns, and authorizing the company acquiring the property rights and franchises of the enumerated companies to hold the same during the term of the ordinance, authorizes a purchaser of the property and franchises of the enumerated companies to lease the same to the designated company without the special consent of the municipality, notwithstanding Const. Mo. art. 12, § 20, forbidding a street railway transferring its franchise without first obtaining the consent of the municipality. Moorshead v. United Rys. Co. of St. Louis, 96 S. W. 261, 265, 203 Mo. 121 (citing Oregon Ry. & Nav. Co. v. Oregonian Ry. Co., 9 Sup. Ct. 409, 130 U. S. 1, 32 L. Ed. 837).

A mortgage of realty from a corporation to trustees for bondholders and to their "successors" may be reformed to read "heirs"; the use of the word successors showing that something more was intended than a life estate, and that the purpose was to convey all the estate which the corporation had. McMillan v. Fish, 29 N. J. Eq. 610, 613, 614.

A corporation organized by purchasers at a mortgage foreclosure sale of a railroad constructed pursuant to Act No. 68, p. 79, 20th Leg., exempting such railroads and their "successors" from taxation, is the successor of the company commencing the construction of the railroad, within the meaning of the act, so as to be entitled to the exemption provided for therein. Grand Canyon R. Co. v. Treat, 95 Pac. 187, 192, 12 Ariz. 60.

Executor

A clause in a lease providing for forfeiture if the lessee, "his successors or assigns," etc., includes the executors of the lessee, by the word "successors." West Shore R. Co. v. Wenner, 57 Atl. 408, 70 N. J. Law, 233.
